That's not just good for presidential candidates; it's good for Democrats up and down the ticket. More engaged, committed Democratic voters in the primaries means more votes this November in all fifty states – from competitive statewide races to state legislative and city council seats everywhere.

You can make a difference right now. Encourage someone to register in time to participate in the presidential race in their state.

Learn more and get involved here:

<http://my.barackobama.com/morevoices>

Thanks for all your hard work,

Barack

P.S. – Here's an example of how you can get involved right now.

In Pennsylvania , Independent voters must register as Democrats by March 24th in order to vote in the primary. One supporter made calls this weekend and reached 10 Independent voters who wanted to vote for us – four of whom needed information about how to register.

Our team has created an online tool that provides all the information you need to make calls from home.

Get started now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/callpa>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bill Foster supports Barack Obama (2008-03-17 20:39)

[EMBED]

Newly-elected House Rep. Bill Foster from Illinois tells why he's supporting Barack Obama and his movement for change.

Barack Obama in Charlotte, NC

Join Barack Obama for a Town Hall in Charlotte, North Carolina on Wednesday, March 19th. The event will be free and open to the public.

Stand for Change Town Hall with Barack Obama

Grady Cole Center
310 N. Kings Drive
Charlotte, NC 28204

906

Wednesday, March 19, 2008

Doors Open: 1:30 p.m.

Program Begins: 3:30 p.m.

The event is free and open to the public. Tickets are required and a photo ID is required. Seating is available on a first-come, first served-basis.

Public Parking is accessible from N. Kings Drive and E 7th Street and is available in Memorial Stadium Lots 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and the CPCC gravel lot on Armory Drive. Additional parking will be directed on site. Carpooling is strongly encouraged.

For security reasons, do not bring bags. No signs or banners permitted. Please limit personal items.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-03-17 22:31:00)

I feel strongly enough to write. I am a Democrat (who just changed to an Independent in this primary) who is so disillusioned with what Obama presented to the American public as his initial persona - and as time has evolved and we have had an opportunity to learn more about this young and untapped politician - it turns out that he has as much luggage and ugly inflammatory traits that he carefully hid and packaged as do the older seasoned politicians that he has attacked earlier in the year. And as the primaries rolled on and he accumulated delegates - which might make him the imminent Democratic candidate- he may be beatable by the Republicans because now he has exposed himself as a young Washington politician with little to no political savvy and lot of political liability. Is that the best candidate to go into the election with? And all the media is already calling for an implosion of the party and possible street riots if the superdelegates go with strategy (possibly giving delegates to Hillary for the good of the general election) vs. strictly by the outcome of the primaries. Doesn't the media have a responsibility to tone it down and not inflame the situation? Don't they think that you can indeed influence the mood of the American people - because they can. As surely as our politicians have a responsibility to be honest and open with this nation - so does the media in their reporting of events. The media have become tabloid-like in their coverage of events - the higher they can escalate the drama - the better! The coverage of Barack Obama has been timely and necessary - the arguments pro and con seemingly falling almost across racial divides. Clearly we haven't progressed as far as a nation as we thought just 3 weeks ago. But obviously - his "spiritual leader" hasn't progressed from his divisive writings of the '60's - and can't get beyond his hateful rhetoric that endorses racial, cultural and spiritual separateness. This is not what any religion in any format should teach. And isn't this why we rant about Islamists' as Americans - (I am not implying that Obama is an Islamist - I am just drawing a corollary between points for illustration) - that they teach and spew such a repugnant message of separateness and divergent belief systems and perspectives that we just can't find our way to a common ground. I was mortified tonight on a TV broadcast to hear someone comment during an interview (and I believe it was a fellow parishioner) that they thought that the Reverend Wright felt he had to keep the struggle of the African American on the front burner - to not let his congregation forget where they came from. What purpose does this serve in 2008? Does this not just keep racial division alive and current? Should I be concerned as a white American that if Barack Obama is elected that I will be seeing reparations become a reality in my lifetime? Barack states that he has no ties to lobbyist and special interest groups - but I beg to differ at this juncture. As I watch this develop - I am confident that his lobbyist and special interest groups are sitting in those pews every Sunday or are preaching from that pulpit and that does indeed worry me as much as Mike Huckabee's affiliation did to his church or Pat Robertsons influence in the past, Jerry Falwell etc. Barack Obama's long-term relationship with Reverend Wright is not only indicative of his tolerance and tacit acceptance of this un-American propaganda, but goes to his ability to govern the greatest Nation in the world. He is not the American he presented himself to be and not the American we need for our next sitting president. This is the message that needs to be getting out on the blogs - that America is concerned and will not be happy with this man as the Democratic candidate.

Jedidiah (2008-03-18 08:52:00)

Obama Speech Recap Obama Race Speech

Barack Obama: "A More Perfect Union" (2008-03-18 06:57)

Here is the speech delivered by Barack Obama today in Philadelphia addressing the racial tone of the campaign.

As Prepared for Delivery... "We the people, in order to form a more perfect union."

Two hundred and twenty one years ago, in a hall that still stands across the street, a group of men gathered and, with these simple words, launched America's improbable experiment in democracy. Farmers and scholars; statesmen and patriots who had traveled across an ocean to escape tyranny and persecution finally made real their declaration of independence at a Philadelphia convention that lasted through the spring of 1787.

The document they produced was eventually signed but ultimately unfinished. It was stained by this nation's original sin of slavery, a question that divided the colonies and brought the convention to a stalemate until the founders chose to allow the slave trade to continue for at least twenty more years, and to leave any final resolution to future generations.

Of course, the answer to the slavery question was already embedded within our Constitution – a Constitution that had at its very core the ideal of equal citizenship under the law; a Constitution that promised its people liberty, and justice, and a union that could be and should be perfected over time.

And yet words on a parchment would not be enough to deliver slaves from bondage, or provide men and women of every color and creed their full rights and obligations as citizens of the United States. What would be needed were Americans in successive generations who were willing to do their part – through protests and struggle, on the streets and in the courts, through a civil war and civil disobedience and always at great risk – to narrow that gap between the promise of our ideals and the reality of their time. This was one of the tasks we set forth at the beginning of this campaign – to continue the long march of those who came before us, a march for a more just, more equal, more free, more caring and more prosperous America. I chose to run for the presidency at this moment in history because I believe deeply that we cannot solve the challenges of our time unless we solve them together – unless we perfect our union by understanding that we may have different stories, but we hold common hopes; that we may not look the same and we may not have come from the same place, but we all want to move in the same direction – towards a better future for our children and our grandchildren.

This belief comes from my unyielding faith in the decency and generosity of the American people. But it also comes from my own American story.

I am the son of a black man from Kenya and a white woman from Kansas. I was raised with the help of a white grandfather who survived a Depression to serve in Patton's Army during World War II and a white grandmother who worked on a bomber assembly line at Fort Leavenworth while he was overseas. I've gone to some of the best schools in America and lived in one of the world's poorest nations. I am married to a black American who carries within her the blood of slaves and slaveowners – an inheritance we pass on to our two precious daughters. I have brothers, sisters, nieces, nephews, uncles and cousins, of every race and every hue, scattered across three continents, and for as long as I live, I will never forget that in no other country on Earth is my story even possible.

It's a story that hasn't made me the most conventional candidate. But it is a story that has seared into my genetic makeup the idea that this nation is more than the sum of its parts – that out of many, we are truly one.

Throughout the first year of this campaign, against all predictions to the contrary, we saw how hungry the American people were for this message of unity. Despite the temptation to view my candidacy through a purely racial lens, we won commanding victories in states with some of the whitest populations in the country. In South Carolina, where the Confederate Flag still flies, we built a powerful coalition of African Americans and white Americans.

This is not to say that race has not been an issue in the campaign. At various stages in the campaign, some commentators have deemed me either "too black" or "not black enough." We saw racial tensions bubble to the surface during the week before the South Carolina primary. The press has scoured every exit poll for the latest evidence of racial polarization, not just in terms of white and black, but black and brown as well.

And yet, it has only been in the last couple of weeks that the discussion of race in this campaign has taken a particularly divisive turn.

On one end of the spectrum, we've heard the implication that my candidacy is somehow an exercise in affirmative action; that it's based solely on the desire of wide-eyed liberals to purchase racial reconciliation on the cheap. On the other end, we've heard my former pastor, Reverend Jeremiah Wright, use incendiary language to express views that have the potential not only to widen the racial divide, but views that denigrate both the greatness and the goodness of our nation; that rightly offend white and black alike.

I have already condemned, in unequivocal terms, the statements of Reverend Wright that have caused such controversy. For some, nagging questions remain. Did I know him to be an occasionally fierce critic of American domestic and foreign policy? Of course. Did I ever hear him make remarks that could be considered controversial while I sat in church? Yes. Did I strongly disagree with many of his political views? Absolutely – just as I'm sure many of you have heard remarks from your pastors, priests, or rabbis with which you strongly disagreed.

But the remarks that have caused this recent firestorm weren't simply controversial. They weren't simply a religious leader's effort to speak out against perceived injustice. Instead, they expressed a profoundly distorted view of this country – a view that sees white racism as endemic, and that elevates what is wrong with America above all that we know is right with America; a view that sees the conflicts in the Middle East as rooted primarily in the actions of stalwart allies like Israel, instead of emanating from the perverse and hateful ideologies of radical Islam.

As such, Reverend Wright's comments were not only wrong but divisive, divisive at a time when we need unity; racially charged at a time when we need to come together to solve a set of monumental problems – two wars, a terrorist threat, a falling economy, a chronic health care crisis and potentially devastating climate change; problems that are neither black or white or Latino or Asian, but rather problems that confront us all.

Given my background, my politics, and my professed values and ideals, there will no doubt be those for whom my statements of condemnation are not enough. Why associate myself with Reverend Wright in the first place, they may ask? Why not join another church? And I confess that if all that I knew of Reverend Wright were the snippets of those sermons that have run in an endless loop on the television and YouTube, or if Trinity United Church of Christ conformed to the caricatures being peddled by some commentators, there is no doubt that I would react in much the same way.

But the truth is, that isn't all that I know of the man. The man I met more than twenty years ago is a man who helped introduce me to my Christian faith, a man who spoke to me about our obligations to love one another; to care for the sick and lift up the poor. He is a man who served his country as a U.S. Marine; who has studied and lectured at some of the finest universities and seminaries in the country, and who for over thirty years led a church that serves the community by doing God's work here on Earth – by housing the homeless, ministering to the needy, providing day care services and scholarships and prison ministries, and reaching out to those suffering from HIV/AIDS.

In my first book, Dreams From My Father, I described the experience of my first service at Trinity:

"People began to shout, to rise from their seats and clap and cry out, a forceful wind carrying the reverend's voice up into the rafters....And in that single note – hope! – I heard something else; at the foot of that cross, inside the thousands of churches across the city, I imagined the stories of ordinary black people merging with the stories of David and Goliath, Moses and Pharaoh, the Christians in the lion's den, Ezekiel's field of dry bones. Those stories – of survival, and freedom, and hope – became our story, my story; the blood that had spilled was our blood, the tears our tears; until this black church, on this bright day, seemed once more a vessel carrying the story of a people into future generations and into a larger world. Our trials and triumphs became at once unique and universal, black and more than black; in chronicling our journey, the stories and songs gave us a means to reclaim memories that we didn't need to feel shame about...memories that all people might study and cherish – and with which we could start to rebuild.”

That has been my experience at Trinity. Like other predominantly black churches across the country, Trinity embodies the black community in its entirety – the doctor and the welfare mom, the model student and the former gang-banger. Like other black churches, Trinity’s services are full of raucous laughter and sometimes bawdy humor. They are full of dancing, clapping, screaming and shouting that may seem jarring to the untrained ear. The church contains in full the kindness and cruelty, the fierce intelligence and the shocking ignorance, the struggles and successes, the love and yes, the bitterness and bias that make up the black experience in America.

And this helps explain, perhaps, my relationship with Reverend Wright. As imperfect as he may be, he has been like family to me. He strengthened my faith, officiated my wedding, and baptized my children. Not once in my conversations with him have I heard him talk about any ethnic group in derogatory terms, or treat whites with whom he interacted with anything but courtesy and respect. He contains within him the contradictions – the good and the bad – of the community that he has served diligently for so many years.

I can no more disown him than I can disown the black community. I can no more disown him than I can my white grandmother – a woman who helped raise me, a woman who sacrificed again and again for me, a woman who loves me as much as she loves anything in this world, but a woman who once confessed her fear of black men who passed by her on the street, and who on more than one occasion has uttered racial or ethnic stereotypes that made me cringe.

These people are a part of me. And they are a part of America, this country that I love.

Some will see this as an attempt to justify or excuse comments that are simply inexcusable. I can assure you it is not. I suppose the politically safe thing would be to move on from this episode and just hope that it fades into the woodwork. We can dismiss Reverend Wright as a crank or a demagogue, just as some have dismissed Geraldine Ferraro, in the aftermath of her recent statements, as harboring some deep-seated racial bias.

But race is an issue that I believe this nation cannot afford to ignore right now. We would be making the same mistake that Reverend Wright made in his offending sermons about America – to simplify and stereotype and amplify the negative to the point that it distorts reality.

The fact is that the comments that have been made and the issues that have surfaced over the last few weeks reflect the complexities of race in this country that we’ve never really worked through – a part of our union that we have yet to perfect. And if we walk away now, if we simply retreat into our respective corners, we will never be able to come together and solve challenges like health care, or education, or the need to find good jobs for every American.

Understanding this reality requires a reminder of how we arrived at this point. As William Faulkner once wrote, “The past isn’t dead and buried. In fact, it isn’t even past.” We do not need to recite here the history of racial injustice in this country. But we do need to remind ourselves that so many of the disparities that exist in the African-American community today can be directly traced to inequalities passed on from an earlier generation that suffered under the brutal legacy of slavery and Jim Crow.

Segregated schools were, and are, inferior schools; we still haven’t fixed them, fifty years after Brown v. Board of Education, and the inferior education they provided, then and now, helps explain the pervasive achievement gap between today’s black and white students.

Legalized discrimination – where blacks were prevented, often through violence, from owning property, or loans were not granted to African-American business owners, or black homeowners could not access FHA mortgages, or blacks were excluded from unions, or the police force, or fire departments – meant that black families could not amass any meaningful wealth to bequeath to future generations. That history helps explain the wealth and income gap between black and white, and the concentrated pockets of poverty that persists in so many of today’s urban and rural communities.

A lack of economic opportunity among black men, and the shame and frustration that came from not being able to provide for one’s family, contributed to the erosion of black families – a problem that welfare policies for many years may have worsened. And the lack of basic services in so many urban black neighborhoods – parks for kids to play in, police walking the beat, regular garbage pick-up and building code enforcement – all helped create a cycle of violence, blight and neglect that continue to haunt us. This is the reality in which Reverend Wright and other African-Americans of his generation grew up. They came of age in the late fifties and early sixties, a time when segregation was still the law of the land and opportunity was systematically constricted. What's remarkable is not how many failed in the face of discrimination, but rather how many men and women overcame the odds; how many were able to make a way out of no way for those like me who would come after them.

But for all those who scratched and clawed their way to get a piece of the American Dream, there were many who didn't make it – those who were ultimately defeated, in one way or another, by discrimination. That legacy of defeat was passed on to future generations – those young men and increasingly young women who we see standing on street corners or languishing in our prisons, without hope or prospects for the future. Even for those blacks who did make it, questions of race, and racism, continue to define their worldview in fundamental ways. For the men and women of Reverend Wright's generation, the memories of humiliation and doubt and fear have not gone away; nor has the anger and the bitterness of those years. That anger may not get expressed in public, in front of white co-workers or white friends. But it does find voice in the barbershop or around the kitchen table. At times, that anger is exploited by politicians, to gin up votes along racial lines, or to make up for a politician's own failings.

And occasionally it finds voice in the church on Sunday morning, in the pulpit and in the pews. The fact that so many people are surprised to hear that anger in some of Reverend Wright's sermons simply reminds us of the old truism that the most segregated hour in American life occurs on Sunday morning. That anger is not always productive; indeed, all too often it distracts attention from solving real problems; it keeps us from squarely facing our own complicity in our condition, and prevents the African-American community from forging the alliances it needs to bring about real change. But the anger is real; it is powerful; and to simply wish it away, to condemn it without understanding its roots, only serves to widen the chasm of misunderstanding that exists between the races.

In fact, a similar anger exists within segments of the white community. Most working- and middle-class white Americans don't feel that they have been particularly privileged by their race. Their experience is the immigrant experience – as far as they're concerned, no one's handed them anything, they've built it from scratch. They've worked hard all their lives, many times only to see their jobs shipped overseas or their pension dumped after a lifetime of labor. They are anxious about their futures, and feel their dreams slipping away; in an era of stagnant wages and global competition, opportunity comes to be seen as a zero sum game, in which your dreams come at my expense. So when they are told to bus their children to a school across town; when they hear that an African American is getting an advantage in landing a good job or a spot in a good college because of an injustice that they themselves never committed; when they're told that their fears about crime in urban neighborhoods are somehow prejudiced, resentment builds over time.

Like the anger within the black community, these resentments aren't always expressed in polite company. But they have helped shape the political landscape for at least a generation. Anger over welfare and affirmative action helped forge the Reagan Coalition. Politicians routinely exploited fears of crime for their own electoral ends. Talk show hosts and conservative commentators built entire careers unmasking bogus claims of racism while dismissing legitimate discussions of racial injustice and inequality as mere political correctness or reverse racism.

Just as black anger often proved counterproductive, so have these white resentments distracted attention from the real culprits of the middle class squeeze – a corporate culture rife with inside dealing, questionable accounting practices, and short-term greed; a Washington dominated by lobbyists and special interests; economic policies that favor the few over the many. And yet, to wish away the resentments of white Americans, to label them as misguided or even racist, without recognizing they are grounded in legitimate concerns – this too widens the racial divide, and blocks the path to understanding.

This is where we are right now. It's a racial stalemate we've been stuck in for years. Contrary to the claims of some of my critics, black and white, I have never been so naïve as to believe that we can get beyond our racial divisions in a single election cycle, or with a single candidacy – particularly a candidacy as imperfect as my own.

But I have asserted a firm conviction – a conviction rooted in my faith in God and my faith in the American people – that working together we can move beyond some of our old racial wounds, and that in fact we have no choice if we are to continue on the path of a more perfect union.

For the African-American community, that path means embracing the burdens of our past without becoming victims of our past. It means continuing to insist on a full measure of justice in every aspect of American life. But it also means binding our particular grievances – for better health care, and better schools, and better jobs – to the larger aspirations of all Americans – the white woman struggling to break the glass ceiling, the white man whose been laid off, the immigrant trying to feed his family. And it means taking full responsibility for own lives – by demanding more from our fathers, and spending more time with our children, and reading to them, and teaching them that while they may face challenges and discrimination in their own lives, they must never succumb to despair or cynicism; they must always believe that they can write their own destiny.

Ironically, this quintessentially American – and yes, conservative – notion of self-help found frequent expression in Reverend Wright's sermons. But what my former pastor too often failed to understand is that embarking on a program of self-help also requires a belief that society can change.

The profound mistake of Reverend Wright's sermons is not that he spoke about racism in our society. It's that he spoke as if our society was static; as if no progress has been made; as if this country – a country that has made it possible for one of his own members to run for the highest office in the land and build a coalition of white and black; Latino and Asian, rich and poor, young and old – is still irrevocably bound to a tragic past. But what we know – what we have seen – is that America can change. That is true genius of this nation. What we have already achieved gives us hope – the audacity to hope – for what we can and must achieve tomorrow.

In the white community, the path to a more perfect union means acknowledging that what ails the African-American community does not just exist in the minds of black people; that the legacy of discrimination – and current incidents of discrimination, while less overt than in the past – are real and must be addressed. Not just with words, but with deeds – by investing in our schools and our communities; by enforcing our civil rights laws and ensuring fairness in our criminal justice system; by providing this generation with ladders of opportunity that were unavailable for previous generations. It requires all Americans to realize that your dreams do not have to come at the expense of my dreams; that investing in the health, welfare, and education of black and brown and white children will ultimately help all of America prosper.

In the end, then, what is called for is nothing more, and nothing less, than what all the world's great religions demand – that we do unto others as we would have them do unto us. Let us be our brother's keeper, Scripture tells us. Let us be our sister's keeper. Let us find that common stake we all have in one another, and let our politics reflect that spirit as well.

For we have a choice in this country. We can accept a politics that breeds division, and conflict, and cynicism. We can tackle race only as spectacle – as we did in the OJ trial – or in the wake of tragedy, as we did in the aftermath of Katrina – or as fodder for the nightly news. We can play Reverend Wright's sermons on every channel, every day and talk about them from now until the election, and make the only question in this campaign whether or not the American people think that I somehow believe or sympathize with his most offensive words. We can pounce on some gaffe by a Hillary supporter as evidence that she's playing the race card, or we can speculate on whether white men will all flock to John McCain in the general election regardless of his policies.

We can do that.

But if we do, I can tell you that in the next election, we'll be talking about some other distraction. And then another one. And then another one. And nothing will change.

That is one option. Or, at this moment, in this election, we can come together and say, "Not this time." This time we want to talk about the crumbling schools that are stealing the future of black children and white children and Asian children and Hispanic children and Native American children. This time we want to reject the cynicism that tells us that these kids can't learn; that those kids who don't look like us are somebody else's problem. The children of America are not those kids, they are our kids, and we will not let them fall behind in a 21st century economy. Not this time.

This time we want to talk about how the lines in the Emergency Room are filled with whites and blacks and Hispanics who do not have health care; who don't have the power on their own to overcome the special interests in Washington, but who can take them on if we do it together.

This time we want to talk about the shuttered mills that once provided a decent life for men and women of every race, and the homes for sale that once belonged to Americans from every religion, every region, every walk of life. This time we want to talk about the fact that the real problem is not that someone who doesn't look like you might take your job; it's that the corporation you work for will ship it overseas for nothing more than a profit.

This time we want to talk about the men and women of every color and creed who serve together, and fight together, and bleed together under the same proud flag. We want to talk about how to bring them home from a war that never should've been authorized and never should've been waged, and we want to talk about how we'll show our patriotism by caring for them, and their families, and giving them the benefits they have earned.

I would not be running for President if I didn't believe with all my heart that this is what the vast majority of Americans want for this country. This union may never be perfect, but generation after generation has shown that it can always be perfected. And today, whenever I find myself feeling doubtful or cynical about this possibility, what gives me the most hope is the next generation – the young people whose attitudes and beliefs and openness to change have already made history in this election.

There is one story in particular that I'd like to leave you with today – a story I told when I had the great honor of speaking on Dr. King's birthday at his home church, Ebenezer Baptist, in Atlanta.

There is a young, twenty-three year old white woman named Ashley Baia who organized for our campaign in Florence, South Carolina. She had been working to organize a mostly African-American community since the beginning of this campaign, and one day she was at a roundtable discussion where everyone went around telling their story and why they were there.

And Ashley said that when she was nine years old, her mother got cancer. And because she had to miss days of work, she was let go and lost her health care. They had to file for bankruptcy, and that's when Ashley decided that she had to do something to help her mom.

She knew that food was one of their most expensive costs, and so Ashley convinced her mother that what she really liked and really wanted to eat more than anything else was mustard and relish sandwiches. Because that was the cheapest way to eat.

She did this for a year until her mom got better, and she told everyone at the roundtable that the reason she joined our campaign was so that she could help the millions of other children in the country who want and need to help their parents too.

Now Ashley might have made a different choice. Perhaps somebody told her along the way that the source of her mother's problems were blacks who were on welfare and too lazy to work, or Hispanics who were coming into the country illegally. But she didn't. She sought out allies in her fight against injustice.

Anyway, Ashley finishes her story and then goes around the room and asks everyone else why they're supporting the campaign. They all have different stories and reasons. Many bring up a specific issue. And finally they come to this elderly black man who's been sitting there quietly the entire time. And Ashley asks him why he's there. And he does not bring up a specific issue. He does not say health care or the economy. He does not say education or the war. He does not say that he was there because of Barack Obama. He simply says to everyone in the room, "I am here because of Ashley."

"I'm here because of Ashley." By itself, that single moment of recognition between that young white girl and that old black man is not enough. It is not enough to give health care to the sick, or jobs to the jobless, or education to our children.

But it is where we start. It is where our union grows stronger. And as so many generations have come to realize over the course of the two-hundred and twenty one years since a band of patriots signed that document in Philadelphia, that is where the perfection begins.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

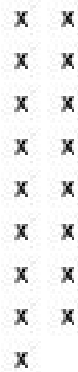

Anonymous (2008-03-18 16:44:00)

I think it is unfortunate that this controversy has succeeded where Mrs. Clinton has not. I believe hence forth Mr. Obama will be seen as African America's candidate. There is so much more to this man.

Video: Philadelphia Speech (2008-03-18 15:22)

Check out Barack's well-written and well-delivered speech today in Philadelphia.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Upcoming Barack Obama Appearances (2008-03-18 21:11)

Upcoming Barack Obama Events

Mar 19 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Charlotte, NC

Mar 20 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Beckley, WV

Mar 20 Speech on Iraq and the Economy in Charleston with Barack Obama

in Charleston, WV

Mar 21 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Portland, OR

Mar 21 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Eugene, OR

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Jeremiah Wright: The Unacceptability of Truth (2008-03-19 07:58)

I'm posting an excellent defense of Rev. Jeremiah Wright below. Don't think the campaign would use this as their focus is to unite people in a movement for change, and to do that a leader must be diplomatic. Also, the campaign must keep the movement for change as the main issue and not let others frame Obama's race as the central campaign issue. However, as usual Wright's comments have been misinterpreted by the spin masters. It's impractical to expect Obama to create an alternate reality and disavow every angry black man on the planet. You could certainly disagree with Wright on issues like the AIDS conspiracy, something that has been argued on by experts on the Oprah show, but in most instances despite the inflammatory tone, Wright was right.

Of National Lies and Racial Amnesia:

Jeremiah Wright, Barack Obama, and the Unacceptability of Truth

By Tim Wise

March 18, 2008

For most white folks, indignation just doesn't wear well. Once affected or conjured up, it reminds one of a pudgy man, wearing a tie that may well have fit him when he was fifty pounds lighter, but which now cuts off somewhere above his navel and makes him look like an idiot.

Indignation doesn't work for most whites, because having remained sanguine about, silent during, indeed often supportive of so much injustice over the years in this country—the theft of native land and genocide of indigenous persons, and the enslavement of Africans being only two of the best examples—we are just a bit late to get into the game of moral rectitude. And once we enter it, our efforts at righteousness tend to fail the test of sincerity.

But here we are, in 2008, fuming at the words of Pastor Jeremiah Wright, of Trinity United Church of Christ in Chicago—occasionally Barack Obama's pastor, and the man whom Obama credits with having brought him to Christianity—for merely reminding us of those evils about which we have remained so quiet, so dismissive, so unconcerned. It is not the crime that bothers us, but the remembrance of it, the unwillingness to let it go—these last words being the first ones uttered by most whites it seems whenever anyone, least of all an "angry black man" like Jeremiah Wright, foists upon us the bill of particulars for several centuries of white supremacy.

But our collective indignation, no matter how loudly we announce it, cannot drown out the truth. And as much as white America may not be able to hear it (and as much as politics may require Obama to condemn it) let us be clear, Jeremiah Wright fundamentally told the truth.

Oh I know that for some such a comment will seem shocking. After all, didn't he say that America "got what it deserved" on 9/11? And didn't he say that black people should be singing "God Damn America" because of its treatment of the African American community throughout the years?

Well actually, no he didn't.

Wright said not that the attacks of September 11th were justified, but that they were, in effect, predictable. Deploying the imagery of chickens coming home to roost is not to give thanks for the return of the poultry or to endorse such feathered homecoming as a positive good; rather, it is merely to note two things: first, that what goes around, indeed, comes around—a notion with longstanding theological grounding—and secondly, that the U.S. has indeed engaged in more than enough violence against innocent people to make it just a tad bit hypocritical for us to then evince shock and outrage about an attack on ourselves, as if the latter were unprecedented.

He noted that we killed far more people, far more innocent civilians in Hiroshima and Nagasaki than were killed on 9/11 and "never batted an eye." That this statement is true is inarguable, at least amongst sane people. He is correct on the math, he is correct on the innocence of the dead (neither city was a military target), and he is most definitely correct on the lack of remorse or even self-doubt about the act: sixty-plus years later most Americans still believe those attacks were justified, that they were needed to end the war and "save American lives."

But not only does such a calculus suggest that American lives are inherently worth more than the lives of Japanese civilians (or, one supposes, Vietnamese, Iraqi or Afghan civilians too), but it also ignores the long-declassified documents, and President Truman's own war diaries, all of which indicate clearly that Japan had already signaled its desire to end the war, and that we knew they were going to surrender, even without the dropping of atomic weapons. The conclusion to which these truths then attest is simple, both in its basic veracity and its monstrosity: namely, that in those places we committed premeditated and deliberate mass murder, with no justification whatsoever; and yet for saying that I will receive more hate mail, more hostility, more dismissive and contemptuous responses than will those who suggest that no body count is too high when we're the ones doing the killing. Jeremiah Wright becomes a pariah, because, you see, we much prefer the logic of George Bush the First, who once said that as President he would "never apologize for the United States of America. I don't care what the facts are."

And Wright didn't say blacks should be singing "God Damn America." He was suggesting that blacks owe little moral allegiance to a nation that has treated so many of them for so long as animals, as persons undeserving of dignity and respect, and which even now locks up hundreds of thousands of non-violent offenders (especially for drug possession), even while whites who do the same crimes (and according to the data, when it comes to drugs, more often in fact), are walking around free. His reference to God in that sermon was more about what God will do to such a nation, than it was about what should or shouldn't happen. It was a comment derived from, and fully in keeping with, the black prophetic tradition, and although one can surely disagree with the theology (I do, actually, and don't believe that any God either blesses or condemns nation states for their actions), the statement itself was no call for blacks to turn on America. If anything, it was a demand that America earn the respect of black people, something the evidence and history suggests it has yet to do.

Finally, although one can certainly disagree with Wright about his suggestion that the government created AIDS to get rid of black folks—and I do, for instance—it is worth pointing out that Wright isn't the only one who has said this. In fact, none other than Bill Cosby (oh yes, that Bill Cosby, the one white folks love because of his recent moral crusade against the black poor) proffered his belief in the very same thing back in the early '90s in an interview on CNN, when he said that AIDS may well have been created to get rid of people whom the government deemed "undesirable" including gays and racial minorities.

So that's the truth of the matter: Wright made one comment that is highly arguable, but which has also been voiced by white America's favorite black man, another that was horribly misinterpreted and stripped of all context, and then another that was demonstrably accurate. And for this, he is pilloried and made into a virtual enemy of the state; for this, Barack Obama may lose the support of just enough white folks to cost him the Democratic nomination, and/or the Presidency; all of it, because Jeremiah Wright, unlike most preachers opted for truth. If he had been one of those "prosperity ministers" who says Jesus wants nothing so much as for you to be rich, like Joel Osteen, that would have been fine. Had he been a retread bigot like Falwell was, or Pat Robertson is, he might have been criticized, but he would have remained in good standing and surely not have damaged a Presidential candidate in this way. But unlike Osteen, and Falwell, and Robertson, Jeremiah Wright refused to feed his parishioners lies.

What Jeremiah Wright knows, and told his flock—though make no mistake, they already knew it—is that 9/11 was neither the first, nor worst act of terrorism on American soil. The history of this nation for folks of color, was for generations, nothing less than an intergenerational hate crime, one in which 9/11s were woven into the fabric of everyday life: hundreds of thousands of the enslaved who died from the conditions of their bondage; thousands more who were lynched (as many as 10,000 in the first few years after the Civil War, according to testimony in the Congressional Record at the time); millions of indigenous persons wiped off the face of the Earth. No, to some, the horror of 9/11 was not new. To some it was not on that day that "everything changed." To some, everything changed four hundred years ago, when that first ship landed at what would become Jamestown. To some, everything changed when their ancestors were forced into the hulls of slave ships at Goree Island and brought to a strange land as chattel. To some, everything changed when they were run out of Northern Mexico, only to watch it become the Southwest United States, thanks to a war of annihilation initiated by the U.S. government. To some, being on the receiving end of terrorism has been a way of life. Until recently it was absolutely normal in fact.

But white folks have a hard time hearing these simple truths. We find it almost impossible to listen to an alternative version of reality. Indeed, what seems to bother white people more than anything, whether in the recent episode, or at any other time, is being confronted with the recognition that black people do not, by and large, see the world like we do; that black people, by and large, do not view America as white people view it. We are, in fact, shocked that this should be so, having come to believe, apparently, that the falsehoods to which we cling like a kidney patient clings to a dialysis machine, are equally shared by our darker-skinned compatriots.

This is what James Baldwin was talking about in his classic 1972 work, No Name in the Street, wherein he noted:

"White children, in the main, and whether they are rich or poor, grow up with a grasp of reality so feeble that they can very accurately be described as deluded—about themselves and the world they live in. White people have managed to get through their entire lifetimes in this euphoric state, but black people have not been so lucky: a black man who sees the world the way John Wayne, for example, sees it would not be an eccentric patriot, but a raving maniac."

And so we were shocked in 1987, when Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall declined to celebrate the bicentennial of the Constitution, because, as he noted, most of that history had been one of overt racism and injustice, and to his way of thinking, the only history worth celebrating had been that of the past three or four decades.

We were shocked to learn that black people actually believed that a white cop who was a documented racist might frame a black man; and we're shocked to learn that lots of black folks still perceive the U.S. as a racist nation—we're literally stunned that people who say they experience discrimination regularly (and who have the social science research to back them up) actually think that those experiences and that data might actually say something about the nation in which they reside. Imagine.

Whites are easily shocked by what we see and hear from Pastor Wright and Trinity Church, because what we see and hear so thoroughly challenges our understanding of who we are as a nation. But black people have never, for the most part, believed in the imagery of the "shining city on a hill," for they have never had the option of looking at their nation and ignoring the mountain-sized warts still dotting its face when it comes to race. Black people do not, in the main, get misty eyed at the sight of the flag the way white people do—and this is true even for millions of black veterans—for they understand that the nation for whom that flag waves is still not fully committed to their own equality. They have a harder time singing those tunes that white people seem so eager to belt out, like "God Bless America," for they know that whites sang those words loudly and proudly even as they were enforcing Jim Crow segregation, rioting against blacks who dared move into previously white neighborhoods, throwing rocks at Dr. King and then cheering, as so many did, when they heard the news that he had been assassinated.

Whites refuse to remember (or perhaps have never learned) that which black folks cannot afford to forget. I've seen white people stunned to the point of paralysis when they learn the truth about lynchings in this country—when they discover that such events were not just a couple of good old boys with a truck and a rope hauling some black guy out to the tree, hanging him, and letting him swing there. They were never told the truth: that lynchings were often community events, advertised in papers as "Negro Barbecues," involving hundreds or even thousands of whites, who would join in the fun, eat chicken salad and drink sweet tea, all while the black victims of their depravity were being hung, then shot, then burned, and then having their body parts cut off, to be handed out to onlookers. They are stunned to learn that postcards of the events were traded as souvenirs, and that very few whites, including members of their own families did or said anything to stop it.

Rather than knowing about and confronting the ugliness of our past, whites take steps to excise the less flattering aspects of our history so that we need not be bothered with them. So, in Tulsa, Oklahoma, for example, site of an orgy of violence against the black community in 1921, city officials literally went into the town library and removed all reference to the mass killings in the Greenwood district from the papers with a razor blade—an excising of truth and an assault on memory that would remain unchanged for over seventy years.

Most white people desire, or perhaps even require the propagation of lies when it comes to our history. Surely we prefer the lies to anything resembling, even remotely, the truth. Our version of history, of our national past, simply cannot allow for the intrusion of fact into a worldview so thoroughly identified with fiction. But that white version of America is not only extraordinarily incomplete, in that it so favors the white experience to the exclusion of others; it is more than that; it is actually a slap in the face to people of color, a re-injury, a reminder that they are essentially irrelevant, their concerns trivial, their lives unworthy of being taken seriously. In that sense, and what few if any white Americans appear capable of grasping at present, is that "Leave it Beaver" and "Father Knows Best," portray an America so divorced from the reality of the times in which they were produced, as to raise serious questions about the sanity of those who found them so moving, so accurate, so real. These iconographic representations of life in the U.S. are worse than selective, worse than false, they are assaults to the humanity and memory of black people, who were being savagely oppressed even as June Cleaver did housework in heels and laughed about the hilarious hijinks of Beaver and Larry Mondello.

These portraits of America are certifiable evidence of how disconnected white folks were—and to the extent we still love them and view them as representations of the "good old days" to which we wish we could return, still are—from those men and women of color with whom we have long shared a nation. Just two months before "Leave it to Beaver" debuted, proposed civil rights legislation was killed thanks to Strom Thurmond's 24-hour filibuster speech on the floor of the U.S. Senate. One month prior, Arkansas Governor Orville Faubus called out the National Guard to block black students from entering Little Rock Central High; and nine days before America was introduced to the Cleavers, and the comforting image of national life they represented, those black students were finally allowed to enter, amid the screams of enraged, unhinged, viciously bigoted white people, who saw nothing wrong with calling children niggers in front of cameras. That was America of the 1950s: not the sanitized version into which so many escape thanks to the miracle of syndication, which merely allows white people to relive a lie, year after year after year.

No, it is not the pastor who distorts history; Nick at Nite and your teenager's textbooks do that. It is not he who casts aspersions upon "this great country" as Barack Obama put it in his public denunciations of him; it is the historic leadership of the nation that has cast aspersions upon it; it is they who have cheapened it, who have made gaudy and vile the promise of American democracy by defiling it with lies. They engage in a patriotism that is pathological in its implications, that asks of those who adhere to it not merely a love of country but the turning of one's nation into an idol to be worshipped, it not literally, then at least in terms of consequence.

It is they—the flag-lapel-pin wearing leaders of this land—who bring shame to the country with their nonsensical suggestions that we are always noble in warfare, always well-intended, and although we occasionally make mistakes, we are never the ones to blame for anything. Nothing that happens to us has anything to do with us at all. It is always about them. They are evil, crazy, fanatical, hate our freedoms, and are jealous of our prosperity. When individuals prattle on in this manner we diagnose them as narcissistic, as deluded. When nations do it—when our nation does—we celebrate it as though it were the very model of rational and informed citizenship.

So what can we say about a nation that values lies more than it loves truth? A place where adherence to sincerely believed and internalized fictions allows one to rise to the highest offices in the land, and to earn the respect of millions, while a willingness to challenge those fictions and offer a more accurate counter-narrative earns one nothing but contempt, derision, indeed outright hatred? What we can say is that such a place is signing its own death warrant. What we can say is that such a place is missing the only and last opportunity it may ever have to make things right, to live up to its professed ideals. What we can say is that such a place can never move forward, because we have yet to fully address and come to terms with that which lay behind.

What can we say about a nation where white preachers can lie every week from their pulpits without so much as having to worry that their lies might be noticed by the shiny white faces in their pews, while black preachers who tell one after another essential truth are demonized, not only for the stridency of their tone—which needless to say scares white folks, who have long preferred a style of praise and worship resembling nothing so much as a coma—but for merely calling bullshit on those whose lies are swallowed whole?

And oh yes, I said it: white preachers lie. In fact, they lie with a skill, fluidity, and precision unparalleled in the history of either preaching or lying, both of which histories stretch back a ways and have often overlapped. They lie every Sunday, as they talk about a Savior they have chosen to represent dishonestly as a white man, in every picture to be found of him in their tabernacles, every children's story book in their Sunday Schools, every Christmas card they'll send to relatives and friends this December. But to lie about Jesus, about the one they consider God—to bear false witness as to who this man was and what he looked like—is no cause for concern.

Nor is it a problem for these preachers to teach and preach that those who don't believe as they believe are going to hell. Despite the fact that such a belief casts aspersions upon God that are so profound as to defy belief—after all, they imply that God is so fundamentally evil that he would burn non-believers in a lake of eternal fire—many of the white folks who now condemn Jeremiah Wright welcome that theology of hate. Indeed, back when President Bush was the Governor of Texas, he endorsed this kind of thinking, responding to a question about whether Jews were going to go to hell, by saying that unless one accepted Jesus as one's personal savior, the Bible made it pretty clear that indeed, hell was where you'd be heading.

So you can curse God in this way—and to imply such hate on God's part is surely to curse him—and in effect, curse those who aren't Christians, and no one says anything. That isn't considered bigoted. That isn't considered beyond the pale of polite society. One is not disqualified from becoming President in the minds of millions because they go to a church that says that shit every single week, or because they believe it themselves. And millions do believe it, and see nothing wrong with it whatsoever.

So white folks are mad at Jeremiah Wright because he challenges their views about their country. Meanwhile, those same white folks, and their ministers and priests, every week put forth a false image of the God Jeremiah Wright serves, and yet it is whites who feel we have the right to be offended.

Pardon me, but something is wrong here, and whatever it is, is not to be found at Trinity United Church of Christ.

The White Privilege Conference is April 2-5, 2008!
Visit: www.uccs.edu/wpc/

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-03-19 19:03:00)

The campaign was on the right track. They just do not have a conviction to follow up correctly. One coat of paint is not enough for Jeremiah Wright. The issues must be tied to the landmark speech. The difference between health care in America and that of other industrialized countries is our diversity. If we are to unite we must take care of each other with universal health care just like countries that do not have such diverse ethnicities and races. The speech would be a great lead in to talking about how coincidental it is for us to be so diverse and not developing universal health care for our citizenry.

z.bediako (2008-03-21 09:26:00)

Great Post.

You have articulated what I have been trying to say.

Thank You

Thank YOU!

Anonymous (2010-09-17 19:08:30)

Brilliant blog, I hadn't come across obamabarack.blogspot.com before during my searches!
Keep up the great work!

Anonymous (2010-10-15 01:47:40)

Hey,

This is a question for the webmaster/admin here at obamabarack.blogspot.com.

May I use some of the information from this blog post right above if I provide a backlink back to this site?

Thanks,

Alex

Paul Kekai Manansala (2010-10-15 08:15:20)

Yes, you may use the information.

Anonymous (2011-01-18 15:56:45)

Greetings,

Thanks for sharing this link - but unfortunately it seems to be down? Does anybody here at obamabarack.blogspot.com have a mirror or another source?

Cheers,

Peter

(2008-03-19 07:58)

I'm posting an excellent defense of Rev. Jeremiah Wright below. Don't think the campaign would use this as

Obama speaks on Iraq War 5th Anniversary (2008-03-19 09:25)

From barackobama.com :

FAYETTEVILLE, NC—On the fifth anniversary of the war in Iraq, Senator Barack Obama offered a clear contrast between his foreign policy vision and that of John McCain, emphasizing the need to end the war in order to confront the emerging national security challenges of the 21st Century. Obama spoke at Fayetteville Technical Community College, a short distance from Fort Bragg and Pope Air Force Base. Fort Bragg is home to the 82d Airborne Division and the U.S. Army Special Operations Command, members of which have seen multiple deployments to Iraq and Afghanistan.

In his remarks, Senator Obama drew stark distinctions between the leadership and judgment he offers and the kind of leadership that led us into Iraq—and fails to comprehend the consequences of our involvement there:

"Just yesterday, we heard Senator McCain confuse Sunni and Shiite, Iran and al Qaeda," Senator Obama said. "Maybe that is why he voted to go to war with a country that had no al Qaeda ties. Maybe that is why he completely fails to understand that the war in Iraq has done more to embolden America's enemies than any strategic choice that we have made in decades."

Obama was introduced and endorsed at the event by Paul "Bud" Bucha, a former Army captain awarded the Medal of Honor in 1970 for heroism in Vietnam.

Senator Obama outlined the threats that have festered while the U.S. has remained mired in Iraq, a war he opposed from the start. Obama will immediately begin to bring and end to the war and refocus our military and diplomatic efforts on 21st-Century security challenges. As President, Obama will:

- End the war in Iraq, removing our troops at a pace of 1 to 2 combat brigades per month;
- Finally finish the fight against the Taliban, root out al Qaeda and invest in the people of Afghanistan and Pakistan, while making aid to the Pakistani government conditional;
- Act aggressively to stop nuclear proliferation and to secure all loose nuclear materials around the world;
- Double our foreign assistance to cut extreme poverty in half;

- Invest in a clean energy future to wean the U.S. off of foreign oil and to lead the world against the threat of global climate change;
- Rebuild our military capability by increasing the number of soldiers, marines, and special forces troops, and insist on adequate training and time off between deployments;
- Renew American diplomacy by talking to our adversaries as well as our friends; increasing the size of the Foreign Service and the Peace Corps; and creating an America's Voice Corps.

✖ Click here for the full fact sheet.

Continue reading for Senator Obama's remarks follow as prepared for delivery... The World Beyond Iraq
Senator Barack Obama

March 19, 2008

As prepared for delivery

Just before America's entry into World War I, President Woodrow Wilson addressed Congress: "It is a fearful thing to lead this great peaceful people into war," he said. "...But the right is more precious than peace." Wilson's words captured two awesome responsibilities that test any Commander-in-Chief – to never hesitate to defend America, but to never go to war unless you must. War is sometimes necessary, but it has grave consequences, and the judgment to go to war can never be undone.

Five years ago today, President George W. Bush addressed the nation. Bombs had started to rain down on Baghdad. War was necessary, the President said, because the United States could not, "live at the mercy of an outlaw regime that threatens the peace with weapons of mass murder.” Recalling the pain of 9/11, he said the price of inaction in Iraq was to meet the threat with “armies of fire fighters and police and doctors on the streets of our cities.”

At the time the President uttered those words, there was no hard evidence that Iraq had those stockpiles of weapons of mass destruction. There was not any evidence that Iraq was responsible for the attacks of September 11, or that Iraq had operational ties to the al Qaeda terrorists who carried them out. By launching a war based on faulty premises and bad intelligence, President Bush failed Wilson’s test. So did Congress when it voted to give him the authority to wage war.

Five years have gone by since that fateful decision. This war has now lasted longer than World War I, World War II, or the Civil War. Nearly four thousand Americans have given their lives. Thousands more have been wounded. Even under the best case scenarios, this war will cost American taxpayers well over a trillion dollars. And where are we for all of this sacrifice? We are less safe and less able to shape events abroad. We are divided at home, and our alliances around the world have been strained. The threats of a new century have roiled the waters of peace and stability, and yet America remains anchored in Iraq. History will catalog the reasons why we waged a war that didn’t need to be fought, but two stand out. In 2002, when the fateful decisions about Iraq were made, there was a President for whom ideology overrode pragmatism, and there were too many politicians in Washington who spent too little time reading the intelligence reports, and too much time reading public opinion. The lesson of Iraq is that when we are making decisions about matters as grave as war, we need a policy rooted in reason and facts, not ideology and politics.

Now we are debating who should be our next Commander in Chief. And I am running for President because it’s time to turn the page on a failed ideology and a fundamentally flawed political strategy, so that we can make pragmatic judgments to keep our country safe. That’s what I did when I stood up and opposed this war from the start, and said that we needed to finish the fight against al Qaeda. And that’s what I’ll do as President of the United States.

Senator Clinton says that she and Senator McCain have passed a “Commander in Chief test” – not because of the judgments they’ve made, but because of the years they’ve spent in Washington. She made a similar argument when she said her vote for war was based on her experience at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue. But here is the stark reality: there is a security gap in this country – a gap between the rhetoric of those who claim to be tough on national security, and the reality of growing insecurity caused by their decisions. A gap between Washington experience, and the wisdom of Washington’s judgments. A gap between the rhetoric of those who tout their support for our troops, and the overburdened state of our military.

It is time to have a debate with John McCain about the future of our national security. And the way to win that debate is not to compete with John McCain over who has more experience in Washington, because that’s a contest that he’ll win. The way to win a debate with John McCain is not to talk, and act, and vote like him on national security, because then we all lose. The way to win that debate and to keep America safe is to offer a clear contrast, and that’s what I will do when I am the nominee of the Democratic Party – because since before this war in Iraq began, I have made different judgments, I have a different vision, and I will offer a clean break from the failed policies and politics of the past.

Nowhere is that break more badly needed than in Iraq.

In the year since President Bush announced the surge – the bloodiest year of the war for America – the level of violence in Iraq has been reduced. Our troops – including so many from Fort Bragg and Pope Air Force Base – have done a brilliant job under difficult circumstances. Yet while we have a General who has used improved tactics to reduce violence, we still have the wrong strategy. As General Petraeus has himself acknowledged, the Iraqis are not achieving the political progress needed to end their civil war. Beyond Iraq, our military is badly overstretched, and we have neither the strategy nor resources to deal with nearly every other national security challenge we face.

This is why the judgment that matters most on Iraq – and on any decision to deploy military force – is the judgment made first. If you believe we are fighting the right war, then the problems we face are purely tactical in nature. That is what Senator McCain wants to discuss – tactics. What he and the Administration have failed to present is an overarching strategy: how the war in Iraq enhances our long-term security, or will in the future. That's why this Administration cannot answer the simple question posed by Senator John Warner in hearings last year: Are we safer because of this war? And that is why Senator McCain can argue – as he did last year – that we couldn't leave Iraq because violence was up, and then argue this year that we can't leave Iraq because violence is down.

When you have no overarching strategy, there is no clear definition of success. Success comes to be defined as the ability to maintain a flawed policy indefinitely. Here is the truth: fighting a war without end will not force the Iraqis to take responsibility for their own future. And fighting in a war without end will not make the American people safer.

So when I am Commander-in-Chief, I will set a new goal on Day One: I will end this war. Not because politics compels it. Not because our troops cannot bear the burden– as heavy as it is. But because it is the right thing to do for our national security, and it will ultimately make us safer.

In order to end this war responsibly, I will immediately begin to remove our troops from Iraq. We can responsibly remove 1 to 2 combat brigades each month. If we start with the number of brigades we have in Iraq today, we can remove all of them 16 months. After this redeployment, we will leave enough troops in Iraq to guard our embassy and diplomats, and a counter-terrorism force to strike al Qaeda if it forms a base that the Iraqis cannot destroy. What I propose is not – and never has been – a precipitous drawdown. It is instead a detailed and prudent plan that will end a war nearly seven years after it started. My plan to end this war will finally put pressure on Iraq's leaders to take responsibility for their future. Because we've learned that when we tell Iraq's leaders that we'll stay as long as it takes, they take as long as they want. We need to send a different message. We will help Iraq reach a meaningful accord on national reconciliation. We will engage with every country in the region – and the UN – to support the stability and territorial integrity of Iraq. And we will launch a major humanitarian initiative to support Iraq's refugees and people. But Iraqis must take responsibility for their country. It is precisely this kind of approach – an approach that puts the onus on the Iraqis, and that relies on more than just military power – that is needed to stabilize Iraq.

Let me be clear: ending this war is not going to be easy. There will be dangers involved. We will have to make tactical adjustments, listening to our commanders on the ground, to ensure that our interests in a stable Iraq are met, and to make sure that our troops are secure. Senator Clinton has tried to use my position to score political points, suggesting that I am somehow less committed to ending the war. She makes this argument despite the fact that she has taken the same position in the past. So ask yourself: who do you trust to end a war – someone who opposed the war from the beginning, or someone who started opposing it when they started preparing a run for President?

Now we know what we'll hear from those like John McCain who support open-ended war. They will argue that leaving Iraq is surrender. That we are emboldening the enemy. These are the mistaken and misleading arguments we hear from those who have failed to demonstrate how the war in Iraq has made us safer. Just yesterday, we heard Senator McCain confuse Sunni and Shiite, Iran and al Qaeda. Maybe that is why he voted to go to war with a country that had no al Qaeda ties. Maybe that is why he completely fails to understand that the war in Iraq has done more to embolden America's enemies than any strategic choice that we have made in decades.

The war in Iraq has emboldened Iran, which poses the greatest challenge to American interests in the Middle East in a generation, continuing its nuclear program and threatening our ally, Israel. Instead of the new Middle East we were promised, Hamas runs Gaza, Hizbollah flags fly from the rooftops in Sadr City, and Iran is handing out money left and right in southern Lebanon.

The war in Iraq has emboldened North Korea, which built new nuclear weapons and even tested one before the Administration finally went against its own rhetoric, and pursued diplomacy.

The war in Iraq has emboldened the Taliban, which has rebuilt its strength since we took our eye off of Afghanistan.

Above all, the war in Iraq has emboldened al Qaeda, whose recruitment has jumped and whose leadership enjoys a safe-haven in Pakistan – a thousand miles from Iraq.

The central front in the war against terror is not Iraq, and it never was. What more could America's enemies ask for than an endless war where they recruit new followers and try out new tactics on a battlefield so far from their base of operations? That is why my presidency will shift our focus. Rather than fight a war that does not need to be fought, we need to start fighting the battles that need to be won on the central front of the war against al Qaeda in Afghanistan and Pakistan.

This is the area where the 9/11 attacks were planned. This is where Osama bin Laden and his top lieutenants still hide. This is where extremism poses its greatest threat. Yet in both Afghanistan and Pakistan, we have pursued flawed strategies that are too distant from the needs of the people, and too timid in pursuit of our common enemies.

It may not dominate the evening news, but in Afghanistan, last year was the most deadly since 2001. Suicide attacks are up. Casualties are up. Corruption and drug trafficking are rampant. Neither the government nor the legal economy can meet the needs of the Afghan people.

It is not too late to prevail in Afghanistan. But we cannot prevail until we reduce our commitment in Iraq, which will allow us to do what I called for last August – providing at least two additional combat brigades to support our efforts in Afghanistan. This increased commitment in turn can be used to leverage greater assistance – with fewer restrictions – from our NATO allies. It will also allow us to invest more in training Afghan security forces, including more joint NATO operations with the Afghan Army, and a national police training plan that is effectively coordinated and resourced.

A stepped up military commitment must be backed by a long-term investment in the Afghan people. We will start with an additional $1 billion in non military assistance each year – aid that is focused on reaching ordinary Afghans. We need to improve daily life by supporting education, basic infrastructure and human services. We have to counter the opium trade by supporting alternative livelihoods for Afghan farmers. And we must call on more support from friends and allies, and better coordination under a strong international coordinator.

To succeed in Afghanistan, we also need to fundamentally rethink our Pakistan policy. For years, we have supported stability over democracy in Pakistan, and gotten neither. The core leadership of al Qaeda has a safe-haven in Pakistan. The Taliban are able to strike inside Afghanistan and then return to the mountains of the Pakistani border. Throughout Pakistan, domestic unrest has been rising. The full democratic aspirations of the Pakistani people have been too long denied. A child growing up in Pakistan, more often than not, is taught to see America as a source of hate – not hope.

This is why I stood up last summer and said we cannot base our entire Pakistan policy on President Musharraf. Pakistan is our ally, but we do our own security and our ally no favors by supporting its President while we are seen to be ignoring the interests of the people. Our counter-terrorism assistance must be conditioned on Pakistani action to root out the al Qaeda sanctuary. And any U.S. aid not directly needed for the fight against al Qaeda or to invest in the Pakistani people should be conditioned on the full restoration of Pakistan's democracy and rule of law.

The choice is not between Musharraf and Islamic extremists. As the recent legislative elections showed, there is a moderate majority of Pakistanis, and they are the people we need on our side to win the war against al Qaeda. That is why we should dramatically increase our support for the Pakistani people – for education, economic development, and democratic institutions. That child in Pakistan must know that we want a better life for him, that America is on his side, and that his interest in opportunity is our interest as well. That's the promise that America must stand for.

And for his sake and ours, we cannot tolerate a sanctuary for terrorists who threaten America's homeland and Pakistan's stability. If we have actionable intelligence about high-level al Qaeda targets in Pakistan's border region, we must act if Pakistan will not or cannot. Senator Clinton, Senator McCain, and President Bush have all distorted and derided this position, suggesting that I would invade or bomb Pakistan. This is politics, pure and simple. My position, in fact, is the same pragmatic policy that all three of them have belatedly – if tacitly – acknowledged is one we should pursue. Indeed, it was months after I called for this policy that a top al Qaeda leader was taken out in Pakistan by an American aircraft. And remember that the same three individuals who now criticize me for supporting a targeted strike on the terrorists who carried out the 9/11 attacks, are the same three individuals that supported an invasion of Iraq – a country that had nothing to do with 9/11.

It is precisely this kind of political point-scoring that has opened up the security gap in this country. We have a security gap when candidates say they will follow Osama bin Laden to the gates of hell, but refuse to follow him where he actually goes. What we need in our next Commander in Chief is not a stubborn refusal to acknowledge reality or empty rhetoric about 3AM phone calls. What we need is a pragmatic strategy that focuses on fighting our real enemies, rebuilding alliances, and renewing our engagement with the world's people.

In addition to freeing up resources to take the fight to al Qaeda, ending the war in Iraq will allow us to more effectively confront other threats in the world - threats that cannot be conquered with an occupying army or dispatched with a single decision in the middle of the night. What lies in the heart of a child in Pakistan matters as much as the airplanes we sell her government. What's in the head of a scientist from Russia can be as lethal as a plutonium reactor in Yongbyon. What's whispered in refugee camps in Chad can be as dangerous as a dictator's bluster. These are the neglected landscapes of the 21st century, where technology and extremism empower individuals just as they give governments the ability to repress them; where the ancient divides of region and religion wash into the swift currents of globalization. Without American leadership, these threats will fester. With strong American leadership, we can shape them into opportunities to protect our common security and advance our common humanity – for it has always been the genius of American leadership to find opportunity embedded in adversity; to focus on a source of fear, and confront it with hope.

Here are just five ways in which a shift in strategy away from Iraq will help us address the critical challenges of the 21st century.

First, in addressing global terror and violent extremism, we need the kind of comprehensive counter-terrorism strategy I called for last August. We need to strengthen security partnerships to take out terrorist networks, while investing in education and opportunity. We need to give our national security agencies the tools they need, while restoring the adherence to rule of law that helps us win the battle for hearts and minds. This means closing Guantanamo, restoring habeas corpus, and respecting civil liberties. And we need to support the forces of moderation in the Islamic world, so that alliances of convenience mature into friendships of conviction.

Second, the threat of nuclear proliferation must serve as a call to action. I have worked across the aisle with Richard Lugar and Chuck Hagel in the Senate to secure dangerous weapons and loose nuclear materials. And as President, I will secure all loose nuclear materials around the world in my first term, seek deep cuts in global nuclear arsenals, strengthen the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, and once more seek a world without nuclear weapons.

Third, the danger of weak and failed states risks spreading poverty and refugees; genocide and disease. Now is the time to meet the goal of cutting extreme poverty in half, in part by doubling our foreign assistance while demanding more from those who receive it. And now is the time to build the capacity of regional partners in conflict prevention, peacekeeping, and the reconstruction of ravaged societies.

Fourth, the catastrophic consequences of the global climate crisis are matched by the promise of collective action. Now is the time for America to lead, because if we take action, others will act as well. Through our own cap and trade system and investments in new sources of energy, we can end our dependence on foreign oil and gas, and free ourselves from the tyranny of oil-rich states from Saudi Arabia to Russia to Venezuela. We can create millions of new jobs here in America. And we can secure our planet for our children and grandchildren.

And fifth, America's sluggish economy risks ceding our economic prominence to a rising China. Competition has always been a catalyst for American innovation, and now should be no different. We must invest in the education of our children, renew our leadership in science, and advance trade that is not just free, but fair for our workers. We must ensure that America is the economic engine in the 21st century just as we were in the 20th.

I have no illusions that any of this will be easy. But I do know that we can only begin to make these changes when we end the mindset that focuses on Iraq and ignores the rest of the world.

I also know that meeting these new threats will require a President who deploys the power of tough, principled diplomacy. It is time to present a country like Iran with a clear choice. If it abandons its nuclear program, support for terror, and threats to Israel, then Iran can rejoin the community of nations – with all the benefits that entails. If not, Iran will face deeper isolation and steeper sanctions. When we engage directly, we will be in a stronger position to rally real international support for increased pressure. We will also engender more goodwill from the Iranian people. And make no mistake – if and when we ever have to use military force against any country, we must exert the power of American diplomacy first.

Once again, Senator Clinton, Senator McCain, and President Bush have made the same arguments against my position on diplomacy, as if reading from the same political playbook. They say I'll be penciling the world's dictators on to my social calendar. But just as they are misrepresenting my position, they are mistaken in standing up for a policy of not talking that is not working. What I've said is that we cannot seize opportunities to resolve our problems unless we create them. That is what Kennedy did with Khrushchev; what Nixon did with Mao; what Reagan did with Gorbachev. And that is what I will do as President of the United States.

What I have talked about today is a new strategy, a new set of priorities for pursuing our interests in the 21st century. And as President, I will provide the tools required to implement this strategy. When President Truman put the policy of containment in place, he also invested in and organized our government to carry it out – creating the National Security Council and the CIA, and founding NATO. Now, we must upgrade our tools of power to fit a new strategy.

That starts with enhancing the finest military in the history of the world. As Commander in Chief, I will begin by giving a military overstretched by Iraq the support it needs. It is time to reduce the strain on our troops by completing the effort to increase our ground forces by 65,000 soldiers and 27,000 Marines, while ensuring the quality of our troops. In an age marked by technology, it is the people of our military – our Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen – who bear the responsibility for complex missions. That is why we need to ensure adequate training and time home between deployments. That is why we need to expand our Special Forces. And that is why we must increase investments in capabilities like civil affairs and training foreign militaries.

But we cannot place the burden of a new national security strategy on our military alone. We must integrate our diplomatic, information, economic and military power. That is why, as soon as I take office, I will call for a National Strategy and Security Review, to help determine a 21st Century inter-agency structure to integrate the elements of our national power.

In addition, I will invest in our civilian capacity to operate alongside our troops in post-conflict zones and on humanitarian and stabilization missions. Instead of shuttering consulates in tough corners of the world, it's time to grow our Foreign Service and to expand USAID. Instead of giving up on the determination of young people to serve, it's time to double the size of our Peace Corps. Instead of letting people learn about America from enemy propaganda, it's time to recruit, train, and send out into the world an America's Voice Corps.

And while we strengthen our own capacity, we must strengthen the capability of the international community. We honor NATO's sacrifice in Afghanistan, but we must strive to make it a larger and more nimble alliance. We must work with powers like Russia and China, but we must also speak up for human rights and democracy – and we can start now by speaking out for the human rights and religious freedom of the people of Tibet. And while we are frustrated by the UN, we must invest in its capability to keep the peace, resolve disputes, monitor disarmament, and support good governance around the world – and that depends on a more engaged United States.

We are at a defining moment in our history.

We can choose the path of unending war and unilateral action, and sap our strength and standing. We can choose the path of disengagement, and cede our leadership. Or, we can meet fear and danger head-on with hope and strength; with common purpose as a united America; and with common cause with old allies and new partners.

What we've seen these last few years is what happens when the rigid ideology and dysfunctional politics of Washington is projected abroad. An ideology that does not fit the shape of the times cannot shape events in foreign countries. A politics that is based on fear and division does not allow us to call on the world to hope, and keeps us from coming together as one people, as one nation, to write the next great chapter in the American story.

We also know that there is another face of America that we have seen these last five years. From down the road at Fort Bragg, our soldiers have gone abroad with a greater sense of common purpose than their leaders in Washington. They have learned the lessons of the 21st century's wars. And they have shown a sense of service and selflessness that represents the very best of the American character.

This must be the election when we stand up and say that we will serve them as well as they have served us. This must be the election when America comes together behind a common purpose on behalf of our security and our values. That is what we do as Americans. It's how we founded a republic based on freedom, and faced down fascism. It's how we defended democracy through a Cold War, and shined a light of hope bright enough to be seen in the darkest corners of the world.

When America leads with principle and pragmatism, hope can triumph over fear. It is time, once again, for America to lead.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Five Years After the Iraq War (2008-03-19 17:57)

Barack Obama sent out this email today.

Dear Paul,

✖ Five years ago today, President George W. Bush launched a war that should never have been authorized based on faulty premises and bad intelligence.

This war has now lasted longer than World War I , World War II , or the Civil War.

Nearly four thousand Americans have given their lives. Thousands more have been wounded. Even under the best-case scenarios, this war will cost American taxpayers well over a trillion dollars.

And where are we for all of this sacrifice?

We are less safe and less able to shape events abroad. We are divided at home, and our alliances around the world have been strained. The threats of a new century have roiled the waters of peace and stability, and yet America remains anchored in Iraq .

I am running for President because it's time to turn the page on a failed ideology and a fundamentally flawed political strategy, so that we can make pragmatic judgments to keep our country safe.

That's what I did when I stood up and opposed this war from the start and said that we needed to finish the fight against al Qaeda . And that's what I'll do as President of the United States.

Please take a few minutes to read my strategy for ending the war in Iraq and making America safer. I hope you will sign on and show your support:

<http://my.barackobama.com/fiveyearsater>

Senator Clinton says that she and Senator McCain have passed a "Commander-in-Chief test" – not because of the judgments they've made, but because of the years they've spent in Washington .

She made a similar argument when she said her vote for war was based on her experience at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue.

But here is the stark reality: there is a security gap in this country – a gap between the rhetoric of those who claim to be tough on national security, and the reality of growing insecurity caused by their decisions.

It is time to have a debate with Senator McCain about the future of our national security. And the way to win that debate and keep America safe is to offer a clear contrast – a clean break from the failed policies and politics of the past.

Nowhere is that break more badly needed than in Iraq .

Join me in supporting an end to this war and a plan for a safer America:

<http://my.barackobama.com/fiveyearslater>

The judgment that matters most on Iraq – and on any decision to deploy military force – is the judgment made first.

If you believe we are fighting the right war, then the problems we face are purely tactical in nature. That is what Senator McCain wants to discuss – tactics. What he and the Administration have failed to present is an overarching strategy: how the war in Iraq enhances our long-term security, or will in the future.

That's why this Administration cannot answer the simple question posed by Senator John Warner in hearings last year: Are we safer because of this war? And that is why Senator McCain can argue – as he did last year – that we couldn't leave Iraq because violence was up, and then argue this year that we can't leave Iraq because violence is down.

When you have no overarching strategy, there is no clear definition of success.

Success comes to be defined as the ability to maintain a flawed policy indefinitely. Here is the truth: fighting a war without end will not force the Iraqis to take responsibility for their own future. And fighting in a war without end will not make the American people safer.

When I am Commander-in-Chief, I will set a new goal on Day One: I will end this war. Not because politics compels it. Not because our troops cannot bear the burden – as heavy as it is. But because it is the right thing to do for our national security, and it will ultimately make us safer.

Show your support for a clear strategy to end the war in Iraq and focus our national security efforts on making America safer:

<http://my.barackobama.com/fiveyearslater>

Here are the core elements of my strategy to address our critical national security challenges in the 21st century:

- End the war in Iraq, removing our troops at a pace of 1 to 2 combat brigades per month;
- Finally finish the fight against the Taliban , root out al Qaeda and invest in the people of Afghanistan and Pakistan , while making aid to the Pakistani government conditional;
- Act aggressively to stop nuclear proliferation and to secure all loose nuclear materials around the world;
- Double our foreign assistance to cut extreme poverty in half;
- Invest in a clean energy future to wean the U.S. off of foreign oil and to lead the world against the threat of global climate change;
- Rebuild our military capability by increasing the number of soldiers, marines, and special forces troops, and insist on adequate training and time off between deployments;

- Renew American diplomacy by talking to our adversaries as well as our friends; increasing the size of the Foreign Service and the Peace Corps; and creating an America's Voice Corps.

Please take a minute to show your support for this plan:

<http://my.barackobama.com/fiveyearsater>

We are at a defining moment in our history.

This must be the election when America comes together behind a common purpose on behalf of our security and our values.

That is what we do as Americans. It's how we founded a republic based on freedom, and faced down fascism. It's how we defended democracy through a Cold War , and shined a light of hope bright enough to be seen in the darkest corners of the world.

When America leads with principle and pragmatism, hope can triumph over fear. It is time, once again, for America to lead.

Thank you,

Barack Obama

 [EMBED]

Barack Obama during his speech today, March 19, 2008, on the Iraq War and John McCain in Fayetteville, North Carolina.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack in North Carolina (2008-03-20 12:34)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama reminds supporters to register to vote in North Carolina by April 11.

[EMBED]

Barack gives an address on national security in Fayetteville, North Carolina.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bill Richardson endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-21 06:48)

Gov. Bill Richardson sent out an email last night endorsing Sen. Barack Obama for president.

Richardson also called on other Democrats to rally behind Obama, so the focus can be turned to winning in November.

Here is a copy of Richardson's endorsement email to his supporters.

Dear Friend,

During the last year, I have shared with you my vision and hopes for this nation as we look to repair the damage of the last seven years. And you have shared your support, your ideas and your encouragement to my campaign. We have been through a lot together and that is why I wanted to tell you that, after careful and thoughtful deliberation, I have made a decision to endorse Barack Obama for President. We are blessed to have two great American leaders and great Democrats running for President. My affection and admiration for Hillary Clinton and President Bill Clinton will never waver. It is time, however, for Democrats to stop fighting amongst ourselves and to prepare for the tough fight we will face against John McCain in the fall. The 1990's were a decade of peace and prosperity because of the competent and enlightened leadership of the Clinton administration, but it is now time for a new generation of leadership to lead America forward. Barack Obama will be a historic and a great President, who can bring us the change we so desperately need by bringing us together as a nation here at home and with our allies abroad.

Earlier this week, Senator Barack Obama gave a historic speech. that addressed the issue of race with the eloquence, sincerity, and optimism we have come to expect of him. He inspired us by reminding us of the awesome potential residing in our own responsibility. He asked us to rise above our racially divided past, and to seize the opportunity to carry forward the work of many patriots of all races, who struggled and died to bring us together.

As a Hispanic, I was particularly touched by his words. I have been troubled by the demonization of immigrants—specifically Hispanics— by too many in this country. Hate crimes against Hispanics are rising as a direct result and now, in tough economic times, people look for scapegoats and I fear that people will continue to exploit our racial differences—and place blame on others not like them . We all know the real culprit – the disastrous economic policies of the Bush Administration!

Senator Obama has started a discussion in this country long overdue and rejects the politics of pitting race against race. He understands clearly that only by bringing people together, only by bridging our differences can we all succeed together as Americans.

His words are those of a courageous, thoughtful and inspiring leader, who understands that a house divided against itself cannot stand. And, after nearly eight years of George W. Bush, we desperately need such a leader.

To reverse the disastrous policies of the last seven years, rebuild our economy, address the housing and mortgage crisis, bring our troops home from Iraq and restore America's international standing, we need a President who can bring us together as a nation so we can confront our urgent challenges at home and abroad.

During the past year, I got to know Senator Obama as we campaigned against each other for the Presidency, and I felt a kinship with him because we both grew up between worlds, in a sense, living both abroad and here in America. In part because of these experiences, Barack and I share a deep sense of our nation's special responsibilities in the world.

So, once again, thank you for all you have done for me and my campaign. I wanted to make sure you understood my reasons for my endorsement of Senator Obama. I know that you, no matter what your choice, will do so with the best interests of this nation, in your heart.

Sincerely,

Bill Richardson

X

X

X

X

[EMBED]

Barack Obama discusses the burgeoning costs of the Iraq War and the effect on the ailing economy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Hersh Chaturvedi (2008-03-21 11:59:00)

I think the passions that Obama arouses are curiously textured on both the sides– those who write him off do so for reasons as insufficient as those who embrace him. he is NOT the Messiah, but nor is he the Pretender– at least any more than Bush (who appeared dimwitted but reliable, "shrub"), or Clinton (who was brilliant, but unreliable, "slick") were.

Actually, it is, in part, a "white boy" fatigue that lifts Obama's boat. Not that there is anything racial about it.

Obama's most impassioned followers transfer ages of (partly imagined) burden, and see him as the benevolent exponent who'd score a symbolic victory over generations of (partly imagined) inequities. His biggest appeal is in being un-white, un-Clinton-usqu, -un-GeorgeBush-like, and in many ways, being a cool-dude. What is surprising is how it is mainly independents and intellectuals who suffer from this politician fatigue, and let their emotions drive them Obam-nuts. I, too, support him.

His worst detractors, apart from being rabid anti-Democratic politically, are also, surprisingly, blase because they are political realists. They don't dislike the man, just the warmth and halo that surround him, and poison real-politik, with hope and fervor. That is this countries main problem. Political realism. Unlike in Pakistan, and Georgia, and Kenya, where people elevate elections to a crusade for the moral and the just, in the US it is just a leap-year exercise.

Obama threatens to make it more than just that.

<http://vishvamarayam.blogspot.com/>

(2008-03-21 06:48)

Gov. Bill Richardson sent out an email last night endorsing Sen. Barack Obama for president.

Richardson also called on other Democrats to rally behind Obama, so that efforts

Video: Bill Richardson's Endorsement (2008-03-21 14:24)

[EMBED]

New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson, sporting a new beard, endorses Barack Obama today, Mar. 21, 2008, at a rally in Portland, Oregon.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama thanks Bill Richarson in Portland after receiving the latter's endorsement.

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New TV ads air in Pennsylvania (2008-03-21 16:00)

Check out two of three ads the Obama campaign is airing in Pennsylvania.

[EMBED]

This ad entitled "Toughest," talks about Barack Obama's work on ethics reform including banning gifts, meals and other favors, and how his campaign has refused contributions from lobbyists.

[EMBED]

Barack talks about his background in "Opportunity."

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More Voices Video (Registering Voters) (2008-03-22 09:14)

Joe Carson of the Obama campaign sent out this email to supporters today:

X

Paul –

Barack talked earlier this week about bridging divides and bringing people together to solve our common problems.

That's not just the theme of this campaign – it's been the theme of his life's work.

When Barack came back to Chicago after law school, he led a voter registration drive to attract people to the political process.

The deadline to register to vote in Pennsylvania is fast approaching – Monday, March 24. This is the last opportunity for Pennsylvanians who are unregistered – as well as Independents and Republicans – to register as Democrats so they can support Barack in the primary.

Watch this short video about Barack's voter registration efforts and start making calls to help register Pennsylvanians right away:

<http://my.barackobama.com/morevoicesvideo>

Registering voters and bringing more voices into the political process is what this campaign is all about.

In the ten contests left in this race, we have an opportunity to build a base of support that will lead Democrats to victory up and down the ballot in November.

But more importantly, we have the chance to transform our party and our politics. Our next opportunity is Pennsylvania .

By bringing in new voters and encouraging voters who have gotten fed up to get involved again, we can move beyond the divisive and petty tactics that have dominated our politics for far too long. We can send a message that we're ready for something new – something positive that brings us together around a shared goal of a better future for all Americans.

You can help build our movement and create a lasting change in our party and in our country.

Start making calls for this historic drive to register Pennsylvania voters:

<http://my.barackobama.com/callPAvoters>

One of the special things about this campaign is that it's inspired people from all walks of life to take action.

Supporters are organizing in their neighborhoods and traveling across the country to help register voters. People like you are making calls to crucial states and talking to potential voters about a new kind of leadership and a new kind of politics.

There are ten contests left in this race, and we can set the tone for all of them in Pennsylvania . Your voice can make a difference in how they turn out. You can have an important impact on the direction of the Democratic Party and politics in this country.

Be a voice for change and bring more voices into the political process:

<http://my.barackobama.com/callPAvoters>

Thank you for everything you're doing,

Jon

Jon Carson
National Voter Contact Director
Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-03-22 12:25)

From barackobama.com :

Obama Statement Congratulating Taiwanese President-Elect Ma Ying-Jeou
by Sam Graham-Felsen
, Saturday, March 22, 2008 at 11:56 AM

CHICAGO, IL – Senator Barack Obama issued the following statement on the results of Taiwan’s Presidential election:

On March 22, the people of Taiwan went to the polls for the fourth time in 12 years to elect their President. I offer my congratulations to President-elect Ma for his victory, and best wishes for his presidency.

The people of Taiwan deserve our respect and admiration for this free and fair election, which is just the latest step in consolidating a democracy that has advanced over the last two decades. I hope the People’s Republic of China responds to this election in a positive, constructive, and forward-leaning way. It is important for Beijing to demonstrate to the people of Taiwan that the practical and non-confrontational approach that President-elect Ma promises to take toward the Mainland will be met with good faith and progress. The PRC should reduce the military threat to Taiwan by drawing back the missiles it has deployed in southeast China and by other security confidence-building measures. And on issues such as Taiwan’s observer status in the World Health Organization, where the health of all Chinese people is at stake, it should allow Taiwan greater international space.

The United States should respond to Ma Ying-jeou’s election by rebuilding a relationship of trust and support for Taiwan’s democracy. The U.S. should reopen blocked channels of communication with Taiwan officials. We should continue to provide the arms necessary for Taiwan to deter possible aggression. And we should encourage both Taipei and Beijing to build commercial, cultural, and other ties, laying the groundwork for a closer relationship and ultimately movement toward resolution of their differences. We should maintain our “one China” policy, our adherence to the three U.S.-PRC Joint Communiques concerning Taiwan, and observance of the Taiwan Relations Act, which lays out the legal basis for our relationship.

March 22nd was a good day for the people of Taiwan, for the forces of democracy around the world, and for peace and stability in the western Pacific. I will do all that I can to support Taiwan’s democracy in the years ahead.

[EMBED]

In 1992, Barack Obama led Project Vote, a full-scale voter registration campaign that helped Bill Clinton's presidential campaign.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama in the General Electon (2008-03-23 13:34)

There's no need paying attention to the polls this early. Despite the great turnout during the primary, you can expect larger participation during the general election this fall.

Yes, a lot of people do not bother to vote during the primary. Many of them will vote during the general election, when they will start to take notice of who's running. At that time, the polls will begin to shift. Even into the last week and last few days it is not unusual to see the polls swinging in competitive races.

I have a nagging suspicion also that a lot of Barack and Hillary supporters that are getting polled might fib when asked about supporting the other candidate in the general election. They want their choice to look better against McCain.

It's hard to imagine that either Democrat would not be favored against McCain in November. The energy on the Democratic side is tremendous. Fundraising and turnout is breaking records at every turn. People are tired of Iraq and the economy, seen widely as a Bush economy, is seriously ailing.

John McCain also is not exactly the darling of conservative Republicans. Although they're trying to look unified, there are some doubts about their ability to energize the base of the party.

The race might end up becoming a fight for independent voters and this area John McCain has been very strong. Of the two Democrats, Barack has done much better at drawing support from independents. He also has the best organized campaign of the three current contenders.

So no need to worry about November now. The focus is now is getting the delegates for Barack to win the nomination.

[EMBED]

Barack talks about gas prices and energy policy in Beckley, West Virginia on March 20.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-03-25 15:38:00)

I heard a report today that Hillary's "misspoken" comments about being exposed to sniper fire in Bosnia may have been partly due to sleep deprivation. I was wondering, is that the kind of person who should be answering phone calls in the White House at 3:00 AM?

Barack Obama's letter to Ben Bernanke (2008-03-24 08:44)

Correction: Actually this letter that I lifted off the barackobama.com blog, was sent a year ago, and Hillary Clinton is offering a similar proposal today.

Sen. Barack Obama sent a letter today to Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke. The stresses the senator's grave concern over the impact of the housing crisis on low-income communities. He urges Bernanke to convene an "homeownership preservation summit" to tackle the problem of runaway home foreclosures occurring throughout the country.

Here is a copy of the letter.

March 22, 2007

The Honorable Ben Bernanke

Chairman

Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System

20th Street and Constitution Avenue, NW

Washington, D.C. 20551

The Honorable Henry Paulson

Secretary

U.S. Department of Treasury

1500 Pennsylvania Ave, NW

Washington, D.C. 20220

Dear Chairman Bernanke and Secretary Paulson,

There is grave concern in low-income communities about a potential coming wave of foreclosures. Because regulators are partly responsible for creating the environment that is leading to rising rates of home foreclosure in the subprime mortgage market, I urge you immediately to convene a homeownership preservation summit with leading mortgage lenders, investors, loan servicing organizations, consumer advocates, federal regulators and housing-related agencies to assess options for private sector responses to the challenge.

We cannot sit on the sidelines while increasing numbers of American families face the risk of losing their homes. And while neither the government nor the private sector acting alone is capable of quickly balancing the important interests in widespread access to credit and responsible lending, both must act and act quickly.

Working together, the relevant private sector entities and regulators may be best positioned for quick and targeted responses to mitigate the danger. Rampant foreclosures are in nobody's interest, and I believe this is a case where all responsible industry players can share the objective of eliminating deceptive or abusive practices, preserving homeownership, and stabilizing housing markets.

The summit should consider best practice loan marketing, underwriting, and origination practices consistent with the recent (and overdue) regulators' Proposed Statement on Subprime Mortgage Lending. The summit participants should also evaluate options for independent loan counseling, voluntary loan restructuring, limited forbearance, and other possible workout strategies. I would also urge you to facilitate a serious conversation about the following:

What standards investors should require of lenders, particularly with regard to verification of income and assets and the underwriting of borrowers based on fully indexed and fully amortized rates.

How to facilitate and encourage appropriate intervention by loan servicing companies at the earliest signs of borrower difficulty.
How to support independent community-based-organizations to provide counseling and work-out services to prevent foreclosure and preserve homeownership where practical.
How to provide more effective information disclosure and financial education to ensure that borrowers are treated fairly and that deception is never a source of competitive advantage.
How to adopt principles of fair competition that promote affordability, transparency, non-discrimination, genuine consumer value, and competitive returns.
How to ensure adequate liquidity across all mortgage markets without exacerbating consumer and housing market vulnerability.

Of course, the adoption of voluntary industry reforms will not preempt government action to crack down on predatory lending practices, or to style new restrictions on subprime lending or short-term post-purchase interventions in certain cases. My colleagues on the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs have held important hearings on mortgage market turmoil and I expect the Committee will develop legislation.

Nevertheless, a consortium of industry-related service providers and public interest advocates may be able to bring quick and efficient relief to millions of at-risk homeowners and neighborhoods, even before Congress has had an opportunity to act. There is an opportunity here to bring different interests together in the best interests of American homeowners and the American economy. Please don't let this opportunity pass us by.

Sincerely,
Barack Obama
United States Senator

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sanjizzles (2008-03-24 15:31:00)
I've been reading your blog from time to time and yesterday it inspired me to start this petition:
<http://www.timetoconcede.com>
Please sign it and spread the word!

Have Dinner with Barack (2008-03-24 18:19)

I got this email message from campaign manager David Plouffe today. They will be having another dinner in which Barack hosts four supporters. Two will be selected from people who contribute between now and Monday.

Too many political fundraisers are hosted by Washington lobbyists and filled with representatives of special interests.

Our campaign is different.

Our funding comes from a movement of more than one million people giving whatever they can afford – and Barack wants to sit down with supporters like you.

If you've ever thought about making a donation to join our campaign, now is the time.

In the next week, four supporters will be selected for a different kind of fundraising dinner. And we're reserving two of those seats for new donors like you.

Make a donation in any amount between now and 11:59 pm EDT on Monday, March 31st, and you could join Barack and three other supporters for an intimate dinner for five:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner> Our movement is changing the way campaigns are funded.

This campaign has never taken contributions from Washington lobbyists or political action committees.

More than one million donors have demonstrated that this election is about more than a candidate – it's about each of us having a personal stake in the future of American politics.

This dinner is an opportunity for you to sit down with Barack and your fellow supporters and talk about the issues that matter to you.

Get the kind of treatment other politicians reserve for special interests. Make a donation in the next week, and you could share your story and your ideas with Barack in person:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner>

With every donation, we're building a movement to change American politics.

Help the movement grow, and own a piece of this campaign today.

Thanks for your support,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

✕

[EMBED]

The first dinner with Barack Obama in July, 2007.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Calling Texas Delegates (2008-03-25 16:15)

From barackobama.com :

Back to Texas: Calling Delegates

by Christopher Hass

Tuesday, March 25, 2008 at 10:51 AM

The next stage of the Texas caucus is this Saturday, March 29th. At the county conventions, district delegates will meet to elect county delegates and move one step closer to finalizing the Texas results.

Turn-out for the initial March 4th caucuses was huge, and Barack won a decisive majority of the over 80,000 district delegates that were elected that night. But that was only the beginning. Attendance at the county convention is just as critical, and we're following up with every delegate to make sure they know when and where to go on Saturday, and to find alternates where needed.

The more Obama delegates we're able to connect with, the better prepared we'll be on Saturday.

But we can't do it without your help. You can maximize Barack's support at the county conventions today, right from your home.

You can call Obama delegates and alternates using our online phone banking tool, and help us prepare for Saturday's conventions.

As we saw just weeks ago in Iowa, organization and participation are key at every stage of a caucus. With the help of your calls to Iowa, we were not only able to secure our delegates — we were able to expand our lead.

Now we need your help calling the thousands of Texas delegates and alternates to help finish the work we started and secure our delegate win in Texas.

Help call Texas delegates now.

[EMBED]

Obama Girl asks Hillary to please step aside

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-10-21 06:57:35)

True phrase

List of Available Superdelegates (2008-03-26 11:53)

Here is a list of superdelegates who have not endorsed a candidate yet taken from Democratic Convention Watch today. Some have links to contact information.

Certain superdelegates can be found at social networking sites like LinkedIn and Facebook.

Superdelegates highlighted in red are from Michigan or Florida and do not count toward the nomination at this time.

Representatives

Bud Cramer (AL)
Harry Mitchell (AZ)
Gabrielle Giffords (AZ)
Nancy Pelosi (CA)
Jerry McNerney (CA)
Pete Stark (CA)
Mike Honda (CA)
Sam Farr (CA)
Jim Costa (CA)
Lois Capps (CA)
Howard Berman (CA)
Henry Waxman (CA)
Bob Filner (CA)
Susan Davis (CA)
Mark Udall (CO)
John Salazar (CO)
Joe Courtney (CT)

Allen Boyd (FL)
Tim Mahoney (FL)
Ron Klein (FL) Jim Marshall (GA)
Mazie Hirono (HI)
Rahm Emanuel (IL)
Dan Lipinski (IL)
Andre Carson (IN)
Peter Visclosky (IN)

Joe Donnelly (IN)
Brad Ellsworth (IN)
Baron Hill (IN)

Rep. Bruce Braley (IA)
Nancy Boyda (KS)
Dennis Moore (KS)
Ben Chandler (KY)
William Jefferson (LA)
Charlie Melancon (LA)
Tom Allen (ME)

Rep. Michael Michaud (ME)
John Sarbanes (MD)
Steny Hoyer (MD)
Chris Van Hollen (MD)
John Olver (MA)
Niki Tsongas (MA)
John Tierney (MA)
Edward Markey (MA)
Carolyn Cheeks Kilpatrick (MI)

Rep. Bart Stupak
(MI)
Collin Peterson (MN)

Gene Taylor (MS)
Ike Skelton (MO)
Rep. Rush Holt (NJ)

Rep. Bob Etheridge
(NC)

Rep. Mike McIntyre
(NC)

Rep. Brad Miller
(NC)

Rep. David Price
(NC)

Rep. Heath Shuler
(NC)

Rep. Mel Watt (NC) Rep. Tom Udall (NM)
Charlie Wilson (OH)

Marcia Kaptur (OH)
Betty Sutton (OH)
Tim Ryan (OH)

Rep. Zack Space (OH)
Rep. Dennis Kucinich (OH)
Rep. Dan Boren (OK)
David Wu (OR)
Peter DeFazio (OR)
Bob Brady (PA)
Jason Altmire (PA)
Chris Carney (PA)
Tim Holden (PA)
Rep. Mike Doyle (PA)
John Spratt (SC)
Rep. Jim Clyburn (SC)

Lincoln Davis (TN)
Bart Gordon (TN)
John Tanner (TN)
Nick Lampson (TX)

Ciro Rodriguez (TX)

Jim Matheson (UT)
Rick Larsen (WA)
Jim McDermott (WA)
Alan Mollohan (WV)

Madeleine Bordallo (Guam)

Presidents & VPs

Jimmy Carter (GA)
Al Gore (TN)

Senators

Ken Salazar (CO)
Joe Biden (DE)

Tom Carper (DE)

Daniel Akaka (HI)
Tom Harkin (IA)
Mary Landrieu (LA)
Ben Cardin (MD)

Carl Levin (MI) Amy Klobuchar (MN)
Max Baucus (MT)
Jon Tester (MT)
Harry Reid (NV)
Frank Lautenberg (NJ)
Sherrod Brown (OH)

Ron Wyden (OR)
Bob Casey (PA)
Jack Reed (RI)
Jim Webb (VA)
Robert Byrd (WV)
Herb Kohl (WI)

Sen. Jeff Bingaman (NM)
Fmr. Senator George Mitchell (NY)

Governors

Bill Ritter (CO)
Steve Beshear (KY)
Brian Schweitzer (MT)
John Lynch (NH)
Mike Easley (NC)
Brad Henry (OK)
Phil Bredeson (TN)
Joe Manchin (WV)
Dave Freudenthal (WY)

Add-Ons

Mark Wilcox (AR) #

Reggie Whitten (OK) #

Vicki Harwell (TN) #

Jerry Lee (TN) #

71 Unnamed Add-Ons

DNC Members

Howard Dean - Chairman (VT)
Lottie Shackleford (AR)
Linda Chavez -Thompson (TX)
Susan Turnbull (MD)

Mark Brewer (MI)

Andrew Tobias (FL) Alice Germond (WV)
Philip D. Murphy (NJ)

Alabama

Joe Turnham (AL)
Nancy Worley (AL)

Alaska

Blake Johnson (AK)
Cindy Spanyers (AK)

Arizona Don Bivens (AZ)
Vacant (AZ)

California Art Torres (CA)
Steven Alari (CA)
Edward Espinoza
(CA)

Inola Henry
(CA)

Hon. Carole Migden
(CA)

Bob Mulholland
(CA)

Christine Pelosi
(CA)

Robert Rankin
(CA)

Keith Umemoto
(CA)

Steve Ybarra
(CA)

John Perez
(CA)

Colorado Pat Waak - CO Chair
Connecticut Nancy DiNardo - CT Chair
John Olsen

Delaware John Daniello - DE Chair
Harriet Smith-Windsor - DE Vice Chair

Florida
Karen Thurman - FL Chair
Rudolph Parker - FL Vice Chair Terrie Brady
Mitchell Ceasar
Diane Glasser
Janee Murphy

Jon Ausman (FL)
Georgia Richard Ray (GA)

Hawaii Beverly Withington (HA)
Joshua Wisch (HA)
Dr. Marie Dolly Strazar (HA)

Idaho

Keith Roark (ID)

Illinois Vacant (IL)

Iowa Scott Brennan (IA)

Richard Machacek (IA)

Kansas Larry Gates (KS)

Helen Knetzer (KS)

Kentucky Jennifer Moore - Chair

Nathan Smith - Vice Chair

DNC

Moretta Bosley (KY)

Louisiana Chris Whittington - LA Chair

Claude "Buddy" Leach

Maine Sam Spencer

Jennifer DeChant

Maryland

Michael Cryor - MD Chair

Lauren Glover - MD Vice Chair

Hon. Heather Mizeur

Hon. Gregory Pecoraro

Massachusetts Debra Kozikowski

Michigan

Arthenia Abbott - MI Vice Chair

Elizabeth Bunn

Debbie Dingell

Hon. Robert Ficano

Joyce Lalonde

Jeffrey Radjewski

Michael Tardiff

Richard Wiener

Minnesota

Nancy Larson

Mississippi Wayne Dowdy - Chair

Carnelia Pettis Fondren - Vice Chair

Missouri

John Temporiti - Chair
Yolanda Wheat - Vice Chair
Leila Medley

Montana Dennis McDonald - MT Chair

Hon. Margaret Campbell - MT Vice Chair
Jean Lemire Dahlman

Nebraska Steven Achelpohl - NE Chair
Audra Ostergard (NE)

Nevada Sam Lieberman - NV Chair

New Hampshire Raymond Buckley

New Mexico

Brian Colon

New York Hon. Herman Farrell Jr.

Irene Stein

North Carolina

Jerry Meek (NC)

Dr. Jeanette Council (NC)

David Parker (NC)

Muriel Offerman (NC)

Carol Peterson (NC)

North Dakota David Strauss (ND)

Ohio Hon. Chris Redfern - OH Chair

William Burga

Enid Goubeaux

Ronald Malone

Patricia Moss

Oklahoma Ivan Holmes

Jim Frasier

DNC Members (cont'd)

Oregon

Meredith Woods-Smith (OR)

Frank Dixon (OR)

Jenny Greenleaf (OR)

Wayne Kinney (OR)

Pennsylvania

Hon. Ronald Donatucci (PA)

William George (PA)

Hon. Sophie Masloff (PA)

South Carolina

Wilbur Lee Jeffcoat (SC)

Hon. Gilda Cobb-Hunter (SC)

South Dakota

Cheryl Chapman (SD)

Tennessee

Gray Sasser (TN)

Dr. Inez Crutchfield (TN)

Texas

Boyd Richie - TX Chair

Hon. Al Edwards

Jaime Gonzalez Jr.

DNC Denise Johnson (TX)

John Patrick

Betty Richie

Utah

Wayne Holland Jr. - UT Chair

Virginia

Jim Leaman

C Richard Cranwell

Washington DC

Anita Bonds - DC Chair

Washington

Dwight Pelz - WA Chair

Eileen Macoll - WA Vice Chair

Ed Cote

Sharon Mast

David McDonald

West Virginia

Nick Casey Jr. - WV Chair

Wisconsin

Lena Taylor - WI Vice Chair

Paula Zellner

Wyoming Nancy Drummond - WY Vice Chair

Cynthia Nunley

Democrats Abroad * Christine Marques - Chair

Theresa Morelli

Guam Antonio Charfauros - Chair

Cecilia Mafnas - Vice Chair

Taling Taitano

Hon. Robert Underwood

Puerto Rico

Luisette Cabana - Vice Chair

Virgin Islands

Marylyn Stapleton - Vice Chair

Carol Burke

Members -At-Large

Lu Battaglieri (MI) Donna Brazile (DC)

Hon. Maria Chappelle-Nadal (MO)

Larry Cohen (DC)

Ralph Dawson (NY)

Kalyn Free (OK)

John Gage (MD)

Hon. Yvonne Gates (NV)

Janice Griffin (MD)

Hon. Alexis Herman (VA)

Joe Johnson (VA)

Belkis Leong-Hong (MD)

Robert Martinez (TX)

Jay Parmley (OK)

Gail Rasmussen (OR)

James Roosevelt Jr (MA)

Eliseo Roques-Arroyo (PR)

Richard Shoemaker (MI) Edward Smith (IL)

John Sweeney (MD)

Vernon Watkins (CA)

Jerome Wiley Segovia (VA)

Vacant - 1
Vacant - 2

Former DNC Chairmen Roy Romer (CO)
Bob Strauss (TX)
Paul Kirk (MA)

Nat'l Conf. of Dem. Mayors
Hon. Kwame Kilpatrick (MI)

Mayor Brenda Lawrence (MI)
Dem. Assoc. of SoS Hon. Robin Carnahan (MO)
Hon. Bill Bradbury (OR)

Nat'l Assoc of Dem State Treasurers

Dem. Leg. Campaign Comm. Hon. Joyce Beatty (OH)
Mike Morgan (OK)

Nat'l Dem. County Officials
Eric Coleman (MI)

Nat'l Fed. of Dem. Women
Virgie Rollins (MI)

College Dems of America
Lauren Wolfe (MI) Awais Khaleel (WI)

Young Dems of America Crystal Strait (CA)

DNC David Hardt (TX)
Dem Assoc. of Atty Gen. Hon. Catherine Cortez Masto (NV)

Nat'l Dem Ethnic Coord. Comm. Christine Warnke (DC)

Nat'l Dem. Seniors Coord. Comm. John Melcher (MT)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Obama on McCain-omics (2008-03-26 17:18)

It's hard to believe the news that Hillary Clinton is now trying to convince pledged delegates to ignore the will of the people and vote for Hillary.

Well at least we have this great video from North Carolina of Barack Obama talking about John McCain's policy on the economy and the housing crisis.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Warms to Wrapping Up Contest (2008-03-26 19:34)

Barack Obama has expressed support for speeding up the nomination process in responding to a plan by Tennessee Gov. Phil Bredesen. The eventual nominee should benefit from having a few extra months to prepare for the November election.

From The Caucus, the political blog of the New York Times.

March 26, 2008, 7:26 pm

Obama Warms to Wrapping Up Contest

By Patrick Healy

ABOARD THE OBAMA CAMPAIGN PLANE – Senator Barack Obama this evening called Tennessee Gov. Phil Bredesen's proposal of resolving the Democratic nomination contest in June "a good one" – although Mr. Obama seemed to be endorsing a June wrap-up more than the governor's specific plan to let superdelegates caucus to choose either Mr. Obama or Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton.

"I think giving whoever the nominee is two or three months to pivot into the general election would be extremely helpful, instead of having this drag up to the convention," Mr. Obama told reporters as he flew from Greensboro, N.C., to New York City.

Mr. Obama holds a combined delegate lead over Mrs. Clinton and has been adding more superdelegates to his column at a faster clip than she has. Mrs. Clinton, meanwhile, has indicated that she is willing to slug it out for the nomination through the summer, and is counting on some sort of Obama collapse or other game-changing development to drive superdelegates into her camp.

In response to other questions, Mr. Obama said that he had no beef with Bill Clinton's comments today that the Obama and Clinton camps should "just saddle up and have an argument." But he added that one of his goals in politics was still "to see if we can change the tenor a little bit so it's more productive." Mr. Obama said he agreed with the thrust of Mr. Clinton's point about the rough-and-tumble of politics, saying it was "a contact sport," though he said he sensed it would be a problem to go too far.

"In Chicago, Harold Washington once said 'politics ain't tiddlewinks,' " Mr. Obama said, referring to that city's former mayor. "And I believe President Clinton was the one who decried 'the politics of personal destruction.' "

"There's a line that can be crossed where you stop focusing on the American people's business and it just becomes about sport." Then he added, "I'm proud of how we've generally conducted ourselves in this campaign – there are some points where I haven't been proud." Read the rest of the article

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-03-26 19:34)

Barack Obama has expressed support for a plan to speed up the nomination process

March 26, 2008, 7:26 pm

Obama Warms to Wrapping Up Contest

By Patrick Healy

ABOARD THE OBAMA CAMPAIGN PLANE – Senator Barack Obama this evening called Tennessee Gov. Phil Bredesen’s proposal of resolving the Democratic nomination contest in June “a good one” – although Mr. Obama seemed to be endorsing a June wrap-up more than the governor’s specific plan to let superdelegates caucus to choose either Mr. Obama or Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton.

“I think giving whoever the nominee is two or three months to pivot into the general election would be extremely helpful, instead of having this drag up to the convention,” Mr. Obama told reporters as he flew from Greensboro, N.C., to New York City.

Mr. Obama holds a combined delegate lead over Mrs. Clinton and has been adding more superdelegates to his column at a faster clip than she has. Mrs. Clinton, meanwhile, has indicated that she is willing to slug it out for the nomination through the summer, and is counting on some sort of Obama collapse or other game-changing development to drive superdelegates into her camp.

In response to other questions, Mr. Obama said that he had no beef with Bill Clinton’s comments today that the Obama and Clinton camps should “just saddle up and have an argument.” But he added that one of his goals in politics was still “to see if we can change the tenor a little bit so it’s more productive.” Mr. Obama said he agreed with the thrust of Mr. Clinton’s point about the rough-and-tumble of politics, saying it was “a contact sport,” though he said he sensed it would be a problem to go too far.

“In Chicago, Harold Washington once said ‘politics ain’t tiddleewinks,’ ” Mr. Obama said, referring to that city’s former mayor. “And I believe President Clinton was the one who decried ‘the politics of personal destruction.’ ”

“There’s a line that can be crossed where you stop focusing on the American people’s business and it just becomes about sport.” Then he added, “I’m proud of how we’ve generally conducted ourselves in this campaign – there are some points where I haven’t been proud.”

Obama unveils Financial Markets Plan (2008-03-27 10:20)

From barackobama.com:

In Major Speech, Obama Calls for Modernizing Our Regulation of Financial Markets

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Thursday, March 27, 2008 at 06:43 AM

NEW YORK, NY—In a major economic address at Cooper Union today, Senator Barack Obama called for immediate relief for homeowners hit by the housing crisis, modernization of our regulatory framework, and an additional $30 billion stimulus package to jumpstart the economy and help protect families from the economic slowdown. As confidence in our financial markets wanes and Americans struggle in the face of a mortgage crisis, Obama stressed the importance of pushing back on the special interests and honoring our obligation to one another—and that doing so is not just a matter of altruism but a matter of self-interest.

“Under Republican and Democratic Administrations, we failed to guard against practices that all too often rewarded financial manipulation instead of productivity and sound business practices,” Senator Obama said. “We let the special interests put their thumbs on the economic scales. The result has been a distorted market that creates bubbles instead of steady, sustainable growth; a market that favors Wall Street over Main Street, but ends up hurting both.”

Obama was introduced at Cooper Union by Mayor Michael Bloomberg, a legendary business executive who has shown deep commitment to community and family prosperity as mayor of America’s largest city.

In his speech today, Obama made the case that while markets are the engine of American progress, the government’s role as umpire and steward is critical to the function of the free market. For too long, he said, special interests have been able to bend the rules to maximize their profits on the backs of hardworking Americans.

Obama pledged to restore confidence in the markets, tackle the housing crisis and protect families from the economic slowdown by:

Ø Creating 21st century standards for transparency and oversight of the financial system in order to prevent future abuses and crises.

Ø Providing immediate relief to homeowners hit by the housing crisis.

Ø Enacting a second stimulus package to stabilize and strengthen the economy, provide aid to homeowners and states hardest-hit by the housing crisis, and extend and expand unemployment insurance.

A fact sheet detailing these steps, as well as Obama's principles for modernizing the regulatory framework for our financial markets, can be found HERE.

A document containing statements of support from leading finance experts can be found HERE.

Continue reading for the full speech...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Appearances in Pennsylvania (2008-03-27 14:34)

Mar 29 Road to Change Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama

in Johnstown, PA

Mar 30 Road to Change Rally with Barack Obama

in University Park, PA

Other Events Blair County Office Opening

Thursday, March 27, 2008 @ 6:30pm

Altoona, PA

Allentown Office Opening

Friday, March 28, 2008 @ 6:00pm

Allentown, PA

Philly Young Professionals: Meet Kate Walsh

Friday, March 28, 2008 @ 7:00pm

Philadelphia, PA

Chambersburg Office Opening

Saturday, March 29, 2008 @ 11:00am

Chambersburg, PA

Office Opening in Abington Township

Sunday, March 30, 2008 @ 12:00pm
Abington, PA

✕

✕

[EMBED]

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2010-03-22 03:00:13)

i very much adore all your writing way, very helpful, don't give up and keep penning as it just truly worth to look through it.
looking forward to look at a lot more of your current article content, goodbye ;)

Video: Obama speech at Cooper Union (2008-03-27 22:31)

Check out Barack Obama's speech at the Great Hall in Cooper Union, New York City, on the economy and reforming the financial markets. Delivered on March 27, 2008.

[EMBED]

✕

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Penn. Sen. Bob Casey endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-28 11:34)

✕

By DEVLIN BARRETT, Associated Press Writer 2 hours, 8 minutes ago

PITTSBURGH - Pennsylvania

Sen. Bob Casey endorsed Democrat Barack Obama on Friday, a move that could help the presidential candidate make inroads with white working-class voters dubbed "Casey Democrats" in the Keystone State

.

Appearing on stage beside the Illinois senator, Casey told a boisterous rally, "I believe in my heart that there is one person who's uniquely qualified to lead us in that new direction and that is Barack Obama."

Pennsylvania's April 22 primary will allocate 158 delegates, the biggest single prize left in the drawn-out nomination battle between Obama and Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton of New York . Clinton is leading Obama in the state, by 12 points in one poll this month.

Casey is a first-term senator and the son of a popular former governor of the state. Casey is Catholic and, like his father, is known for his opposition to abortion and support of gun rights. His support could help Obama make inroads among Catholic voters, who have preferred Clinton to Obama in earlier primaries and strongly favor her in Pennsylvania polls.

"I really believe that in a time of danger around the world and in division here at home, Barack Obama can lead us, he can heal us, he can help rebuild America," he said.

Obama told the crowd that he had not pushed Casey hard for an endorsement.

"Bob is such a gracious person and such a thoughtful person that I did not press him on this endorsement," especially since Obama trails Clinton in Pennsylvania polls.

"It would have been easy for Bob just to stay out of it, just to stay neutral, I think everybody would have accepted that," Obama said.

Casey said that he called Clinton Thursday night to tell her of his decision.

"She was very gracious. We know that she's a great senator, she's a great leader," Casey said.

Asked by Casey's endorsement, Clinton spokesman Mo Elleithee said, "We're proud of the support we have from across Pennsylvania, including Gov. (Ed) Rendell, several members of Congress and mayors from across the state. We look forward to having his support in the general election as Democrats unite to beat John McCain and to turn our country around."

Clinton's backers in the state include Rep. John Murtha , who was an early advocate of withdrawing from Iraq , and Philadelphia Mayor Michael Nutter, who is black.

Meantime, a leading Obama backer, Sen. Patrick Leahy , D-Vt., is saying Clinton should abandon her White House run .

"There is no way that Sen. Clinton is going to win enough delegates to get the nomination," Leahy told Vermont Public Radio in an interview that aired Thursday.

In a statement issued Friday, Leahy, the Senate Judiciary Committee chairman who endorsed Obama in January, said Casey's endorsement of Obama is the latest sign of how the race is going.

"Sen. Clinton has every right, but not a very good reason, to remain a candidate for as long as she wants to. As far as the delegate count and the interests of a Democratic victory in November go, there is not a very good reason for drawing this out. But as I have said before, that is a decision that only she can make," Leahy said.

The Casey endorsement came as Obama began a six-day campaign swing through Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania has an estimated 3.8 million Catholics, or just over 30 percent of the state's population, and the percentage among Democrats is estimated to be slightly higher.

Obama's team hopes that Casey will help narrow Clinton's huge lead among white working-class voters — men in particular. Clinton routed Obama among that demographic in Ohio and Texas on March 4, raising questions about his electability in November. In recent weeks, Obama has stressed economic issues important to the middle class, and he is outspending Clinton on television advertising that features blue-collar imagery.

Clinton and her supporters have been making their own direct appeals: backers Kathleen Kennedy Townsend and Robert F. Kennedy Jr ., last week wrote a letter to Pennsylvania Catholics emphasizing her plans on health care, mortgage foreclosures and fuel costs. Clinton has been endorsed by Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell , giving her access to his potent political operation.

Obama has lacked a major endorsement by a statewide Pennsylvania politician, and Casey's could help jump-start his Pennsylvania campaign. Casey has close ties to organized labor, which has been divided in Pennsylvania between the two candidates.

Casey had a 62 percent approval rating among Democrats in a recent Quinnipiac University poll .

Casey's move could also be seen as a political jab at the Clintons. Bill Clinton was the Democrats' presidential nominee in 1992 when Casey's father was not given a prime-time speaking position at the party's convention, which outraged many of the state's conservative Democrats.

Casey was to campaign with Obama as he travels across Pennsylvania by bus.

The bus tour will feature "listening sessions," a technique Clinton used in her 2000 Senate campaign to convince skeptical New Yorkers that she was not just a carpetbagger looking for a plum post after leaving the White House .

Obama hopes to prevent Clinton from racking up a large win in the state which could eat away at his delegate advantage and give her new life in the final primaries running to June.

It may be a tough sell for some in the state, which has a sizable elderly population. In the previous primaries, older Democrats have favored Clinton, while younger voters tend toward Obama.

Casey served two four-year terms as state auditor general . He lost a 2002 gubernatorial bid in the Democratic primary to Rendell.

Casey was elected to the Senate in 2006, defeating conservative GOP incumbent Rick Santorum . Obama campaigned for Casey, but so did Clinton and her husband.

Associated Press Writer Kimberly Hefling in Washington contributed to this report.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Sen. Casey endorsement, new TV ad (2008-03-28 17:30)

[EMBED]

On March 28, 2008, at Soldiers and Sailors Military Museum in Pittsburgh, PA, Senator Bob Casey Jr. (PA) endorsed Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

New Pennsylvania TV spot titled "Nothing's Changed."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Family Ties: Ann Dunham (NBC News) (2008-03-29 13:54)

[EMBED]

NBC Nightly News featured a story last night on Barack Obama's mother, Ann Dunham Soetoro, and how she influenced the presidential candidate.

Btw, if you happen to live in CD 5 (Sacramento, CA), I'm supporting Nathan Osburn, Kim Mack, Serena Kirk, and Cirian Villavicencio as Obama delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

They have been very active in Sacramento for Obama and can be depended on to vote for Barack and not defect to Hillary!

X

Here's their Facebook site:

<http://www.facebook.com/group.php?gid=9918858797>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

SterlingEddie (2008-03-29 19:52:00)

Its funny that Obama does soft interviews only. Well maybe its not funny because a lot of people seem to think he's the second coming. Is he someones Puppet? Why is it that no one get a chance to to do a real interview with him? They all seem to have some kind of short time limit or he's interviewed by a bunch of weman that are more interested in being nice.

Barack Obama leads Texas County Conventions (2008-03-29 20:45)

Texas held county conventions today to confirm the results of the caucus that Barack Obama won earlier this month. With 42.38 % now reporting, Barack is leading 57 % - 43 %.

[EMBED]

Supporters waiting outside of Soldiers and Sailors Military Museum and Memorial last night to see Sen. Obama.

Obama Appearances in Pennsylvania Mar 30 Road to Change Rally with Barack Obama

in University Park, PA

Mar 30 Road to Change Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Harrisburg, PA

Mar 31 Road to Change Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Lancaster, PA

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama wins Texas Conventions (2008-03-30 11:25)

With most of the vote counted, Barack Obama is now projected to win the Texas Conventions 38 to 29 matching the results of the Mar. 4 caucus.

So, overall Barack ends up with nine more delegates overall as Hillary Clinton won the Texas Primary by four votes. The win in Texas gives Obama supporters hope for an upset victory in Pennsylvania. As in the latter state, Obama was well behind in Texas early on. However, unlike Texas where the campaign had to work in three other states including Ohio, Pennsylvania is all by itself in April.

After PA, the next contest is little Guam two weeks away on May 3, and then three days later North Carolina and Indiana on May 6.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-03-31 21:13:00)

Im 40. Im white. Im a democrat. I have never voted for a republican in my life. If Obama wins the nomination, I will reluctantly have to vote for the Bush clone, John McCain. If Obama wants to spit on unions, good ridence. Sorry fellow Democrats.

Upcoming Obama Events (2008-03-30 19:02)

Mar 30 Road to Change Rally with Barack Obama

in University Park, PA

Mar 30 Road to Change Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Harrisburg, PA

Mar 31 Road to Change Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Lancaster, PA

Check out the pictures from volunteer meetings at State College in Pennsylvania.

[EMBED]

Video from the rally at Johnstown, PA, last night. Barack answers a question on accountability.

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Victor Mundy (2008-03-31 00:30:00)

The Obama Campaign and/or its supporters must flood the internet and the television with anything and everything positive that Reverend Wright has ever said from the pulpit.

The Republicans will see to it that this issue does not fade from people's memory. They will use it to sink the Obama campaign should he gain the nomination. Even if he does not gain the nomination, this same issue will be used to chip away at his political career. They see this as the silver bullet to kill his candidacy, now and in the future.

Has the Reverend Wright ever said anything good about the United States of America? Did he ever preach about forgiveness, the brotherhood of man, the forgiveness of sin or any other positive message? Does anyone have any of his positive sermons on DVD? If so, I beg you to release some of those positive sermons to the press and youtube.com. The best way to counter balance the constant portrayal of Reverend Wright as a bitter accuser of the country is to publicize his positive words. Any positive words.

Make and Impact in March (2008-03-31 10:21)

Sen. Barack Obama sent this email to supporters today as the deadline for Dinner with Barack approaches.

X There's one thing we already know about the March fundraising results: Senator Clinton and Senator McCain have raised a significant portion of their money from Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs.

We've never done that, and we never will.

Instead, we will continue to rely on more than a million individual donors who support this campaign by giving only what they can afford.

Change does not come from the top down - it comes from the bottom up.

So rather than having expensive fundraising dinners to take contributions from Washington lobbyists, I'm hosting a different kind of dinner. If you are chosen from among the donors who give before midnight tonight, I'll get to hear your personal story and ideas about how we can solve America's biggest problems together.

... The pundits are slowly realizing something about our political process that we've known from the beginning: people matter.

In unprecedented numbers, ordinary people are volunteering and donating to this campaign. They're taking true ownership in a way that has never happened before.

When we started this campaign over a year ago, the pundits and the political insiders didn't think it was possible to mobilize ordinary people to reject conventional thinking and fight for real change.

We have a chance to prove them wrong.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Videos and Photos from Road to Change (PA) (2008-03-31 15:18)

Barack Obama discusses economic policy in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, this morning.

[EMBED]

A massive crowd of 22,000 gathered at the Obama rally yesterday on the grounds of Penn State University. Young people could be the key to winning Pennsylvania.

[EMBED]

Barack discusses energy policy at a biofuel station in Manheim, PA.

X

[EMBED]

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

2.4 April

Road to Change in Pennsylvania (2008-04-01 12:26)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama speaks during a town hall meeting in Wilkes University in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania today. About 2000 people showed up for the event.

[EMBED]

NBC's Ann Curry interviewed Barack during his Road for Change bus tour.

[EMBED]

Barack speaks to students and other supporters at Muhlenberg College in Allentown, Pennsylvania last night.

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michelle Obama in Pittsburgh (2008-04-01 22:01)

Michelle Obama in Pittsburgh, PA

Join Michelle Obama for a special Stand for Change Rally in Pittsburgh on Wednesday, April 2nd. The event will be free and open to the public.

Stand for Change Rally with Michelle Obama

Skibo Gymnasium

Carnegie Mellon University

Tech and Frew Streets

Pittsburgh, PA

Wednesday, April 2, 2008

Doors open: 1:00 p.m.

Program begins: 2:15 p.m.

Public entrance: Skibo Gymnasium Event Entrance

This event is free and open to the public. Tickets are not required, but an RSVP is strongly encouraged. Admission is first-come, first-served.

For security reasons, do not bring bags. Please limit personal items. No signs or banners permitted.

– Barack Obama picked up an extra delegate today from Mississippi extending his lead to 1419-1250.

[EMBED]

Video from Barack's town hall meeting in Scranton, Pennsylvania.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Wyoming Gov. Dave Freudenthal endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-02 11:38)

Wyoming Governor Dave Freudenthal Endorses Obama

by Christopher Hass,

Wednesday, April 02, 2008 at 10:15 AM

Wyoming Governor and superdelegate Dave Freudenthal endorsed Barack Obama today — the 11th superdelegate endorsement that Barack has received since March 4th.

CHICAGO, IL — Wyoming Governor and Democratic superdelegate Dave Freudenthal today endorsed Barack Obama, citing his history of putting partisanship aside to bring people together across party lines and focus on common-sense solutions.

"The negativity, partisanship and lack of purpose that characterize our national debate and government are crippling this country," Governor Freudenthal said. "While no one individual can effect this change alone, the change must begin with someone. Senator Obama is the Democratic candidate with the openness, honesty and skill to end this vicious cycle of business as usual."

Freudenthal was elected Governor in 2002 and reelected in 2006. As a popular Democrat in one of the most traditionally Republican states in the country, Freudenthal knows how essential it is for Democrats to be able to articulate a vision that appeals to voters across the ideological spectrum, and to demonstrate a willingness to listen to people on all sides of the debate.

"Governor Freudenthal has shown the pundits and the talking heads that there isn't anyplace in this country where Democrats can't win if we bring people together and focus on the issues that matter to them," Senator Obama said. "I look forward to working with Dave to deliver the kind of change that folks in the West are looking for: making health care affordable, providing a world-class education for every child, and investing in a clean energy future to create jobs, protect the environment, and wean this country off of foreign oil."

Senator Obama won the Wyoming caucuses on March 8 with 61 percent of the vote.

MSNBC News reports that Governor Freudenthal is the 11th superdelegate to endorse Obama since March 4; during the same time period Senator Clinton has picked up one superdelegate endorsement.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-04-02 20:03:00)

Excellent choice, Governor Freudenthal.

Here are my comments: As I travel from city to city in the US, I am confronted, yet touched, with the deep despair etched on people's faces I observe in stores, on sidewalks, in businesses. When I listen to the stories people share with me, I realize we have come to a point unprecedented in the 6 decades of my own life. Those older than I am tell me that the picture I am now seeing was all too familiar during WWII and in the Great Depression era.

Asian expatriates who have settled here in the last 15 years tell me that they caution their friends and family members to avoid coming to the States. There is increasing violent crime in our cities Domestic violence which is often a reflection of economic and political displacement is becoming epidemic. Families more often have no healthcare. An illness can mean loss of one's home and overwhelming stress for families. Preventative care is now for the wealthy and the poor must wait until the severity of an illness sends them in crisis to an overwhelmed emergency room. Costs for basic services to homes and apartments are increasing. Gas prices continue to edge up often beyond the comfortable reach of those commuting to two jobs in their effort to pay their bills and feed their families. Children are manifesting the stress felt by their families and besieged school teachers are noting the phenomenon: the outcome of a society gone astray through the myopic, ill-conceived political and economic domestic and international policy. The United States is suffering from non-benign neglect by those who are sitting in Washington DC. The funds that should be directed in stimulating a tired, stressed society is being spent on tribal wars and post modern colonialism abroad. The middle class is becoming an endangered species and democracy, natively depending on a strong middle class, is also on the endangered list. The 'free press' which is also a correlate of democracy isn't free and impartial but encumbered with the dictates of corporate interests.

The mortgage debacle is the result of more myopia and it is debilitating not only people unable to afford their homes but it is destabilizing states and municipalities throughout our nation. America has caught one of the worst maladies since the Depression and the question that emerges is: who can catch us in this precipitous fall?

The next president, if he confronts the present reality, will need every bit of courage and wisdom to help a troubled nation transcend the errors and tragedy of the past 7 years.

This poor, tired world is speaking volumes if we could only listen.

Lifetimes are all too brief and as the saying goes, "too soon old, too late wise". We are such fragile beings on this earth and our lives so vulnerable to the capriciousness of our individual fate. We believe we have dominion over the earth and yet, the earth prevails as each of us breathes out our inevitably last breaths. Human pomp and arrogance observed on the stage of our lives disappear like ocean waves over the sandcastles on a wind-swept beach. Our presence on earth becomes like footprints in the sand, eventually forgotten or covered up by time itself.

Yet, I hold great hope for daybreak and light on the horizon of years to follow this era. For our young, I hope for a leader of rare integrity and wisdom who is able to transcend the delusion that emanates from power. A leader who pores out his soul in a book and inspires a philosophic renaissance in our young. Such a leader would be wise enough to maintain the separation of church and state that our forefathers placed within the architecture of our Constitution: the preservation of civil liberties, tolerance for diversity, creating equal respect for all religions without bias for one. Such a leader has walked in the shoes of the common man or woman and is not alienated from himself or herself but rather sees the whole of mankind the tapestry from which he or she is intimately part of.

They say "it is always the darkest before the dawn" and I look to the horizon for light and for a day when those with power become the humble servants of their better selves.
It is time for Barack Obama to lead. Just one light can dispel the darkness and may Barack be that light.
D. Lopez

Penn. Union endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-02 14:38)

The Philadelphia-based local of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees endorsed Barack Obama today along with former Montana senator, John Melcher, a superdelegate.
The 16,000 member union is a member of the AFSCME labor organization, the national branch of which has endorsed Hillary Clinton. AFSCME does not forbid its local affiliates from making independent endorsements.
Recently, the Obama and Clinton camps have sparred over whether Clinton had supported the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). Obama does not support free trade agreements that do not include labor and environmental standards. He has also opposed tax breaks for corporations that outsource.
The Illinois senator does support free trade agreements with the right labor and environmental protections and opposes outsourcing tax breaks and not outsourcing itself. Obama has also been an advocate for immigration reform that would allow more immigration to reunite families, and also allow visas for those who bring in needed skills and expertise.
[EMBED]
Barack speaks at the AFL-CIO convention in Philadelphia this morning.
Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Hardball College Tour (2008-04-02 19:40)

Check out Barack Obama with Chris Matthews today on MSNBC's "Hardball College Tour" at West Chester College in West Chester, Pennsylvania.
[EMBED]

Barack Obama in Montana
Apr 5 Rally with Barack Obama

in Missoula, MT

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-04-02 19:40)

Check out Barack Obama with Chris Matthews today on MSNBC’s ”Hardball College Tour” at West Chester College in West Chester, Pennsylvania.
[EMBED]

(2008-04-02 19:40)

Check out Barack Obama with Chris Matthews on MSNBC’s ”Hardball College Tour” at West Chester College in West Chester, Pennsylvania

More than $40 million raised in March (2008-04-03 07:57)

The Obama campaign continues to raise staggering amounts of money most from ordinary contributors rather than the usual deep pocket types.
In March, the campaign raised more than a million dollars a day to garner in over $40 million for the month. About 442,000 people contributed at an average contribution of about $90 per person.
Here is the press release from campaign manager David Plouffe.

Senator Obama has always said that this campaign would rise or fall on the willingness of the American people to become partners in an effort to change our politics and start a new chapter in our history. Today we’re seeing the American people’s extraordinary desire to change Washington, as tens of thousands of new contributors joined the more than a million Americans who have already taken ownership of this campaign for change. Many of our contributors are volunteering for the campaign, making our campaign the largest grassroots army in recent political history.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama in Pittsburgh (2008-04-03 11:05)

Michelle Obama and Teresa Heinz, wife of Sen. John Kerry, at Carnegie Mellon University tell the crowd why they should support Sen. Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

Barack answers an education question from the audience at an appearance in Wallingford, Pennsylvania.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

"For Decades": New Obama TV Ad (2008-04-03 19:58)

From barackobama.com:

New Pennsylvania TV Ad: "For Decades"

by Caitlin Harvey

Thursday, April 03, 2008 at 06:39 PM

Today, our campaign began airing a new TV ad in Pennsylvania titled "For Decades." In the ad, Barack reminds voters that politicians have been talking about protecting jobs for decades while allowing Washington lobbyists to block change.

Barack is the only candidate who doesn't take money from federal lobbyists and special interest PACs. As President, he will take on the special interests to fix our trade laws, end tax breaks for companies that ship jobs overseas, and give them to companies that create jobs here in America.

Check out the ad here:

In Oregon, 26 elected officials announced their support of Sen. Barack Obama today.

Obama's legislative supporters include Senate President Pro Tempore Margaret Carter (Portland), Sen. Alan Bates (Ashland), Sen. Avel Gordly (Portland), Sen. Floyd Prozanski (South Lane and North Douglas Counties), Sen. Ben Westlund (Tumalo), Speaker of the House Jeff Merkley (Portland), Speaker Pro Tempore Diane Rosenbaum (Portland), Rep. Jeff Barker (Aloha), Rep. Phil Barnhart (Central Lane and Linn Counties), Rep. Suzanne Bonamici (Washington County), Rep. Peter Buckley (Ashland), Rep. Ben Cannon (Portland), Rep. Brian Clem (Salem), Rep. Chris Edwards (West Eugene), Rep. Dave Edwards (Hillsboro), Rep. Larry Galizio (Tigard), Rep. Paul Holvey (Eugene), Rep. Betty Komp (Woodburn), Rep. Tina Kotek (North Portland), Rep. Mary Nolan (Portland), Rep. Tobias Read (Beaverton), Rep. Mike Schaufler (Happy Valley), Rep. Chip Shields (Portland), and Rep. Brad Witt (Clatskanie).

Obama Appearances

Apr 4 Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama

in Fort Wayne, IN

Apr 5 Rally with Barack Obama

in Missoula, MT

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack's Speech on 40th Anniversary of MLK Assassination (2008-04-04 09:29)

Barack Obama gave a speech today in Fort Wayne, Indiana, on the 40th anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King's assassination. Here is the text of the speech as prepared for delivery.

Today represents a tragic anniversary for our country. Through his faith, courage, and wisdom, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. moved an entire nation. He preached the gospel of brotherhood; of equality and justice. That's the cause for which he lived – and for which he died forty years ago today. And so before we begin, I ask you to join me in a moment of silence in memory of this extraordinary American.

There's been a lot of discussion this week about how Dr. King's life and legacy speak to us today. It's taking place in our schools and churches, on television and around the dinner table. And I suspect that much of what folks are talking about centers on issues of racial justice – on the Montgomery bus boycott and the March on Washington, on the freedom rides and the stand at Selma.

And that's as it should be – because those were times when ordinary men and women, straight-backed and clear-eyed, challenged what they knew was wrong and helped perfect our union. And they did so in large part because Dr. King pointed the way.

But I also think it's worth reflecting on what Dr. King was doing in Memphis, when he stepped onto that motel balcony on his way out for dinner.

And what he was doing was standing up for struggling sanitation workers. For years, these workers had served their city without complaint, picking up other people's trash for little pay and even less respect. Passers-by would call them "walking buzzards," and in the segregated South, most were forced to use separate drinking fountains and bathrooms.

But in 1968, these workers decided they'd had enough, and over 1,000 went on strike. Their demands were modest – better wages, better benefits, and recognition of their union. But the opposition was fierce. Their vigils were met with handcuffs. Their protests turned back with mace. And at the end of one march, a 16-year old boy lay dead.

This is the struggle that brought Dr. King to Memphis. It was a struggle for economic justice, for the opportunity that should be available to people of all races and all walks of life. Because Dr. King understood that the struggle for economic justice and the struggle for racial justice were really one – that each was part of a larger struggle "for freedom, for dignity, and for humanity." So long as Americans were trapped in poverty, so long as they were being denied the wages, benefits, and fair treatment they deserved – so long as opportunity was being opened to some but not all – the dream that he spoke of would remain out of reach.

And on the eve of his death, Dr. King gave a sermon in Memphis about what the movement there meant to him and to America. And in tones that would prove eerily prophetic, Dr. King said that despite the threats he'd received, he didn't fear any man, because he had been there when Birmingham aroused the conscience of this nation. And he'd been there to see the students stand up for freedom by sitting in at lunch counters. And he'd been there in Memphis when it was dark enough to see the stars, to see the community coming together around a common purpose. So Dr. King had been to the mountaintop. He had seen the Promised Land. And while he knew somewhere deep in his bones that he would not get there with us, he knew that we would get there.

He knew it because he had seen that Americans have "the capacity," as he said that night, "to project the 'I' into the 'thou.'" To recognize that no matter what the color of our skin, no matter what faith we practice, no matter how much money we have – no matter whether we are sanitation workers or United States Senators – we all have a stake in one another, we are our brother's keeper, we are our sister's keeper, and "either we go up together, or we go down together."

And when he was killed the following day, it left a wound on the soul of our nation that has yet to fully heal. And in few places was the pain more pronounced than in Indianapolis, where Robert Kennedy happened to be campaigning. And it fell to him to inform a crowded park that Dr. King had been killed. And as the shock turned toward anger, Kennedy reminded them of Dr. King's compassion, and his love. And on a night when cities across the nation were alight with violence, all was quiet in Indianapolis.

In the dark days after Dr. King's death, Coretta Scott King pointed out the stars. She took up her husband's cause and led a march in Memphis. But while those sanitation workers eventually got their union contract, the struggle for economic justice remains an unfinished part of the King legacy. Because the dream is still out of reach for too many Americans. Just this morning, it was announced that more Americans are unemployed now than at any time in years. And all across this country, families are facing rising costs, stagnant wages, and the terrible burden of losing a home.

Part of the problem is that for a long time, we've had a politics that's been too small for the scale of the challenges we face. This is something I spoke about a few weeks ago in a speech I gave in Philadelphia. And what I said was that instead of having a politics that lives up to Dr. King's call for unity, we've had a politics that's used race to drive us apart, when all this does is feed the forces of division and distraction, and stop us from solving our problems.

That is why the great need of this hour is much the same as it was when Dr. King delivered his sermon in Memphis. We have to recognize that while we each have a different past, we all share the same hopes for the future – that we'll be able to find a job that pays a decent wage, that there will be affordable health care when we get sick, that we'll be able to send our kids to college, and that after a lifetime of hard work, we'll be able to retire with security. They're common hopes, modest dreams. And they're at the heart of the struggle for freedom, dignity, and humanity that Dr. King began, and that it is our task to complete. You know, Dr. King once said that the arc of the moral universe is long, but that it bends toward justice. But what he also knew was that it doesn't bend on its own. It bends because each of us puts our hands on that arc and bends it in the direction of justice.

So on this day – of all days – let's each do our part to bend that arc.

Let's bend that arc toward justice.

Let's bend that arc toward opportunity.

Let's bend that arc toward prosperity for all.

And if we can do that and march together – as one nation, and one people – then we won't just be keeping faith with what Dr. King lived and died for, we'll be making real the words of Amos that he invoked so often, and "let justice roll down like water and righteousness like a mighty stream."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

mjbrown (2008-04-04 16:10:00)

Hi Paul. Thanks for maintaining a great Obama blog. I wanted to share with you a film I made with friends in Rochester, NY about why - when faced with the choice between Obama and Clinton, we choose Obama.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=57RwI118gtw>

mjbrown (2008-04-04 16:11:00)

Hi Paul, Thanks for maintaining a great Blog. I wanted to share with you a movie that my friends and I made in Rochester, NY. It's a simple, sincere look at why ordinary voters support Obama instead of Hillary

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=57RwI118gtw>

Michelle Obama: Yes They Can (2008-04-05 06:57)

Michelle Obama sent out this email yesterday on the 40th anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination.

Paul – Today is the 40th anniversary of the tragic assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and I want to share a video that reveals how far we've come and how much this campaign owes to Dr. King's legacy. Students at a high school in the Bronx, who had no real interest in their government, have found new hope. They were surprised by their own excitement and engagement, but to me, they embody so many reasons why Barack and I decided to get into this campaign.

It's truly moving to see young people inspired by a political leader – someone who gives them hope and reminds them that they can be anything they want to be if they work hard.

Watch what these kids have to say about politics and race in this country:

<http://my.barackobama.com/yestheycan>

Much has changed in this country since Dr. King's death, and thanks to his life and work we have taken critical strides towards racial equality.

The simple fact that Barack is running a competitive campaign for President is a direct result of Dr. King's legacy – and this movement for change would be impossible without the support of people of all races, ages, and backgrounds.

I remember back in December of 2006, a group of us were discussing the possibility of Barack running for President. And as you might have read, I was hesitant about the idea.

But then Barack started talking about why he really wanted to do this – to bring people together and to change the tone of the way we talk to each other in this country. He talked about the need for people to be inspired by their leaders, and the importance of leadership to chart a different course. He talked about Dr. King and Bobby Kennedy, and their passion to challenge a new generation and provide them with role models.

Barack promised that as a candidate and as President he would do everything he could to bring new people to the table. He shared his desire to reach out to our neglected inner cities, to strive to be a role model for young people, and to connect with people who are not involved in politics – those who feel their voices haven't been heard, those who have been left behind, and those who have been turned off by all the petty bickering in recent years.

We can change that, by standing on the shoulders of folks like Dr. King who came before us.

Watching these students who are excited about their own role in politics for the first time, and watching Barack as he strives to live up to the challenges Dr. King made possible, I am truly touched. I hope you'll watch this video and share that feeling with your friends and family:

<http://my.barackobama.com/yestheycan>

Thank you,

Michelle Obama

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Call Indiana before Registration Deadline (2008-04-05 12:45)

There's a strong push by the campaign now to compete in Indiana. Indications on the ground show a tough battle in this state.

Indiana votes on the same day as North Carolina, the latter is the largest state following Pennsylvania, and the combined total delegates available exceeds that of Pennsylvania.

Campaign manager David Plouffe sent out this appeal asking supporters to help register voters in Indiana before the deadline on April 7.

Dear Paul,

✖ Right now, you can help build a base of support for Barack in Indiana and bring more voices into the political process.

To participate in Indiana's primary, voters must be registered by this Monday, April 7th.

Tens of thousands of Obama supporters may not be registered yet, and we need to act quickly to reach out to as many of them as possible.

Each call you make could be another vote for Barack in an area where we need your help the most.

Use our online phonebanking tool, and start calling Indiana supporters now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/call>

Registering voters is more than just an important part of our campaign strategy – it's what our movement is all about.

From the beginning, Barack has set out to bring more people and more voices into the political process. And if we can reach more people in Indiana, we can make a lasting impact and win victories for the Democratic Party up and down the ballot in November.

All across the country, volunteers will be making calls into Indiana to tell potential supporters about the deadline and encourage them to register.

No previous experience is necessary. All you need is a hunger for change and a willingness to turn your enthusiasm into action.

Our team has put together a list of the most important calls you can make into Indiana right now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/call>

Here's how it works:

1. Log into My.BarackObama.com and get a list of 20 names that only you will receive. (If you don't have a My.BarackObama account, creating one is fast and easy.)
2. Click on a name, and you'll be led through a simple script, question by question.
3. Start making calls.

Personal contact is the best way to grow this movement, and you can make these connections right from your own home.

It's easy – start by making five calls, and I know you'll want to make five more:

<http://my.barackobama.com/call>

Thank you for making this happen,

David

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Bush Economy (2008-04-06 13:05)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama talks about the Bush economy at the Mansfield-Metcalf Dinner in Montana.

While I believe the most important issue in the general election will still be the Iraq War and the "war on terrorism," the economy will obviously be very important. Decades of debt spending by governments, businesses and consumers is catching up with the country.

Bill Clinton forestalled this a bit but only at the federal level. Republicans continued to be big spenders despite their rhetoric, only borrowing rather than raising money through taxes. Democrats triangulated and borrowed the "no new taxes" slogan of the Republicans but also without cutting back on spending. So state and local governments continued to pile up debt.

Also, businesses used debt even more during the Clinton administration as best illustrated by the dotcom boom and bust. Financing in most cases is just a fancy business term for borrowing.

The real estate boom of the Bush years again is just more debt as most people had to borrow to purchase a home, and many got well over their heads in liability.

Depending on consumerism to drive the economy has made the country much more dependent on foreign oil. The U.S. dollar is pegged on oil sales and as the "oil peak," the point at which world oil supplies start declining, approaches, there will be downward pressure on the dollar's value. Nations are making major steps to reduce dependency on oil in the future and turning toward green technology.

Those countries that do not make an adequate switch to green energy will end up paying big bucks for high-priced petroleum.

The tough part about the current economic crisis is that unlike other recessions (or even depression?) when prices go down, inflation is rising today as the economy shrinks. Again that's the consumerism-driven economy at work as manufactured goods prices fluctuate with oil prices. Oil is needed to transport these goods and in many cases to make them as with plastics, for example. And there is a cycle now that as oil prices go up, the world's nations are making more efforts toward alternative power and fuel sources. This drives down the dollar as there is less demand for the greenback for use in buying petroleum. And the falling dollar encourages oil producers to cut supply and raise oil prices more to compensate for the falling dollar.

Obama's policy of moving swiftly toward green energy and reducing dependency on foreign oil, and moving away from excessive consumerism are the right steps to take. Also we need someone realistic and non-triangulating to deal realistically with taxes and wean us off the debt-driven economy model.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-04-06 19:06:00)

http://www.salon.com/news/primary_sources/2007/10/11/clinton/index.html

Clinton Foundation Donors

1 Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, WA $12,429,835

2 Alphawood Foundation $4,250,000

3 Wasserman Foundation $3,350,000

4 Walton Family Foundation $2,000,000
5 The Alix Foundation $1,075,000
6 Peninsula Community Foundation $1,002,500
7 Sidney E. Frank Foundation, NY $1,000,000
7 The Annenberg Foundation $1,000,000
7 Walmart Foundation $1,000,000
10 Roy and Christine Sturgis Charitable and Educational Trust $950,000
11 Bernard & Irene Schwartz Foundation $700,000
12 The Rockefeller Foundation $600,000
13 Monterey Fund, Inc. $517,800
14 Citi Foundation $500,000
14 Marin County Foundation $500,000
16 The New York Community Trust $407,335
17 Anheuser-Busch Foundation $400,000
18 Lewis B. & Dorothy Cullman Foundation $265,000
19 Deutsche Bank Americas Foundation $250,000
19 Ford Motor Company Fund, MI $250,000
19 NoVo Foundation $250,000
19 The Bank of America Charitable Foundation $250,000
19 The Jon S. Corzine Foundation $250,000
19 The Winnick Family Foundation $250,000
25 Cumming Foundation $200,000
25 The Engelberg Foundation, FL $200,000
25 The Wedge Foundation $200,000
28 The Berry Gordy Family Foundation $150,000
28 Trinity Foundation $150,000
30 Jonathan M. Tisch Foundation $114,000
31 AT &T Foundation $100,000
31 Horace W. Goldsmith Foundation $100,000
31 Katz Foundation $100,000
31 Regions Foundation $100,000
31 The Dyson Foundation $100,000
31 The Philip D. and Tammy S. Murphy Foundation $100,000
31 Walter H. and Phyllis J. Shorenstein Foundation $100,000
38 Charles Stewart Mott Foundation $65,579
39 Altman/Kazickas Foundation $50,000
39 Craig and Kathryn Hall Foundation $50,000
39 Harman Family Foundation $50,000
39 The David S. and Sylvia Steiner Charitable Trust $50,000
39 Wood-Rill Foundation $50,000
44 Waitt Family Foundation $35,932
45 Riggs Benevolent Fund $33,500
46 The William M. & A. Cafaro Family Foundation $28,000
47 May and Samuel Rudin Family Foundation $25,000
47 Sandler Capital Management Charitable Foundation $25,000
49 Lockheed Martin Corporation Foundation $20,000
49 The Seattle Foundation $20,000
51 The Tommy E. Short Charitable Foundation $17,500
52 John S. and James L. Knight Foundation $15,000
52 Willametta K. Day Foundation $15,000

54 The Susan Thompson Buffett Foundation $14,000
 55 Hassenfeld Foundation $10,000
 55 John M. O'Quinn Foundation $10,000
 55 The Floyd & Delores Jones Foundation $10,000
 55 The Semel Charitable Foundation $10,000
 59 Lone Pine Foundation, Inc. $9,100
 60 Boston Foundation $5,000
 60 JEHT Foundation $5,000
 60 The Gill Foundation $5,000
 60 The Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation $5,000
 60 The Heyday Foundation $5,000
 65 Alan B. Slifka Foundation $2,750
 66 Community Foundation of Greater Memphis $2,200
 67 Sandel Family Foundation $1,000
 67 The Community Foundation for the National Capital $1,000
 69 Arkansas Community Foundation, Inc. $700
 70 Moss Foundation $500
 71 The Bert & Sandra Wasserman Foundation $180
 TOTAL $35,808,411

 Speaking fees

A &E Television $125,000
 Adam Smith Conferences $125,000
 Ahmet San Productions bh of TUSIAD $250,000
 America Israel Chamber of Commerce $125,000
 American Academy of Achievement (2 events) $300,000
 American Assn of Nurse Anesthetists $150,000
 American Chamber of Commerce in Spain $250,000
 American Friends of the Rabin Medical Center $125,000
 America's Health Insurance Plans $150,000
 AMR Research $150,000
 Antwerp Diamond High Council $200,000
 Ardee's Festival $150,000
 Aripaeva Kirjastus $150,000
 Asian American Hotel Owners Association $125,000
 Association of Southern California Defense Counsel $125,000
 Australian Council for the Promotion of Peaceful Reunification of China $300,000
 Australian Information Industry Association $250,000
 Aventis $125,000
 Aventura-Turnberry Jewish Center $150,000
 Banco de Mexico $150,000
 Baugur Group $250,000
 Beth El Synagogue $125,000
 Biotechnology industry Organization $150,000
 Blex S.L. $350,000
 BMW Group on New Zealand $137,500
 Borsen Executive Club $150,000
 British Broadcasting Coporation $75,000
 Canadian Society for Yad Vashem $125,000
 Caribbean Council for Global Studies $125,000

Carnegie Abbey Club $150,000
 Celebriti Forum II (2 events) $200,000
 CiscoSystems (2 events) $300,000
 Citigroup (3 events) $550,000
 CLSA Ltd. (4 events) $700,000
 Colonial Life Ins Co. $200,000
 Comitato per il Congresso Nazionale della Pubblicita $350,000
 Compuware Corporation $125,000
 Congregation Beth-El Zedeck $150,000
 Council of Insurance Agents and Brokers $125,000
 Credit Suisse First Boston $125,000
 Decision Makers InterAction $150,000
 Dentsu Inc on behalf of Aichi Gakuin $250,000
 Deutsche Bank (2 events) $300,000
 Diario de Noticias $250,000
 Dinamo Norge $150,000
 dnmStrategies (2 events) $400,000
 EchoStar Satellite Corporation $100,000
 Economic Club of Southwest Michigan $125,000
 Educatinal Institute of AHLA $125,000
 El Paso Holocaust Museum $125,000
 EPC International on behalf of Workshop Ischgl-Club of the Alps $245,000
 European Travel Commission $125,000
 Fatasma $125,000
 Financial Innovations, Inc. $100,000
 Fool Proof $125,000
 Fortune Magazine Forum (2 events) $700,000
 Friends of Simon Wiesenthal Center $150,000
 Fundacao Armando Alvares Penteado $250,000
 Fundacion Rafael Del Pino $250,000
 Future Generation Foundation $175,000
 Galeries Lafayette-Monoprix $250,000
 GBD Group $250,000
 General Motors $200,000
 Global Artists (4 events) $580,000
 Global Business Enterprises $300,000
 Global Strategic Ventures $150,000
 Gold Service International (4 events) $800,000
 Golden Tree Asset Management $150,000
 Goldman Sachs (4 events) $650,000
 Greater Washington Society of Association Executives (2 events) $250,000
 Greenwood House $125,000
 Griwa Consulting GMBH $250,000
 Group Vivendi Universal $150,000
 Gruner & Jahr Publishing USA on behalf of American Jewish Committee $125,000
 Hearst Magazines $125,000
 Hebrew Home and Hospital Inc $125,000
 HMS Italia $125,000
 Hon Frank McKenna's Business Networking Event (2 events) $200,000
 HSM America (2 events) $300,000

Hubert Burda Media GmbH $300,000
 Hunter College Foundation $35,000
 Huron Consulting Services $150,000
 IBM $200,000
 IFE Institut Fuer Eventmanagement GmbH $300,000
 Independent News and Media $150,000
 infoUSA, Inc $200,000
 Institute for International Sports $150,000
 International Centre for Business Info $125,000
 International Council of Shopping Centers $150,000
 International Dairy-deli Bakery $150,000
 International Health Racquet $150,000
 International Profit Associates $125,000
 J.T. Campbell & Co. $150,000
 Jewish Federation Council of LA $125,000
 Jewish Federation of Chicago (2 events) $300,000
 Jewish National Fund (4 events) $550,000
 Jiannanchun Group Co $250,000
 Jim Pattison Group $150,000
 KMD $250,000
 Kushner Companies $125,000
 Lancaster Chamber of Commerce $150,000
 Latin American Institute of Education Communicaton $300,000
 Leading Minds (3 events) $375,000
 Lehman Bros. $150,000
 LIMRA International $150,000
 Listin Diario $250,000
 London Drugs $125,000
 London School of Economics and Political Science $28,100
 Long Island Association Inc $125,000
 Macklowe Properties on behalf of State of Israel Bonds Development Corp. $250,000
 Markson Sparks! (10 events) $1,675,000
 Maruri Communications Group $200,000
 Mass Torts Made Perfect $150,000
 McCreath Communications (2 events) $275,000
 MDM Investments Ltd $125,000
 Media Control GmbH (2 events) $350,000
 MiKI Corporation (3 events) $450,000
 Mito City Political Research Group $400,000
 Morgan Firestone Foundation $125,000
 Morgan Stanley Dean Witter and Co. $125,000
 Mortgage Banker Assn $150,000
 MPSF (3 events) $300,000
 National Apartment Association $150,000
 National Assn of Realtors $125,000
 National Mlti-Housing Council $150,000
 National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children $100,000
 Ness Technologies $150,000
 Nordstrom International Aps on behalf of World Celebrity Golf $300,000
 Old York Road Temple Beth Am $125,000

One Family $125,000
 Oracle Corporation $125,000
 ORT Montreal $125,000
 Paris Golf and Country Club $150,000
 PeopleSoft Inc $125,000
 Personal Dynamics on behalf of Provente.com $125,000
 Pinpoint Knowledge Management, The Portables $125,000
 Protocol Resource and Operation Services $200,000
 Puls Biznesu, Bonnier Business $183,333
 Radio and Records $125,000
 RDM Group $125,000
 Renaissance Calgary $125,000
 Salem State College Foundation $125,000
 Savage/Rothenberg Productions (4 events) $550,000
 Scherer Consulting Group and Jorg Lohr Training $150,000
 Seeliger Y Conde $200,000
 Seoul Broadcasting $250,000
 Serono International $150,000
 SFX Sports Group on behalf of Magna International $125,000
 St. James Place $175,000
 Standard Bank of America $150,000
 Stree-Global Investments in Women $125,000
 Success Events International (2 events) $250,000
 Success Resources Pte Ltd. $250,000
 Temple Beth Avodah $125,000
 The Abraham Fund $125,000
 The American University in Dubai $150,000
 The Dabbagh Group (2 events) $600,000
 The German Union of Small and Medium-Sized Companies $100,000
 The McCarthy Group $200,000
 The Power Within (8 events) $1,870,000
 The Star Forum $125,000
 The Sunday Times Hay Festival $150,000
 The Talar Forum $183,333
 The Varsavsky Foundation $175,000
 tinePublic Inc (5 events) $650,000
 TJ Martell Foundation $75,000
 Toronto Hadassah-WIZO $125,000
 Tufts University $125,000
 United Israel Appeal of Geneva $150,000
 University of California, Davis $100,000
 University of Judaism $125,000
 Urban Land Institute $125,000
 Valor Economico S.A. $150,000
 Value Grupo Financiero $175,000
 Verinvest S.C. on behalf of Mexico Business Summit $150,000
 VNU Business Media on behalf of Online Learning 2001 Conf. $125,000
 Warburg Pincus $125,000
 Wirtsfafats Blatt $183,333
 WIZO $125,000

World Celebrity Events (5 events) $1,340,000
World Leader's Forum $150,000
Yorkshire International Business Convention $200,000
Young President's Organization $150,000
YPO Windy City Chapter $100,000
TOTAL $41,085,599

Lisa (2008-04-08 03:13:00)

Barack is not the first black candidate to run for president. He will certainly not be the last. Blacks are changing the face of Sport, Music, Crime and now Politics. So is the face of America changing to the rest of the world. Its change I can believe in because its all too real. As real as a craving for black coffee in the morning. America is ready for this black change in the white house. Historically, pre-election goals are very different to the actual achievements of a candidate once he/she has assumed office. A leader leads a nation consciously, by the good faith of its people. Charismatic leaders with the unspoken consent of their people.

A salesman will get you to say yes and sell you a product which you may unconsciously reject. The perception of America is so different today than it was in the 70's, 90's or even 2004. As fragmented will also be this collective unconscious of the body politic once a leader is elected to congress. It will define who an American is, what the America of the future will be. As a result world demographics will change proactively to this result. More milk in your coffee America?

Michelle Obama in North Carolina (2008-04-06 19:47)

Michelle Obama Appearances in North Carolina

Apr 8 Rally with Michelle Obama

in Winston-Salem, NC

Apr 8 Rally with Michelle Obama

in Raleigh, NC

Supporters in York, Pennsylvania, organize grassroots events including helping out in their communities.

✕

[EMBED]

✕

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Student Rewind: All Across the Map (2008-04-07 11:50)

From barackobama.com :

Student Rewind: All Across the Map

by Alex DeGolia,

Monday, April 07, 2008 at 10:31 AM

Barack in front of a huge crowd at the University of Montana in Missoula

Pennsylvania Students Gear Up for April 22nd Primary

By Luke Messac

With almost 700,000 college students across Pennsylvania, the youth vote will be a key factor in the April 22nd Democratic primary. On over 70 college campuses around the state, SFBO chapters are turning heads and winning new supporters. Mia Prensky, a 21-year-old at Bryn Mawr College, talked to SFBO members as they handed out stickers and information about Senator Obama's position on Iraq. Finding herself in agreement with Obama on the war — a central issue for her in this election — Prensky told the Associated Press that he would have her vote.

Mia is not alone, as students from across the nation see Obama as the candidate most attuned to their hopes and concerns. A recent poll conducted by Gallup and the Chronicle of Higher Education shows that when asked which candidate would do more to help families deal with rising college tuition costs, more Americans between the ages of 18 and 22 chose Obama than Clinton and McCain combined. Barack Obama's attention to young people is one of the reasons why he has won the student vote by overwhelming margins in this year's primaries and caucuses. As Scott Keeter, director of survey research for the Pew Research Center, observes, "I cannot recall another candidate in the past couple of decades that had such consistent support from young people."

Dave Matthews in Bloomington, IN

Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds played an acoustic set in front of a crowd of 13,500 at Indiana University in Bloomington, IN to promote voter registration and support for Senator Obama. To read Dave Matthews' endorsement posted on his website, click here. Asked by Rolling Stone why he is supporting Senator Obama, Matthews responded, "It's a quality he has that seems to elevate the people around him... the most important qualification a candidate can possess is being able to inspire people to want to do things for their country.” For a more in-depth look at why he is supporting Senator Obama, read the entire Rolling Stone interview here.

In Other News...

Senator Obama enjoyed an enormous crowd at the University of Montana in Missoula on Saturday. Paul Donaldson, who works at the University of Montana in Missoula setting up sound and stage at the Adams Center, says that he’s never seen anything like what happened two days ago. Students began lining up for the event at midnight even though Barack wouldn’t be there until 10 p.m. Donaldson said, “This is history.” To read the entire story in the Great Falls Tribune, click here.

Barack wins a mock Democratic Convention at St. Francis University in Loretto, PA, with 60 percent of the vote. Read more here.

Teens are fired up in Lancaster County, PA.

X

X

X

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Voter Registration gains two Penn. Counties for Dems (2008-04-07 14:42)

Two counties in Pennsylvania have switched from Republican to Democratic majorities after record voter registration drives. Here’s an excerpt from the New York Times story. While it’s still too early to believe that this will benefit Barack Obama’s campaign more than Hillary Clinton’s, we do know that Obama supporters staged a massive voter registration drive in the state.

April 7, 2008, 2:59 pm

2 Philly Counties Flip to Democratic Party

By Katharine Q. Seelye

History is being made in the suburbs of Philadelphia.

The four suburban counties have long been Republican strongholds, with more Republican voters than Democratic ones. The last time there were more Democrats than Republicans seems lost in the mists of time.

But a new day is here. Voter enrollment in both Montgomery and Bucks Counties has flipped from Republican to Democratic.

The registration deadline was March 24, and tens of thousands of new registrations flooded in, from both new voters and party switchers. Elections officials have been counting them since, and posting the changes in drips and drabs.

Today, the new tally in Bucks shows 185,413 enrolled Democrats, compared with 181,941 enrolled Republicans.

In Montgomery County, the new tally shows 245,209 Democrats, compared with 238,208 Republicans.

While both counties have been voting Democratic periodically for more than a decade, the registration figures have not reflected that trend until now.

“We’re pretty excited,” said John Cordisco, chairman of the Bucks County Democratic Party and a candidate for state treasurer. He said that previous registration drives had created momentum for the change but that “disgust” with the Bush administration and excitement over this year’s Democratic presidential primary had accelerated it. He said he thought the last time Bucks was Democratic may have been the 1960s.

The campaigns of Senators Barack Obama and Hillary Rodham Clinton undertook intense voter-registration drives in the suburbs, and across the state. Signing up new voters was a particular strategy for Mr. Obama, who has also sought to appeal to independents and Republicans.

Check out scenes from Barack Obama ’s visit to Montana.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack discusses Iraq War testimony on Today Show (2008-04-08 11:11)

Sen. Barack Obama discusses the Iraq War on the Today Show indicating that he would push for answers from General David Petraeus and Ambassador Ryan Crocker during their testimony today.

[EMBED]

Barack was also endorsed today by the Charleston Gazette.

the Charleston Gazette

For the first time since the historic 1960 primary election, the Democratic presidential nomination remains hotly contested as West Virginians prepare to vote. So this state's Democrats and independents may, once again, help decide U.S. history.

For the first time since the historic 1960 primary election, the Democratic presidential nomination remains hotly contested as West Virginians prepare to vote. So this state's Democrats and independents may, once again, help decide U.S. history.

We hope they support the brilliant, inspiring, eloquent frontrunner in the race, Barack Obama.

Sen. Obama is a rare figure in U.S. politics - a deep thinker who rises above partisan sniping and makes statecraft seem noble. He raises hope that, after the disastrous Bush years mercifully come to an end, Americans can again be proud of their national leader. Obama appeals to the innate decency in all groups of people, beyond party lines, without personal grandiosity. He fosters a desire to restore America's finest values of honor and fairness.

In endorsing Obama, Sen. Jay Rockefeller pointed out that the young Illinois lawyer had to work hard - "there was nothing sheltered about his life" - but he rose to national stature. Rockefeller said Obama was far-sighted enough to oppose President Bush's unwise plan to invade Iraq while most others, including rival Hillary Clinton, supported the invasion.

"The indisputable fact is, Barack Obama was right about Iraq when many of us were wrong," the West Virginia senator said. "It was a tough call and the single greatest national security question - and mistake - of our time. ... What matters most in the Oval Office is sound judgment and decisive action. It's about getting it right on crucial national security questions the first time, and every time."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

(2008-04-08 11:11)

Sen. Barack Obama discusses the Iraq War on the Today Show indicating that he would demand answers from General David Petraeus and Ambassador Ryan Crocker
[EMBED]

New Obama Video and TV ads (2008-04-08 16:03)

Barack Obama speaks at the CWA Legislative Conference today.
[EMBED]

And some new ads are airing on TV.

Quiet began airing yesterday featuring Barack speaking about Washington's failure to reduce our dependence on foreign oil and his efforts to tell Detroit's automakers that he won't allow them to block higher fuel standards for our cars.

[EMBED]

Maya, which begins today, features Barack's sister, grandmother, and wife discussing the values that Barack will bring to the White House and his commitment to give every child the same opportunities that his own daughters have.

[EMBED]

One Voice begins airing today and highlights Barack's belief that we can unite together as a country to deal with challenges and encourages Americans to take charge of the political process.

[EMBED]

In Mother, which begins today, Barack tells how his mother suffered from a failing health care system as she fought with cancer. He commits to reforming our nation's health care system. Obama's universal health care plan covers all American and will cut costs for the typical family by $2,500 per year.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama calls for Timetable, Diplomatic Surge (2008-04-08 21:09)

Sen. Barack Obama called on a timetable for withdrawal from Iraq and for a 'diplomatic surge' to include Iran during the testimony of Iraq commander Gen. David Petraeus and US ambassador to Baghdad Ryan Crocker.

"I think that increased pressure in a measured way, in my mind, and this is where we disagree, includes a timetable for withdrawal. Nobody is asking for a precipitous withdrawal, Obama said, also noting the tremendous burden the war is placing on the weak economy.

"I continue to believe that the original decision to go into Iraq was a massive strategic blunder, that the two problems you pointed out, Al-Qaeda in Iraq and increased Iranian influence in the region are a direct result of that original decision. That's not a decision you gentlemen made. I will not lay it at your feet. You are cleaning up the mess afterwards."

X

[EMBED]

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Postal Workers, Portland Tribune endorse Barack Obama (2008-04-09 10:22)

The American Postal Workers Union and the Portland Tribune have endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today.

American Postal Workers Union endorses Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Wednesday, April 09, 2008 at 09:29 AM

The American Postal Workers Union has endorsed Barack Obama for president. The APWU is the world's largest postal union, representing over 330,000 USPS employees and retirees, as well as nearly 2,000 private-sector mail workers.

From the APWU release...

✖ The National Executive Board of the American Postal Workers Union has voted unanimously to endorse Sen. Barack Obama for president.

"Sen. Obama's message is one of hope and change," said union President William Burrus. "His message is special, and the timing is right."

"We are most impressed by Sen. Obama's commitment to eradicating the undue influence of special interests in the political process," he said. "Our current political system does not allow for the voices of average citizens to be heard over the demands of lobbyists and big-money campaign contributors."

"Sen. Obama has vowed to change that, and his campaign has flourished through the participation of new voters and small contributors," Burrus said. "We believe he will be a president who will strongly represent the interests of working Americans."

"His ability to bring new participants into our nation's democratic process – to get young people involved, and to persuade ordinary citizens that they have a real stake in politics – is an inspiration."

"We are pleased to endorse Sen. Barack Obama for president of the United States, and we will commit our energy and efforts to help him win the White House."

For more on Obama's plan to protect the dignity of America's workers and strengthen our unions, click here.

Obama is best for Democrats

Oregon Democrats can do their part to encourage the nation to move forward by throwing their support to Sen. Barack Obama in the May 20 primary.

The fact that Oregon matters at all in this presidential race is something of a small miracle, considering the lateness of its primary. But since Oregonians have a rare chance this election year to influence whom the Democrats ultimately select to run in November, the state's voters ought to stake their claim on the future and help the nation transcend bitter divisions of the past.

Coming into Oregon and other late-primary states, the Illinois senator is maintaining a small lead in pledged delegates over Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y. Both Obama and Clinton have visited the state (along with former President Clinton) and have ignited levels of excitement not seen during an Oregon primary since the mid-1970s.

The two Democratic candidates have similarities on the issues, and they present an opportunity to break racial and gender barriers for the nation's highest office. But our support for Obama comes down to a belief that the nation is weary of family dynasties in the White House and is in search of new ways to resolve old battles – domestically and abroad...

Obama's campaign already has proven transformative in many ways. He has engaged and motivated younger voters who are willing to put aside the cynicism held by many of their elders and to believe again that government can be a positive force for change. Obama also represents a singular opportunity to unify this nation around the strength of its racial and ethnic diversity.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Three Days to Register in North Carolina (2008-04-09 14:26)

There are just three days left for new voters to register in North Carolina. If you would like to make calls to help in the registration effort click on the button below.

Check out the video of Barack speaking on the economy at the Malvern, Pennsylvania town hall meeting. There was a great voter registration effort in the Keystone State.

[EMBED]

Barack said during the meeting:

The war in Iraq was unwise. It has piled on a mountain of debt that has weakened our economy. And it distracted us from going after al-Qaeda and Afghanistan. This is why I opposed the war in 2002. This is why I intend to bring this war to a close in 2009. That is my goal. When we end the war in Iraq, we will be in a much stronger position to be a leader around the world. We've got to insert diplomacy into our foreign relations.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New TV Ad: 'Billy' (2008-04-09 14:58)

The Obama campaign unveiled a new television ad for Pennsylvania today.

The ad features Sen. Barack Obama talking about a legislator who went on to work for a pharmaceutical company.

The pharmaceutical industry wrote a prescription drug plan provision that prevent Medicare from negotiating with drug companies, and the chairman of the bill's committee left Congress after the legislation passed to take a multi-million dollar job with the pharmaceutical industry.

Barack is the only candidate in the race who doesn't take special interest PAC or lobbyist money, and he's the only candidate who has passed legislation to curb special interest influence in politics.

Check out the ad:

[EMBED]

X
X
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More Voices (2008-04-09 21:21)

Barack Obama sent out this email today.

Paul –

There are just three days left before North Carolina's voter registration deadline, and I need your help to reach as many supporters as possible.

Bringing more voices into the political process is what this campaign is all about.

You can make a difference today, right from your home. Use our online phonebanking tool, and start calling North Carolina supporters now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/callNC>

Across North Carolina , there are tens of thousands of people who are ready for change – but many are not yet registered to vote. We need to reach out to them, and we need your help.

Our success in this campaign has come from ordinary Americans believing in the power of one voice to bring change. In North Carolina – in these next three days – you can be that voice.

Pick up the phone, make a personal connection, and start making a difference now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/callNC>

Our on-line calling system is easy and fun to use. Here’s how it works:

- Once you log in, you’ll get a list of 20 names that only you will receive. (If you don’t have a My.BarackObama account, creating one is fast and easy.)
- Click on a name – you’ll be led through a simple script, question by question.
- Start making calls.

Thank you for getting involved and building this movement,

Barack

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama in South Bend, Indiana (2008-04-10 11:25)

Barack Obama talks in South Bend, Indiana about the Iraq War that will probably end up costing more than $1 trillion and thousands of lives. The war has not increased the security of the United States, Obama notes. A crowd of 3,500 gathered for the April 9 rally.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

JS (2008-04-11 07:34:00)

Pennsylvania is grassroots territory:

<http://PAREps4Obama.blogspot.com/>

<http://www.youtube.com/user/PASeniorsForObama>

<http://www.youtube.com/user/PAVetsForObama>

<http://PAVetsForObama.blogspot.com/>

<http://PASeniorsForObama.blogspot.com/>

Video from Pennsylvania, Indiana and North Carolina (2008-04-10 15:49)

Barack Obama discusses the economy in Gary, Indiana.

[EMBED]

On Tuesday, Michelle Obama was in North Carolina registering new voters.

[EMBED]

Mark "Luke Skywalker" Hamill speaks to students at Point Park University in downtown Pittsburgh about why he is supporting Barack Obama. Hamill who opposes the Iraq War said that just as Luke in Star Wars was "the new hope in the fantasy world and Barack is the new hope in the real world."

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

JS (2008-04-11 07:36:00)

Feel free to share these videos directly from YouTube or to link to them.

<http://PAREps4Obama.blogspot.com/>

<http://www.youtube.com/user/PASeniorsForObama>

<http://www.youtube.com/user/PAVetsForObama>

<http://PAVetsForObama.blogspot.com/>

<http://PASeniorsForObama.blogspot.com/>

Barack Obama in Lafayette, Indiana (2008-04-11 07:59)

Barack Obama speaks in Lafayette, Indiana, on April 10, 2008 about the struggle for change in the country. He talks about things that "don't possible right now," but are if we act and are unified.

[EMBED]

Barack's message on American Idol last night.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama: 'Pass Executive Pay Legislation' (2008-04-11 12:38)

Sen. Barack Obama this morning called for passage of legislation requiring big business to conduct non-binding shareholders votes on executive compensation.

[EMBED]

Here is the text of Sen. Obama's remarks at the press conference as prepared for delivery.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama on Executive Compensation

Indianapolis, Indiana

Press Conference

Friday, April 11, 2008

I'd like to say a few words this morning about the state of our economy. You know, we talk about "issues" in a campaign. But for families across Indiana and the country, the economy is more than a discussion point. That's because the cost of everything from health care, to a tank of gas, to college tuition has shot up while wages have stayed the same. So families are feeling the pinch. On top of that, millions of Americans are also facing foreclosure or seeing the value of their homes decline, and millions more are out of work.

So I wasn't particularly surprised when I read the other day about a poll that shows folks are now more downbeat about their futures than they've been in nearly fifty years.

But we also know that's only half the story – because Wall Street executives have been doing just fine. Some CEOs make more in one day than their workers make in one year. There was a story about this in the paper the other day. They did a study and found that the top 50 CEOs made around $15.7 million last year – despite the fact that many of their companies have been falling behind.

We all believe in that fundamental, American value that if you do good work, if you're successful, you should be rewarded. But if you're a Wall Street CEO today, it doesn't seem to matter whether you're doing a good job or a bad job for your shareholders and workers: You'll be rewarded either way.

Take the home building company, KB Home. They lost nearly $1 billion last year. But their CEO walked away with a $6 million cash bonus, and that's on top of his $1 million base salary. And just the other week, we learned that when Countrywide Financial was sold a few months ago, its top two executives got a combined $19 million. Nevermind that Countrywide is as responsible as anyone for the scandalous mortgage crisis we've got today – a crisis that's the source of many of our other economic problems.

This is an outrage. But as I said in a recent speech at the Cooper Union in New York City, this isn't an accident. It's because of decisions made, not just in boardrooms or trading floors, but in Washington. Under Republican and Democratic Administrations, we failed to guard against practices that all too often rewarded financial manipulation instead of productivity and sound business practices. We let the special interests put their thumbs on the economic scales, using their clout to rig the game against everyday Americans.

So what we need to do is restore balance to our economy and put in place rules of the road to make competition fair, and open, and honest. One place we can start is by restoring common sense to executive pay.

That's why last year, I proposed legislation that would give shareholders a say on what CEOs are getting paid, and help ensure that companies are disclosing the rationale for the salary and benefits that CEOs are getting. This isn't just about expressing outrage. It's about changing a system where bad behavior is rewarded – so that we can hold CEOs accountable, and make sure they're acting in a way that's good for their company, good for our economy, and good for America, not just good for themselves.

We've seen what happens when CEOs are paid for doing a job no matter how bad a job they're doing. We can't afford to postpone reform any longer. That's why Washington needs to act immediately to pass this legislation.

Now, I know Senator McCain had some sharp words the other day about what some CEOs are getting paid. And I was glad to hear it. But when he's had the chance to do something about this problem, he's opted for continuing the do-nothing approach of the Bush years. And this seems to be a trend with Senator McCain. Yesterday, he finally proposed some steps to deal with our housing crisis. And I'm glad he's moving in the right direction, but what he's proposing isn't enough to really help struggling families.

So I respect John McCain. He'll be a worthy opponent. But we can't afford another four years of policies that don't make a difference in the lives of ordinary Americans, and that's what John McCain is offering.

We need a President who understands the fundamental truth that's been at the heart of America's economic success – that each American does better when all Americans do better; that the well-being of American business and the American people are aligned. That's the kind of leadership the American people deserve. And that's the kind of leadership I intend to offer as President.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Dork of York (2008-04-11 20:46:00)

Now here is an interesting race we have a form of condensed Bush to which we just need to add waqter and he'll sprout up taking the form of a very old man with a cancerous groth on his neck (that is a tumor right?)thinking that the surge is working. Then we have a man releing on race and all he says is a noun a verb and change. And then we have a woman who doesn't insult the rust belt like Obama and isn't a Bush like McCain and has a solid record of winning swing states so who do you think will have a chance against the republican slander machine? Who do you think will bring about the most change? The answer of course is any one who doesn't accept money from big biusness but in the lack of one it's Clinton.

Obama News Roundup (2008-04-11 19:58)

Here's the new web ad released by the Obama campaign.

Note that the ad includes John McCain!

In this video, Barack speaks about healthcare in Gary, Indiana.

[EMBED]

In Terre Haute, Indiana, Barack responds to the combined attacks by Hillary Clinton and John McCain.

[EMBED]

In this video, Barack discusses the importance of community organizing while volunteers in the Philadelphia campaign office register voters.

[EMBED]

Franktuary, a NY style hot dog restaurant in downtown Pittsburgh, created two meals based on the candidates, the Barackwurst for Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama News Roundup (2008-04-11 19:58)

Here's the new web ad released by the Obama campaign.

Obama in Muncie; Colin Powell (2008-04-12 09:31)

Barack Obama in Muncie, Indiana, talks about "bitterness" among people over the current political situation. He calls for a government "that is actually paying attention" instead of not listening to the voice of the people. [EMBED]

On Good Morning America (Apr. 10), Gen. Colin Powell praises but falls short of endorsing Barack Obama. He says he has not chosen a candidate to support yet. [EMBED]

X

X

X

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-04-12 14:59)

From barackobama.com :

Women For Obama Rally with Caroline Kennedy

by Amanda Scott

Saturday, April 12, 2008 at 11:13 AM

This morning, over 1,000 women of all ages gathered together for a Women For Obama rally in Glenside, Pennsylvania before hitting the streets to canvass for Barack.

The attendees were excited to hear Caroline Kennedy speak about why she is voting for Barack. Caroline said:

I keep being told that women are going to decide this election, and how great is that? But, we know that women decide all elections. And Barack Obama is the leader for us, and this time. Aren't we lucky that somebody has come along that can take this moment, and our history, to the place it needs to go? It is rare to find a leader who can inspire us and make us believe that together we really can do great things. Inspiration is so important –it can transform this country. When each of us takes an action that is courageous it gives strength to those around us to face the next challenge and those acts can change history. And that is the chance that we have with Barack Obama. And it is our responsibility to put everything aside to help him fight for all of us.

We need a president who will fight for civil rights, education, and hold himself to the highest ethical standards. It's up to each of us to create a government that is close to our heart's desire, because if we don't do it, somebody else will. It is up to us to take this moment back – to take this country back – to create a government that our hearts desire. It's coming down to Pennsylvania and you are going to make a difference. Let's make history in Pennsylvania.

Maria from Upper Dublin was excited to see Caroline Kennedy this morning. Her support for Barack convinced her husband to change his lifelong Republican status and register as a Democrat to vote for Barack. She likes Barack's view on the war in Iraq, and how he brings everyone into the political process. After the rally, Maria went home to call undecided voters in Pennsylvania.

Christine of Ambler believes that the past 30 years of American government has gone backwards and that Barack can bring us into the future. She is supporting Barack because she says “the issues that affect women are the same issues that affect everyone: the environment, the war in Iraq, family values, energy and the economy.” Christine was one of the many women who went canvassing after being fired up at the rally.

Help Barack in Pennsylvania by volunteering to Get Out The Vote!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Getting out the Vote in Pennsylvania (2008-04-13 07:30)

With about a week left until the Pennsylvania primary, the focus shifts to voter turnout.

The Keystone State will be a tough one for the Obama campaign and their hopes rely mainly on registering overs and getting out the vote. They completed a successful voter registration drive, so now the task is getting Obama supporters to the polls.

Young people could end up playing the vital role.

Check out the YouTube video of the University of Pittsburgh student forum. Representatives of Students for Obama answered policy question at the forum coordinated by the University of Pittsburgh College Democrats. [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sen. Bob Casey talks up Obama on CNN (2008-04-13 18:47)

Pennsylvania Sen. Bob Casey tells Wolf Blitzer of CNN why Sen. Barack Obama will benefit his state as president. [EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Pennsylvania and the Democratic Establishment (2008-04-14 10:00)

A lot of people are wondering why Barack Obama is having trouble in places with strong Democratic establishments like Pennsylvania. They might be wondering also if Hillary Clinton is right and Barack may have trouble in these states during the general election.

Let's remember that Hillary is strong in these states because she's long been part of the establishment that her husband helped create. This is a Democratic establishment. These are the people least likely to vote for a Republican or even a Green Party candidate for exactly the same reasons they are more likely to vote for Clinton. So they can be expected to strongly support the Democrat whoever that candidate might be.

These are old school types where the law of "I scratch your back, you scratch my back" rules. We saw some of this mentality in the Clinton camp fury that followed Gov. Bill Richardson's endorsement of Obama. Of course, there's nothing wrong with expecting favors to be returned, but not when it interferes with the best interests of the people and getting the people's job done.

Also, we should note that the problem of corporations expecting favors in return for campaign donations is one of the problems that has created the current political mess.

In old school politics, freelancing is discouraged and loyalty is required. Thus, when you have a strong Democratic machine, you will find that things are lined up like dominoes for the establishment nod.

Of course, an upset can still occur when there is a motivated grassroots effort that turns out a lot of new or unexpected voters.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Ordinary People donating to Campaign (2008-04-14 20:36)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out this email today highlighting the (extra)ordinary people supporting Barack Obama.

Friend –

 You've probably heard about the latest dust-up in the Democratic race.

A few days ago, Barack spoke about the frustrations that working people in this country are feeling and said what we all know is true: that many people are bitter and angry because they believe their government isn't listening to them.

You and I both know that the hope of changing that reality is what drives the unprecedented support for this campaign from ordinary people in every part of the country.

But our opponents have been spinning the media and peddling fake outrage around the clock. John McCain's campaign, which will continue the George Bush economic policies that have devastated the middle class, called Barack out of touch and elitist. And Hillary Clinton, who is the candidate who said lobbyists represent real people, didn't just echo the Republican candidate's talking points: she actually used the very same words to pile on with more attacks.

These comments show just how out of touch Senator McCain and Senator Clinton are with the reality of what's happening in this election.

We've built the broadest campaign of ordinary people in the history of presidential politics – and more people across this country have voted for Barack Obama than either one of them.

And we've done it the right way: our campaign is funded by everyday people giving $5 or more. That's distinctly different from Senator McCain and Senator Clinton, who both rely on money from Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs.

There's nothing elitist about a movement of more than a million people standing up for a different kind of politics.

If you're fed up with these kinds of tired attacks, you can do something about it right now. We're setting a goal of 1.5 million people giving to this campaign by May 6th.

Right now, one of those million people who have already given to our campaign is waiting to match your first donation. No matter what amount you choose to give, our system will match you with a supporter who has promised to match someone's first donation today.

You can see for yourself exactly what kind of movement this is. When you make your donation, you'll see the name and town of the person just like you who matched your gift. You'll also see a note from them with their story and why they gave, if they chose to write one.

You'll double the impact of your donation if you make a matching gift right now. Will you help fight back now?

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

Barack Obama's own life and story are reflected in the character of this grassroots campaign. He was raised by a single mother with help from his grandparents. He has a family he loves, not long ago finished paying off his student loans, and he's doing what he can to help change this country.

That's what he's done for his entire career. After graduating, he became a community organizer, working with people in Chicago who – like many people across the country right now – felt left behind by their leaders.

When you make a matching donation, you'll be paired with someone with that same sense that it's time for a government that is responsible to the people for a change.

Someone is waiting to hear your story, and to share theirs with you. If you can support the campaign at this crucial moment, you'll be able to share your story about why you're committed to this campaign.

And because this is a matching donation, your gift of $25 will be doubled by another supporter. You'll have twice the impact and help reach our unprecedented 1.5 million-person goal. Make a matching donation now and be a part of history:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

The attacks from the Clinton campaign – on Barack Obama himself, and on supporters like you – can be expected to increase as her chances of winning dwindle further.

A few weeks ago, one of her top aides tried to diminish our success by referring to the places we've won as "boutique" states and to our supporters as the "latte-sipping crowd."

That means 30 states and territories – twice as many as Senator Clinton has won – qualify as "boutique." And the nearly 15 million people who have voted for us (again, more than Senator Clinton) must drink a lot of latte.

It's clear that Senator Clinton will continue to say or do anything as her campaign gets more and more negative.

But 1.5 million donors will be an astonishing and undeniable signal that it isn't the elites fueling this movement – it's the American people.

That starts with you.

Thank you,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Upcoming Obama Events in Pennsylvania and Indiana (2008-04-15 06:23)

Appearances by Michelle Obama

Apr 15 Community Event with Michelle Obama

in York, PA

Apr 15 Stand for Change Rally with Michelle Obama

in Haverford, PA

Apr 16 Community Event with Michelle Obama

in Evansville, IN

Apr 16 Community Event with Michelle Obama

in Indianapolis, IN

Apr 16 Community Event with Michelle Obama

in Anderson, IN

Obama Campaign Ads in Pennsylvania

-  "It Won't" Television Ad
-  "Billy" Television Ad
-  "Maya" Television Ad
-  "Quiet" Television Ad
-  "One Voice" Television Ad
-  "Mother" Television Ad
-  "Fill" Radio Ad
-  "For Decades" Television Ad
-  "Nothing's Changed" Television Ad
-  "Opportunity" Television Ad
-  "Carry" Television Ad
-  "Toughest" Television Ad

✕

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Upcoming Obama Events in Pennsylvania (2008-04-15 06:23)

Appearances by Michelle Obama

Apr 15 Community Event with Michelle Obama
in York, PA

Apr 15 Stand for Change Rally with Michelle Obama
in Haverford, PA Apr 16 Community Event with Michelle Obama in Evansville, IN Apr 16 Community Event with Michelle Obama in Indianapolis, IN Apr 16 Community Event with Michelle Obama
in Anderson, IN

Barack Obama: Disappointed (2008-04-15 20:10)

The news today indicates that inflation is flaming out of control due to rising fuel and food costs even as the economy shrinks.

Sen. Barack Obama sent out this email today in response to the new barrage of attacks by Sen. McCain and Sen. Clinton.

Dear Friend,

✉ In the last 24 hours we saw renewed attacks from Senator McCain and Senator Clinton.

The same John McCain who voted to extend the Bush tax cuts for the wealthiest few said I was "out of touch" when I spoke about the frustrations that working people in this country are feeling.

Maybe that's to be expected from John McCain. But I was disappointed to hear the exact same talking points from my Democratic colleague, Hillary Clinton. When a candidate who believes lobbyists represent "real people" says that I'm out of touch, that's when you know politics is being played.

But in the last 24 hours we've also heard from people like you.

We asked some of the 1.3 million people who have already donated to this movement for change to share their story and promise to match your first donation to the campaign.

Here are some of the people waiting to match your donation:

Rick from Florida matched a donation of $25, writing:

"I am a typical American just like you. I've served in the military, I work hard for a living and I want what's best for my country, not just me. I've seen what's happened over the last years and I am deeply saddened, worried and, yes, even bitter. But I see something in Barack Obama I have never seen in a presidential candidate in my own 45 years and the hope and inspiration I feel right now brings tears even as I write this to you. We don't get many chances like this. I don't have much to give but I give what I can because it's important and I ask that you please consider joining me with a few dollars that, added to the small contributions from millions of people like you and I, can be what it takes to really change things. Thanks in advance!"

Eve from Oregon matched a donation of $50, writing:

"I'm thrilled that Barack recognizes how frustrated so many of us are by the politics of fear and cynicism we've seen these past seven years! But what really sets him apart is that he's not afraid to speak the truth and say what's not supposed to be spoken - that yes, we can love our country but also be frustrated with it's direction and leadership.

Thank you for making a donation to this amazing...campaign! Yes, we can!"

See for yourself what kind of movement this is. Make a matching donation now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

When we started this campaign, we said we were going to do something different.

We said we weren't going to take money from Washington lobbyists and PACs. And the cynics said we would never be able to compete against the status quo.

But what the cynics didn't anticipate was you.

They didn't understand that people like Rick, Eve, and you were tired of a politics that was about tearing each other down instead of lifting this country up.

And they didn't understand that you were going to finance this campaign with contributions of $5, $25 and $50 at a time.

There's nothing elitist about the largest grassroots campaign in the history of our country - and you can prove that right now.

Make a matching donation of $25:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

Thank you for all that you're doing to change our country.

Barack

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-04-17 16:52:00)

After being a witness to Hillary's whining last night I really wish that the character of the Clintons would be emphasized a little more. I know Obama wants to stick to the high road and that is very commendable, but everytime she says that "she can beat John McCain where Senator Obama cannot" it could be brought to the publics attention that the 3 or 4 minor goofs on Obama's part can in no way amount to the many, many gaffs of the Clinton years, from Whitewater (and guy who supposedly committed suicide in an apartment that had been rented by Hillary). All of the crap Bill did, plus a lot of stuff we don't know about. The Republicans will tear her apart. They'll make the Jeremiah Wright thing look like peanuts. If the Democrats want to win this election, they cannot nominate Hillary. And thats not mentioning the lies!!!

Sharon
Illinois

(2008-04-16 10:36)

Two North Carolina and one Indiana congressmen endorsed Barack Obama today.

Reps. Mel Watt and David Price of North Carolina, and André Carson of Indiana announced their support for the Illinois senator.

"I am proud to support Barack Obama for President because he represents the kind of bold leadership and change that our country desperately needs. I know Senator Obama, like me, is committed to ending the war in Iraq, bringing down gas prices, and creating good jobs here in Indiana, and he has the judgment and courage to solve these problems," Congressman Carson said. "Senator Obama is a fighter for working families, and part of a new generation of leadership that will bring needed change for our country and I am proud to endorse him for president."

Also, three Pennsylvania newspapers , the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, the Bucks County Courier-Times and the Patriot News , and 25 Of 35 North Dakota Democratic State Legislators endorsed Obama today.

X

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Videos from the Campaign Trail (2008-04-16 13:15)

Michelle Obama on The Colbert Report.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama on HBO Real Sports.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

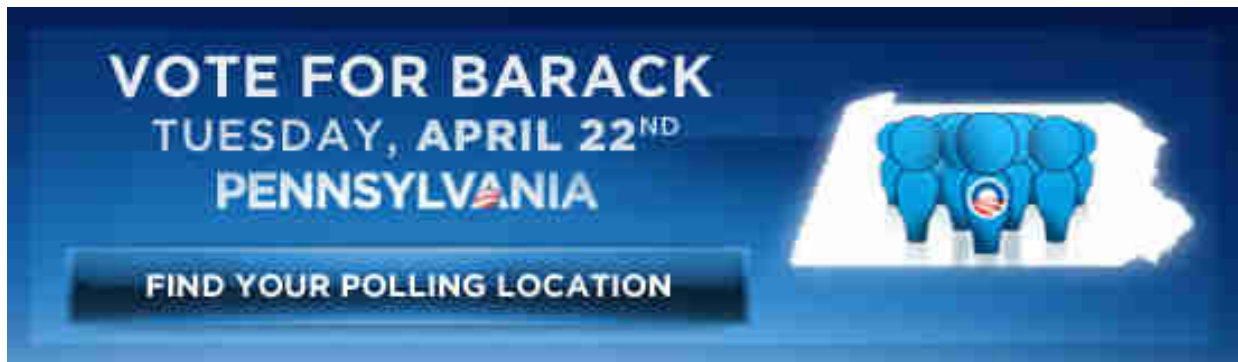

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Turnout Effort is Key (2008-04-17 07:43)

With the weekend approaching, the get out the vote effort will fire up to full throttle. The four days leading up to Tuesday are traditionally the best for reminding and motivating supporters about the election. Many people need a little push to go to the polls, and that group often decides elections in the end. Here is a video of Bonnie, a volunteer from Greene County, Pennsylvania.
[EMBED]

April 18 On Track for Change Rally
in Philadelphia

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-04-17 10:44:00)

USA needs urgently someone like Obama to take its main lead. The image of the country is now so affected worldwide that its consequences are being reflected in many areas such as economy, respect for US opinions and so on. The world is looking closely to the actions and attitudes of all main candidates, specially now after a disastrous management by the egocentric cheater Bush.

Certainly Hillary with her dirty tricks to pressure-impose her win is not going to help her in the future. Unfortunately most of US voters are mood motivated people that don't hav a clue what going on. They are just manipulated by the big shark US media that exactly knows how to implement their influences to these masses. It seems what most US people want is to choose the nastier, cheater person and they wrongly think that such person is more capable to lead the country. They are totally wrong.

USA needs urgently to have a positive image around the world and this image will only be achieved by someone honest, more human, and more conscientious about the issues that matter most.

Manny of you might say "we don't give a darn about the rest of the world thinks of us, we are just better. Period." This attitude is utterly wrong and if it continues, other economies will take over, leaving US on an eternal crisis.

Obama Video Roundup for Thursday (2008-04-17 21:38)

Barack Obama answers a question on his strategy for winning in November during a rally in Raleigh, North Carolina.

[EMBED]

Barack talks about last night's debate.

[EMBED]

Former Hillary Clinton supporter, Susan Petro, switched her support to Barack Obama and is volunteering in Pennsylvania.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-04-17 21:38)

Barack Obama answers a question on his strategy for winning in November during a rally in Raleigh, North Carolina.

Barack Obama speaks about John McCain (2008-04-18 09:12)

Sen. Barack Obama talks about John McCain during an appearance in Erie, Pennsylvania.

[EMBED]

He also made a surprise appearance on the Colbert Report last night.

[EMBED]

Remember that polls are very bad at predicting voter turnout. Click on the button below to make calls to Pennsylvania voters.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-04-18 09:22:00)

I'm assuming you've seen McCain Girls, yes? (<http://video.236.com/services/link/bcpid1272014315/bclid1125909605/bctid1499645468>)

((Nothing on Obama Girl!))

Former Clinton Labor Secretary Robert Reich Endorses Obama (2008-04-18 15:17)

From barackobama.com :

Former Clinton Labor Secretary Robert Reich Endorses Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Friday, April 18, 2008 at 10:12 AM

Robert Reich, who served as Secretary of Labor under President Clinton has endorsed Barack Obama for President. From Reich's blog...

✕ The formal act of endorsing a candidate is generally (and properly) limited to editorial pages and elected officials whose constituents might be influenced by their choice. The rest of us shouldn't assume anyone cares. My avoidance of offering a formal endorsement until now has also been affected by the pull of old friendships and my reluctance as a teacher and commentator to be openly partisan. But my conscience won't let me be silent any longer.

I believe that Barack Obama should be elected President of the United States.

Although Hillary Clinton has offered solid and sensible policy proposals, Obama's strike me as even more so. His plans for reforming Social Security and health care have a better chance of succeeding. His approaches to the housing crisis and the failures of our financial markets are sounder than hers. His ideas for improving our public schools and confronting the problems of poverty and inequality are more coherent and compelling. He has put forward the more enlightened foreign policy and the more thoughtful plan for controlling global warming.

He also presents the best chance of creating a new politics in which citizens become active participants rather than cynical spectators. He has energized many who had given up on politics. He has engaged young people to an extent not seen in decades. He has spoken about the most difficult problems our society faces, such as race, without spinning or simplifying. He has rightly identified the armies of lawyers and lobbyists that have commandeered our democracy, and pointed the way toward taking it back.

Finally, he offers the best hope of transcending the boundaries of class, race, and nationality that have divided us. His life history exemplifies this, as do his writings and his record of public service. For these same reasons, he offers the best possibility of restoring America's moral authority in the world.

Thank you Robert Reich!

Show your support for this movement by making a matching donation today. If you haven't done it yet, it's a great way to not only aid the campaign but make a real connection with another supporter across the country.

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sacramento for Obama Debate Watching Party (2008-04-18 16:06)

Here's a new video I uploaded to YouTube.

Sacramento for Obama watched the Apr. 16, 2008 debate at its new campaign office on 65th St. They will be hosting phone-banking parties to call Pennsylvania this weekend.

Sacramento Campaign Office Phone: 916.400.3252

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-04-18 16:06)

Here's a new video I uploaded to YouTube.

Sacramento for Obama watched the Apr. 16, 2008 debate at its new campaign office on 65th St. They will be hosting phone-banking parties to call Pennsylvania this weekend.

Sacramento Campaign Office Phone: 916.400.3252

[EMBED]

(2008-04-18 16:06)

Here's a new video I uploaded to YouTube.

Sacramento for Obama watched the Apr. 16, 2008 debate at its new campaign office on 65th St. They will be hosting phonebanking parties to call Pennsylvania this weekend.

Sacramento Campaign Office Phone: 916.400.3252

[EMBED]

(2008-04-18 16:06)

Here's a new video I uploaded to YouTube.

Sacramento for Obama watched the Apr. 16, 2008 debate at its new campaign office on 65th St. They will be hosting phonebanking parties to call Pennsylvania this weekend.

Sacramento Campaign Office Phone: 916.400.3252

[EMBED]

(2008-04-18 16:06)

Here's a new video I uploaded to YouTube.

Sacramento for Obama watched the Apr. 16, 2008 debate at its new campaign office on 65th St. They will be hosting phonebanking parties to call Pennsylvania this weekend.

Sacramento Campaign Office Phone: 916.400.3252

[EMBED]

(2008-04-18 16:06)

Here's a new video I uploaded to YouTube.

Sacramento for Obama watched the Apr. 16, 2008 debate at its new campaign office on 65th St. They will be hosting phonebanking parties to call Pennsylvania this weekend.

Sacramento Campaign Office Phone: 916.400.3252

[EMBED]

35,000 in Philadelphia (2008-04-18 19:31)

Wow, a huge crowd in Philadelphia this late in the campaign. A very good sign for Barack Obama and supporters.

35,000 in Philadelphia

by Caitlin Harvey

, Friday, April 18, 2008 at 06:56 PM

Over 35,000 people came out to hear Barack speak at the largest rally in the campaign's history in front of Independence Hall in Philadelphia tonight.

In his remarks, he challenged America to join him in declaring independence from the Washington game-playing and special interest-dominated politics that have blocked so much progress in recent years.

Barack said:

It was over two hundred years ago that a group of patriots gathered in this city to do something that no one in the world believed they could do. After years of a government that didn't listen to them, or speak for them, or represent their hopes and their dreams, a few humble colonists came to Philadelphia to declare their independence from the tyranny of the British throne.

The union they created has endured for two centuries not because we're perfect, but because we've always been perfectible – because each generation of Americans has been willing to stand up and sacrifice and do what's necessary to inch us closer to the ideals at the core of our founding promise – equality, and liberty, and opportunity for all who seek it. That's how we survived a civil war and two world wars; a Great Depression and great struggles for civil rights and women's rights and worker's rights, and now Philadelphia it's our turn.

...

The challenges we face are not just the fault of one man or one party. How many years – how many decades – have we been talking about solving our health care crisis? How many Presidents have promised to end our dependence on foreign oil? How many jobs have gone overseas in the 70s, and the 80s, and the 90s? And we still don't have a strategy for American workers to succeed in a global economy. We're still talking about it in 2008. And everyone here knows why.

Because in every election, politicians come to your cities and your towns, and they tell you what you want to hear, and they make big promises, and they lay out all these plans and policies. But then they go back to Washington when the campaign's over, and nothing changes. Lobbyists spend millions of dollars to get their way. Folks would rather score political points than solve real problems. Instead of fighting for health care or jobs, Washington ends up fighting over the latest distraction of the week. It happens year after year after year.

But not this year. Not this time. This year we can't afford the same old politics. This year we can declare our independence from this kind of politics. That's change we need right now. And that's the choice you'll face on Tuesday.

...

In four days, you get the chance to help bring about the change that we need right now. Here in the city and the state that gave birth to our democracy, we can declare our independence from the politics that has shut us out, and let us down, and told us to settle.

We can declare our independence from the politics that's put the oil companies, and the drug companies, and the insurance companies in charge of the decisions that impact our lives and our children's lives.

We can declare independence from the say-anything, do-anything politics that's all about how to win and not why we should; that politics that exploits our differences instead of speaking to our common concerns and our common destinies as Americans.

We can do all these things, but only if we declare our independence from the cynicism and the doubt that tells us that change can't happen.

Declare your independence from cynicism and doubt by volunteering to get out the vote in your community!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Michelle Obama: Reach out to Pennsylvania (2008-04-19 07:09)

Michelle Obama sent out this email today.

Dear Paul,

✕ Barack is a community organizer at heart, and he is running this race the way he worked on the South Side of Chicago – bringing folks to the table to work together, make their voices heard and create a better life for themselves.

Now, he needs you. He needs ordinary people investing in this campaign – not just with their dollars, but also with their energy. Because as Barack always says, when ordinary people come together they can do extraordinary things.

When you get used to getting on the phone with fellow supporters, reaching beyond your comfort zone, and being engaged in the political process, you won't just help win an election – you'll be prepared to help bring about the kind of change we need.

With just three days left before the Pennsylvania primary, staff and local volunteers are hard at work in the Keystone State, but they need the support of the movement that has already spread across the country.

In the next three days, Pennsylvania needs you.

And the best part is, you can make an impact in Pennsylvania by making calls from your home. Use our online calling system to get started now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/callPA>

Thanks to you, after more than forty contests in this race, we're fortunate to have won the most votes, delegates, and states.

By every measure, this isn't supposed to have happened – yet it's happening all over the country, and that's something to be proud of.

But we can't take anything for granted. Every vote and delegate at stake is crucial, and Barack will be the underdog every day until he's sitting in the Oval Office.

Making calls is one of the best things you can do to help Barack in Pennsylvania, and it's easy:

- When you log in, you'll get a list of 20 names that only you will receive.
- Click on a name and you'll be led through a simple script, question by question.
- If you want, you can now print your numbers and the script and enter your results back into the system later.

Pick up the phone right away to start making a difference in Pennsylvania . Make five calls now, and I'm sure you'll want to make five more:

<http://my.barackobama.com/callPA>

If we can all chip in to make the push in Pennsylvania in these next three days, we'll be more than ready to reach for the change this country needs when Barack is in the White House .

Thank you for all that you're doing,

Michelle

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Young Pennsylvania Voters attracted to Obama (2008-04-20 06:59)

Young Pennsylvania voters take a shine to Obama

Sun Apr 20, 2008 9:17am EDT

[-] Text [+]

 1 of 9

Full Size

powered by  Sphere

By Paul Eckert

PITTSBURGH (Reuters) - Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama is attracting record numbers of young voters – but will a demographic known for low turnout vote in enough numbers to defeat Hillary Clinton in the graying state of Pennsylvania?

Attracted by opposition to the Iraq war, antipathy to President George W. Bush or Clinton – and Obama's aura of "hope" – Pennsylvanians in the 18-29 age bracket are rallying, registering and switching parties like never before.

At the University of Pittsburgh, a "power rally" by Pitt Students for Obama got 2,000 students to register as Democrats in order to vote for the senator. The state does not allow independents to vote in primary contests.

"There were a lot of independents and Republicans who support Senator Obama who had to switch their registration for Tuesday's primary," said Sarah Posner, 21, the group's leader.

Pennsylvania is the next battleground for Clinton and Obama in their contest for the right to face Republican John McCain in the November election.

The Center for Information & Research on Civic Learning & Engagement, or CIRCLE, which has tracked youth voting since the U.S. voting age was lowered to 18 in 1972, says this year has seen the highest national registration rate in history among those under 30.

Youth turnout in some state primaries this year tripled or even quadrupled over the previous presidential election, said CIRCLE Director Peter Levine.

NO LOBBYISTS, BETTER U.S. IMAGE Continued...

View article on single page

Previous Page | 2 | 3 | 4 Next Page

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

On Track for Change in Pennsylvania (2008-04-20 08:33)

Nice speech by Barack Obama in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, one of the "whistle stops," on his train tour of the state.
[EMBED]

Whistle Stops in Pennsylvania Saturday, April 19 On Track for Change Tour in Wynnewood, Paoli, Downingtown, Lancaster, & Harrisburg

Sunday, April 20 On Track for Change Town Hall

in Reading

Sunday, April 20 On Track for Change Rally with Sen. Bob Casey and Caroline Kennedy in Scranton

Monday, April 21 On Track for Change Rally

in Pittsburgh

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

'Slow Roll' Stumping (2008-04-20 10:41)

Now this is a good example of campaigning on the move. Of course, it's not possible to stop in every community in the state. Barack speaks to folks while the campaign train slowly moves through towns in Pennsylvania. One person is apparently even mowing the lawn as Barack speaks to him.

[EMBED]

PENNSYLVANIA

MAKE CALLS

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-04-20 10:41)

Now this is a good example of campaigning on the move. Barack speaks to folks while the campaign train slowly moves through communities in Pennsylvania. One person is apparently even mowing the lawn

(2008-04-20 10:41)

Now this is a good example of campaigning on the move. Barack speaks to folks while the campaign train slowly moves through communities in Pennsylvania. One person is apparently even m

Barack Obama: Plan to Strengthen the Economy (2008-04-20 17:27)

From barackobama.com :

Plan to Strengthen the Economy

"I believe that America's free market has been the engine of America's great progress. It's created a prosperity that is the envy of the world. It's led to a standard of living unmatched in history. And it has provided great rewards to the innovators and risk-takers who have made America a beacon for science, and technology, and discovery...We are all in this together. From CEOs to shareholders, from financiers to factory workers, we all have a stake in each other's success because the more Americans prosper, the more America prospers."

— Barack Obama, New York, NY, September 17, 2007

At a Glance

- Provide Middle Class Americans Tax Relief

- Trade
- Technology, Innovation and Creating Jobs
- Labor
- Protect Homeownership and Crack Down on Mortgage Fraud
- Address Predatory Credit Card Practices
- Reform Bankruptcy Laws
- Work/Family Balance

Speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

- Present your ideas

Watch the Video

The Problem

Wages are Stagnant as Prices Rise: While wages remain flat, the costs of basic necessities are increasing. The cost of in-state college tuition has grown 35 percent over the past five years. Health care costs have risen four times faster than wages over the past six years. And the personal savings rate is now the lowest it's been since the Great Depression.

Tax Cuts for Wealthy Instead of Middle Class: The Bush tax cuts give those who earn over $1 million dollars a tax cut nearly 160 times greater than that received by middle-income Americans. At the same time, this administration has refused to tackle health care, education and housing in a manner that benefits the middle class.

Barack Obama's Plan

Provide Middle Class Americans Tax Relief

Obama will cut income taxes by $1,000 for working families to offset the payroll tax they pay.

- Provide a Tax Cut for Working Families: Obama will restore fairness to the tax code and provide 150 million workers the tax relief they need. Obama will create a new "Making Work Pay" tax credit of up to $500 per person, or $1,000 per working family. The "Making Work Pay" tax credit will completely eliminate income taxes for 10 million Americans.
- Simplify Tax Filings for Middle Class Americans: Obama will dramatically simplify tax filings so that millions of Americans will be able to do their taxes in less than five minutes. Obama will ensure that the IRS uses the information it already gets from banks and employers to give taxpayers the option of pre-filled tax forms to verify, sign and return. Experts estimate that the Obama proposal will save Americans up to 200 million total hours of work and aggravation and up to $2 billion in tax preparer fees.

Trade

Obama believes that trade with foreign nations should strengthen the American economy and create more American jobs. He will stand firm against agreements that undermine our economic security.

- Fight for Fair Trade: Obama will fight for a trade policy that opens up foreign markets to support good American jobs. He will use trade agreements to spread good labor and environmental standards around the world and stand firm against agreements like the Central American Free Trade Agreement that fail to live up to those important benchmarks. Obama will also pressure the World Trade Organization to enforce trade agreements and stop countries from continuing unfair government subsidies to foreign exporters and nontariff barriers on U.S. exports.
- Amend the North American Free Trade Agreement: Obama believes that NAFTA and its potential were oversold to the American people. Obama will work with the leaders of Canada and Mexico to fix NAFTA so that it works for American workers.
- Improve Transition Assistance: To help all workers adapt to a rapidly changing economy, Obama would update the existing system of Trade Adjustment Assistance by extending it to service industries, creating flexible education accounts to help workers retrain, and providing retraining assistance for workers in sectors of the economy vulnerable to dislocation before they lose their jobs.

Technology, Innovation and Creating Jobs

Obama will encourage the deployment of the most modern communications infrastructure to reduce the costs of health care, help solve our energy crisis, create new jobs, and fuel our economic growth.

- Support Job Creation: Barack Obama believes we need to double federal funding for basic research and make the research and development tax credit permanent to help create high-paying, secure jobs. Obama will also make long-term investments in education, training, and workforce development so that Americans can leverage our strengths - our ingenuity and entrepreneurialism - to create new high-wage jobs and prosper in a world economy.
- Invest in U.S. Manufacturing: The Obama comprehensive energy independence and climate change plan will invest in America's highly-skilled manufacturing workforce and manufacturing centers to ensure that American workers have the skills and tools they need to pioneer the first wave of green technologies that will be in high demand throughout the world. Obama will also provide assistance to the domestic auto industry to ensure that new fuel-efficient vehicles are built by American workers.
- Create New Job Training Programs for Clean Technologies: The Obama plan will increase funding for federal workforce training programs and direct these programs to incorporate green technologies training, such as advanced manufacturing and weatherization training, into their efforts to help Americans find and retain stable, high-paying jobs. Obama will also create an energy-focused youth jobs program to invest in disconnected and disadvantaged youth.
- Boost the Renewable Energy Sector and Create New Jobs: The Obama plan will create new federal policies, and expand existing ones, that have been proven to create new American jobs. Obama will create a federal Renewable Portfolio Standard (RPS) that will require 25 percent of American electricity be derived from renewable sources by 2025, which has the potential to create hundreds of thousands of new jobs on its own. Obama will also extend the Production Tax Credit, a credit used successfully by American farmers and investors to increase renewable energy production and create new local jobs.
- Deploy Next-Generation Broadband: Obama believes we can get broadband to every community in America through a combination of reform of the Universal Service Fund, better use of the nation's wireless spectrum, promotion of next-generation facilities, technologies and applications, and new tax and loan incentives.
- Protect the Openness of the Internet: Obama supports the basic principle that network providers should not be allowed to charge fees to privilege the content or applications of some web sites and Internet applications over others. This principle will ensure that the new competitors, especially small or nonprofit speakers, have the same opportunity as big companies to innovate and reach large audiences.

- Invest in Rural Areas: Obama will invest in rural small businesses and fight to expand high-speed Internet access. He will improve rural schools and attract more doctors to rural areas.

Labor

Obama will strengthen the ability of workers to organize unions. He will fight for passage of the Employee Free Choice Act. Obama will ensure that his labor appointees support workers' rights and will work to ban the permanent replacement of striking workers. Obama will also increase the minimum wage and index it to inflation to ensure it rises every year.

- Ensure Freedom to Unionize: Obama believes that workers should have the freedom to choose whether to join a union without harassment or intimidation from their employers. Obama cosponsored and is strong advocate for the Employee Free Choice Act, a bipartisan effort to assure that workers can exercise their right to organize. He will continue to fight for EFCA's passage and sign it into law.
- Fight Attacks on Workers' Right to Organize: Obama has fought the Bush National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) efforts to strip workers of their right to organize. He is a cosponsor of legislation to overturn the NLRB's "Kentucky River" decisions classifying hundreds of thousands of nurses, construction, and professional workers as "supervisors" who are not protected by federal labor laws.
- Protect Striking Workers: Obama supports the right of workers to bargain collectively and strike if necessary. He will work to ban the permanent replacement of striking workers, so workers can stand up for themselves without worrying about losing their livelihoods.
- Raise the Minimum Wage: Barack Obama will raise the minimum wage, index it to inflation and increase the Earned Income Tax Credit to make sure that full-time workers earn a living wage that allows them to raise their families and pay for basic needs.

Protect Homeownership and Crack Down on Mortgage Fraud

Obama will crack down on fraudulent brokers and lenders. He will also make sure homebuyers have honest and complete information about their mortgage options, and he will give a tax credit to all middle-class homeowners.

- Create a Universal Mortgage Credit: Obama will create a 10 percent universal mortgage credit to provide homeowners who do not itemize tax relief. This credit will provide an average of $500 to 10 million homeowners, the majority of whom earn less than $50,000 per year.
- Ensure More Accountability in the Subprime Mortgage Industry: Obama has been closely monitoring the subprime mortgage situation for years, and introduced comprehensive legislation over a year ago to fight mortgage fraud and protect consumers against abusive lending practices. Obama's STOP FRAUD Act provides the first federal definition of mortgage fraud, increases funding for federal and state law enforcement programs, creates new criminal penalties for mortgage professionals found guilty of fraud, and requires industry insiders to report suspicious activity.
- Mandate Accurate Loan Disclosure: Obama will create a Homeowner Obligation Made Explicit (HOME) score, which will provide potential borrowers with a simplified, standardized borrower metric (similar to APR) for home mortgages. The HOME score will allow individuals to easily compare various mortgage products and understand the full cost of the loan.
- Create Fund to Help Homeowners Avoid Foreclosures: Obama will create a fund to help people refinance their mortgages and provide comprehensive supports to innocent homeowners. The fund will be partially paid for by Obama's increased penalties on lenders who act irresponsibly and commit fraud.

- Close Bankruptcy Loophole for Mortgage Companies: Obama will work to eliminate the provision that prevents bankruptcy courts from modifying an individual's mortgage payments. Obama believes that the subprime mortgage industry, which has engaged in dangerous and sometimes unscrupulous business practices, should not be shielded by outdated federal law.

Address Predatory Credit Card Practices

Obama will establish a five-star rating system so that every consumer knows the risk involved in every credit card. He also will establish a Credit Card Bill of Rights to stop credit card companies from exploiting consumers with unfair practices.

- Create a Credit Card Rating System to Improve Disclosure: Obama will create a credit card rating system, modeled on five-star systems used for other consumer products, to provide consumers an easily identifiable ranking of credit cards, based on the card's features. Credit card companies will be required to display the rating on all application and contract materials, enabling consumers to quickly understand all of the major provisions of a credit card without having to rely exclusively on fine print in lengthy documents.
- Establish a Credit Card Bill of Rights to Protect Consumers: Obama will create a Credit Card Bill of Rights to protect consumers. The Obama plan will:
 - Ban Unilateral Changes
 - Apply Interest Rate Increases Only to Future Debt
 - Prohibit Interest on Fees
 - Prohibit "Universal Defaults"
 - Require Prompt and Fair Crediting of Cardholder Payments

Reform Bankruptcy Laws

Obama will reform our bankruptcy laws to protect working people, ban executive bonuses for bankrupt companies, and require disclosure of all pension investments.

- Cap Outlandish Interest Rates on Payday Loans and Improve Disclosure: Obama supports extending a 36 percent interest cap to all Americans. Obama will require lenders to provide clear and simplified information about loan fees, payments and penalties, which is why he'll require lenders to provide this information during the application process.
- Encourage Responsible Lending Institutions to Make Small Consumer Loans: Obama will encourage banks, credit unions and Community Development Financial Institutions to provide affordable short-term and small-dollar loans and to drive unscrupulous lenders out of business.
- Reform Bankruptcy Laws to Protect Families Facing a Medical Crisis: Obama will create an exemption in bankruptcy law for individuals who can prove they filed for bankruptcy because of medical expenses. This exemption will create a process that forgives the debt and lets the individuals get back on their feet.

Work/Family Balance

Obama will double funding for after-school programs, expand the Family Medical Leave Act, provide low-income families with a refundable tax credit to help with their child-care expenses, and encourage flexible work schedules.

- Expand the Family and Medical Leave Act: The FMLA covers only certain employees of employers with 50 or more employees. Obama will expand it to cover businesses with 25 or more employees. He will expand the FMLA to cover more purposes as well, including allowing workers to take leave for elder care needs; allowing parents up to 24 hours of leave each year to participate in their children's academic activities; and expanding FMLA to cover leave for employees to address domestic violence.

- Encourage States to Adopt Paid Leave: As president, Obama will initiate a strategy to encourage all 50 states to adopt paid-leave systems. Obama will provide a $1.5 billion fund to assist states with start-up costs and to help states offset the costs for employees and employers.
- Expand High-Quality Afterschool Opportunities: Obama will double funding for the main federal support for afterschool programs, the 21st Century Learning Centers program, to serve a million more children. Obama will include measures to maximize performance and effectiveness across grantees nationwide.
- Expand the Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit: The Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit provides too little relief to families that struggle to afford child care expenses. Obama will reform the Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit by making it refundable and allowing low-income families to receive up to a 50 percent credit for their child care expenses.
- Protect Against Caregiver Discrimination: Workers with family obligations often are discriminated against in the workplace. Obama will enforce the recently-enacted Equal Employment Opportunity Commission guidelines on caregiver discrimination.
- Expand Flexible Work Arrangements: Obama will create a program to inform businesses about the benefits of flexible work schedules; help businesses create flexible work opportunities; and increase federal incentives for telecommuting. Obama will also make the federal government a model employer in terms of adopting flexible work schedules and permitting employees to request flexible arrangements.

Barack Obama's Record

- Housing: In the U.S. Senate, Obama introduced the STOP FRAUD Act to increase penalties for mortgage fraud and provide more protections for low-income homebuyers, well before the current subprime crisis began.
- Predatory Lending: In the Illinois State Senate, Obama called attention to predatory lending issues. Obama sponsored legislation to combat predatory payday loans, and he also was credited with lobbying the state to more closely regulate some of the most egregious predatory lending practices.
- American Jobs: Barack Obama introduced the Patriot Employer Act of 2007 to provide a tax credit to companies that maintain or increase the number of full-time workers in America relative to those outside the US; maintain their corporate headquarters in America; pay decent wages; prepare workers for retirement; provide health insurance; and support employees who serve in the military.

For More Information about Barack's Plan

- ☒ Read the plan
- ☒ Read the plan for small businesses
- ☒ Read the plan to protect homeownership and crack down on mortgage fraud

Read the Speech

- ☒
- ☒
- ☒
- ☒
- ☒

[EMBED]

X

X <http://link.brightcove.com/services/link/bcpid1351322015http://www.brightcove.com-/channel.jsp?channel=353512430>

[EMBED]

Login to my.BarackObama.com

Sign up for my.BarackObama.com

X

TEXT HOPE TO 62262

X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michael Moore endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-21 07:41)

Michael Moore has endorsed Barack Obama, a move that could help the Illinois senator with some undecided progressives especially those who had supported John Edwards.

Here's the text of Moore's endorsement.

My Vote's for Obama (if I could vote) ...by Michael Moore April 21st, 2008

Friends,

I don't get to vote for President this primary season. I live in Michigan. The party leaders (both here and in D.C.) couldn't get their act together, and thus our votes will not be counted.

So, if you live in Pennsylvania, can you do me a favor? Will you please cast my vote — and yours — on Tuesday for Senator Barack Obama?

I haven't spoken publicly 'til now as to who I would vote for, primarily for two reasons: 1) Who cares?; and 2) I (and most people I know) don't give a rat's ass whose name is on the ballot in November, as long as there's a picture of JFK and FDR riding a donkey at the top of the ballot, and the word "Democratic" next to the candidate's name.

Seriously, I know so many people who don't care if the name under the Big "D" is Dancer, Prancer, Clinton or Blitzen. It can be Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck, Barry Obama or the Dalai Lama.

Well, that sounded good last year, but over the past two months, the actions and words of Hillary Clinton have gone from being merely disappointing to downright disgusting. I guess the debate last week was the final straw. I've watched Senator Clinton and her husband play this game of appealing to the worst side of white people, but last Wednesday, when she hurled the name "Farrakhan" out of nowhere, well that's when the silly season came to an early end for me. She said the "F" word to scare white people, pure and simple. Of course, Obama has no connection to Farrakhan. But, according to Senator Clinton, Obama's pastor does — AND the "church bulletin" once included a Los Angeles Times op-ed from some guy with Hamas! No, not the church bulletin!

This sleazy attempt to smear Obama was brilliantly explained the following night by Stephen Colbert. He pointed out that if Obama is supported by Ted Kennedy, who is Catholic, and the Catholic Church is led by a Pope who was in the Hitler Youth, that can mean only one thing: OBAMA LOVES HITLER!

Yes, Senator Clinton, that's how you sounded. Like you were nuts. Like you were a bigot stoking the fires of stupidity. How sad that I would ever have to write those words about you. You have devoted your life to good causes and good deeds. And now to throw it all away for an office you can't win unless you smear the black man so much that the superdelegates cry "Uncle (Tom)" and give it all to you.

But that can't happen. You cast your die when you voted to start this bloody war. When you did that you were like Moses who lost it for a moment and, because of that, was prohibited from entering the Promised Land.

How sad for a country that wanted to see the first woman elected to the White House. That day will come — but it won't be you. We'll have to wait for the current Democratic governor of Kansas to run in 2016 (you read it here first!).

There are those who say Obama isn't ready, or he's voted wrong on this or that. But that's looking at the trees and not the forest. What we are witnessing is not just a candidate but a profound, massive public movement for change. My endorsement is more for Obama The Movement than it is for Obama the candidate.

That is not to take anything away from this exceptional man. But what's going on is bigger than him at this point, and that's a good thing for the country. Because, when he wins in November, that Obama Movement is going to have to stay alert and active. Corporate America is not going to give up their hold on our government just because we say so. President Obama is going to need a nation of millions to stand behind him.

I know some of you will say, 'Mike, what have the Democrats done to deserve our vote?' That's a damn good question. In November of '06, the country loudly sent a message that we wanted the war to end. Yet the Democrats have done nothing. So why should we be so eager to line up happily behind them?

I'll tell you why. Because I can't stand one more friggin' minute of this administration and the permanent, irreversible damage it has done to our people and to this world. I'm almost at the point where I don't care if the Democrats don't have a backbone or a kneebone or a thought in their dizzy little heads. Just as long as their name ain't "Bush" and the word "Republican" is not beside theirs on the ballot, then that's good enough for me.

I, like the majority of Americans, have been pummeled senseless for 8 long years. That's why I will join millions of citizens and stagger into the voting booth come November, like a boxer in the 12th round, all bloodied and bruised with one eye swollen shut, looking for the only thing that matters — that big "D" on the ballot.

Don't get me wrong. I lost my rose-colored glasses a long time ago.

It's foolish to see the Democrats as anything but a nicer version of a party that exists to do the bidding of the corporate elite in this country. Any endorsement of a Democrat must be done with this acknowledgement and a hope that one day we will have a party that'll represent the people first, and laws that allow that party an equal voice.

Finally, I want to say a word about the basic decency I have seen in Mr. Obama. Mrs. Clinton continues to throw the Rev. Wright up in his face as part of her mission to keep stoking the fears of White America. Every time she does this I shout at the TV, "Say it, Obama! Say that when she and her husband were having marital difficulties regarding Monica Lewinsky, who did she and Bill bring to the White House for 'spiritual counseling?' THE REVEREND JEREMIAH WRIGHT!"

But no, Obama won't throw that at her. It wouldn't be right. It wouldn't be decent. She's been through enough hurt. And so he remains silent and takes the mud she throws in his face.

That's why the crowds who come to see him are so large. That's why he'll take us down a more decent path. That's why I would vote for him if Michigan were allowed to have an election.

But the question I keep hearing is... 'can he win? Can he win in November?' In the distance we hear the siren of the death train called the Straight Talk Express. We know it's possible to hear the words "President McCain" on January 20th. We know there are still many Americans who will never vote for a black man. Hillary knows it, too. She's counting on it.

Pennsylvania, the state that gave birth to this great country, has a chance to set things right. It has not had a moment to shine like this since 1787 when our Constitution was written there. In that Constitution, they wrote that a black man or woman was only "three fifths" human. On Tuesday, the good people of Pennsylvania have a chance for redemption.

Yours,
Michael Moore
MichaelMoore.com
MMFlint@aol.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Financial Times backs Barack Obama (2008-04-21 07:55)

The international business daily, the Financial Times, London's version of the Wall Street Journal, has endorsed Barack Obama.

Democrats must choose Obama

Barack Obama goes into Tuesday's Pennsylvania primary as strong favourite, whatever happens, to secure the Democratic presidential nomination. Yet the vote could still go either way.

This is a sign of how close this race has been and how deeply it has divided the party.

Mr Obama and Hillary Clinton are both strong candidates and each appeals powerfully to distinct segments of Democratic support. This has heightened the risk of bitter division.

After Tuesday's vote, the Democrats should move quickly to affirm Mr Obama's nomination. That is not just because his lead in elected delegates is already unassailable and the contest should be brought to a swift conclusion. It is also because he is, in fact, the better candidate.

The contenders' differences on policy look small and in reality are even smaller. Their disagreement on healthcare mandates, for instance, frequently emphasised by Mrs Clinton, is of little practical significance. A mandate to obtain insurance, as proposed by Mrs Clinton, does not achieve universal coverage unless enforced with punitive sanctions, which she does not advocate.

Forum: FT backs Obama

Have your say: Should Hillary Clinton stand aside?

Both candidates, in effect, are proposing near-universal coverage. The virtues of their schemes (much improved access, no denial of insurance to those with pre-existing conditions) as well as the defects (weak control of costs) are much the same.

In almost every area of policy, whether their thinking is good (as with improved support for displaced workers), bad (their opposition to liberal trade) or too vague to say (Iraq), there is little to choose between them.

As voters understood all along, this has therefore been a contest of character, temperament and (sadly but inevitably) identity. Mr Obama's most loyal supporters, once they were persuaded that he might actually succeed, have been black. Mrs Clinton's, certain at the start she would win, are women.

Mr Obama has fought a brilliant campaign, out-organising his opponent, raising more money, and convincing undecided Democrats as well as the country at large that he was more likeable, more straightforward and more worthy of trust.

On form, he is a spell-binding orator and holds arena-sized audiences in thrall. He is given to airy exhortations, it is true, but genuinely seeks consensus and has cross-party appeal.

Mrs Clinton's campaign, in contrast, has been a shambles. She and her team expected to have it all sewn up long ago; they made no plans for a long struggle, ran short of money and had to reorganise on the run.

Her speaking style is pedestrian, when it is not actually grating. Those who dislike her tend to do so with a passion: her disapproval ratings started high and after months of campaigning are climbing still. It is a tribute to her tenacity and to the loyalty she commands in the party that her fate was not sealed weeks ago.

How much the way that a campaign is run tells you about a candidate's fitness to be president is debatable – but it does tell you something, especially if the candidate with the misfiring strategy is running on a claim of management expertise.

In fact, the campaigns have underlined the contenders' respective strengths and weaknesses.

Mr Obama's consistent and relaxed demeanour attested to his coolness (in both senses, his swooning young admirers would add); it seemed to affirm his authenticity. In contrast, Mrs Clinton's hyperactive advisers dressed her in a new personality each day, sometimes several in the course of an interview. They wheeled out Bill Clinton, to remind people of the 1990s, then reeled him back, to help them forget.

Too many course corrections, not enough course.

Mr Obama has had some travails – over his association with Jeremiah Wright, the ranting demagogue pastor, and most recently over condescending remarks about small-town Democratic politics.

In the first case, he responded with a masterly speech about race that may even have improved his standing. In the second, he was evasive and unconvincing – yet the public seems to have given him the benefit of the doubt.

The US has the urge to be inspired a little. Electing the country's first woman president ought to be very inspiring. But not this woman – with her dynastic baggage and knack for antagonising the undecided – running against this man.

The Democratic party has waited an awfully long time for a politician like Barack Obama. Enough already.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Saleem on volunteering for Barack Obama (2008-04-21 10:34)

Listen to Saleem speak of the satisfaction he has experienced volunteering for Barack Obama .
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-04-21 10:34)

Listen to Saleem speak of the satisfaction he has experienced volunteering for Barack Obama.

Jimmy Carter: World hearts Barack Obama (2008-04-21 13:52)

Former President Jimmy Carter again came very close to endorsing Sen. Barack Obama without doing so officially.

Jimmy Carter: Support for Obama strong worldwide

JERUSALEM: Globetrotting former U.S. President Jimmy Carter says he's found strong support for Barack Obama during his recent trips to Africa and Asia.

Carter has stopped short of formally endorsing Obama as the Democratic Party's presidential nominee and would not be drawn on the issue in a meeting with reporters Monday.

However, Carter noted that his children, grandchildren and their spouses back the Illinois senator who is competing with New York Sen. Hillary Clinton for the nomination.

Carter says Obama was the favorite in his travels to Ghana, Nigeria and Nepal. He says "world opinion is strongly supportive of Obama, that's all we hear."

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Response to Clinton Fear Ad (2008-04-21 15:02)

The Obama campaign released a new television ad today to counter Hillary Clinton's fear ad. Here is what campaign spokesperson Bill Burton had to say about the Clinton attack.

When Senator Clinton voted with President Bush to authorize the war in Iraq, she made a tragically bad decision that diverted our military from the terrorists who attacked us, and allowed Osama bin Laden to escape and regenerate his terrorist network. It's ironic that she would borrow the President's tactics in her own campaign and invoke bin Laden to score political points. We already have a President who plays the politics of fear, and we don't need another.

And here is the response ad "He has what it takes."

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama in 30 Seconds (2008-04-21 18:30)

MoveOn.org has posted the videos competing in the Obama in 30 Seconds contest. You can browse through the videos at this page, and vote for your favorites:

<http://www.obamain30seconds.org/> Here's an example:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Eric V. Kirk (2008-04-22 22:29:00)
This one's my favorite.

Barack Obama on Earth Day (2008-04-22 08:02)

Read Sen. Barack Obama's statement for Earth Day. Also, read his plan on energy and the environment.

"As America and the world observe Earth Day, the call to save our planet has never been more urgent. In recent years, we've seen the harm that more severe weather events can do. We've seen it in the droughts that have swept the South, the hurricanes that threaten our shores with increasing ferocity, and the rising sea levels that could one day submerge our cities. This is a challenge unlike any the world has ever faced, and America must lead the world to meet it.

"But Earth Day is not just an urgent call to action; it is a reminder that what is now a global effort began as a grassroots movement for change. Nearly forty years ago, our nation was at war, recession loomed on the horizon, and Americans were losing faith in their own government. But in the face of division and despair, young Americans came together around a common purpose. In high schools, and on college campuses, in small towns and big cities, they rose up to demand that Washington help solve our growing environmental crisis and establish Earth Day.

"While our planet is in greater peril now than it was forty years ago, we are now better prepared to protect it. From solar panels to windmills to biofuels, innovators in America and around the world are inventing our way to a clean energy future. But solving our climate crisis requires more than technological breakthroughs. Our leaders in Washington have to put what's right for our planet ahead of what's good for their friends in the energy industry. Executives in the energy industry have to understand that there's nothing inconsistent about acting in a way that's both responsible and profitable. And each of us has to do more in our own lives to use energy more efficiently.

"We have a choice in this country. We can continue with an energy policy that makes no sense, and serves the interests of the big oil and gas companies at great cost to our planet. Or we can choose a different future – a future where America is energy independent, and no longer funding both sides in the war on terror; a future where we're leading rather than undermining the global effort to combat climate change; and investing in green energy technology, and creating the jobs of the future. That is the future I believe in, and that is the America I'm running for President to lead.

"On this Earth Day, let's recapture in Washington, on Wall Street, and all across this country the spirit of unity and urgency that led those students to found Earth Day all those years ago. And if we can do that, then I truly believe we won't just be freeing ourselves from the tyranny of oil, or saving this planet for our children, we'll be fulfilling our obligation to be good stewards of God's creation."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Al-Qaeda in the House (2008-04-22 10:44)

With Pennsylvanians voting now for their Democratic nominee, I was struck by al-Qaeda no. 2 Ayman al-Zawahiri's second taped message this month, and this one just the day before the primary. In fact, it was Tuesday in Pakistan and Afghanistan when this was posted.

I was reminded of the theory that Osama bin-Ladin's release of a message just before the last presidential election was a calculated al-Qaeda effort to help George W. Bush get elected. The logic is that al-Qaeda's recruiting, fundraising and propaganda efforts are strengthened by a belligerent U.S. policy in the Muslim world. Now this was just a theory and no solid evidence that I know of backs it up.

However, the timing of these two recent tapes is uncanny.

Again, the logic here would be that al-Qaeda would support '100-year war' John McCain for the presidency. So we can then ask, why would they release two tapes just weeks apart, one of them the day before the Democratic primary? It may be that they see Barack Obama as more likely to beat McCain than Hillary Clinton.

Hillary would probably benefit more from fear tactics than Barack Obama. In fact, her most recent television ad is a fear ad that actually flashes an image of Osama bin-Ladin.

Now again, there is no solid evidence for these musings, but you certainly have to wonder.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama in Pittsburgh last night (2008-04-22 13:42)

Sen. Barack Obama gave another great talk in Pittsburgh last night. He was joined by Michelle, Sen. Bob Casey and Teresa Heinz-Kerry.

[EMBED]

VOTE FOR BARACK
TUESDAY, APRIL 22ND
PENNSYLVANIA

FIND YOUR POLLING LOCATION

WE NEED YOU COME INTO AN OFFICE
Today

HELP GET OUT
THE VOTE

JOIN US

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

One of the Outcomes of Tonight’s Results (2008-04-22 19:44)

Here’s an interesting video from MSNBC’s Chuck Todd showing why, despite Hillary Clinton’s victory tonight, it is now nearly impossible for Clinton to win the pledged delegate race.

Her only argument now is that she is able to win the "big states." However, she really can not suggest that Barack can not win these states in the general election.

Only a few of these big states are considered "swing" states that will not go to the nominated Democrat. Her main advantage is coming from traditional Democrats.

Now obviously these traditional Democrats are more dependable votes for the Democratic nominee than a lot of the independent and young voters attracted to Barack Obama. So I think there is a probability of a greater net loss of votes for the Democratic nominee if Obama is not the candidate.

[EMBED]

The Pennsylvania supporters of Obama did a great job in narrowing Hillary’s lead and making this a close race.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Impact on Superdelegates (2008-04-22 20:25)

It will be interesting to see how tonight’s results will influence the remaining uncommitted superdelegates.

A lot rides on the final pledged delegate count as the whole primary election is based on the delegate count. Traditionally the pledged delegates decide the nominee.

Democrats are risking a lot beyond just this presidential election if the superdelegates go against the pledged delegate count.

Right now it looks like Clinton might net about 10-16 delegates from Pennsylvania, so again she is still too far behind to catch up barring some new revelation that undermines the Obama campaign.

I get the feeling that a lot of superdelegates are still vetting Obama wondering if has anything lurking back there in the background. After 14 months of campaigning, one has to wonder if they’ll dig up anything before the last contest in June. At some point they will have to figure out whether they are going to trust Barack or not.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack: What this means (2008-04-22 21:17)

Sen. Barack Obama sent out this message tonight.

Friend –

Votes are still being counted in Pennsylvania, but one thing is already clear.

In a state where we trailed by more than 25 points just a couple weeks ago, you helped close the gap to a slimmer margin than most thought possible.

Thanks to your support, with just 9 contests remaining, we've won more delegates, more votes, and twice as many contests.

We hold a commanding position, but there are two crucial contests coming up – voters will head to the polls in North Carolina and Indiana in exactly two weeks. And we're already building our organization in the other remaining states.

But it's clear the attacks are going to continue, and we're going to continue fighting a two-front battle against John McCain and Hillary Clinton.

I need your support right now. Please make a donation of $25:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/whatthismeans>

Thank you for all that you're doing to change our country.

Barack

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

New Obama Endorsements (2008-04-23 06:54)

There are some major endorsements to report. Yesterday, 29 North Carolina legislators announced their support of Sen. Barack Obama .

North Carolina and Indiana hold their contests two weeks from now.

Oklahoma Gov. Brad Henry, a superdelegate, announced his endorsement of Obama today.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - Governor Brad Henry is endorsing Illinois Senator Barack Obama for the Democratic presidential nomination.

In a statement released by the Obama press office in Chicago, Henry called Obama an inspirational leader who can unite the country. He says the senator will be able to move beyond the divisiveness and partisanship that has characterized Washington politics.

The endorsement gives Obama the official support of 3 of Oklahoma's 10 superdelegates, while Hillary Rodham Clinton has the backing of 1 superdelegate. The rest are uncommitted.

Henry – a moderate Democrat in a Republican-trending state – says his own efforts to build a consensus across party lines is why he's so enthusiastic about Obama's candidacy.

Democrats still have a majority of registered voters in Oklahoma, but the state has voted Republican in every presidential election since 1964.

North Carolina legislators endorsing Obama include:

Tony Rand, Senate Majority Leader, Cumberland
Doug Berger, State Senator, Franklin
Charlie Dannelly, State Senator, Mecklenburg
Katie Dorsett, State Senator, Guilford
Anthony Foriest, State Senator, Alamance
Linda Garrou, State Senator, Forsyth
Malcolm Graham, State Senator, Mecklenburg
Clark Jenkins, State Senator, Edgecombe
Edward Jones, State Senator, Halifax, Perquimans
Eleanor Kinnaird, State Senator, Orange
Vernon Malone, State Senator, Wake
Floyd McKissick, State Senator, Durham
Dan Blue, State Representative, Wake
Alma Adams, State Representative, Guilford
Angela Bryant, State Representative, Nash
Jean Farmer-Butterfield, State Representative, Wilson
Becky Carney, State Representative, Mecklenburg
Bill Faison, State Representative, Orange
Richard Glazier, State Representative, Cumberland
Larry Hall, State Representative, Durham
Ty Harrell, State Representative, Wake
Pricey Harrison, State Representative, Guilford
Sandra Hughes, State Representative, New Hanover
Marvin Lucas, State Representative, Cumberland
Grier Martin, State Representative, Wake
Annie Mobley, State Representative, Bertie
Henry Michaux, Jr., State Representative, Durham
Edith Warren, State Representative, Pitt
Michael Wray, State Representative, Warren

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Available Superdelegates (2008-04-23 07:26)

Here is a list of superdelegates who have not endorsed a candidate yet taken from Democratic Convention Watch today. Some have links to contact information.

Certain superdelegates can be found at social networking sites like LinkedIn and Facebook.

Superdelegates highlighted in red are from Michigan or Florida and do not count toward the nomination at this time.

Superdelegates highlighted in green have committed to voting for the delegate leader at the end of the primaries.

Representatives

Bud Cramer (AL)
Harry Mitchell (AZ)
Gabrielle Giffords (AZ)

Nancy Pelosi (CA) Jerry McNerney (CA)
Pete Stark (CA)
Mike Honda (CA)
Sam Farr (CA)
Jim Costa (CA)
Lois Capps (CA)
Howard Berman (CA)
Henry Waxman (CA)
Bob Filner (CA)
Susan Davis (CA)
Mark Udall (CO)
John Salazar (CO)
Joe Courtney (CT)

Allen Boyd (FL)
Tim Mahoney (FL)
Ron Klein (FL) Jim Marshall (GA)
Mazie Hirono (HI)
Rahm Emanuel (IL)
Peter Visclosky (IN)
Joe Donnelly (IN)
Brad Ellsworth (IN)
Baron Hill (IN)

Rep. Bruce Braley (IA)
Nancy Boyda (KS)
Dennis Moore (KS)
Ben Chandler (KY)
William Jefferson (LA)

Charlie Melancon (LA)
Tom Allen (ME)

Rep. Michael Michaud (ME)

John Sarbanes (MD)
Steny Hoyer (MD)
Chris Van Hollen (MD)
John Olver (MA)
Niki Tsongas (MA)
John Tierney (MA)
Edward Markey (MA)
Carolyn Cheeks Kilpatrick (MI)

Rep. Bart Stupak

(MI)

Collin Peterson (MN)

Gene Taylor (MS)
Ike Skelton (MO)
Rep. Rush Holt (NJ)

Rep. Bob Etheridge
(NC)

Rep. Mike McIntyre
(NC)

Rep. Brad Miller
(NC)

Rep. Heath Shuler
(NC)

Rep. Tom Udall (NM)
Charlie Wilson (OH)
Marcia Kaptur (OH)

Rep. Zack Space (OH)
Rep. Dennis Kucinich (OH)
Rep. Dan Boren (OK)
David Wu (OR)
Peter DeFazio (OR)
Bob Brady (PA)
Jason Altmire (PA)
Chris Carney (PA)
Tim Holden (PA)
Rep. Mike Doyle (PA)
John Spratt (SC)

Rep. Jim Clyburn (SC)

Lincoln Davis (TN)

Bart Gordon (TN)

John Tanner (TN)

Nick Lampson (TX)

Ciro Rodriguez (TX)

Jim Matheson (UT)

Rick Larsen (WA)

Jim McDermott (WA)

Alan Mollohan (WV)

Madeleine Bordallo (Guam)

Presidents & VPs

Jimmy Carter (GA)

Al Gore (TN)

Senators

Ken Salazar (CO)

Joe Biden (DE)

Tom Carper (DE)

Daniel Akaka (HI)

Tom Harkin (IA)

Mary Landrieu (LA)

Ben Cardin (MD)

Carl Levin (MI) Max Baucus (MT)

Jon Tester (MT)

Harry Reid (NV)

Jeff Bingaman (NM)

Frank Lautenberg (NJ)

Sherrod Brown (OH)

Ron Wyden (OR)

Jack Reed (RI)

Jim Webb (VA)

Robert Byrd (WV)

Herb Kohl (WI)

Fmr. Senator George Mitchell (NY)

Governors

Bill Ritter (CO)

Steve Beshear (KY)

Brian Schweitzer (MT)
John Lynch (NH)
Mike Easley (NC)
Phil Bredeson (TN)
Joe Manchin (WV)

Add-Ons

Alex Sink (FL) #
Steve Geller (FL) #
Dan Gelber (FL) # Jay Nixon (MO) #
Vicky Harwell (TN) #
Jerry Lee (TN) #
67 Unnamed Add-Ons, including 2 from Michigan

DNC Members

Joe Turnham (AL)
Nancy Worley (AL)

Blake Johnson (AK)
Cindy Spanyers (AK)
Don Bivens (AZ)
Vacant (AZ)
Lottie Shackelford (AR)
Art Torres (CA)
Edward Espinoza
(CA)
Inola Henry
(CA)
Hon. Carole Migden
(CA)
Bob Mulholland
(CA)
Christine Pelosi
(CA)
Robert Rankin
(CA)
Keith Umemoto
(CA)
Steve Ybarra
(CA)
John Perez

(CA)

Vernon Watkins (CA)

Crystal Strait (CA)

Pat Waak (CO)

Roy Romer (CO)

Nancy DiNardo (CT)

John Olsen (CT)

Christine Marques (DA) *

Theresa Morelli (DA) *

Anita Bonds (DC)

Donna Brazile (DC)

Larry Cohen (DC)

Christine Warnke (DC)

John Daniello (DE)

Harriet Smith-Windsor (DE)

Karen Thurman (FL)

Rudolph Parker (FL) Terrie Brady

(FL)

Mitchell Ceasar

(FL)

Diane Glasser

(FL)

Janee Murphy

(FL)

Jon Ausman (FL)

Andrew Tobias (FL)

Richard Ray (GA)

Antonio Charfauros (GU)

Cecilia Mafnas (GU)

Hon. Robert Underwood (GU)

Chair - Vacant (HA)

Vice-Chair - Vacant (HA)

Dr. Marie Dolly Strazar (HA)

Keith Roark (ID)

Edward Smith (IL)

Vacant (IL)

Scott Brennan (IA)

Richard Machacek (IA)

Larry Gates (KS)

Helen Knetzer (KS)

Jennifer Moore (KY)
Nathan Smith (KY)
Chris Whittington (LA)
Claude "Buddy" Leach (LA)
Elsie Burkhalter (LA)
Sam Spencer (ME)
Jennifer DeChant (ME)
Michael Cryor (MD)
Lauren Glover (MD)
Hon. Heather Mizeur (MD)
Hon. Gregory Pecoraro (MD)
Susan Turnbull (MD)
John Sweeney (MD)
Belkis Leong-Hong (MD)
John Gage (MD)
Debra Kozikowski (MA)
Paul Kirk (MA)
James Roosevelt Jr (MA)
Arthenia Abbott (MI)
Elizabeth Bunn
(MI)
Debbie Dingell
(MI)
Hon. Robert Ficano
(MI)
Joyce Lalonde
(MI)
Jeffrey Radjewski
(MI)
Michael Tardiff
(MI)
Richard Wiener
(MI)
Mark Brewer (MI)
Lu Battaglieri (MI)
Hon. Kwame Kilpatrick (MI)

Mayor Brenda Lawrence (MI) Eric Coleman (MI)
Virgie Rollins (MI)
Lauren Wolfe (MI)
Richard Shoemaker (MI)
DNC Members (cont'd)

Wayne Dowdy (MS)
Carnelia Pettis Fondren (MS)

John Temporiti (MO)
Yolanda Wheat (MO)
Leila Medley (MO)
Hon. Robin Carnahan (MO)
Hon. Maria Chappelle-Nadal (MO)
Dennis McDonald (MT)
Margarett Campbell (MT)
Audra Ostergard (NE)
Sam Lieberman (NV)

Hon. Yvonne Gates (NV)

Hon. Catherine Cortez Masto (NV)
Philip D. Murphy (NJ)
Raymond Buckley (NH)
Brian Colon (NM)
Hon. Herman Farrell Jr. (NY)
Irene Stein (NY)
Ralph Dawson (NY)
Jerry Meek (NC)

Dr. Jeanette Council (NC)
David Parker (NC)

Muriel Offerman (NC)

Carol Peterson (NC)
David Strauss (ND)
Hon. Chris Redfern (OH)
Ronald Malone (OH)
Patricia Moss (OH)

Hon. Joyce Beatty (OH)
Ivan Holmes (OK)
Jim Frasier (OK)

Kalyn Free (OK)

Jay Parmley (OK)

Mike Morgan (OK)

Meredith Woods-Smith (OR)

Frank Dixon (OR)

Jenny Greenleaf (OR)

Wayne Kinney (OR)

Gail Rasmussen (OR)

Hon. Bill Bradbury (OR)

William George (PA)

Luisette Cabana (PR)

Eliseo Roques-Arroyo (PR)

Wilbur Lee Jeffcoat (SC)

Hon. Gilda Cobb-Hunter (SC)

Cheryl Chapman (SD)

Gray Sasser (TN)

Dr. Inez Crutchfield (TN)

Boyd Richie (TX)

Jaime Gonzalez Jr. (TX)

David Hardt (TX)

Denise Johnson (TX)

John Patrick (TX)

Betty Richie (TX)

Linda Chavez -Thompson (TX)

Robert Martinez (TX)

Bob Strauss (TX)

Helen Langan (UT)

Jim Leaman (VA)

C Richard Cranwell (VA)

Hon. Alexis Herman (VA)

Joe Johnson (VA)

Jerome Wiley Segovia (VA)

Howard Dean (VT)
Dwight Pelz (WA)
Eileen Macoll (WA)
Ed Cote (WA)
Sharon Mast (WA)
David McDonald (WA)

Nick Casey Jr. (WV)

Alice Germond (WV)
Lena Taylor (WI)
Paula Zellner (WI)

Awais Khaleel (WI)
Nancy Drummond (WY)
Cynthia Nunley (WY)

Marylyn Stapleton (VI)
Carol Burke (VI)

Vacant - 1 (At-large)
Vacant - 2
(At-large)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

50 Former Edwards Supporters endorse Barack Obama (2008-04-23 10:00)

More good news as a host of former John Edwards supporters have rallied to back Barack Obama. Among the new endorsements is Edwards former National General Chairman Ed Turlington. So far, Edwards himself as not endorsed either candidate.

Former Edwards National General Chairman and 49 Other Edwards Supporters Throw Support to Barack Obama

by Zachary Scott Edwards

, Wednesday, April 23, 2008 at 09:29 AM

Edwards backers call North Carolina primary clear choice between real change and more of the same

Raleigh, NC – The Obama campaign today announced the endorsement of 49 prominent supporters of John Edwards - including Ed Turlington, Edwards' former National General Chairman. These North Carolina leaders - ranging from Members of Congress to a former Chief Justice of the North Carolina Supreme Court to former law partners and longtime friends of John Edwards - cite Barack Obama's commitment to fighting for change on behalf of working Americans and taking on the special interests in Washington.

"Barack Obama and John Edwards share a commitment to taking on special interests and standing up for regular Americans. Along with Edwards supporters from across the state, I am honored to join Senator Obama's movement for change," said Turlington. "As president, he will bring together Democrats, Republicans and Independents behind an agenda of change. From ending the war in Iraq to confronting the scourge of poverty to making health care affordable for every single American, Barack Obama will bring our country the change we need."

The diverse group said they are voting for Obama because he is the only candidate with a proven ability to unite America around a common vision and win the votes of Republicans and Independents whose support is critical to carrying the state in the fall.

Like Edwards, Obama refused donations from PACs and Washington lobbyists and vowed to stand up to the special interests that have blocked so much progress for working Americans in Washington, DC.

"John Edwards has dedicated his life and career to fighting poverty in America. Barack Obama demonstrated that same commitment when he turned down a high-paying job on Wall Street to work in Chicago communities decimated by steel mill closings," said Louise Coggins, a social worker from Wilmington who has known John and Elizabeth Edwards for 30 years. "Senator Obama is now the only candidate in the race who doesn't take money from PACs and federal lobbyists. We can count on him to stand up to special interests in Washington, DC on behalf of working men and women in America."

We need everyone in North Carolina getting involved right away, by volunteering at their local office. If you are not in North Carolina, we need you to start calling here using the MyBO call tool, or take a trip here to make the biggest impact on the ground. Join Us!

Click here to see the full list of local leaders who had previously backed John Edwards' campaign for president, but today are throwing their support behind Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

North Carolina GOP to run anti-Obama Ad (2008-04-23 11:11)

The North Carolina Republican Party, apparently at the urging of Sen. John McCain, will begin running television ads attacking Sen. Barack Obama.

The ads will attack specifically Obama's former pastor Rev. Jeremiah Wright and thus the Illinois senator through association.

I guess this indicates who the GOP thinks will win, or does not want to win for their own sakes.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Clinton's "Big State" Strategy (2008-04-23 13:40)

Hillary Clinton's emphasis on "big states" carries on the 'Fortress Democratic' strategy of her husband. The plan basically is to hunker down in strongly Democratic states, treat certain states with Democratic majorities as "swing" states and all but abandon the "red states" with Republican majorities.

The big problem with this defensive posture is that basically Democrats are continually placed on the defensive allowing those red states to become even redder.

Although the strategy worked in the short term for Bill Clinton, things began to unravel even during his tenure when the Republicans took over Congress. Then we had many years of Republicans controlling not only the White House and Congress, but the vast majority of governorships throughout the country.

When you don't compete, when you don't have candidates to rally behind in any state, you can not expect anything positive to happen. People are not going to get motivated registering Democrats between elections. They get fired up and ready to go when they have a candidate that they believe in.

Now, when Howard Dean took over the Democratic Party apparatus, he instituted a proactive policy in all states. Centralized resources would be dispersed to good candidates even in red states. That set up a situation where we now see Democratic governors and senators in what are still considered red states e.g., Gov. Kathleen Sebelius and Sen. Ben Nelson in Nebraska.

The Obama campaign is redrawing this red state, blue state map by activating and organizing people in all states for the general election.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Plouffe: The Facts (2008-04-23 18:12)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out this email today.

Last night, Senator Clinton used up her last, best chance to cut appreciably into Barack Obama's elected delegate lead.

She came up short.

In fact, she barely made a dent. At most, she picked up a net gain of 12 delegates – less than our gain, for example, in Colorado (where we gained 17) or Kansas (where we gained 14). Her gain in Pennsylvania was less than half of our gain in Virginia, where we added to our lead by 25 delegates.

But there is one measure by which her campaign's gains are real.

The Clinton campaign claims they've raised $3.5 million dollars since the polls closed yesterday.

We can't afford to let that go unanswered.

Please make a donation of $25 today to support this campaign:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/thefacts>

Grassroots support from people like you has the Democratic nomination in our sights.

Here's how it breaks out:

After Pennsylvania, we have a lead of at least 159 elected delegates earned through all of the primaries and caucuses so far. We have a total of at least 1493 pledged delegates.

Meanwhile, we've been rapidly gaining ground among the so-called superdelegates (elected leaders and party officials who get a vote to choose our nominee), cutting Senator Clinton's lead from more than 100 early this year to less than 25. We have a total of 238 publicly committed superdelegates.

The total number of delegates needed to secure the nomination is 2,024. That means we are only 293 delegates away from securing the nomination. In less than two weeks, we'll square off in the key battleground states of North Carolina and Indiana, when there will be as many delegates at stake as there were last night in Pennsylvania.

To grow our significant lead and close out this race, we must remain competitive in these contests and the 7 others that will follow.

Barack needs your support right now to finish this contest:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/thefacts>

Pennsylvania was considered a state tailor-made for Senator Clinton – she was always expected to win, and we trailed by as much as 25 points in the weeks leading up to the election.

But thanks to people like you, Barack gained support among key voters in the face of long odds and unrelenting negativity from Senator Clinton, and kept the margin close enough that her delegate gain was insignificant.

Indeed, the only surprising result from Pennsylvania is how much Barack was able to improve his standing among key voter groups since the Ohio primary.

Among white voters, Obama narrowed the gap by 6 points. Among voters over 60, he nearly cut the gap in half, from 41 points to 24 points. Meanwhile, we continued to run strong where we have all along – for example, winning voters ages 18-24 with over 65 % of the vote.

Barack campaigned hard in Pennsylvania. He talked about his plans to stand up to the special interests and bring people together so that we can change Washington to turn our economy around, make sure that every American has quality health care, and bring this misguided war to an end.

Your donation of $25 can make sure we grow our lead and finish this race in the final 9 contests:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/thefacts>

Thank you,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sonya (2008-04-24 05:58:00)

Please lets get the word out that voters for Obama will be in Denver during the convention if the nomination is not given to the candidtae with the most elected delegates, most votes, most states.

(2008-04-24 07:41)

Here is a video of a group meeting between Barack Obama and residents of Blue Bell, Pennsylvania with a lot of in-depth discussion on the issues. It's about an hour long.

[EMBED]

X

[EMBED]

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Oregon Latino Coalition endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-24 07:54)

A coalition of Oregon Latino group led by the state's largest farmworker union announced its endorsement of Barack Obama.

Latinos make up about eight percent of Oregon's population and tend to vote Democrat. Oregon votes on May 20 and April 29 is the last day to register before the presidential primary.

Coalition of Oregon Latino groups endorse Barack Obama for president

April 23, 2008

Key Latino groups in Oregon today announced their endorsement of Sen. Barack Obama for president. Ramon Ramirez, the president of PCUN, the state's largest farmworker union, made the announcement. Ramirez and the groups cite the Illinois senator's commitment to improving the lives of farmworkers and Latino families in Oregon and across the nation as the reason they chose to endorse him.

— Thelma Guerrero-Huston

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Endorsements pour in for Barack Obama (2008-04-24 14:26)

Sen. Barack Obama received a flurry of endorsements today. From Oregon, Congressman David Wu announced his support for Obama today.

"I think we are blessed to have two strong candidates for president," Congressman David Wu said. "I am endorsing Barack Obama for president today because I believe that he is best suited to turn the page on this sorry episode in American history. He and I both had the judgment to oppose the Iraq War from the very beginning.

"Every dollar that we have spent in Iraq—which adds up to over $500 billion so far—is a dollar not spent at home, a school not built, a bridge not repaired," continued Wu. "We need new policies both at home and abroad. Like Americans, the international community wants to see real change in America and I believe that Senator Obama embodies that change."

The International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers (IFPTE), an AFL-CIO affiliated labor union also endorsed Obama.

While IFPTE applauds both Democratic candidates, our union's internal polling results, coupled with Senator Obama's unblemished record of support for the critical issues facing IFPTE, prompted our action to endorse Senator Obama.

IFPTE's Executive Council agreed that Senator Obama is the candidate best suited to address the major concerns of America's working men and women, particularly those issues that directly impact IFPTE's diverse membership. The Senator believes we need to reform the H-1B program; he will immediately reverse the last eight years of the union busting promulgated on our nation's Civil Servants; will stand against free trade agreements like NAFTA that fail to protect American workers; will address our nation's dangerous health care crisis; will work to oppose irresponsible privatization schemes in the public and federal sectors; will work to protect the pensions and retirement security of working Americans; and will not only support the Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA), but will actively use the bully pulpit of the Presidency to work with Congress in ensuring that this all important labor law reform legislation becomes the law. The IFPTE is pleased to join the millions of Senator Obama supporters and look forward to working with him over the next seven months as we move toward victory in November.

From North Carolina, 43 mayors announced today that they are backing Sen. Obama.

FULL LIST OF MAYORS ENDORSING SENATOR OBAMA

Terry Bellamy, Mayor, Asheville
Leni Sinick, Former Mayor, Asheville
Linda Blackburn, Mayor, Ahoskie
Frank Wilson, Mayor, Bolton
Loretta Clawson, Mayor, Boone
Kevin Foy, Mayor, Chapel Hill
Mark Chilton, Mayor, Carrboro
Harold Weinbrecht, Mayor, Cary
Harvey Gantt, Former Mayor, Charlotte
Linda Ingram, Mayor, Conetoe
Darryl Moss, Mayor, Creedmoor
Malcolm Johnson, Mayor, Dover
N. Carnell Robinson, Mayor Pro Tem, Dunn
William Bell, Mayor, Durham
Cora McFadden, Mayor Pro Tem, Durham
Perry Blanks, Mayor, East Arcadia
Warnie Bishop, Mayor, Enfield
Roy Bell, Mayor, Garysburg
Yvonne Johnson, Mayor, Greensboro
Keith Holiday, Former Mayor, Greensboro
Mildred Council, Mayor Pro Tem, Greenville
Horace Reid, Mayor Pro Tem, Hertford
Matthew Block, Mayor, Laurinburg
Phil Bazemore, Mayor Pro Tem, Monroe
Eulis Willis, Mayor, Navassa
Lewis Brown, Former Mayor, Navassa
Jerry Merrick, Mayor Pro Tem, Navassa
James Knox, Mayor, Northwest
Randolph Voller, Mayor, Pittsboro
Charles Meeker, Mayor, Raleigh
James West, former Mayor Pro Tem, Raleigh
Estelle Sanders, Mayor, Roper
Perry Dixon, Mayor, Sandyfield
James Mill Sr., Mayor, Scotland Neck
Melvin Broadnax, Mayor, Seaboard
Howard Morgan, Mayor, Sedalia
Wilbert Harrison, Mayor, Speed
Ethel Clark, Mayor, Spring Lake

Donald Davis, Mayor, Snow Hill
Betty Gholston, Mayor, Wagram
George Draper Jr., Mayor, Weldon
Robert Spivey, Mayor, Windsor
Vivian Burke, Mayor Pro Tem, Winston-Salem
Carl Lee Sr., Mayor, Lewiston Woodville

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack Obama on his Support for Equal Pay (2008-04-24 14:33)

From barackobama.com :

Video: Obama on his Support for Equal Pay

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Thursday, April 24, 2008 at 07:39 AM

Here's video from Obama's visit to New Albany, Indiana, where he addressed discrimination in the work place and his support for pay equality...

[EMBED]

Later that day, Obama voted for a bill that would make it easier for women who allege pay discrimination to sue their employers. The Washington Post writes...

At issue is the Supreme Court's ruling in the case of Lilly Ledbetter, who for 19 years was the lone female supervisor at an Alabama tire plant. Months before she retired in 1998, Ledbetter learned that she was being paid thousands of dollars less than her male co-workers. She filed suit and was awarded more than $3 million by a jury. Last May, the Supreme Court ruled 5 to 4 that Ledbetter had waited too long to file her case. The court said she should have complained within 180 days of a specific discriminatory event.

The ruling stunned civil rights advocates, who said federal courts in nine of the nation's 12 circuits had for decades judged that the 180-day statute of limitations began running afresh with each discriminatory paycheck. Their congressional supporters quickly drafted legislation to set that standard into law. Under the bill, the 180-day clock would start ticking when a discriminatory decision is adopted, when a person becomes subject to that decision or when a person is affected by that decision, including with each new paycheck.

Today, Obama was featured on the front page of The Hill in a photo with Lilly Ledbetter...

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Winning Colorado vs. McCain (2008-04-25 09:06)

Here is a nice blog from Christopher Hass at the official barackobama.com site. He explains how Barack Obama's approach can open up the possibility in winning Republican or "red" states.

By going on the offensive you force the Republicans to defend states they formerly considered in their pockets. You also fire up the local Democrats more when you have more states involved. And its better for the whole Democratic ticket and for the long-term future of the party.

The example is how to win the state of Colorado in the general election.

Winning in November: Colorado

by Christopher Hass

, Thursday, April 24, 2008 at 02:01 PM

One of the advantages of this long primary process (fourteen months and counting) has been the opportunity it's provided for us to campaign and organize in all fifty states. In cities and towns across America we've seen record voter registration and participation, with many people finding their way to the political process for the first time. The end result: a radically altered electoral map that gives us the opportunity to compete across the country in November, in swing states and "red states" as well as "blue states."

Once case in point: Colorado.

In 2004, George W. Bush won the state of Colorado by less than 100,000 votes. Last winter, our grassroots supporters in the state spent months organizing, helped out at the end by field staff, multiple offices, and Barack himself. On February 5th Barack won the Colorado caucuses by a overwhelming margin, defeating Hillary Clinton 67 % to 32 %.

Two and a half months later, a recent Rasmussen poll shows that against Hillary Clinton, John McCain would easily carry the state right now, leading 50 % to 36 %. But in a head to head match-up, Barack leads McCain 46 % to 43 %, flipping the state and its nine electoral votes.

It's a pattern that we've seen repeat itself in states like Iowa, Oregon, Minnesota, Washington, Wisconsin and more.

And our grassroots networks that are still at work, still organizing and still contributing, helping lay the groundwork for the general election against John McCain in November.

Visit CO.BarackObama.com to find active grassroots groups and ongoing event in Colorado.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama's address to UFCW, new TV ad (2008-04-25 10:06)

Sen. Barack Obama speaks about the economy at an address to the UFCW in Chicago on Apr. 24, 2008.

[EMBED]

In the television ad "Nothing's Changed," airing in West Virginia, Barack talks about the record profits at Exxon and the high gas rates. He promises to institute a windfall profits penalty and to invest $150 billion in alternative energy creating $5 million new jobs. He also reminds us that he does not take money from Washington lobbyists.

[EMBED]

Apply now if you want to be an Obama Organizing Fellow.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Indianapolis: Barack on Energy Policy (2008-04-25 10:37)

Barack Obama delivered remarks today on his energy policy in Indianapolis. Here is the text as prepared for delivery.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama
Press Avail on Energy Plan

Indianapolis, Indiana
Friday, April 25, 2008

Everywhere I go in Indiana, and across this country, I'm talking to folks who are working harder and harder just to get by. At a time when our economy is in turmoil and wages are stagnant, hardworking families are struggling to pay rising costs, and few costs are rising more than the one folks pay at the pump. For the well-off in this country, high gas prices are mostly an annoyance, but to most Americans, they're a huge problem, bordering on a crisis.

Here in Indiana, gas costs about $3.60 a gallon – and across the country, gas costs more than at any time in almost thirty years. Over the last year alone, the price of oil has shot up more than 80 %, reaching a record high of more than $110 a barrel – all of which helps explain why the top oil companies made $123 billion last year.

Now, there's nothing wrong with a company being rewarded for its success. Our economy has always been powered by innovation and ingenuity. But the reason Americans keep going to the pump isn't because oil companies are being particularly innovative. It's because Washington politicians didn't deal with the challenge of alternative energy when they had the chance.

When George Bush asked Dick Cheney to come up with our energy policy a few years ago, he met with the environmental groups once, and he met with the renewable energy folks once, and he met with the oil and gas companies 40 times. And yet, we also know this problem goes deeper than the Bush administration. Because we've been talking about high gas prices in this country since Americans were sitting in gas lines in the 1970s. And we've heard promises about energy independence from every President – Democratic and Republican – since Richard Nixon. And yet the only thing that's different now is that we are even more dependent on foreign oil, our planet is in even greater peril, and the price of gas keeps going up and up and up.

So unless we're willing to challenge the broken system in Washington, and stop letting lobbyists use their clout to get their way, nothing else is going to change. And the reason I'm running for President is to challenge that system. I'm the only candidate in this race who's worked to rein in the power of lobbyists by passing historic ethics reforms in Illinois and in the Senate, and I'm the only one who isn't taking a dime from Washington lobbyists.

We need a President who's looking out for families in Indiana, not just doing what's good for multinational corporations, and that's the kind of President I'll be. It isn't right that oil companies are making record profits at a time when ordinary Americans are going into debt trying to pay rising energy costs. In the paper today, there was an article about how millions of Americans are falling behind on their energy bills, and a record number of Americans could face energy shut-offs over the next two months. That's why we'll put a windfall profits tax on oil companies and use it to help Indiana families pay their heating and cooling bills and reduce energy costs. We'll also take steps to reduce the price of oil and increase transparency in how prices are set so we can ensure that energy companies aren't bending the rules. And to help Indiana families meet the rising cost of gas, we'll put a middle class tax cut in their pockets that will save them $1,000 a year, and we'll eliminate income taxes altogether for seniors making less than $50,000.

So these are a few short-term steps we can take to ease the burden that Indiana families are bearing as a result of our failed energy policy. But the truth is, there is no easy answer to our energy crisis – and we need a President who's going to be straight with us about that; a president who's going to tell the American people not just what they want to hear, but what they need to know. And what they need to know is that any real solution isn't going to come about overnight. It's going to take time.

To bring about real change, we're going to have to make long-term investments in clean energy and energy efficiency. That's why I reached across the aisle in the Senate to come up with a plan to double our fuel efficiency standards that won support of lawmakers who had never supported raising those standards before. And that's why I voted for an energy bill that was far from perfect because it was the largest investment in renewable energy in history, and I fought to eliminate the tax giveaways to oil companies that were slipped into that bill.

And as President, I'll work to solve this energy crisis once and for all. We'll invest $150 billion over the next ten years in establishing a green energy sector that will create up to 5 million new jobs – and those are jobs that pay well and can't be outsourced. We'll invest in clean energies like solar, wind, and biodiesel. And we'll help make sure that the fuel we're using is more efficient.

The candidates with the Washington experience – my opponents – are good people. They mean well. But they've been in Washington for a long time, and even with all that experience they talk about, nothing has happened. This country didn't raise fuel efficiency standards for over thirty years. So what have we got for all that experience? Gas that's approaching $4 a gallon – because you can fight all you want inside Washington, but until you change the way it works, you won't be able to make the changes Americans need.

In the end, we'll only ease the burden of gas prices on our families when Hoosiers and people all across America say "enough." It's time to free ourselves from the tyranny of oil, and stop funding both sides in the war on terror. It's time to save this planet for our children. The time is now – not after the next election or the one after that. You shouldn't accept any more excuses for why it can't be done. It won't happen tomorrow. But if we can come together in this election, we can and will begin, and the first step is changing the way business is done in Washington. If we can do that, then the energy crisis is one I'm confident we can solve.

X

X

X

X

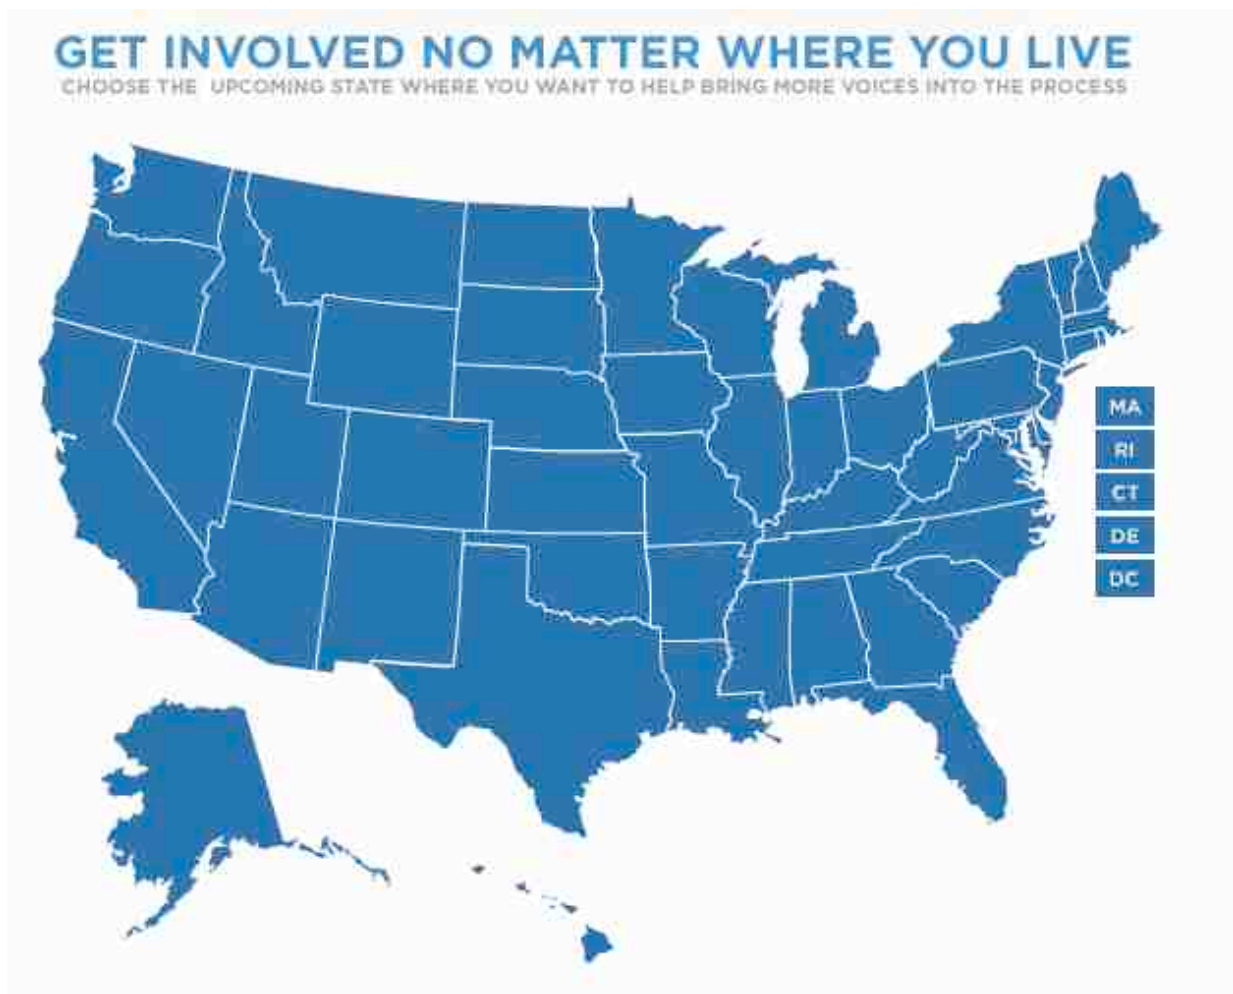

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Campaign launches 50 state Registration Drive (2008-04-25 13:12)

The Obama campaign is launching a 50 state voter's registration drive set for May 10, 2008. Supporters are asked to participate by clicking on their state in the map below and signing up for the event.

The Vote for Change drive is aimed at involving thousands of new people in the Democratic process.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Former "Hillraiser" defecting to Obama Camp (2008-04-25 13:31)

According to MSNBC, Hillary Clinton fundraiser and former Chile ambassador Gabriel Guerra-Mondragon is joining Barack Obama's campaign.

Guerra-Mondragon, who had reportedly raised about $500,000 for the Clinton camp, is said to have been worried about the "tone" of the campaign and how it would impact the November election.

Clinton had been experiencing fundraising problems and was far behind Obama in cash on hand according to the last financial report. She is reported to have gotten a boost from her Philadelphia win though.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Upcoming Obama Appearances (2008-04-25 19:17)

Apr 26 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Marion, IN

Apr 26 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Anderson, IN

Apr 28 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Wilson, NC

Apr 28 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Wilmington, NC

Apr 29 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Hickory, NC

Barack Obama on gas prices in Indianapolis, Apr. 25, 2008

[EMBED]

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-04-26 08:44)

[EMBED]

Obama Supporters want decisiveness (2008-04-26 13:18)

Democratic waffling and a failure of the superdelegates to take decisive action on the nomination has some Barack Obama supporters worried.

House Majority Whip James E. Clyburn, D-S.C., the highest ranking African-American and third highest Democrat in Congress, warned that continued negative campaigning may hurt the party's chances in November. He is also worried about a protracted struggle.

"If this party is perceived by people as having gone into a back room somewhere and brokered a nominee, that would not be good for our party."

[EMBED]

Barack Obama hears from Bernard Smith about the economy at a townhall meeting in Marion, Indiana today.

X

X

X

X

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Hoops in Indiana (2008-04-26 13:37)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama plays during a pick-up game at Maple Crest Middle School in Indiana.

[EMBED]

Bryant Gumbel interviewed Barack on the subject of basketball on Real Sports, HBO, "Audacity of Hoops."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack's interview with the Indianapolis Star (2008-04-27 07:11)

Sen. Barack Obama's closing remarks during an endorsement interview with the Indianapolis Star on Apr. 25, 2008.

[EMBED]

The Obama campaign has set a goal of a million telephone calls by May 6, primary election day in North Carolina and Indiana. Click on the image below to make calls.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Veterans benefits (2008-04-27 11:44)

Barack Obama answers a question from a Navy veteran in Anderson, Indiana on April 26, 2008.

He talks about improving the Veterans Administration including opening up more VA clinics. He also mentions his grandfather who fought in Patton's army and benefited from the GI Bill that allowed him to go to school while supporting a family. He notes that veteran educational benefits today do not cover college costs and that he is working on new GI Bill that will allow veterans to achieve a "world class education" while supporting a family.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

One-Stop Early Voting in North Carolina (2008-04-27 18:21)

North Carolina gives people the opportunity to vote early through One-Stop Early Voting. You can register and vote all at once.

Click here to find a One-Stop Early Voting location and watch Barack's direct appeal to get involved in North Carolina. You can also call the Obama campaign hotline at 1-888-NC-EARLY.

[EMBED]

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Gallup: Obama "cares about the needs of people like you" (2008-04-28 08:57)

A Gallup poll indicates most Americans (62 %) believe that Barack Obama 'cares about their needs' than say the same about Hillary Clinton (57 %) or John McCain (52 %).

Barack also led both Clinton and McCain as the candidate who:

Shares your values (51 %)

Understands the problems Americans face (63 %)

Is someone you would be proud to have as president (55 %)

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Register to Vote in Oregon before Apr. 29 (2008-04-28 10:48)

Oregon voter registration deadline is nearing. From barackobama.com :

Oregon Voter Registration: "There's no time to procrastinate"

by Christopher Hass

, Monday, April 28, 2008 at 10:41 AM

From today's Oregon Statesman Journal:

This year's battle-to-the-finish Democratic presidential primary has encouraged a rush of Oregon voter registrations. That's great.

You can't make your voice heard unless you vote, and you can't vote unless you register. Tuesday — tomorrow — is the deadline to do that for the May 20 primary.

This deadline affects mainly first-time Oregon voters, people who haven't voted in the past five years and registered voters who are changing their political party affiliation. People who have moved within Oregon may have more time, but they should call their county elections office to be sure.

Registration forms are readily available on the Internet, at Driver and Motor Vehicle Services offices and at county courthouses, among other places. But there's no time to procrastinate.

Over the weekend, a number of grassroots supporters helped canvass Oregon neighborhoods to register new voters, and there is still time to help out by calling Oregon residents and encouraging them to register before tomorrow's deadline.

If you live in Oregon, here's what you need to know about tomorrow's deadline and the upcoming primary:

All elections in Oregon are Vote by Mail. Ballots must be received by May 20th. To vote for Barack you must be:

- Registered as a Democrat by April 29th
- At least 18 years old on or before May 20, 2008

- A resident of Oregon

You should re-register if:

- 1) Your residence address or mailing address has changed, because a ballot will be sent to the address where you are registered.
- 2) You are not registered as a Democrat and need to change your political party affiliation.
- 3) You have not voted for five years or more.

For more information, visit the Oregon Secretary of State's website or stop by the Oregon for Obama field office closest to you.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sen. Jeff Bingaman (D-NM) Endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-28 13:15)

There's been a steady stream of superdelegates endorsing Barack Obama lately. During one interview by Chris Matthews on MSNBC, there was talk about a large number of superdelegates waiting in the wings to endorse the Illinois senator apparently trying to get the most political mileage before announcing their support.

Senator Jeff Bingaman Endorses Barack Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen,

Monday, April 28, 2008 at 12:10 PM

Chicago, IL – Today, United States Senator Jeff Bingaman (D-NM) endorsed Barack Obama for president, citing his ability to rise above the issues that divide us, end the war in Iraq, bring universal health care, and make America energy independent.

X Senator Bingaman said, "Today, I am announcing my support for Barack Obama for president and declaring my intention to vote for him at the Democratic convention.

"Our nation faces a daunting number of critical challenges: reasserting America's leadership in the world, meeting our needs for energy independence, addressing global warming, making healthcare accessible and affordable, positioning our economy to effectively compete globally, and extricating ourselves from the war in Iraq, to name a few.

"To make progress, we must rise above the partisanship and the issues that divide us to find common ground. We must move the country in a dramatically new direction.

"I strongly believe Barack Obama is best positioned to lead the nation in that new direction."

Senator Obama said, "I'm grateful today to have Senator Bingaman's support. Senator Bingaman has been speaking out in the United States Senate on some of the most pressing issues of our time – saving our environment, fighting global warming, and making America energy independent. Senator Bingaman has been an important advocate in the energy debate, and has served the people of New Mexico for decades, giving voice to the issues that matter to families across the state. We are proud to have his support as we fight to bring about real change for families in New Mexico and across the country."

Senator Jeff Bingaman is the Chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. He has served in the United State Senate since 1982, and previously served as New Mexico Attorney General.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-04-28 13:15)

There's been a steady stream of superdelegates endorsing Barack Obama lately. According to

Senator Jeff Bingaman Endorses Barack Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen,

Monday, April 28, 2008 at 12:10 PM

Chicago, IL – Today, United States Senator Jeff Bingaman (D-NM) endorsed Barack Obama for president, citing his ability to rise above the issues that divide us, end the war in Iraq, bring universal health care, and make America energy independent.

 Senator Bingaman said, "Today, I am announcing my support for Barack Obama for president and declaring my intention to vote for him at the Democratic convention.

"Our nation faces a daunting number of critical challenges: reasserting America's leadership in the world, meeting our needs for energy independence, addressing global warming, making healthcare accessible and affordable, positioning our economy to effectively compete globally, and extricating ourselves from the war in Iraq, to name a few.

"To make progress, we must rise above the partisanship and the issues that divide us to find common ground. We must move the country in a dramatically new direction.

"I strongly believe Barack Obama is best positioned to lead the nation in that new direction."

Senator Obama said, "I'm grateful today to have Senator Bingaman's support. Senator Bingaman has been speaking out in the United States Senate on some of the most pressing issues of our time – saving our environment, fighting global warming, and making America energy independent. Senator Bingaman has been an important advocate in the energy debate, and has served the people of New Mexico for decades, giving voice to the issues that matter to families across the state. We are proud to have his support as we fight to bring about real change for families in New Mexico and across the country."

Senator Jeff Bingaman is the Chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. He has served in the United State Senate since 1982, and previously served as New Mexico Attorney General.

Barack Obama at Basketball Hall of Fame (Indiana) (2008-04-28 13:47)

Sen. Barack Obama visits the Basketball Hall of Fame inn New Castle, Indiana, with former NBA player George McGinnis and New Castle basketball coach Steven Bennett.

[EMBED]

X X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama: The Battle for Oregon (2008-04-28 17:55)

Sen. Barack Obama sent out this email today.

Given that it's calling for supporters to come canvass in Oregon, it must be focused on neighboring states like California where I live.

One member of Sacramento for Obama has pledged to drive his van every weekend from Sacramento to Oregon for volunteers until election day.

Friend –

I wanted to take a moment to let you know where we stand in Oregon, one of the biggest remaining battleground states.

As I've traveled across Oregon, I've spoken to veterans, students, and hard-working families about the challenges middle-class America is facing – and about how we're going to start solving them.

I see the excitement on the ground, and I truly believe Oregon is ready to stand up for a different kind of politics. But only if people like you get involved and take ownership of this effort.

In the coming days, supporters from nearby states will be coming to Oregon to knock on doors, make phone calls, and reach out to as many voters as possible before the primary – and they need your help.

I know this is a big decision. But what's brought our campaign where we are today is that so many people – including many who never thought they'd get involved in politics in their lifetime – have taken that leap to help us succeed.

We need to build our movement in Oregon, so I hope you'll sign up to take the trip this weekend:

<http://my.barackobama.com/volunteerOR>

People are paying attention to what's happening in Oregon.

They know how far we've traveled together, but they want to know whether we can close this race, secure the nomination, and finally bring about the change our country so desperately needs.

We can bring jobs back to communities across America, reduce the price of gas, and put an end to the war in Iraq – but we need to finish strongly in Oregon.

We have just three weeks.

I hope you'll join us.

Barack

Check out this Flickr slideshow of Barack's visit to Indianapolis over the weekend.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

April Fundraising Deadline Approaches (2008-04-29 06:42)

The Obama campaign is offering a new limited edition car magnet as the April fundraising deadline approaches. More than 1,500,000 supporters have already contributed at least once. The new contributions will help efforts to register new voters in all 50 states including the large Vote for Change registration drive on May 10.

Friend –

Next week, we have the opportunity to close out this race and secure the nomination for Barack – but there's another deadline coming up even sooner.

Financial reports for April will be filed this Wednesday at midnight. The media pundits and Washington insiders will be watching the results and judging the strength of our campaign by the money we raise.

But what's most impressive about our movement is that our funding has come from grassroots supporters like you. We've never accepted donations from Washington lobbyists or special interest PACs. Instead, more than 1,500,000 ordinary people have stepped up to own a piece of this campaign.

To meet this deadline and celebrate our grassroots donors, we've created a special gift.

Make a donation of $15 or more before midnight on Wednesday, April 30th, and receive a limited edition Vote for Change car magnet:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/magnet>

The crucial North Carolina and Indiana primaries will require unprecedented resources. But we also need to start preparing for the general election.

We're building a powerful grassroots movement in all 50 states – organizing communities, registering voters, and bringing new voices into the political process.

We have accomplished so much, but we need your support today – to finish this contest, and to get ready to take on Senator McCain.

Help grow our movement at this critical time, and be part of history by joining 1,500,000 other Americans who are supporting this campaign.

Contribute $15 or more before midnight on April 30th. You'll own a piece of this campaign and you'll receive a Vote for Change car magnet to show your support in style:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/magnet>

Thank you,

Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama: 36 Hours and Counting (2008-04-29 06:49)

Sen. Barack Obama sent out this email today.

Paul –

Tomorrow's financial reporting deadline is one of the most important of this election, and I need your help to make sure we're ready for North Carolina, Indiana, and the road ahead.

You may have heard that Senator Clinton is intensifying her fundraising efforts in an all-out bid to win in the next two states.

We'll need unprecedented resources to stay competitive in these contests – but we're not just looking toward the next primary. We're also preparing for the general election race against Senator McCain and building a grassroots campaign in all 50 states.

The next two days are a crucial time to build momentum for the remaining contests and the general election.

As a donor to this campaign, you're responsible for getting us this far. But right now we need to show our strength before Wednesday's fundraising deadline.

If you make a contribution before midnight tomorrow, a fellow supporter – someone who has already donated in April – has promised to give again and double your impact.

Make a donation of $25 at this important time, and you can even choose to exchange a note with the supporter who is matching your gift:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

In every corner of the country, we're already organizing communities, helping register voters, and bringing people back into the political process.

And unlike Senator Clinton and Senator McCain, we are building our movement without taking any money from Washington lobbyists or special interest PACs.

Instead, we put our trust in ordinary people like you. And nearly 1,500,000 supporters have stepped up to own a piece of this campaign.

Right now, your support is crucial to our efforts in North Carolina and Indiana, where we could close out this race in the coming week.

Make a matching donation of $25 now and double your impact:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

Thank you for your support,

Barack

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack discusses positive campaign at Chapel Hill (2008-04-29 07:33)

Check out this great video of the rally at Chapel Hill, North Carolina that attracted 18,000 people on April 28, 2008. Barack talks about getting pulled into negative exchanges and how he must take care to keep the campaign on the positive and unifying note that he committed to in the early going.

[EMBED]

Obama in North Carolina

Apr 29 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Winston-Salem, NC

Apr 29 Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Hickory, NC

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

2.5 May

(2008-05-01 08:11)

Check out the YouTube video with Barack explaining how the grassroots organization has life of its own that he will promote beyond the election.

Howard Dean, despite losing the primary, did something similar with Democracy for America, which is going strong today and has helped him in his bid to reform the Democratic Party.

Obama's network is even much stronger as it has seemingly paved the road to victory, minus any funny business by the superdelegates, against one of the most "inevitable" candidates ever to run for the presidency.

The campaign has relied on the self-starting network for many of its wins in states that were not high priorities in the early going.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

John McCain's Farrakhan Connection (2008-05-01 10:32)

Well, it seems not only does Sen. Hillary Clinton have a top level supporter who praised Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan in Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell, but Sen. John McCain has Farrakhan links as well.

Sen. Joe Lieberman, who crossed party lines to endorse McCain, once was ready to meet with Farrakhan who he said that he 'respected.' The overture came during the 2000 election and after Farrakhan's highly successful Million Man March.

Here is an interview with NBC's Tim Russert in which Lieberman explains his views on Farrakhan.

[EMBED]

In 1984, President Reagan feted Minister Farrakhan and Rev. Jesse Jackson in the Rose Garden at the White House after the Minister used his support in the Muslim world to win the release of Lt. Goodman when his plane was shot down in Syria. Incidentally, Rev. Jeremiah Wright accompanied both Jackson and Farrakhan on their trip to free the navy pilot.

Pres. Ronald Reagan with Lt. Goodman and Jesse Jackson on Jan. 4, 1984.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

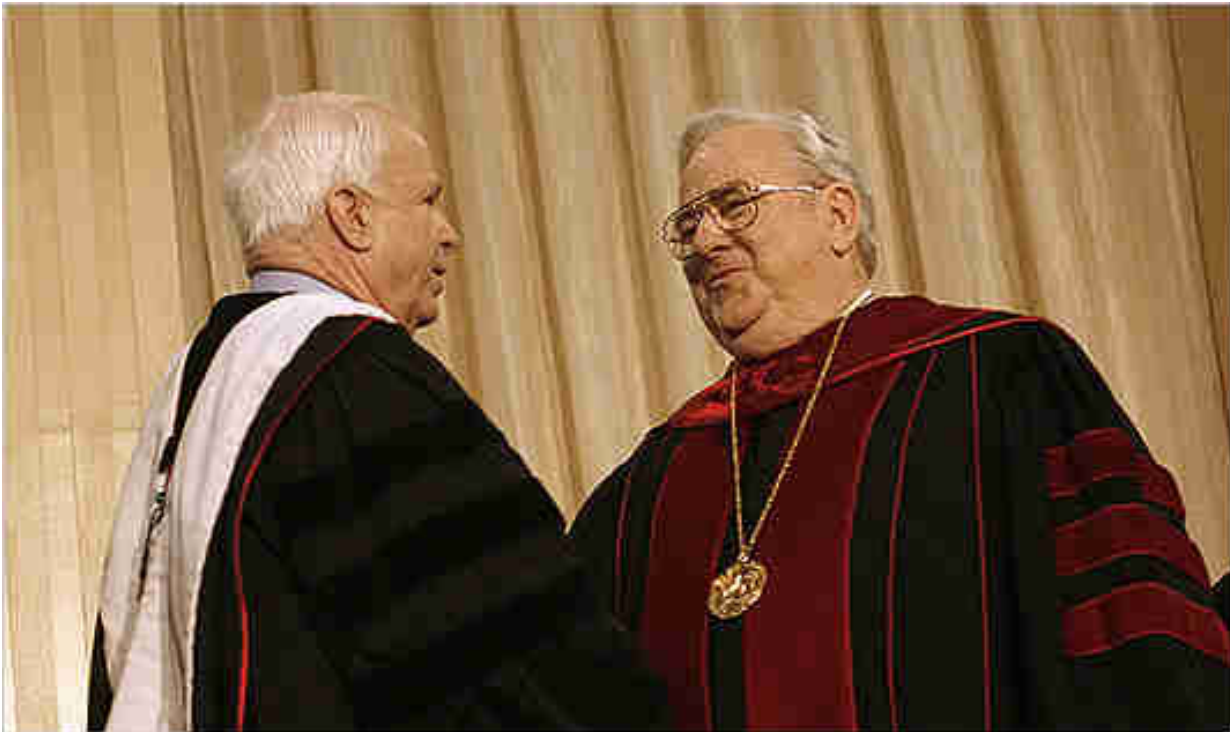

Guilt by Association (2008-05-01 15:46)

"Neither party should be defined by pandering to the outer reaches of American politics and the agents of intolerance, whether they be Louis Farrakhan or Al Sharpton on the left, or Pat Robertson or Jerry Falwell on the right."

- John McCain during 2000 Primary

<http://transcripts.cnn.com/TRANSCRIPTS/0003/03/ip.00.html>

✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Clinton Superdelegate endorses Obama (2008-05-01 17:35)

A major superdelegate supporter of Hillary Clinton has switched to the Barack Obama camp. Former Democratic Party leader and Indiana native Joe Andrew endorsed Obama today.

"The math[ematics] for this is simple," Mr Andrew told ABC News. "A vote for Hillary Clinton is a vote to continue this process." If Mr Obama can carry both Indiana and North Carolina on Tuesday – he is ahead in the latter but appears to be in a close race in the former – it could be enough to force Mrs Clinton out.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Barack (2008-05-02 08:20)

Here is a funny video produced by Humanitainment featuring Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton as the characters in a Star Wars spoof called "The Empire Strikes Barack."

Not difficult to guess who plays Darth Vader in this one!
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Preachers and Politics (2008-05-02 11:20)

With all the hoopla over pastors recently, I came across two hilarious YouTube videos that show how well religion and politics gel together.

The first shows Pastor Manning of Harlem, a vociferous supporter of the Clintons, who minces no words about Sen. Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

Here we have a wonderful set of clips documenting the religious support of Sen. John McCain including Rev. Hagee.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Early Voting in Indiana may Favor Obama (2008-05-02 14:40)

The Obama campaign has executed an all-out early voting strategy in Indiana and it may be paying off.

About 20 percent of the 127,000-plus absentee ballots received as of early Friday were cast in three Indiana counties — Marion, Monroe and Lake — that political observers believe Obama is strongly favored to win.

Lake County has a large population of black voters and is in Chicago's shadow. Obama has typically won big among college-age voters, and Monroe County is the home of Indiana University in Bloomington. Obama's campaign sought out IU students with voter registration and early voting drives and a free Dave Matthews concert.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama in South Bend, Indiana answers a question on farming.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama wins Guam (2008-05-03 17:09)

Barack Obama pulled out a close victory in Guam by only seven votes according to CNN. This gives the Illinois senator 31 wins out of 46 contests, a maybe a bit of a psychological lift going into Tuesday's contests in North Carolina and Indiana.

Check out Barack's TV ad in the Hoosier State.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack and Michelle visit ancestral homestead in Indiana (2008-05-03 20:02)

Amanda Scott of barackobama.com posted this interesting blog on Barack Obama's visit to the ancestral homestead of his mother's family, the Dunhams.

Barack has some interesting indirect ancestors on his mother's side including Edward I, King of England, and William I "The Lion" King of Scots. The former is also an ancestor of John McCain.

His father's people, the Luo, has been the focus of much interest by anthropologists. One branch especially, the Shilluk, has preserved many cultural features of the Pharaohs of Ancient Egypt.

Barack and Michelle Visit Kempton

by Amanda Scott

, Saturday, May 03, 2008 at 05:33 PM

Barack visited the former Indiana homestead of his mother's family, the Dunhams, with his wife Michelle and daughters Malia and Sasha today.

The Kempton, Indiana, property was once owned by Barack's second, third and fourth great-grandfathers and the house that currently sits on the land was built by Barack's great uncle, William Riley Dunham, who was a Democratic member of the Indiana General Assembly.

Details of the Obama family history in Indiana:

- Barack's fourth great-grandfather, Jacob Dunham, moved to Kempton in the 1840s and is buried at the Kempton Cemetery.
- Barack's third great-grandfather, Jacob Mackey Dunham, was a farmer in Kempton and married his third great-grandmother there July 21, 1853.
- Barack's second great-grandfather, Jacob William Dunham, was born in Kempton February 7, 1863. Jacob William Dunham moved to Kansas, where Obama's grandfather and mother were eventually born.
- When Jacob William Dunham left Indiana, he sold the land to Barack's great uncle, William Riley Dunham, who built the existing home in the late 1800s.

Check out these pictures from their tour:

[EMBED] And don't forget to sign up for a Get Out The Vote shift this weekend!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Newspapers Endorse Barack Obama in NC, IN (2008-05-04 13:46)

Sen. Barack Obama was endorsed by four newspapers today, three in Indiana and by The Charlotte Observer in North Carolina.

Barack has been the darling of print media throughout this campaign. Here are excerpts of the Indiana endorsements from barackobama.com .

Indiana: Three Sunday Newspaper Endorsements for Obama

by Christopher Hass,

Sunday, May 04, 2008 at 09:23 AM

With the Indiana primary just days away, three more Midwestern newspapers formally endorsed Barack Obama in this morning's Sunday editions: the Muncie Star Press, the Gary Post-Tribune, and the Louisville Courier-Journal (which has a large southern Indiana readership, and endorsed Barack both in Tuesday's contest and Kentucky's May 20th primary).

From the Muncie Star Press:

Sen. Barack Obama is the best candidate in the race for the Democratic nomination for president. He represents America's best chance for a real and positive change in direction for a country beset by an unpopular war and economic doldrums.

The United States is as polarized as it has ever been in its 232-year history. From the Oval Office all the way to Main Street, the division has paralyzed the country. Obama has demonstrated a unique ability to unite Americans of all ages, race and gender and has the best chance to end the culture war at home. He also could unify a country that that needs to pull together, not apart, if it expects to keep its position as world leader and restore its moral authority.

... Obama has breathed new life into the Democratic party, helping to rebuild it into a 50-state party through his appeal to important and previously disaffected young voters. Youth are the future of our country, but both parties have either ignored or been unable to reach them for generations. The fact that many are paying attention now, thanks to Obama, bodes well for the future.

... Obama represents our best hope for a different kind of presidency with a different attitude that could lead to a better America. Change is a word that has become the key - and the most overused - word in this campaign. The truth is, however, a real change in the leadership style at the top could lead to change all the way down to Main Street. We need someone who will inspire us to be better as a people and as a country - to change. Barack Obama is that person.

From the Gary Post-Tribune:

The buzz word in the race for the Democratic nomination for president has been "change" — change from the failed policies of President Bush, who has little positive to hold on to as he approaches the end of his presidency.

Barack Obama has taken the crusade for change a step further, calling for a change in the politics and policies of Washington and the country as a whole.

We recommend a vote for Obama because he potentially represents more of what is new than Hillary Clinton, who is part of the inside crowd in Washington.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal:

"We were always the longshot," [Senator Obama said in an interview last week with this newspaper's editorial board]. "The fact we've done so well speaks to the hunger of the American people for a different message and a different direction."

We agree, and we also believe that Sen. Obama is the Democratic candidate better equipped to restore Americans' hope for the future and to bring change to Washington.

For that reason, we endorse Sen. Obama in Tuesday's Indiana primary and in the May 20 contest in Kentucky.

Read the list of over 100 newspapers that have endorsed Barack Obama . . .

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-05-05 05:43:00)

President Obama

Forty years ago in 1967 Carl B. Stokes was elected the first black Mayor of a major American city. I was the operations manager of that campaign along with my partner Geraldine Williams. In 1965, Stokes had run and almost won in a city that was 70 % white and 30 % black. In 1965 he had come so close to winning that there was a recount. His victory in 67 was hailed as one the greatest moments in the civil rights struggle and also a triumph of the brotherhood of man. Partially, yes—partially, no. In the 1965 campaign there were practically no white votes for Stokes. In 67 there was only 15 %. Not exactly a triumph for the brotherhood of man.! In fact, in 1965 I was his "white" aide and traveling companion to show not only the white community, but also just as importantly the black community that he had white support. Many in the black community said "it's not time"—he's not ready—will he win and bring disgrace to the community—will he be killed by the racists" Do these same sentiments sound familiar in 2007?

Also, in 1965 he was up against a potent political machine, one that regularly "bought off" members of the black community. There were city councilman and black pastors all of whom had ties to the white establishment. Sound familiar in 2007?

In both 1965 and 1967 it was the black community that turned out in large numbers and then voted 97 % for Stokes. He still lost in 1965 because the councilman and pastors disaffected some of the black vote but it was so close that in 1967 and with the blessing of the establishment he won—but by a very small margin. Again, it was the black turnout and overwhelming percentage of vote in his favor that carried the day.

How does Barack Obama's campaign of 2007 differ from those two campaigns of long ago? He is running against the establishment (the Clinton machine) and there are black "leaders" that are staying with the establishment. Polls are showing that many in the black community are saying the same things that they said in 1965—it's not time—he's not ready—he will be killed if he is elected. Are these sentiments carried down through time going to defeat him in 2007?

Here is the reason that the campaigns are not alike. The white support for Obama is huge compared to the white support for Stokes forty years ago. Who would have dreamed then that a black man running for the President of the United States could garner such white support, attract such crowds, and be so close to winning. When I see campaign crowds, I see a sea of white faces cheering him and I see a much different time than that of 1965 & 1967.

Following is an example from the 1965 campaign. It shows how extraordinary the idea of a black mayor (there are now hundreds) was to the black community at that time.

The last weekend before the election we had a parade through the streets of the East Side of Cleveland. It wasn't much of a parade, as parades go, a handful of cars with balloons and banners on the them, horns honking, people waving, and Carl and is wife sitting on the back of the last car. I was in the front seat. As the caravan pulled past the corner, there was a small boy about ten or eleven standing in the middle of a group of children. The cars had been going past honking with signs "Stokes for Mayor" on the sides. As the car with Stokes sitting on the back came to the corner the boy stood straight up, his eyes widened at the sight of Carl and he cried out, "HE'S COLORED." He started to clap his hands and jump up and down. "HE'S COLORED, HE'S COLORED," he cried out to no one in particular. "HE'S COLORED, HE'S COLORED" and he started to skip down the street after the car. I looked back as the cars picked up speed and left the little boy in the distance. He was still running and clapping his hands. I turned around to Carl and caught a very different expression on his face, part smile and part a distant look in his eyes. "I think it's all been worthwhile," I said. A quick but soft-spoken reply, "Yes, I think you're right." That's how it was back then. A little boy thought, "this couldn't be—his parents and grandparents thought—could this possibly be? And a city and a nation wondered if history was in the making.

I sometimes wonder where that little boy is now, forty years later. What about his children and grandchildren? Does he remember how he felt that day? Does he remember the wonderment of seeing a black man sitting on the top of a convertible, his skipping down the street in that wonderment of a black man striving for the impossible? How do his children and grandchildren feel today? Will they participate in today's "impossible dream"?

Now, forty years later I see the crowds, more white than black, cheering a man of color. Now, forty years later, I see polls showing that this man of color could likely be the next President of the United States. I see now, forty years later, that dreams do come true—and a little boy of so long ago could still clap, skip down the street and cry out—"He's colored—He's colored—he's colored".

Will the black community support Obama as we Irish Catholics did for John Kennedy in 1960, as the Mormons will do for Mitt Romney this year, as every ethnic group has done for their history making candidates since the country began. It is the black vote that can insure victory for Barack Obama. This is the year. This is the time. This is history in the making.

The face of The United States of America is about to change.

Tom Hanks Endorses Barack Obama on MySpace (2008-05-04 15:20)

Actor Tom Hanks posted a video on his MySpace page endorsing Barack Obama. Here's a copy from YouTube.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video from Indiana (2008-05-04 20:48)

Hoosiers for Obama .

[EMBED]

Three people in Indiana tell why they switched their support from Hillary Clinton to Barack Obama.

Indianapolis Pre-JJ Dinner [EMBED]

Obama supporters rally before the Indiana Jefferson Jackson Dinner on May 4th, 2008.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Last Pitch to Indiana (2008-05-05 10:29)

Here is the final Obama campaign television ad in Indiana. There is a strong appeal here to the working class voters.
[EMBED]

Barack takes Michelle and the kids canvassing in Indiana. Afterward, Barack participated in a pick-up game of basketball.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Primary Eve (2008-05-05 14:53)

The Obama campaign has released a last second ad slamming negative campaigning and calling for real solutions instead.

[EMBED]

And here's an ad airing in North Carolina hitting at Hillary's gas tax cut proposal.

[EMBED]

Native American activist and superdelegate KayIn Free, a Choctaw Nation member, endorsed Barack Obama today. Barack has been garnering many more superdelegates recently as compared to Hillary Clinton whose early lead is diminishing.

Barack released this statement for today's Cinco de Mayo celebration.

"As Americans celebrate Cinco de Mayo, we're reminded that while Mexico's cultural traditions are an important part of who we are as Americans, the American dream is still out of reach for too many Latinos. Only eleven percent of Latinos obtain a college degree, which is why we need to make college affordable for all. Nearly a third of America's uninsured are Latino, which is why we need to provide universal health care for every American. And our broken immigration system works for neither the immigrant families who are being torn apart nor the workers who are concerned about unfair competition, which is why we need to pass comprehensive immigration reform once and for all. So while I hope that all Americans are enjoying this Cinco de Mayo, I also hope that when the celebrations come to an end, we'll take up the cause of coming together as Americans to solve our common challenges and put the American dream within reach for every family in this country."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Ride Share in North Carolina and Indiana (2008-05-05 22:12)

If you would like to help drive voters to the polls, contact an Indiana Township Team by clicking on the link below.

This link is for North Carolina ride-sharing.

You can also sign up for the election night party at North Carolina State University in Raleigh, NC.

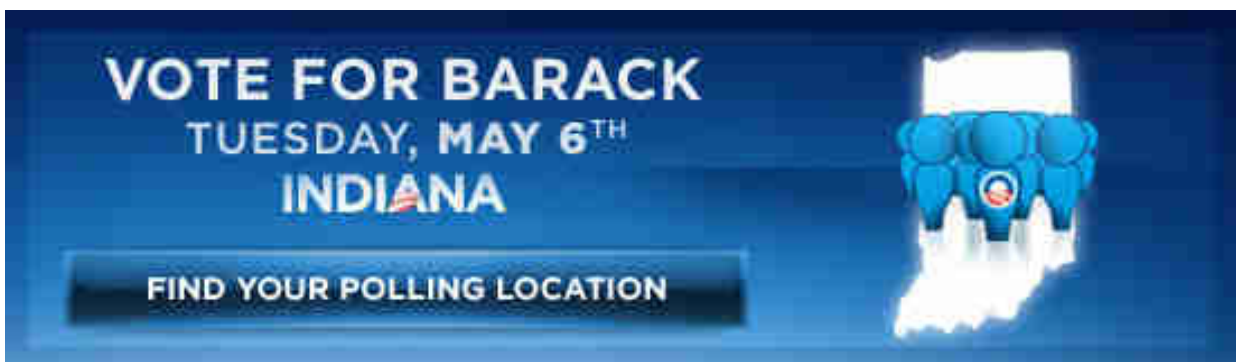

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Early indications look good (2008-05-06 08:46)

Early reports from the ground indicate Barack Obama should do well today. Turnout in North Carolina looks like it will be very high, an indication that should favor Obama.

Early voting in Indiana has been strong in counties where Barack's support is known to be strong. Although many polls had shown that the Illinois senator was trailing Hillary Clinton in Indiana, a lot rests on the final voter turnout.

Photos from Barack Obama's breakfast stop in Greenwood, Indiana.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Paul (2008-05-06 10:10:00)

How off will tonight's exit polling be?

The last few election cycles have conditioned us to mistrust exit polling. Now Obama adds another dimension. Polling leading up to contests, and exit polling after have tended to exaggerate Obama's share of the electorate. Wins for Hillary will exaggerate the momentum, late deciders, greater than expected margins, and the magnitude of the upsets. Penn. had MSNBC's crew waiting long after polls closed to call the election, sowing a mistrust in the exit polling showing Obama doing much-much better than expected. In the end the numbers turned out dead wrong. So leading into today the realclearpolitics averages were:

North Carolina: Obama 50 % Clinton 42 % or Obama +8 %

Indiana: Obama 44 % Clinton 49 % or Clinton +5 %

Vote @ www.myalteregoblog.blogspot.com

Barack Obama Projected as Winner in North Carolina (2008-05-06 17:07)

CNN and MSNBC have projected that Barack Obama will win North Carolina, while Indiana is still too early to call. Some important counties in Indiana including those near Barack's hometown of Chicago still have not reported any numbers, so mathematically he could still possibly come back in the Hoosier State.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama speaks in Raleigh (2008-05-06 17:53)

Here is the text of Barack Obama's speech at North Carolina State University in Raleigh as prepared for delivery.

[EMBED]

You know, some were saying that North Carolina would be a game-changer in this election. But today, what North Carolina decided is that the only game that needs changing is the one in Washington, DC.

I want to start by congratulating Senator Clinton on her victory in the state of Indiana. And I want to thank the people of North Carolina for giving us a victory in a big state, a swing state, and a state where we will compete to win if I am the Democratic nominee for President of the United States.

When this campaign began, Washington didn't give us much of a chance. But because you came out in the bitter cold, and knocked on doors, and enlisted your friends and neighbors in this cause; because you stood up to the cynics, and the doubters, and the nay-sayers when we were up and when we were down; because you still believe that this is our moment, and our time, for change – tonight we stand less than two hundred delegates away from securing the Democratic nomination for President of the United States.

More importantly, because of you, we have seen that it's possible to overcome the politics of division and distraction; that it's possible to overcome the same old negative attacks that are always about scoring points and never about solving our problems. We've seen that the American people aren't looking for more spin or more gimmicks, but honest answers about the challenges we face. That's what you've accomplished in this campaign, and that's how we'll change this country together.

This has been one of the longest, most closely fought contests in history. And that's partly because we have such a formidable opponent in Senator Hillary Clinton. Tonight, many of the pundits have suggested that this party is inalterably divided – that Senator Clinton’s supporters will not support me, and that my supporters will not support her.

Well I’m here tonight to tell you that I don’t believe it. Yes, there have been bruised feelings on both sides. Yes, each side desperately wants their candidate to win. But ultimately, this race is not about Hillary Clinton or Barack Obama or John McCain. This election is about you – the American people – and whether we will have a president and a party that can lead us toward a brighter future.

This primary season may not be over, but when it is, we will have to remember who we are as Democrats – that we are the party of Jefferson and Jackson; of Roosevelt and Kennedy; and that we are at our best when we lead with principle; when we lead with conviction; when we summon an entire nation around a common purpose – a higher purpose. This fall, we intend to march forward as one Democratic Party, united by a common vision for this country. Because we all agree that at this defining moment in history – a moment when we’re facing two wars, an economy in turmoil, a planet in peril – we can’t afford to give John McCain the chance to serve out George Bush’s third term. We need change in America.

The woman I met in Indiana who just lost her job, and her pension, and her insurance when the plant where she worked at her entire life closed down – she can’t afford four more years of tax breaks for corporations like the one that shipped her job overseas. She needs us to give tax breaks to companies that create good jobs here in America. She can’t afford four more years of tax breaks for CEOs like the one who walked away from her company with a multi-million dollar bonus. She needs middle-class tax relief that will help her pay the skyrocketing price of groceries, and gas, and college tuition. That’s why I’m running for President.

The college student I met in Iowa who works the night shift after a full day of class and still can’t pay the medical bills for a sister who’s ill – she can’t afford four more years of a health care plan that only takes care of the healthy and the wealthy; that allows insurance companies to discriminate and deny coverage to those Americans who need it most. She needs us to stand up to those insurance companies and pass a plan that lowers every family’s premiums and gives every uninsured American the same kind of coverage that Members of Congress give themselves. That’s why I’m running for President.

The mother in Wisconsin who gave me a bracelet inscribed with the name of the son she lost in Iraq; the families who pray for their loved ones to come home; the heroes on their third and fourth and fifth tour of duty – they can’t afford four more years of a war that should’ve never been authorized and never been waged. They can’t afford four more years of our veterans returning to broken-down barracks and substandard care. They need us to end a war that isn’t making us safer. They need us to treat them with the care and respect they deserve. That’s why I’m running for President.

The man I met in Pennsylvania who lost his job but can’t even afford the gas to drive around and look for a new one – he can’t afford four more years of an energy policy written by the oil companies and for the oil companies; a policy that’s not only keeping gas at record prices, but funding both sides of the war on terror and destroying our planet in the process. He doesn’t need four more years of Washington policies that sound good, but don’t solve the problem. He needs us to take a permanent holiday from our oil addiction by making the automakers raise their fuel standards, corporations pay for their pollution, and oil companies invest their record profits in a clean energy future. That’s the change we need. And that’s why I’m running for President.

The people I’ve met in small towns and big cities across this country understand that government can’t solve all our problems – and we don’t expect it to. We believe in hard work. We believe in personal responsibility and self-reliance.

But we also believe that we have a larger responsibility to one another as Americans – that America is a place – that America is the place – where you can make it if you try. That no matter how much money you start with or where you come from or who your parents are, opportunity is yours if you’re willing to reach for it and work for it. It’s the idea that while there are few guarantees in life, you should be able to count on a job that pays the bills; health care for when you need it; a pension for when you retire; an education for your children that will allow them to fulfill their God-given potential. That’s the America we believe in. That’s the America I know.

This is the country that gave my grandfather a chance to go to college on the GI Bill when he came home from World War II; a country that gave him and my grandmother the chance to buy their first home with a loan from the government.

This is the country that made it possible for my mother – a single parent who had to go on food stamps at one point – to send my sister and me to the best schools in the country on scholarships.

This is the country that allowed my father-in-law – a city worker at a South Side water filtration plant – to provide for his wife and two children on a single salary. This is a man who was diagnosed at age thirty with multiple sclerosis – who relied on a walker to get himself to work. And yet, every day he went, and he labored, and he sent my wife and her brother to one of the best colleges in the nation. It was a job that didn't just give him a paycheck, but a sense of dignity and self-worth. It was an America that didn't just reward wealth, but the work and the workers who created it.

Somewhere along the way, between all the bickering and the influence-peddling and the game-playing of the last few decades, Washington and Wall Street have lost touch with these values. And while I honor John McCain's service to his country, his ideas for America are out of touch with these values. His plans for the future are nothing more than the failed policies of the past. And his plan to win in November appears to come from the very same playbook that his side has used time after time in election after election.

Yes, we know what's coming. We've seen it already. The same names and labels they always pin on everyone who doesn't agree with all their ideas. The same efforts to distract us from the issues that affect our lives by pouncing on every gaffe and association and fake controversy in the hope that the media will play along. The attempts to play on our fears and exploit our differences to turn us against each other for pure political gain – to slice and dice this country into Red States and Blue States; blue-collar and white-collar; white and black, and brown.

This is what they will do – no matter which one of us is the nominee. The question, then, is not what kind of campaign they'll run, it's what kind of campaign we will run. It's what we will do to make this year different. I didn't get into race thinking that I could avoid this kind of politics, but I am running for President because this is the time to end it.

We will end it this time not because I'm perfect – I think by now this campaign has reminded all of us of that. We will end it not by duplicating the same tactics and the same strategies as the other side, because that will just lead us down the same path of polarization and gridlock.

We will end it by telling the truth – forcefully, repeatedly, confidently – and by trusting that the American people will embrace the need for change.

Because that's how we've always changed this country – not from the top-down, but from the bottom-up; when you – the American people – decide that the stakes are too high and the challenges are too great.

The other side can label and name-call all they want, but I trust the American people to recognize that it's not surrender to end the war in Iraq so that we can rebuild our military and go after al Qaeda's leaders. I trust the American people to understand that it's not weakness, but wisdom to talk not just to our friends, but our enemies – like Roosevelt did, and Kennedy did, and Truman did.

I trust the American people to realize that while we don't need big government, we do need a government that stands up for families who are being tricked out of their homes by Wall Street predators; a government that stands up for the middle-class by giving them a tax break; a government that ensures that no American will ever lose their life savings just because their child gets sick. Security and opportunity; compassion and prosperity aren't liberal values or conservative values – they're American values.

Most of all, I trust the American people's desire to no longer be defined by our differences. Because no matter where I've been in this country – whether it was the corn fields of Iowa or the textile mills of the Carolinas; the streets of San Antonio or the foothills of Georgia – I've found that while we may have different stories, we hold common hopes. We may not look the same or come from the same place, but we want to move in the same direction – towards a better future for our children and our grandchildren.

That's why I'm in this race. I love this country too much to see it divided and distracted at this moment in history. I believe in our ability to perfect this union because it's the only reason I'm standing here today. And I know the promise of America because I have lived it.

It is the light of opportunity that led my father across an ocean.

It is the founding ideals that the flag draped over my grandfather's coffin stands for – it is life, and liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

It's the simple truth I learned all those years ago when I worked in the shadows of a shuttered steel mill on the South Side of Chicago – that in this country, justice can be won against the greatest of odds; hope can find its way back to the darkest of corners; and when we are told that we cannot bring about the change that we seek, we answer with one voice – yes we can.

So don't ever forget that this election is not about me, or any candidate. Don't ever forget that this campaign is about you – about your hopes, about your dreams, about your struggles, about securing your portion of the American Dream.

Don't ever forget that we have a choice in this country – that we can choose not to be divided; that we can choose not to be afraid; that we can still choose this moment to finally come together and solve the problems we've talked about all those other years in all those other elections.

This time can be different than all the rest. This time we can face down those who say our road is too long; that our climb is too steep; that we can no longer achieve the change that we seek. This is our time to answer the call that so many generations of Americans have answered before – by insisting that by hard work, and by sacrifice, the American Dream will endure. Thank you, and may God Bless the United States of America. - - -

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-05-08 20:09:00)

Go on to <http://www.brucechapmanproductions.com/index.html>

Anonymous (2008-05-08 20:09:00)

Hi

Anonymous (2008-05-08 20:11:00)

Go on to <http://www.brucechapmanproductions.com/index.html>

Things looking up in Indiana! (2008-05-06 18:42)

I'm not predicting a win, but Barack has closed to within 4 points and Lake County, a suburb of Chicago has not reported any votes yet.

A wide spread in Lake County might guarantee a win now regardless of what happens in the rest of the state. However, Barack also looks strong in a few other counties.

It may be that counting will go on for some time before we know the winner.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-05-06 21:42:00)

If they give IN. to Obama because of one county, i'm going to write the DNC and tell them off. But i wouldn't vote for Obama if he was the only one running.

Obama nets more popular votes (2008-05-06 22:18)

Well, looks like Hillary pulled out a close victory in Indiana by two points.

Overall, Obama will net about 205,000 to 215,000 more popular votes than Hillary taking into account both North Carolina and Indiana.

Let's see if the superdelegates respond tomorrow.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-05-07 07:58)

Primary results put super squeeze on superdelegates to back Obama

Jeff Haynes/REUTERS/Chris Keane

Sen. Clinton addresses her supporters in Indianapolis, Ind., while Obama attends an election night rally in Raleigh, N.C.

By Doug Stone

Wednesday, May 7, 2008

Sen. Barack Obama won decisively in the North Carolina primary (56 to 42 percent) Tuesday night while Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton won a close race in Indiana (51 to 49 percent), but the consensus among analysts was that Obama's victory carried more weight, as well as more delegates.

Adam Nagourney reported in The New York Times that "for Mr. Obama, the apparently divided outcome came after a brutal period in which he was on the defensive over the inflammatory comments of his former pastor. That he was able to hold his own under those circumstances should allow him to make a case that he has proved his resilience in the face of questions about race, values and patriotism — the very kinds of issues that the Clinton campaign has suggested would leave him vulnerable in the general election.

"When paired with Mr. Obama's comfortable victory in North Carolina, a bigger state, Mrs. Clinton's performance in Indiana did not seem to be enough to cut into Mr. Obama's lead in pledged delegates or in his overall lead in the popular vote. And because Mrs. Clinton did not appear to come particularly close in North Carolina, despite a substantial effort there, she lost an opportunity to sow new doubts among Democratic leaders about Mr. Obama's general-election appeal."

With record turnout in both states, "Obama took an overwhelming 91 percent of the black vote in North Carolina, according to exit polls, with Clinton taking only six percent. Clinton took 59 percent of the white vote, compared with 36 percent for Obama, according to the polls."

The delegate tally

The exit polls also showed that 81 percent said that the economic recession had affected them. Among those voters, "fifty-two percent ...said they think Obama is better suited to improve the economy, compared with 42 percent who said Clinton. Among voters who said they have been affected by the economy, Obama took 55 percent of the vote, compared with 41 percent for Clinton."

The Washington Post reported that "due to Obama's tremendous strength among black voters in North Carolina, he carried nearly every major demographic category as well. Obama won among men 57 percent to 39 percent over Clinton; he won among women, 54 percent to 42 percent."

Obama's delegate count brought him closer to the nomination — 1,840.5 to 1,684 for Clinton in The Associated Press count, out of 2,025 needed to win the nomination.

Obama also enjoys a popular vote margin of roughly 500,000 and has won 31 contests to Clinton's 16.

So Obama continues to lead in all categories: delegates, popular vote and elections. And the margins will increase after Tuesday, meaning it will be difficult, if not impossible, for Clinton to overtake him. And it will be increasingly difficult for uncommitted superdelegates to deny him the nomination, many analysts suggested last night on the cable network talkathons. But Clinton has shown no signs of being willing to drop out.

Clinton emphasized populist themes during recent weeks, The Times reported, "yet she was unable to build her base of support substantially beyond the white, working-class voters who had sustained her for the last month — and that will not be lost on the super delegates, the elected Democrats and party leaders who will ultimately decide this fight."

Obama's controversial former pastor, The Rev. Jeremiah Wright, played a role in the election in both states, CBS reported, with half saying it was important in their vote and half saying it was not.

'Defining moment in history'

In an impassioned speech to supporters last night in Raleigh, N.C., Obama, shaking off several weeks of campaign turmoil, talked as though he would be the eventual nominee.

"We stand less than 200 delegates away from securing the Democratic nomination for president of the United States," he said. "But ultimately, this race is not about Hillary Clinton or Barack Obama or John McCain...because we all agree that at this defining moment in history — a moment when we're facing two wars, an economy in turmoil, a planet in peril — we can't afford to give John McCain the chance to serve out George Bush's third term," Obama said. "We need change in America."

Clinton, flanked by the former president and her daughter, Chelsea, did not declare victory in Indiana in a speech late last night, but came close.

"Not too long ago my opponent made a prediction; he said I would probably win Pennsylvania. He would probably win in North Carolina. And Indiana would be a tiebreaker," she said. "Well, we've broken the tie, and thanks to you it's full speed on to the White House." But Clinton also assured her supporters and the television audience that she would work for the party nominee in the fall.

Whoever ultimately wins the nomination will have a good deal of work to do to woo back the other candidate's supporters, according to exit polls.

CNN reported that "half of Clinton's supporters in Indiana would not vote for Obama in a general election match up with Sen. John McCain... A third of Clinton voters said they would pick McCain over Obama, while 17 percent said they would not vote at all. Forty-eight percent of Clinton supporters said they would back Obama in November. Obama got even less support from Clinton backers in North Carolina where 45 percent of Clinton supporters said they would vote for him over McCain. Thirty-eight percent of Clinton supporters said they would vote for McCain while 12 percent said they would not vote.

"Obama voters appear to be more willing to support Clinton in November. In Indiana, 59 percent of Obama backers said they'd vote for Clinton, and 70 percent of Obama backers in North Carolina said they'd vote for her against McCain."

Poll experts point out that those numbers may change significantly by the general election, but they still present challenges for the eventual Democratic nominee, particularly Obama.

Doug Stone is director of College Relations at Macalester College in St. Paul and a former reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune and assistant news director at WCCO-TV. The views in this article are not those of Macalester College.

Obama News on Wednesday (2008-05-07 12:19)

Brian Cardarella is donating half of his Bush stimulus check to the Obama campaign, and he's encouraging others to consider donating a portion of their checks. Obviously, the Bush economy makes it harder for many people to donate, but that hasn't stopped Barack from breaking all fundraising records.

Today, Barack picked up three additional superdelegates, former Clinton supporter and South Dakota senator George McGovern was said to have switched to Obama after asking Hillary to concede.

Barack now needs 170 more delegates to gain the nomination. From barackobama.com :

Three Superdelegates Endorse Obama; Delegate Countdown - 170 To Go

by Sam Graham-Felsen,

Wednesday, May 07, 2008 at 11:51 AM

Chicago, IL - The day after Barack Obama's commanding victory in North Carolina and tight finish in Indiana, three superdelegates today endorsed Barack Obama.

The three previously uncommitted superdelegates endorsing Obama are North Carolina Democratic Party Chairman Jerry Meek, North Carolina DNC member Jeanette Council, and California DNC member Inola Henry.

These endorsements brings the total number of superdelegates to endorse Obama to 261. Senator Obama is 170 delegates away from securing the Democratic nomination.

Chairman Meek said, "Over the past year, I've watched as Barack Obama has drawn countless new people to the political process. Although my position as State Chair has led me to remain neutral through the primary, I've quietly celebrated as Barack Obama offered new hope to millions of Americans who have lost faith in the American dream after years of disastrous Republican policies. Rarely does a public servant emerge with Barack Obama's ability to unite our country and produce real change. With Barack Obama as our nominee, North Carolina can deliver its electoral votes to a Democrat and Democratic candidates up and down the ballot will benefit. Barack Obama offers the best chance to take back the White House, elect countless democrats down-ballot, and breathe new life into the Democratic Party."

Jeanette Council said, "I am pleased today to be endorsing Barack Obama as he continues to unite Americans for change. This election is a unique opportunity for all Americans and Barack Obama's campaign has inspired and changed the entire face of our country. His campaign has mobilized new people and welcomed people of all ages, races, backgrounds, attracted everyone from first time voters to voters who have participated their entire adult lives. The way he has built a campaign that reflects his message of hope and change and brought all different communities to the table is unlike any campaign I have ever seen."

Council added, "I am first and foremost a Democrat and the Democratic Party is truly the party of the people, the party of inclusion that wants to engage all people in the political process. This is what Barack Obama has done. Seeing this happen, especially here in North Carolina, has changed me forever and given me hope that we can change this country. I put much thought, consideration and most importantly prayer into this decision, and today I know I am backing a candidate who can put our country on the right path. I'm proud to endorse him today."

Let's keep building the momentum. It's up to us to make sure this movement continues to grow...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

30 Superdelegates to Endorse Obama? (2008-05-07 20:59)

Drudge.com says that 30 superdelegates are set to endorse Sen. Barack Obama over the next 48 hours giving James Zogby as the source of the information.

Zogby also reportedly said that party elders and officials will begin pressuring Hillary Clinton to exit the race and unite the party behind Barack.

There is some talk that Hillary may begin campaigning for the VP spot instead.

National Voter Registration Day: This Saturday

by Christopher Hass,

Wednesday, May 07, 2008 at 06:07 PM

This Saturday, we're launching Vote for Change, an unprecedented 50-state voter registration and mobilization drive. In one day more than 100 events will be held across the country, with at least one event in every single state. No matter where you live, you can find an event near you. After a brief training, we'll hit the streets to register voters.

The events this Saturday will kick-off of a six-month voter registration drive that could reshape the electoral map. If more Americans get involved, get registered and show up to vote, we can change Washington this November.

Recent voter registration drives have registered more than 200,000 new Democrats in Pennsylvania, more than 165,000 new Democrats in North Carolina, and more than 150,000 new Democrats in Indiana. Those numbers just scratch the surface of what's possible.

With this election, we have the chance to ensure that more voters than ever take an active stake in our country's future.

Click on a state below to find an event near you: [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on McCain Preachers (2008-05-08 08:18)

John Hagee on Catholic Church, Hurricane Katrina, etc.

[EMBED]

McCain endorser Rod Parsley on the U.S. government's campaign of genocide against African Americans.

[EMBED]

Parsley calls on U.S. to destroy Islam. McCain calls Parsley a spiritual guide, the latter saying United States created to battle Islam.

[EMBED]

Interestingly, McCain once criticized the religious right as "agents of intolerance" and decried those who pandered to such preachers.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on McCain Preachers (2008-05-08 08:18)

John Hagee on Catholic Church ('Great Whore')

[EMBED]

Obama Moves To Unify Party Against McCain (2008-05-08 21:55)

Check out the Washington Post article on Barack Obama's moves to unite the party for the general election in November.

Obama Seeks To Unify Party For November

Meanwhile, Clinton Gives No Hint She'll Surrender

By Shailagh Murray and Perry Bacon Jr.

Washington Post Staff Writers

Friday, May 9, 2008; Page A01

Sen. Barack Obama began taking the first steps to unify the fractured Democratic Party for a general-election battle against Sen. John McCain, even as Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton continued to insist that she has the backing of a broader coalition that could carry the party to victory in November.

Returning to Washington yesterday, Obama was mobbed by well-wishers as he walked onto the House floor. But behind the scenes, his campaign worked with a light touch to win over uncommitted superdelegates and allies of Clinton, mindful of not appearing overconfident and of the fact that they would need the backing of the candidate, her husband and their supporters in the fall.

With numerous prominent Democrats believed to be waiting in the wings to endorse his candidacy, Obama appears poised to win the pledged delegates and superdelegates he will need to claim the Democratic nomination as early as May 20, when Kentucky and Oregon vote. But although he appeared to lock down his lead on Tuesday with a strong win in North Carolina and a narrow loss in Indiana, he won only two new superdelegate endorsements yesterday, from Reps. Rick Larsen (Wash.) and Brad Miller (N.C.). Many other unaligned lawmakers said they are likely to remain on the sidelines for the time being, in deference to Clinton.

"Superdelegates understandably would prefer not to be seen as the deciding factor," Obama told reporters between meetings at the Capitol, brushing aside the suggestion that a mass endorsement is in the offing. "I think they respect the process, they respect Senator Clinton and myself."

As Clinton campaigned in West Virginia, which will hold its primary on Tuesday, her backers were also calling superdelegates, encouraging them to remain uncommitted until after the final two primaries on June 3 and touting poll numbers suggesting that Clinton would be a stronger nominee in key states such as Florida and Ohio. "Some people don't agree, but most people respect the argument," said Steve Grossman, a member of Clinton's national finance team.

In Charleston, W.Va., yesterday, Clinton argued that the coalition of voters backing her would make her more viable than Obama against McCain. "The delegate math may get complicated, but the electoral math is easy: We need 270 electoral votes to win in November," she said at a rally.

Clinton is expected to win the state by a hefty margin. Yesterday, she repeatedly referred to her appeal among "hardworking Americans," including "Catholic voters, Hispanic voters, blue-collar voters and seniors – the kind of people who Senator McCain will be fighting for in the general election." She did not repeat the term "white voters," which she used in a USA Today interview published yesterday.

She also gave no hint of surrender in a letter to Obama about the delegate impasse involving Florida and Michigan. "Your commitment to the voters of these states must be clearly stated and your support for a fair and quick resolution must be clearly demonstrated," she wrote.

After Tuesday's primaries left Obama the clear Democratic front-runner, McCain's campaign refocused its attention on the senator from Illinois, preparing to question his experience on national security and his credentials on reform issues. Clinton, meanwhile, had become an afterthought for the presumptive GOP nominee.

"After I've been saying for a year, 'Don't count the Clintons out until they're out.' People are laughing at me," said Charles Black, a McCain campaign adviser. "I don't see how she does it."

Mark Salter, a senior McCain adviser, struck back sharply after Obama said on CNN that McCain was "losing his bearings" when he suggested that Hamas preferred that Obama be elected. Salter said Obama used the phrase "intentionally, a not particularly clever way of raising John McCain's age as an issue. This is typical of Obama's style of campaigning."

In Chicago, Obama's team worked to accelerate a transition to general-election mode that began weeks ago, only to be shelved as the primary showdown continued. In addition to competing in the six remaining contests, Obama will mix in stops to battleground states in the coming weeks, advisers said.

Next Page

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Small-Town Shelley (2008-05-09 05:02:00)

I am one of those supposed "racist Democrats" who won't support Senator Obama because he is black. I would like to speak up for we the people, in Small-Town America.

All of the people I know that will not vote for him in the fall, (both black and white), don't feel like he has enough experience. We feel that he was judgmental of us before we even went to the polls. I do not appreciate being told that because I don't believe his hope and dreams crap that I am racist! (San Francisco meeting)

I listened to him flat lie and say that he didn't hear Wright say those things, and the next day in his speech, he said he did. I can not and will not believe he didn't know Wright's views.

I have a problem with his twenty year affiliation with that church! The "snippets" that were exposed. . . were purchased on DVD on the church web site. So not only did Wright say those things, they also sold that Anti-American poison for profit to who ever wanted to hear it.

Also, I have a problem with the fact that Senator Obama remained a loyal member of that church until it wasn't politically correct for him to do so.

In his race speech- he called the black community shockingly ignorant, he blamed the welfare system for the erosion of the black family, and said they were ashamed, etc. . . I don't think those comments were very nice either. I feel they were insulting to the black community! As a matter of fact, I would put it right up there with his "Cling/ Antipathy Theory."

I also have a problem with his judgement in the friends that he has kept. He has too many questionable associations for my liking! The news media is blaming Hillary Clinton for his lack of blue-collar white support, when in fact. . .they should blame Senator Obama, his thoughtless mouth, his arrogance, his lack of judgement and experience, as well as his Washington, and media supporters!

You shouldn't classify and judge a group of people that you need to stand behind you! (that is just plain stupid!) If Obama is crammed down our throats, and the Hillary bashing continues, Me and all of the people I know, will vote Mc Cain in the fall. We have had it!

I never thought I would say this, but If he is our nominee without every vote being counted in all fifty states, I will be a life long Republican because my party will have failed us and will have went against the values and processes that I feel make America great!

Union and Four Superdelegates Endorse Barack Obama (2008-05-09 09:54)

Sen. Barack Obama picked four superdelegates today and the endorsement of an important union.

The American Federation of Government Employees and its president John Gage endorsed Obama today.

"Our people, I think, recognize the enthusiasm and vitality behind Senator Obama's campaign," AFGE President John Gage said. Gage is also a superdelegate.

The other superdelegate endorsements are Reps. Peter DeFazio (D-OR) and Donald Payne (D-NJ); and DNC member Ed Espinosa of California.

Obama now needs only 163 more delegates to clinch the nomination.

X

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Four more Superdelegates for Obama (2008-05-09 13:34)

Barack Obama picked up four more superdelegates today for a total of eight so far on Friday. The new endorsements are:

- * The campaign has announced via press release the endorsement of Congresswoman Mazie Hirono of Hawaii.
- * New Mexico add-on super-del Laurie Weahkee, who was selected as an uncommitted super, has announced for Obama.
- * The Obama campaign has announced the support of South Carolina state party vice chair Wilber Lee Jeffcoat.
- * California DNC member Vernon Watkins has endorsed Obama, saying simply: "The election is over, everybody knows that. Obama has won."

Here is what Mazie Hirono had to say about her endorsement:

Today I announce my endorsement of Senator Barack Obama for President of the United States. I do so after watching these historic campaigns unfold across our country, where hundreds of thousands of people participated as never before. It is clear that Americans want our country back on a course of hope and opportunity.

I make my announcement with deep respect and admiration for Hillary Clinton. She is an extraordinary woman. However, it is time to unite the party behind Senator Obama and to use our energy and resources to defeat Senator John McCain. Barack Obama can unite our Party and our country and bring about the positive changes Americans want.

Of course, all of us are especially proud of Senator Obama's deep roots here in our state, and overwhelmingly embraced his candidacy in our recent caucus. His love for Hawaii and understanding of its diversity have given him a foundation for understanding the diversity of our country. I am proud to endorse Senator Obama and I look forward to a winning campaign.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Get Out the Vote in West Virginia (2008-05-09 21:31)

Here's an appeal for help in West Virginia from Field Director Rachel Signman.

Right now, thousands of people in West Virginia are thinking seriously about which way they'll vote when they go to the polls on Tuesday.

You can make their decision easy.

The West Virginia primary is coming up on Tuesday, May 13th, and we have an opportunity to secure some of the final available delegates and move a big step closer to the nomination.

We can't do this without your help — and you can make a difference right from your home.

Our team has put together a list of the potential supporters here in West Virginia whom we most need to reach by Tuesday. Your voice could persuade them to cast their votes for Barack — but only if you use our simple online tool right now and give them a call.

We have thousands of potential supporters to reach, and no time to waste — please pick up the phone and start calling for Barack right away.

Barack had a big night on Tuesday because people like you, not just from North Carolina and Indiana but from states near and far, decided to take action, reach out to potential supporters, and build this movement one voter at a time.

You can carry our momentum forward in West Virginia — and with Election Day just four days away, we need your help now more than ever.

Even if you have never made a call for Barack before, you'll be able to make a difference. Simply log in and get started — it's easy!

I hope you'll make a few calls every day between now and Tuesday — start right now.

Thank you,

Rachel

Rachel Sigman

West Virginia Field Director

Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

(2008-05-09 21:31)

Here's an appeal for help in West Virginia from

Right now, thousands of people in West Virginia are thinking seriously about which way they'll vote when they go to the polls on Tuesday.

You can make their decision easy.

The West Virginia primary is coming up on Tuesday, May 13th, and we have an opportunity to secure some of the final available delegates and move a big step closer to the nomination.

We can't do this without your help — and you can make a difference right from your home.

Our team has put together a list of the potential supporters here in West Virginia whom we most need to reach by Tuesday. Your voice could persuade them to cast their votes for Barack — but only if you use our simple online tool right now and give them a call.

We have thousands of potential supporters to reach, and no time to waste — please pick up the phone and start calling for Barack right away.

Barack had a big night on Tuesday because people like you, not just from North Carolina and Indiana but from states near and far, decided to take action, reach out to potential supporters, and build this movement one voter at a time. You can carry our momentum forward in West Virginia — and with Election Day just four days away, we need your help now more than ever.

Even if you have never made a call for Barack before, you'll be able to make a difference. Simply log in and get started — it's easy!

I hope you'll make a few calls every day between now and Tuesday — start right now.

Thank you,

Rachel

Rachel Sigman

West Virginia Field Director

Obama for America

More Superdelegates for Obama: 156 to go (2008-05-10 10:08)

The number of delegates that Barack Obama needs to win the nomination shrunk to 156 after House Rep. Harry Mitchell (D-AZ) and two Virgin Island superdelegates endorsed the Illinois senator today.

Carole Burke and Kevin Rodriguez of the Virgin Islands threw their support to Obama. Rodriguez said:

While I have great respect for Senator Clinton, today I am announcing my support for Barack Obama. Senator Obama has brought a new generation and energy into the democratic process and the Democratic Party. He has shown he can connect with Democrats, Republicans and Independents across this country, whether we live on the mainland or an island. Senator Obama's judgment to lead, courage to tell the truth and commitment to working men and women make him the best candidate to lead this country forward.

Mitchell made this statement about his endorsement:

I'm proud to support Barack Obama for President. Senator Obama and I worked together last year to improve care for our soldiers and veterans in the wake of the scandal at Walter Reed, and I know that, as President, he will work hard for our men and women in uniform. Like the primary voters of my congressional district, which Senator Obama carried, I am inspired by Barack's vision for America, his ability to unify our country and bring much-needed change to Washington.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: Barack Obama in Oregon (2008-05-11 10:06)

Sen. Barack Obama, in Bend, Oregon, discusses the importance of investing in renewable energy.

[EMBED]

Barack during Friday night's rally in Eugene, Oregon.

[EMBED]

Check out the Flickr slide show of Barack's visit to PV Powered company in Bend, Oregon. Founded in 2003, PV

Powered produces DC to AC solar power inverters encourages adoption of solar power by producing reliable, easy to install inverters. Photovoltaic energy is one of the areas Obama promotes in his green energy plan.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

CA Superdelegate Crystal Strait supports Barack Obama (2008-05-11 15:48)

Today, Crystal Strait, one of the superdelegates I happen to know personally, endorsed Barack Obama. The former president of the California Young Democrats released this statement.

While representing the Young Democrats of America at the DNC, my number one priority is to ensure that young people are fully represented at the polls and in the Party. Barack Obama has shown a real commitment to young voters in his campaign and in response young people have overwhelmingly voted and caucused for Obama in these primary contests. We know that if a young person votes three times in a row for a Party, they become a Party voter for life. We know that because of high youth turnout in 2004 and 2006, 2008 is the third and critical election for young voters. And that's why I know I want to pledge my delegate vote to Barack Obama.

Barack needs 155 more delegates to win the nomination.

[EMBED]

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius talks about Vote for Change, the Obama campaign voter registration drive aimed at getting more people involved in the process.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Vote for Change Video (2008-05-12 09:02)

Here's a new music video in support of Barack Obama but with a focus on taking on John McCain in the fall.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-05-12 09:06)

Across the blogosphere, murmurings can be heard over the possibility of a Obama-Clinton "dream ticket."

Superdelegates Flock to Obama (2008-05-12 11:27)

The superdelegate endorsements are rolling in today for Barack Obama.

So far, Sen. Daniel Akaka and DNC member Dolly Strazar of Hawai'i, Rep. Tom Allen of Maine and Idaho DNC member Keith Roark have declared their support for Obama.

Here is Sen. Akaka's statement.

For more than a year, people have asked me who I plan to endorse for President of the United States. I've waited this long for several reasons. The Democratic campaign began with more than ten declared candidates. As a veteran of more than 30 years on Capitol Hill, I knew each and everyone of them and had worked closely with all. I had no doubt that each of them had the knowledge and ability to lead our country out of the financial and diplomatic chaos that we've experienced for the past eight years.

Having waged a number of campaigns myself, I can tell you they are not easy. Campaigns are tests, and there's no tougher one than running for President. Like many Americans, I've followed the campaign for President closely and with growing interest, eager to see which candidate would articulate a vision for our country, encourage hope and renew faith in our government, and stand to the rigors of a nationwide contest.

After giving it a lot of thought, I've decided that for me, that candidate is Barack Obama.

Rather than echo his supporters or review his platform on health care, the environment, or the war in Iraq, I want to add a different voice to those who believe Senator Obama would make a fine President. He is the antidote we need to cure Washington of the uninspired, partisan politics that has plagued our country far too long.

What makes him uniquely qualified? A March 2008 feature in Vanity Fair magazine offers a clue: "He was born and came of age in Hawaii, the 50th state and in many ways among the freest-thinking, where mixed-race ancestry is ...a given... If Obama comes across as a bit of a softy—if you don't see the toughness or the ambition at first—it may be in part because he spent his formative years in a place where 'Live Aloha' had not yet become a slogan aimed at recapturing a more gracious time, but was simply a way of life."

I have great hope, that in his own way, Barack Obama will achieve what I have been working to accomplish my entire Congressional career, more tolerance and understanding, an appreciation for common goals and interests, rather than an emphasis on our differences.

While I am pledging my support to Senator Obama, I want to make it very clear that I hold both Senator Hillary Clinton and President Bill Clinton in the highest regard as colleagues and friends. Senator Clinton has campaigned hard and well and I wish her all the best as we move forward. In an example of her leadership and commitment, Senator Clinton has promised that come November, the Democratic Party will be united behind our presidential nominee and I send her my fondest aloha for her courage and selflessness.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack talks on Veterans in Charleston, West Virginia (2008-05-12 17:04)

Sen. Barack Obama talks about veterans in Charleston, West Virginia on May 12, 2008. Barack supports Sen. Jim Webb's proposal for a new GI Bill that would provide veterans a first class education. Sen. John McCain opposes the bill as 'too generous.'

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

West Virginia Votes (2008-05-13 08:11)

You can help get out the vote in West Virginia by calling voters:

And here's poll information for West Virginia from barackobama.com:

West Virginia: Polls Are Open Now

by Christopher Hass,

Tuesday, May 13, 2008 at 03:36 AM

Right now, people across West Virginia are heading to their polling locations to cast their votes. Polls are open from 6:30 AM. to 7:30 PM, and you can look up your polling location online now. As Barack wrote in an email to West Virginians last night:

For more than a year, you have been dedicated to the idea that when ordinary people come together, we can do extraordinary things.

It's been inspiring to see our movement grow in the Mountain State, and it strengthens my faith that the American people — not just here in West Virginia, but across the country — are ready to stop settling for what the cynics tell us we must accept and start reaching for what's possible.

Tuesday is an opportunity for us to earn some of the last remaining pledged delegates, and take another big step toward the nomination.

If you get out and vote — and bring others to vote too — our movement will continue to grow. The world will know that people like you stood up for a different kind of politics. And real change will be within reach.

As you head to the polls, here's what you'll need to know:

- Polls are open from 6:30 AM. to 7:30 PM Eastern. If you are in line when the polls close at 7:30 PM, you have the right to vote.
- First-time voters who registered by mail should bring a valid and current photo ID, current utility bill, bank statement, paycheck, or a government document that shows the name and address of the voter.
- The primary is open to Democrats and Independents. Independents need to request a Democratic ballot to vote in the Democratic primary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More Superdelegates Join Obama (2008-05-13 08:47)

Four more superdelegates have endorsed Barack Obama so far today. Indiana Rep. Joe Donnelly, New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin, DC Superdelegate Anita Bonds and former DNC chief Roy Romer all announced their support for the Illinois senator.

Donnelly said:

"Today, I am pleased to announce my support for Barack Obama. At a time when too many Americans have lost faith in their government, Senator Obama can move us beyond the politics of stalemate and gridlock that has kept us from meeting the monumental challenges of our time: our dependence on foreign oil, a health care gap that leaves tens of millions uninsured, the steady deterioration of our manufacturing base, and an economy that is not working for working people.

"The Democratic Party's strength comes from its core commitment to the American Dream and from a coalition that is ideologically, economically, geographically and ethnically diverse. Barack Obama will stand with working families while building that coalition so that we can change this country, and that's why he's the best choice for America."

And here is Mayor Nagin's statement:

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, Senator Obama worked to help address the needs of our Gulf Coast communities. As the Gulf Coast continues to rebuild, other cities have faced tragic disasters across this country. Therefore, it is critical that this country's infrastructure and emergency response systems are evaluated and rebuilt to sustain our cities and protect our families. What happened in Louisiana should never happen again.

I have learned firsthand that a unified constituency can make what seems impossible, possible. Senator Obama represents a new generation of leadership, one that can help heal the divisions of the past and unify this country so that together we can build a stronger future.

Since the immediate days following the storm, I have been travelling to our nation's capitol to advocate for policies that aid our rebuilding effort. I know firsthand, we desperately need the leadership of someone committed to changing the system in Washington that can hold us back from moving forward. For these reasons, I endorse Barack Obama for the Democratic presidential nominee.

Barack now only needs 146 more delegates to win the nomination.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Crow Nation and Ft. Peck Tribes Endorse Barack Obama (2008-05-13 14:00)

The Crow Nation and Fort Peck Tribes announced their endorsement of Barack Obama today. The Indian Nations are powerful political forces in the states of Montana and South Dakota. Tribal leaders released this statement.

Sen. Obama's leadership qualities and commitment to issues of importance to Indian country distinguish him from his opponents" said Chairman A.T. Stafne of the Ft. Peck Tribes" Our twelve voting members in the Tribal Council passed this endorsement resolution unanimously. I was personally impressed with his commitment to a true government-to-government relationship and his promise to appoint a Native American policy advisor in his White House. "

"Senator Obama understands the challenges facing Native Americans in Montana," said Crow Nation Chairman Carl Venne. "His record as a US Senator shows that he cares about Indian communities. He respects Indian sovereignty and is a strong advocate for Indian healthcare and education.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Wednesday (2008-05-14 11:14)

Barack Obama is campaigning now more for the general election than the primary. He appeared today in Michigan talking about green manufacturing, and last night he discussed the economy in Cape Girardeau, Missouri. These are both important swing states that could go either way this November.

The victory yesterday of a Democrat in a Mississippi Republican stronghold is yet more evidence than many more states may "swing" than would be expected using traditional red state, blue state maps. Hillary Clinton's arguments on electability really do not take into account important new demographic trends.

More Superdelegates for Obama

Today, four more superdelegates have hopped aboard the Obama train.

From the College Democrats of America (CDA), CDA President Lauren Wolfe and CDA Vice President Awais Khaleel announced their support for Obama. Indiana Rep. Pete Visclosky and Democrats Abroad Chair and superdelegate Christine Schon Marques also threw their support to Obama.

[EMBED]

CDA President and Vice President express their support for Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

Barack talks about the economy last night in Missouri.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sara - pension comparison (2008-05-14 12:41:00)

I want Barack Obama to be President. He has lived abroad, is aware of cultural diversity and as a young person experienced an active social life... the guy has lived a little!

NARAL endorses Barack Obama (2008-05-14 13:28)

Barack Obama scored a surprise endorsement today when NARAL Pro Choice America announced their support for the Illinois senator.

"Today, we are proud to put our organization's grass-roots and political support behind the pro-choice candidate whom we believe will secure the Democratic nomination and advance to the general election," NARAL's president said in the release. "That candidate is Sen. Obama."

Obama also got another superdelegate today when Oklahoma Senate President Pro Tempore Mike Morgan announced his endorsement.

"Senator Obama embodies the character of a leader that I believe all Oklahomans and all Americans want—principled and strong and ready to change the way business is done in Washington. He understands bringing people together and giving everyone a seat at the table will move our state and our country forward, and I deeply admire that about Senator Obama."

Barack now needs 134.5 more delegates to win the nomination.

[EMBED]

Barack talks about his green manufacturing agenda at Macomb County, Michigan.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

John Edwards to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-05-14 14:30)

The Associated Press is confirming that former senator and presidential candidate John Edwards has endorsed Barack Obama.

Campaign spokeswoman Jen Psaki said Mr. Edwards will join Sen. Obama at his Grand Rapids, Mich., rally where he will announce his endorsement.

Mr. Edwards, who dropped out of the race for the Democratic nomination in January, placed second in the Iowa caucuses and was a favorite of the party's liberal wing.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: John Edwards Joins Barack Obama (2008-05-14 18:25)

Check out the video of John Edwards endorsement of Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

Obama also sent out this email announcing the endorsement.

Friend –

I have some very exciting news.

My good friend John Edwards is endorsing our campaign and joining our movement for change.

We're here in Grand Rapids, Michigan – and if you receive this message in time, you can probably turn on your TV and be part of the moment.

I'm deeply honored by John's support. He is a true leader who dedicated his career to improving the lives of ordinary Americans.

John ran a strong, principled campaign for president, focusing on a number of important issues where we share common ground – universal health care, bringing our troops home from Iraq, and eliminating poverty in America.

The way he ran his campaign was also important. He ran in a way that reflected our shared conviction that we need to fundamentally change politics.

Like our campaign, John's campaign never accepted donations from Washington lobbyists or special interest PACs.

Let's welcome John Edwards to the campaign with an outpouring of the kind of grassroots support that is bringing our political process back to the people.

Make a donation of whatever you can afford now, and if you choose, include your own note to Senator Edwards. I'll make sure he gets them:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/johnedwards>

Thank you for all that you're doing,

Barack

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Thursday (2008-05-15 11:46)

Sen. Barack Obama has picked up four more superdelegates and the endorsement of a major union today. The United Steelworkers and superdelegates, Larry Cohen, Communications Workers of America President; Congressmen Henry Waxman, Howard Berman and Jim McDermott all announced their support for Obama. Here is the statement from the United Steelworkers.

When the presidential primary contests began last year, our Union felt strongly that because of Senator John Edwards's deep commitment to working people and because of our shared beliefs, he deserved our strong endorsement. His belief that unfair trade policies must be changed, his commitment to pass the Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA) to restore workers' rights to freely choose workplace representation, and his proposal for universal health care were widely shared by our members.

Today, by virtue of a unanimous vote of our International Executive Board, we find ourselves once again in agreement with Senator Edwards, this time with his decision last evening to endorse Senator Barack Obama. And thus today, the United Steelworkers enthusiastically endorses Senator Barack Obama to be the next President of the United States.

Senator Obama's call for a significant change of direction amounts to far more than a compelling rallying cry. It is buttressed by his record of consistent support for workers, by his call for sweeping changes to our health care system, by his unflinching support for Employee Free Choice, and by his insistence that America's trade policies must, first and foremost, serve the interests of America's working families.

Senator Obama has shown his commitment to working families by proposing significant investments in the future of American manufacturing, in the revitalization of our nation's infrastructure, and in 21st century clean energy technologies that will lead to significant growth in domestic jobs. He is clearly the candidate who can best lead our nation out of the dark period of economic decline created by the Bush administration's allegiance to Wall Street profiteering at the expense of worker prosperity.

We share Senator Obama's call for significant changes to these bankrupt policies, just as we earlier shared Senator Edwards'. And all of us, including we hope Senator Clinton for whom we have the utmost respect, must now do everything we can to ensure that Barack Obama is the next President of the United States. Now is the time for contention and division to cease, and for us to unite behind the changes for which Senator Obama and our members are calling.

America's workers cannot afford another four years of rehashed Bush administration policies, another four years in which the National Labor Relations Board shills for corporate misconduct, or another four years of a Secretary of the Treasury who considers it his “job” to bail out Wall Street speculators at the expense of hard working families loosing their homes.

Nor can those of us who are committed to changing the direction of the country afford any more racial profiling of an election, when either Democratic candidate would be far superior to Senator McCain's lock-step commitment to four more years of the broken Bush economy and the broken Bush foreign policies.

We are proud and honored to join Senator Edwards in endorsing Senator Barack Obama to be the next President of the United States. We commit ourselves to working tirelessly for his election and for a new age of cooperation among Democrats, Independents and thoughtful Republicans alike in which working Americans are restored to a place of dignity in society and in the American economy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Old College Buddies recall Obama (2008-05-15 11:51)

An interesting read from the Associated Press.

Old friends recall Obama's years in LA, NY

By ADAM GOLDMAN and ROBERT TANNER – 35 minutes ago

NEW YORK (AP) — The way Sohale Siddiqi remembers it, he and his old roommate were walking his pug Charlie on Broadway when a large, scary bum approached them, stomping on the ground near the dog's head.

This was in the 1980s, a time when New York was a fearful place beset by drugs and crime, when the street smart knew that the best way to handle the city's derelicts was to avoid them entirely. But Siddiqi was angry and he confronted the bum, who approached him menacingly.

Until his skinny, Ivy League-educated friend — Barack Obama — intervened.

He “stepped right in between. ... He planted his face firmly in the face of the guy. ‘Hey, hey, hey.’ And the guy backpedaled and we kept walking,” Siddiqi recalls.

There was a time before Obama wore tailored suits — when his wardrobe consisted of $5 military-surplus khakis and used leather jackets, and he walked the streets of Manhattan for lack of bus fare. It was a time well before the political arena beckoned, when his friends thought he might become a writer or a lawyer, but certainly not the first black man with a real chance to become president of the United States.

Obama spent the six years between 1979 and 1985 at Occidental College in Los Angeles and then in New York at Columbia University and in the workplace. His memoir, “Dreams from My Father,” talks about this time, but not in great detail; Siddiqi, for example, is identified only as “Sadik” — “a short, well-built Pakistani” who smoked marijuana, snorted cocaine and liked to party.

Obama's campaign wouldn't identify “Sadik,” but The Associated Press located him in Seattle, where he raises money for a community theater.

Together, the recollections of Siddiqi and other friends and acquaintances from Obama's college years paint a portrait of the candidate as a young man.

They remember a good student with a sharp mind and unshakable integrity, a young man who already had a passion for the underprivileged. Some described the young Obama's personality as confident to the point of arrogance, a criticism that would emerge decades later, during the campaign.

Not everyone who knew Obama in those years is eager to talk.

Some explained that they feared inadvertently hurting Obama's campaign. Among his friends were Siddiqi and two other Pakistanis, all of them from Karachi; several of those interviewed said the Pakistanis were reluctant to talk for fear of stoking rumors that Obama is a Muslim.

"Obama in the eyes of some right wingers is basically Muslim until proved innocent," says Margot Mifflin, a friend from Occidental who is now a journalism professor at New York's Lehman College. "It's partly the Muslim factor by association and partly the fear of something being twisted."

The young man Mifflin remembers was "an unpretentious, down to earth, solidly middle-class guy who seemed somewhat more sophisticated than the average college student. He was slightly reserved and deliberate in a way that I sometimes thought betrayed an uncertainty."

But another former Oxy classmate, Robert McCrary, now general manager of a contract sewing company, saw him differently: "He definitely had a cocky, sometimes arrogant way about him. ... He was not open to others."

Of course, he was only 18 when he arrived at the small liberal arts college nicknamed "Oxy." His freshman roommates were Imad Husain, a Pakistani, who's now a Boston banker, and Paul Carpenter, now a Los Angeles lawyer.

Carpenter recalled Obama as "a good bodysurfer" who had "a funky red car, a Fiat," and who also played intramurals — flag football, tennis and water polo. "He was an athletic guy. He was gifted in that regard," said Carpenter. He also remembered Obama being "super bright. He could get through the course work in a fraction of the time it took me."

Obama had an international circle of friends — "a real eclectic sort of group," says Vinai Thummalapally, who himself came from Hyderabad, India.

As a freshman, he quickly became friends with Mohammed Hasan Chandoo and Wahid Hamid, two wealthy Pakistanis. There were others, Thummalapally recalls: a French student and both black and white Americans, including Jon K. Mitchell, who later played bass for country-swing band Asleep at the Wheel (Mitchell remembers that Obama wore puka shell necklaces all the time, though they were not in style, and that "we let it slide because he spent a lot of time growing up in Hawaii.")

The friends got together often to watch basketball games — they were Lakers fans — and eat the southern Indian food that Thummalapally cooked with his cousin.

There was serious talk, too. Obama had concerns about U.S. foreign policy — including the failed hostage rescue mission in Iran under Jimmy Carter, and American support of the Contras in Latin America.

Thummalapally lived with Obama the summer of 1980. The two ran together daily, three miles in the early morning, often chatting about their dreams. Thummalapally wanted to start a business back home; Obama talked about helping people.

"I want to get into public service," he recalls Obama saying. "I want to write and help people who are disadvantaged."

— — —

In 1981, Obama transferred from Occidental to Columbia. In between, he traveled to Pakistan — a trip that enhanced his foreign policy qualifications, he maintained in a private speech at a San Francisco fundraiser last month. Obama spent "about three weeks" in Pakistan, traveling with Hamid and staying in Karachi with Chandoo's family, said Bill Burton, Obama's press secretary.

"He was clearly shocked by the economic disparity he saw in Pakistan. He couldn't get over the sight of rural peasants bowing to the wealthy landowners they worked for as they passed," says Margot Mifflin, who makes a brief appearance in Obama's memoir.

When Obama arrived in New York, he already knew Siddiqi — a friend of Chandoo's and Hamid's from Karachi who had visited Los Angeles. Looking back, Siddiqi acknowledges that he and Obama were an odd couple. Siddiqi would mock Obama's idealism — he just wanted to make a lot of money and buy things, while Obama wanted to help the poor.

"At that age, I thought he was a saint and a square, and he took himself too seriously," Siddiqi said. "I would ask him why he was so serious. He was genuinely concerned with the plight of the poor. He'd give me lectures, which I found very boring. He must have found me very irritating."

Siddiqi offered the most expansive account of Obama as a young man.

"We were both very lost. We were both alienated, although he might not put it that way. He arrived disheveled and without a place to stay," said Siddiqi, who at the time worked as a waiter and as a salesman at a boutique.

The Obama campaign declined to discuss Obama's time at Columbia and his friendships in general. It won't, for example, release his transcript or name his friends. It did, however, list five locations where Obama lived during his four years here: three on Manhattan's Upper West Side and two in Brooklyn — one in Park Slope, the other in Brooklyn Heights. His memoir mentions two others on Manhattan's Upper East Side.

In about 1982, Siddiqi and Obama got an apartment at a sixth-floor walkup on East 94th Street. Siddiqi managed to get the apartment thanks to subterfuge.

"We didn't have a chance in hell of getting this apartment unless we fabricated the lease application," Siddiqi said.

Siddiqi fudged his credentials, saying he had a high-paying job at a catering company, but Obama "wanted no part of it. He put down the truth."

The apartment was "a slum of a place" in a drug-ridden neighborhood filled with gunshots, he said. "It wasn't a comfortable existence. We were slumming it." What little furniture they had was found on the street, and guests would have to hold their dinner plates in their laps.

While Obama has acknowledged using marijuana and cocaine during high school in Hawaii, he writes in the memoir that he stopped using soon after his arrival in New York. His roommate had no such scruples. But Siddiqi says that during their time together here, Obama always refused his offers of drugs.

In his memoir and in interviews, Obama has said he got serious and buckled down in New York. "I didn't socialize that much. I was like a monk," he said in a 2005 Columbia alumni magazine interview. He told biographer David Mendell: "For about two years there, I was just painfully alone and really not focused on anything, except maybe thinking a lot."

In his memoir, Obama recalls fasting on Sunday; Siddiqi says Obama was a follower of comedian-activist Dick Gregory's vegetarian diet. "I think self-deprivation was his schtick, denying himself pleasure, good food and all of that."

But it wasn't exactly an ascetic life. There was plenty of time for reading (Gabriel Garcia Marquez, V.S. Naipaul) and listening to music (Van Morrison, the Ohio Players, Bob Dylan). The two, along with others, went out for nights on the town. "He wasn't entirely a hermit," Siddiqi said.

Siddiqi said his female friends thought Obama was "a hunk."

"We were always competing," he said. "You know how it is. You go to a bar and you try hitting on the girls. He had a lot more success. I wouldn't out-compete him in picking up girls, that's for sure."

Obama was a tolerant roommate. Siddiqi's mother, who had never been around a black man, came to visit and she was rude; Obama was nothing but polite. Siddiqi himself could be intemperate — he called Obama an Uncle Tom, but "he was really patient. I'm surprised he suffered me."

Finally, their relationship started to fray. "I was partying all the time. I was disrupting his studies," Siddiqi said. Obama moved out.

In July 1985, after spending two years as a writer for a business newsletter and as a coordinator at City College in Harlem for an environmental and consumer advocacy group, Obama left New York for Chicago — where he found a job, a wife and, eventually, a political career.

— — —
Andrew Roth knew Obama at Occidental and in New York. He speaks bluntly: "The thought, believe me, never crossed my mind that he would be our first black president."

And yet, here he is, on the brink of the Democratic nomination. And he's gotten there with the help of some of those friends from so long ago.

Neither Hamid nor Chandoo would be interviewed for this story; Hamid is now a top executive at Pepsico in New York, and Chandoo is a self-employed financial consultant in the New York area.

Both have each contributed the maximum $2,300 to Obama's campaign, and records indicate each has joined an Asian-American council that supports his run for president. Both also are listed on Obama's campaign Web site as being among his top fundraisers, each bringing in between $100,000 and $200,000 in contributions from their networks of friends.

Both also attended Obama's wedding in 1992, according to published reports and other friends.

Thummalapally has stayed in contact with Obama, too, visiting him in New York, attending his wedding in 1992 and joining him in Springfield, Ill., for the Feb. 10, 2007, announcement of Obama's run for the White House.

President of a CD and DVD manufacturing company in Colorado Springs, Colo., Thummalapally also is listed as a top fundraiser on the campaign Web site.

Siddiqi has not kept in touch. His has been a difficult road; years after his time with Obama, Siddiqi says, he became addicted to cocaine and lost his business.

But when he needed help during his recovery, Obama — the roommate he drove away with his partying, the man he always suspected of looking down at him — gave him a job reference.

So yes, he's an Obama man, too. Witness the message on his answering machine:

"My name is Hal Siddiqi, and I approve of this message. Vote for peace, vote for hope, vote for change, and vote for Obama."

Associated Press writers Deborah Hastings in New York, Justin Pritchard in Los Angeles, Gene Johnson in Seattle, and AP researchers Judith Ausubel and Barbara Sambriski contributed to this story.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New Superdelegate – 120.5 to go (2008-05-16 09:22)

Yesterday, Barack picked up an extra pledge delegate in North Carolina after the final tally there, and seven of John Edwards pledged delegates. Today, so far, Rep. Pete Stark of California has endorsed Barack among the superdelegates. The campaign needs 120.5 more delegates to win the nomination. Only 24 pledged delegates are needed for Barack to clinch a majority in that all-important category, and he should garner those delegates on May 20 when both Oregon and Kentucky vote. Here is Congressman Stark's statement:

"Senator Barack Obama has captured the imagination of Americans in a way we've not seen for decades. He's inspired millions of young people to register to vote and join the ranks of our Democratic Party, he's consistently opposed the war, he advocates universal health care, and he delivers a message that transcends party politics at the same time.

"I have the greatest respect for Senator Clinton and for her many years of service, but I believe the time has come to unify our party. The outcome we need in November is a Democratic President. To achieve that, we must turn our focus squarely on Senator McCain and his quest to continue another four years of the failed Bush agenda.

"Barack Obama is the person we need as the next President of the United States of America. I'm excited to help him achieve that goal."

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama slams Bush-McCain (2008-05-16 12:14)

Not unpredictably, the Republicans are attacking the likely Democratic nominee on security issues as they want to keep voters minds off the economy. They want to talk about terrorists without reminding people too much about the quagmire in Iraq.

Barack Obama responded today to the attacks by George W. Bush and John McCain questioning the Illinois senator's willingness to negotiate with nation's like Iran.

[EMBED]

If you would like to hit back against these types of negative attacks, consider donating to the Obama campaign.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama slams Bush-McCain (2008-05-16 12:14)

Not unpredictably, the Republicans

Barry O'Bomber: Among nation's 25 'fittest guys' (2008-05-16 17:20)

The upcoming edition of Men's Fitness Magazine out on May 19, is rating Barack Obama as one of the 25 'fittest guys' in the nation.

"It takes a certain stamina to endure months of 16-hour days in pursuit of the land's highest office. Obama is not the first politician dedicated to fitness, but the Illinois senator starts every day with a morning workout, whether it's machines at the hotel gym or a brisk 45-minute run. He's also quit smoking. Obama can be excused for enjoying the occasional state-fair corn dog because he mostly stays away from fatty foods. He's also, as we've seen, a bit of a baller. Nicknamed "Barry O'Bomber" for his jump shot, the former high school hoopster now releases stress during pickup games—including one on every primary day. "He's wiry-looking but actually pretty strong," former Duke player and Obama staffer Reggie Love has said. "And he hates losing. He plays hard." Now that we know."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Charlene (2008-05-16 21:35:00)

Okay.. I've got the argument down that Obama is the "candidate for change" and I do wish I could believe that if he were to be elected that he wouldn't be able to turn his back to communities of color because he has experienced the impact of systemic racism in his everyday life...

But I still think that even if Obama was the PERFECT candidate for President, we're still focusing on creating change in unsustainable ways. The movement that is happening as a result of people's dissatisfaction with the current Administration is the movement of the people mobilized to create change. That change does not come in a leader, because this will die when s/he is gone.

Real, sustainable social movements come from the people in their own communities. We can't see Obama as the candidate for "change" - we need to see the people as the ones creating the change in the first place.

I understand the desire to push Obama above Hillary in this race - he's obviously the more "liberal" candidate. BUT, Obama's election can't be the goal of a movement, especially when he is so "off" on countless issues (check out Z Magazine's article, "The Obama Illusion").

(2008-05-16 17:20)

The upcoming edition of Men's Fitness Magazine out on May 19, is rating Barack Obama as one of the 25 fittest

(2008-05-16 17:20)

The upcoming edition of Men's Fitness Magazine out on May 19, is rating Barack Obama is one of the 25 fittest

(2008-05-16 17:20)

According to the upcoming edition of Men's Fitness Magazine out on May 19, Barack Obama is one of the 25 fittest

Obama and the Swing States (2008-05-17 09:13)

There's been a lot of discussion recently about swing state strategy in the general election.

A couple of things to note. It is often difficult if not impossible to predict which state will actually "swing" in any election. Historical analysis shows that the swing state map tends to change dramatically in cycles of about every three presidential elections.

Also, in election cycles in which there is a general "kick the bums out" mentality among the electorate, it is doubly hard to predict swing states. This is a time when the out of favor party can often lose even in traditional strongholds. It is a very good opportunity to make inroads, in this case, for the Democratic Party to make inroads in states that have been voting Republican.

Most of the analysis that I've seen tends to discount the importance of the African American and Latino vote and concentrate mostly on "white working class" voters. I think this is a big mistake.

African American turnout has historically been important for Democratic success in presidential elections for some time now. States like Florida and Michigan often hinge on the turnout out of African Americans.

Two states not often mentioned as swing state possibilities are Louisiana and North Carolina, both potential Democratic wins depending on African American voter registration and mobilization.

We also cannot forget the anti-war crowd when studying voter demographics. This group could also benefit Democrats in states like Oregon, Virginia and North Carolina. Remember Jim Webb won in Virginia on a platform that opposed the Iraq War.

Then there are those states are traditionally Republican but have Democratic governors and/or senators. Many of these are totally ignored in swing state discussions. They include Kansas, Nebraska and even John McCain's home state of Arizona. Obviously there are burgeoning Democratic or Democratic-Independent movements in these states or no Democrat could win in a statewide election. Even if the nominee can not win in these states, I think it is necessary to campaign hard in them.

By fighting in these states, not only do you grow the movement, but you keep the Republicans on the defensive. The latter will definitely recognize the potential dangers of losing old strongholds. In the end, also there are always a certain percentage of people who only get motivated when they see things getting done on a local level. They will not buy into the idea that they're states do not count and that they should contribute money only to help in the national effort. This is no problem with the Obama campaign as Barack Obama has roots in community organizing. In the end, this development at the local level ends up netting more also at the national level as I think is demonstrated by Barack's record-smashing fundraising efforts mostly collected from small and first-time donors.

XX XX

XX XX

XX XX

XX XX

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack talks health care in Roseburg, Oregon (2008-05-17 16:54)

Sen. Barack Obama talks about affordable health care in Roseburg, Oregon, contrasting his plan with that of Sen. John McCain.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-05-18 12:32)

Here is an opinion piece that Barack Obama had published today in the Oregon Statesman Journal .

This is a defining moment. At a time when our nation is at war and our American dream is slipping away, we cannot settle for the status quo. In this election, Oregon can stand for change.

I've spent more than two decades working for change from the bottom up. I fought for jobs as an organizer in Chicago when the local steel plant closed. I stood up as a civil-rights lawyer for people who were denied opportunity. I helped expand health care to hundreds of thousands and gave a tax cut to working people in Illinois. I opposed this war in Iraq from the beginning, and when I got to Washington I stood up to the special interests to help pass the most far-reaching lobbying reform since Watergate.

I chose to run for president because I believe that the size of our challenges had outgrown the capacity of our broken politics to solve them. We cannot afford four more years of the same divisive fights in Washington that are more about scoring points than solving problems. We're not going to make progress if we continue to have a system driven by special interests.

We need to restore fairness to our economy. When I'm president, we'll give a tax cut to 1.8 million hardworking Oregonians and help struggling families keep their homes. We'll ensure that the 615,000 Oregonians who currently lack health insurance are covered and cut the cost of a typical family's premiums by as much as $2,500 per year. We'll create a $4,000 annual tax credit to help Oregon students cope with tuitions that have increased 27.5 percent since 1999.

And we'll turn the page on more than two decades of trade and economic policies that have favored Wall Street over Main Street. It's time to stop giving tax breaks to companies that ship jobs overseas and start giving them to companies that create jobs here at home.

Oregon has been a national leader in energy independence, passing a renewable portfolio standard, auto-emissions rules and incentives for biofuels development. I will build on Oregon's successes to move America on the path to a cleaner environment. I will devote $150 billion over 10 years to move us toward energy independence and invest in the green energy jobs of the future.

Oregon deserves a president who understands the unique environmental challenges facing the state. That's why I will develop a meaningful plan to restore decimated salmon stocks with the advice of all stakeholders, including fishers, farmers, tribes, environmentalists and foresters. That's why I will ensure that Oregonians have a say about whether and where we place onshore liquefied natural gas facilities in the state.

That's why I support county timber payments and will work with the Oregon congressional delegation to find a comprehensive, long-term solution that will provide Oregon communities the resources they need to invest in a strong education system and create a sustainable economy. And that's why I will work with Oregonians to develop a common-sense plan to conserve Oregon's woodlands.

Oregon knows we need less tough talk and more sound judgment on national security. When I am president, I will end a war in Iraq that I opposed from the start, give our troops and military families the support they have earned, and finish the fight in Afghanistan.

With a father from Kenya and a mother from Kansas, I know that my story is only possible in America. My family didn't have much when I was growing up, but they gave me love, a good education and hope — hope that in this country, no dream is beyond our grasp if we reach for it, and fight for it, and work for it. And the reason I'm running for president is to put the American dream within reach for every family in Oregon and in this country.

- Barack Obama

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Portland: Mother of All Rallies (2008-05-18 21:01)

The largest crowd for a presidential rally ever, estimated at 75,000, gathered in support of Barack Obama in Portland, Oregon today. Check out the pictures from barackobama.com .

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More Portland Pics (2008-05-18 22:17)

More pics of the sea of supporters at today's Portland rally. Now do all these people drive a Prius?

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama talks Social Security in Gresham, Oregon (2008-05-19 08:28)

Barack Obama talks about preserving social security and cutting taxes on social security for those who make less than $50,000, at a seniors town hall meeting in Gresham, Oregon yesterday.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

DAN CLEMENTS (2008-05-19 11:03:00)

This is Constitution Party presidential nominee Chuck Baldwin's stance on SS:

The Constitution grants no authority to the federal government to administrate a Social Security system. The Constitution Party advocates phasing out the entire Social Security program, while continuing to meet the obligations already incurred under the system. Until the current Social Security system can be responsibly phased out, we propose that:

- The Social Security tax is not a "rainy day" fund which politicians can pirate, or from which they can borrow to cover their errors and pay for their excesses.
- Individuals who have contributed to Social Security be allowed to withdraw those funds and transfer them into an IRA or similar investments under the control of the individual contributor.
- Any sort of merger between the U.S. Social Security System and that of any foreign country must be banned, so the distribution of benefits will not go to persons who have not qualified for payments under American law as legal residents.
- Earning limitations on persons aged 62 and over be removed, so that they may earn any amount of additional income without placing their benefits at risk.
- Those provisions of the Social Security system which penalize those born during the "notch years" between 1917 and 1926 be repealed, and that such persons be placed on the same benefit schedules as all other beneficiaries.

We support the right of individuals to choose between private retirement and pension programs, either at their place of employment or independently.

We need to start to reign in this out of control government and neither McCain nor Obama are willing to do this!

Stopbarack.blogspot (2008-05-20 18:27:00)

It saddens me to see the "slash and burn" politician Obama has become.

Barack defends Michelle on GMA (2008-05-19 09:08)

Barack Obama defends wife Michelle on Good Morning America against recent GOP attacks.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-05-19 11:16:00)

He should've elevated the question about whether not if he's a muslim, by asking back So what if he IS a muslim, is there any constitutional reason muslim cannot be president?

Christian here myself but all these silly scares of oh-what-if-he's-muslim-like-a-terrorist is really silly, discrimination based on religion is still discrimination.

Five Superdelegates Join Barack Obama (2008-05-19 17:23)

Five superdelegates endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today.

Washington State Democratic Party Chairman Dwight Pelz, Kansas Democratic Party Chair Larry Gates, Alaska superdelegates Cindy Spanyers and Blake Johnson and West Virginia Sen. Robert C. Byrd announced the support for Barack. Here is the report of Bryd's endorsement from the Charleston Gazette.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., endorsed Barack Obama for president shortly after noon today, focusing on his hope to end the Iraq War.

"As people all across this great nation know, I have been one of the most outspoken opponents of the Bush administration's misguided war in Iraq and its saber rattling around the globe," Byrd said.

He said he had "no intention of involving myself in the Democratic campaign for President in the midst of West Virginia's primary election. But the stakes this November could not be higher."

Byrd praised both Obama and Hillary Clinton, saying their "integrity, honor, love for this country and strong belief in our Constitution I deeply respect..."

"Barack Obama is a noble-hearted patriot and humble Christian, and he has my full faith and support," Byrd concluded.

Barack in Portland, Oregon

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Kentucky: Polls Are Open Now (2008-05-20 08:01)

Today, Barack Obama should win enough pledged delegates in the Oregon and Kentucky contests to take the majority in the pledged delegate count.

From barackobama.com:

Kentucky: Polls Are Open Now

by Christopher Hass

Tuesday, May 20, 2008 at 03:02 AM

Polls in Kentucky are open now until 6:00 PM tonight, and anyone in line by 6:00 PM will be allowed to vote. You can find your polling location now using our online lookup tool.

Here are a few things you should know before you head to the polls today:

- Go to the polls early if you can, and make sure you don't get stuck at work and miss your chance to vote.
- If you are a registered Democrat and will be 18 or older by November 4th, 2008, you can vote in today's Democratic primary.
- All voters must bring an ID or be personally acquainted with the precinct officer. Acceptable forms of ID include a driver's license, a Social Security card, a credit card, or any ID card with both the voter's picture and signature.
- Polls are open from 6:00 AM to 6:00 PM. If you are in line when the polls close at 6:00 p.m., you have the right to vote.
- If you have questions or need a ride to your polling place, please call our voter hotline at 866-675-2008.

FIND YOUR POLLING PLACE

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

LADYPROMISE (2008-05-20 21:01:00)
Lady Promise for PRESIDENT!
WWW.MYSPACE.COM/LADYPROMISE

Obama should set the agenda (2008-05-20 08:22)

Superdelegates Guam Congresswoman Madeleine Bordallo and Iowa Democratic Chairman Scott Brennan endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today.

Barack needs 107 more delegates to win the nomination.

Here is part of Rep. Bordallo's statement.

Today I have pledged my support as a superdelegate to Senator Barack Obama. Senator Obama offers us the leadership needed to address the challenges Guam and our nation will face in the coming years.

Senator Obama is working very closely with Senator Patrick Leahy, Chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and other Senate leaders to secure more support for H.R. 1595, the Guam World War II Loyalty Recognition Act. Senator Obama fully understands and supports the efforts to seek full recognition for the patriotism and suffering endured by the people of Guam during enemy occupation in World War II.

Senator Obama has also pledged to help improve Guam's economy, including through opportunities with the military build-up—an issue I have worked very hard on since taking office—and I believe he is the right candidate to help move Guam and our nation forward given the challenges we face in our world today.

Video of Barack Obama at the Crow Nation Reservation in Crow Agency, Montana where he was accepted into the Crow Nation.

[EMBED]

Barack's online interview with BlogHer.

[EMBED]

Another video of the Portland rally.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Statement from Sen. Barack Obama on Sen. Ted Kennedy (2008-05-20 13:18)

Sen. Barack Obama issued this statement today on the condition of Sen. Ted Kennedy, one of Barack's most prominent and energetic supporters.

Statement from Barack Obama on Sen. Kennedy

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Tuesday, May 20, 2008 at 12:52 PM

Senator Obama...

Michelle and I were saddened to hear the news about Senator Kennedy's condition today, and we plan on doing whatever we can to support him, Vicki, and the entire Kennedy family during this time. Senator Kennedy has been a fighter for his entire life, and I have no doubt that he will fight as hard as he can to get through this. He has been there for the American people during some of our country's most trying moments, and now that he's facing his own, I ask all Americans to keep him in our thoughts and prayer.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Wins Oregon, Takes Elected Delegate Majority (2008-05-20 20:05)

Barack Obama has been projected as the winner in Oregon, splitting tonight's contests as Hillary Clinton won in Kentucky.

Importantly, Obama declared in Iowa that the campaign had won the majority of elected pledged delegates. Here is Barack's Iowa speech as prepared for delivery.

You know, there is a spirit that brought us here tonight – a spirit of change, and hope, and possibility. And there are few people in this country who embody that spirit more than our friend and our champion, Senator Edward Kennedy. He has spent his life in service to this country not for the sake of glory or recognition, but because he cares – deeply, in his gut – about the causes of justice, and equality, and opportunity. So many of us here have benefited in some way or another because of the battles he's waged, and some of us are here because of them.

We know he is not well right now, but we also know that he's a fighter. And as he takes on this fight, let us lift his spirits tonight by letting Ted Kennedy know that we are thinking of him, that we are praying for him, that we are standing with him, and that we will be fighting with him every step of the way.

Fifteen months ago, in the depths of winter, it was in this great state where we took the first steps of an unlikely journey to change America.

The skeptics predicted we wouldn't get very far. The cynics dismissed us as a lot of hype and a little too much hope. And by the fall, the pundits in Washington had all but counted us out.

But the people of Iowa had a different idea.

From the very beginning, you knew that this journey wasn't about me or any of the other candidates in this race. It's about whether this country – at this defining moment – will continue down the same road that has failed us for so long, or whether we will seize this opportunity to take a different path – to forge a different future for the country we love.

That is the question that sent thousands upon thousands of you to high school gyms and VFW halls; to backyards and front porches; to steak fries and JJ dinners, where you spoke about what that future would look like.

You spoke of an America where working families don't have to file for bankruptcy just because a child gets sick; where they don't lose their home because some predatory lender tricks them out of it; where they don't have to sit on the sidelines of the global economy because they couldn't afford the cost of a college education. You spoke of an America where our parents and grandparents don't spend their retirement in poverty because some CEO dumped their pension – an America where we don't just value wealth, but the work and the workers who create it.

You spoke of an America where we don't send our sons and daughters on tour after tour of duty to a war that has cost us thousands of lives and billions of dollars but has not made us safer. You spoke of an America where we match the might of our military with the strength of our diplomacy and the power of our ideals – a nation that is still the beacon of all that is good and all that is possible for humankind.

You spoke of a future where the politics we have in Washington finally reflect the values we hold as Americans – the values you live by here in Iowa: common sense and honesty; generosity and compassion; decency and responsibility. These values don't belong to one class or one region or even one party – they are the values that bind us together as one country.

That is the country I saw in the faces of crowds that would stretch far into the horizon of our heartland – faces of every color, of every age – faces I see here tonight. You are Democrats who are tired of being divided; Republicans who no longer recognize the party that runs Washington; Independents who are hungry for change. You are the young people who've been inspired for the very first time and those not-so-young folks who've been inspired for the first time in a long time. You are veterans and church-goers; sportsmen and students; farmers and factory workers; teachers and business owners who have varied backgrounds and different traditions, but the same simple dreams for your children's future.

Many of you have been disappointed by politics and politicians more times than you can count. You've seen promises broken and good ideas drown in the sea of influence, and point-scoring, and petty bickering that has consumed Washington. And you've been told over and over and over again to be cynical, and doubtful, and even fearful about the possibility that things can ever be different.

And yet, in spite of all the doubt and disappointment – or perhaps because of it – you came out on a cold winter's night in numbers that this country has never seen, and you stood for change. And because you did, a few more stood up. And then a few thousand stood up. And then a few million stood up. And tonight, in the fullness of spring, with the help of those who stood up from Portland to Louisville, we have returned to Iowa with a majority of delegates elected by the American people, and you have put us within reach of the Democratic nomination for President of the United States.

The road here has been long, and that is partly because we've traveled it with one of the most formidable candidates to ever run for this office. In her thirty-five years of public service, Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton has never given up on her fight for the American people, and tonight I congratulate her on her victory in Kentucky. We have had our disagreements during this campaign, but we all admire her courage, her commitment and her perseverance. No matter how this primary ends, Senator Clinton has shattered myths and broken barriers and changed the America in which my daughters and yours will come of age.

Some may see the millions upon millions of votes cast for each of us as evidence that our party is divided, but I see it as proof that we have never been more energized and united in our desire to take this country in a new direction. More than anything, we need this unity and this energy in the months to come, because while our primary has been long and hard-fought, the hardest and most important part of our journey still lies ahead.

We face an opponent, John McCain, who arrived in Washington nearly three decades ago as a Vietnam War hero, and earned an admirable reputation for straight talk and occasional independence from his party.

But this year's Republican primary was a contest to see which candidate could out-Bush the other, and that is the contest John McCain won. The Bush tax cuts for the wealthiest 2 % of Americans that once bothered Senator McCain's conscience are now his only economic policy. The Bush health care plan that only helps those who are already healthy and wealthy is now John McCain's answer to the 47 million Americans without insurance and the millions more who can't pay their medical bills. The Bush Iraq policy that asks everything of our troops and nothing of Iraqi politicians is John McCain's policy too, and so is the fear of tough and aggressive diplomacy that has left this country more isolated and less secure than at any time in recent history. The lobbyists who ruled George Bush's Washington are now running John McCain's campaign, and they actually had the nerve to say that the American people won't care about this. Talk about out of touch!

I will leave it up to Senator McCain to explain to the American people whether his policies and positions represent long-held convictions or Washington calculations, but the one thing they don't represent is change.

Change is a tax code that rewards work instead of wealth by cutting taxes for middle-class families, and senior citizens, and struggling homeowners; a tax code that rewards businesses that create good jobs here in America instead of the corporations that ship them overseas. That's what change is.

Change is a health care plan that guarantees insurance to every American who wants; that brings down premiums for every family who needs it; that stops insurance companies from discriminating and denying coverage to those who need it most.

Change is an energy policy that doesn't rely on buddying up to the Saudi Royal Family and then begging them for oil – an energy policy that puts a price on pollution and makes the oil companies invest their record profits in clean, renewable sources of energy that will create five million new jobs and leave our children a safer planet. That's what change is.

Change is giving every child a world-class education by recruiting an army of new teachers with better pay and more support; by promising four years of tuition to any American willing to serve their community and their country; by realizing that the best education starts with parents who turn off the TV, and take away the video games, and read to our children once in awhile.

Change is ending a war that we never should've started and finishing a war against Al Qaeda in Afghanistan that we never should've ignored. Change is facing the threats of the twenty-first century not with bluster, or fear-mongering, or tough talk, but with tough diplomacy, and strong alliances, and confidence in the ideals that have made this nation the last, best hope of Earth. That is the legacy of Roosevelt, and Truman, and Kennedy.

That is what change is.

That is the choice in this election.

The same question that first led us to Iowa fifteen months ago is the one that has brought us back here tonight; it is the one we will debate from Washington to Florida, from New Hampshire to New Mexico – the question of whether this country, at this moment, will keep doing what we've been doing for four more years, or whether we will take that different path. It is more of the same versus change. It is the past versus the future. It has been asked and answered by generations before us, and now it is our turn to choose.

We will face our share of difficult and uncertain days in the journey ahead. The other side knows they have embraced yesterday's policies and so they will also embrace yesterday's tactics to try and change the subject. They will play on our fears and our doubts and our divisions to distract us from what matters to you and your future.

Well they can take the low road if they want, but it will not lead this country to a better place. And it will not work in this election. It won't work because you won't let it. Not this time. Not this year.

My faith in the decency, and honesty, and generosity of the American people is not based on false hope or blind optimism, but on what I have lived and what I have seen in this very state.

For in the darkest days of this campaign, when we were dismissed by all the polls and all the pundits, I would come to Iowa and see that there was something happening here that the world did not yet understand.

It's what led high school and college students to give up their vacations to stuff envelopes and knock on doors, and why grandparents have spent all their afternoons making phone calls to perfect strangers. It's what led men and women who can barely pay the bills to dig into their savings and write five dollar checks and ten dollar checks, and why young people from all over this country have left their friends and their families for a job that offers little pay and less sleep.

Change is coming to America.

It's the spirit that sent the first patriots to Lexington and Concord and led the defenders of freedom to light the way north on an Underground Railroad. It's what sent my grandfather's generation to beachheads in Normandy, and women to Seneca Falls, and workers to picket lines and factory fences. It's what led all those young men and women who saw beatings and billy clubs on their television screens to leave their homes, and get on buses, and march through the streets of Selma and Montgomery – black and white, rich and poor.

Change is coming to America.

It's what I saw all those years ago on the streets of Chicago when I worked as an organizer – that in the face of joblessness, and hopelessness, and despair, a better day is still possible if there are people willing to work for it, and fight for it, and believe in it. That's what I've seen here in Iowa. That's what is happening in America – our journey may be long, our work will be great, but we know in our hearts we are ready for change, we are ready to come together, and in this election, we are ready to believe again. Thank you Iowa, and may God Bless America.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

dp (2008-05-20 21:52:00)

ok so this is the scoop..

this is very cool and I checked out the

B_O on Twitter... now all you out there

WHAT are we going to do if he or 'shillery are elected?/ has history not taught us a lesson ? or have you not been attentive to YOUR history lesson? Do you not understand that these people want to convert us to a MARXIST socialist nation and that BOTH of them are promoting communism? because they both have affiliations with the socialist / communist party !! READ up on it.. google BO and communism and you will see all you need to know, and of course MOST of us elders know all about Shillery and her tactics... PLEASE READ : the 45 steps to communism in America and you will see that you youngsters are subjected to the communist intention to brainwash children from the cradle thru media and education. I fear the immense attraction to OBAMA is much like that of another in history, who did much to the youth of his time.

and his method is used in our society.

Obama/shillery are puppets of a greater plan to create a society of USEFUL IDIOTS. They are LOYALISTS toward that goal and Obama is a masterful propagandist.. he is very talented !

and I appreciate that in him....

I just hope to G-d that you will all wake up before our country is lost to the NEW WORLD ORDER that they are subliminally enticing you to embrace.

When that time arrives in the near future you will all regret it. You will loose nearly everything that our great society has fought for, because we will all belong to ONE collective that created nothing more than worker drones for the economic benefit of those in power.. you own nothing and you are nothing but a dispensable human mechanism that uses resources. Any in defiance are eliminated without question, so as to redistribute the resources you use, to someone else.

It is all plain to read out there... just look at the plan Obama is secretly pushing through the senate right now...

it will cost each household $8500. in order to fund poor nations (dictators) in an effort to fight poverty.. REDISTRIBUTION of wealth is what he is calling upon us to embrace ! MAKE sacrifices they both tell us will have to happen, FOR THE GREATER GOOD of mankind.....that is communism! It is not benevalance as you are led to believe it communism in its purity when you are forced to give up for the good of othera collectively... people wake up.. we are being scammed....Mc Cain is another story.. and not a good one .. except he does try to resist the temptation of marketing his brand to compete with the others.... he is a fighter trying to maintain our sovorinty while cowing to the push of the media.... WHAT IS A PERSON TO DO when all the candidates are no better than the other.. ??

We have to see which one will be the lesser to drag faster toward the NEW WORLD ORDER..... CURRENTLY called GLOBALIZATION !!!!!!!it is one in the same .. the means to that end is socialism.. communism.. globalism.

OB/shillery are true socialists...another form of communists.. puppets of the almighty U.N. who is banking on either of them to win because they are the conduit for this global change.. the UN wants the US, as we know it, to END ! and once that happens ,, via the new president, it will come tumbling down FAST...It is already in motion, SEEK and you shall find the answers to the intet of the UN through our elected officials.

WAKE UP !!!!!!!

Obama News on Wednesday (2008-05-21 11:18)

Sen. Barack Obama picked up the endorsements of the United Mine Workers of America and superdelegate Rep. Joe Courtney giving him only 62 delegates more to go for the nomination.

Here's the statement from UMWA:

We are extremely proud to make this endorsement today. Sen. Obama shares the values of UMWA members and our families. He understands and will fight for the needs our members have today and the hopes our members have for a secure future for themselves and their families.

Most of all, Sen. Obama will implement the clear change in direction UMWA members—indeed, all American working people—must have if they are to once again move forward and have a true opportunity to realize the American dream. After eight years of being pushed aside by an administration which neither respects nor values the contributions American working families make to our society, we are looking forward with great anticipation to a new era in our nation starting with the inauguration of President Barack Obama on January 20, 2009.

Today, Barack Obama spoke before 15,000 people in Tampa Bay, Florida. Watch the video.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack Obama in Florida (2008-05-22 09:31)

Barack Obama talks about unity at a Kissimmee, Florida town hall meeting on May 21, 2008.
[EMBED]

Barack speaks on ethics and lobbyists in Tampa Bay, Florida on May 21.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama picks up four superdelegates (2008-05-23 06:03)

Barack Obama added four more superdelegates today reducing the number of delegates he needs to win the nomination to 58.

Congressman Dennis Cardoza of California, a former Clinton supporter, announced his support for Obama today: “While I continue to greatly respect and admire Senator Clinton and feel she has made history with her campaign, I believe that Senator Obama will inevitably be our party’s nominee for President. He has proven himself to be a thoughtful, knowledgeable, and inspirational leader and will take America in a new direction, which we desperately need.”

Obama’s campaign also announced the endorsement of California congressman, Jim Costa.

Two former supporters of John Edwards from New Hampshire, State Senator Peter Burling of Cornish and Deborah Nelson of Hanover, plan to announce their switch to Obama at a news conference this morning, the Associated Press reported.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Hillary pushed as VP (2008-05-23 10:10)

News reports are circulating that Hillary Clinton supporters, including Bill Clinton, are beginning to push hard for an Obama-Clinton ticket.

CNN reports that some Clinton supporters have made their wished known directly to the Obama camp. Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), en. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell (D), and Clinton campaign national co-chairwoman Stephanie Tubbs Jones (D-Ohio) are among those who have mentioned an Obama-Clinton ticket recently.

There is even a website, DraftObamaClinton.com, dedicated to promoting such a ticket.

Maybe not surprisingly, there is some resistance to such a movement among Obama's more steadfast or vocal supporters. Those especially who have fought in the trenches may not be particularly warm to the idea and would rather have someone who has been a faithful Obama supporter like themselves.

However, history shows us that often candidates must forget past squabbles to win in November.

Here are a few of the pros and cons of Hillary as a possible VP:

* Hillary obviously has built up a great following that would have broken all records had Barack not been around. She can immediately mobilize probably the great bulk of this following to support an Obama-Clinton ticket. Otherwise, some animosity among the most strident Clinton supporters may be hard to overcome.

Clinton is skilled on the campaign trail along with Bill, and both are proven as capable fundraisers. Right now, the Republican National Committee has about ten times more cash on hand than the Democratic National Committee. So, we cannot just look at John McCain's funds in analyzing campaign cash.

A lot of women are going to be disappointed that Clinton is not on the top of the ticket. This could be remedied somewhat by choosing a woman VP other than Hillary, but maybe not as effectively.

Many people think that Hillary is too much establishment for Obama's change message, but it counts on how you look at it. Obama's message is unity, and he has to start with his own party. One thing that many did not like about the old Clinton triangulation strategy was how "liberals" were locked away in the basement. Change would mean that Obama would not do the same to conservative Democrats, even if some progressives might want a little revenge.

Hillary has some strength among "Reagan Democrats" an area where Obama might be weak, although this has not really been established for the general election. However, to be conservative who else has proven strength among the same demographic across several states?

Having Bill Clinton in the White House may be a problem, but in reality Bill will not be in the White House. Unless he gets an appointment, there should be no reason that Bill Clinton would be present at Cabinet meetings, press conferences, etc. Maybe he will be at occasional functions when spouses are normally present but not during day-to-day operations. Bill has plenty of other things to keep him busy.

Barack must make sure that Hillary knows the role and powers of the vice presidency and will not try to run things behind the scenes like Dick Cheney. Both Hill and Bill must eat humble pie to show they will respect Barack's position as the elected commander-in-chief.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Truth_First (2008-05-23 16:08:00)

Obama is the future.

Hillary is the past.

(2008-05-23 19:37)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama at B'nai Torah Congregation during May 23, 2008.

Barack Obama speaks to Veterans in Sunrise, Florida (2008-05-24 09:27)

Sen. Barack Obama talks to veterans in Sunrise, Broward County, Florida on May 24, 2008. He promises to provide veterans with fitting benefits and to end the war in Iraq. Today, Barack is in Puerto Rico, where voting takes place on June 1, and is also addressing veterans. There are 55 delegates at stake in Puerto Rico.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: Vote for Change Drive in NYC (2008-05-24 18:25)

Check out the video of the Vote for Change registration drive in New York City on May 10, 2008.

Vote for Change is an ongoing effort to register and mobilize new voters for the general election in November and beyond.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama Addresses Wesleyan University Graduates (2008-05-25 17:21)

Here's the video of Sen. Barack Obama's commencement address at Wesleyan University on May 25, 2008.

[EMBED]

Barack has picked up three new delegates – Georgia State Party Secretary Stephen Leeds, Wyoming state Rep. W. Patrick Goggles, and former Alaskan Governor Tony Knowles – and needs only 52 more to clinch the nomination. Here is the full text of Barack's address as prepared for delivery.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama
Wesleyan University Commencement
Sunday, May 25th, 2008
Middletown, CT

As Prepared for Delivery

Thank you, President Roth, for that generous introduction, and congratulations on your first year at the helm of Wesleyan. Congratulations also to the class of 2008, and thank you for allowing me to be a part of your graduation.

I have the distinct honor today of pinch-hitting for one of my personal heroes and a hero to this country, Senator Edward Kennedy. Teddy wanted to be here very much, but as you know, he's had a very long week and is taking some much-needed rest. He called me up a few days ago and I said that I'd be happy to be his stand-in, even if there was no way I could fill his shoes.

I did, however, get the chance to glance at the speech he planned on delivering today, and I'd like to start by passing along a message from him: "To all those praying for my return to good health, I offer my heartfelt thanks. And to any who'd rather have a different result, I say, don't get your hopes up just yet!"

So we know that Ted Kennedy's legendary sense of humor is as strong as ever, and I have no doubt that his equally legendary fighting spirit will carry him through this latest challenge. He is our friend, he is our champion, and we hope and pray for his return to good health.

The topic of his speech today was common for a commencement, but one that nobody could discuss with more authority or inspiration than Ted Kennedy. And that is the topic of service to one's country – a cause that is synonymous with his family's name and their legacy.

I was born the year that his brother John called a generation of Americans to ask their country what they could do. And I came of age at a time when they did it. They were the Peace Corps volunteers who won a generation of goodwill toward America at a time when America's ideals were challenged. They were the teenagers and college students, not much older than you, who watched the Civil Rights Movement unfold on their television sets; who saw the dogs and the fire hoses and the footage of marchers beaten within an inch of their lives; who knew it was probably smarter and safer to stay at home, but still decided to take those Freedom Rides down south – who still decided to march. And because they did, they changed the world.

I bring this up because today, you are about to enter a world that makes it easy to get caught up in the notion that there are actually two different stories at work in our lives.

The first is the story of our everyday cares and concerns – the responsibilities we have to our jobs and our families – the bustle and busyness of what happens in our own life. And the second is the story of what happens in the life of our country – of what happens in the wider world. It's the story you see when you catch a glimpse of the day's headlines or turn on the news at night – a story of big challenges like war and recession; hunger and climate change; injustice and inequality. It's a story that can sometimes seem distant and separate from our own – a destiny to be shaped by forces beyond our control.

And yet, the history of this nation tells us this isn't so. It tells us that we are a people whose destiny has never been written for us, but by us – by generations of men and women, young and old, who have always believed that their story and the American story are not separate, but shared. And for more than two centuries, they have served this country in ways that have forever enriched both.

I say this to you as someone who couldn't be standing here today if not for the service of others, and wouldn't be standing here today if not for the purpose that service gave my own life.

You see, I spent much of my childhood adrift. My father left my mother and I when I was two. When my mother remarried, I lived in Indonesia for a time, but was mostly raised in Hawaii by her and my grandparents from Kansas. My teenage years were filled with more than the usual dose of adolescent rebellion, and I'll admit that I didn't always take myself or my studies very seriously. I realize that none of you can probably relate to this, but there were many times when I wasn't sure where I was going, or what I would do.

But during my first two years of college, perhaps because the values my mother had taught me –hard work, honesty, empathy – had resurfaced after a long hibernation; or perhaps because of the example of wonderful teachers and lasting friends, I began to notice a world beyond myself. I became active in the movement to oppose the apartheid regime of South Africa. I began following the debates in this country about poverty and health care. So that by the time I graduated from college, I was possessed with a crazy idea – that I would work at a grassroots level to bring about change.

I wrote letters to every organization in the country I could think of. And one day, a small group of churches on the South Side of Chicago offered me a job to come work as a community organizer in neighborhoods that had been devastated by steel plant closings. My mother and grandparents wanted me to go to law school. My friends were applying to jobs on Wall Street. Meanwhile, this organization offered me $12,000 a year plus $2,000 for an old, beat-up car.

And I said yes.

Now, I didn't know a soul in Chicago, and I wasn't sure what this community organizing business was all about. I had always been inspired by stories of the Civil Rights Movement and JFK's call to service, but when I got to the South Side, there were no marches, and no soaring speeches. In the shadow of an empty steel plant, there were just a lot of folks who were struggling. And we didn't get very far at first.

I still remember one of the very first meetings we put together to discuss gang violence with a group of community leaders. We waited and waited for people to show up, and finally, a group of older people walked into the hall. And they sat down. And a little old lady raised her hand and asked, "Is this where the bingo game is?"

It wasn't easy, but eventually, we made progress. Day by day, block by block, we brought the community together, and registered new voters, and set up after school programs, and fought for new jobs, and helped people live lives with some measure of dignity.

But I also began to realize that I wasn't just helping other people. Through service, I found a community that embraced me; citizenship that was meaningful; the direction I'd been seeking. Through service, I discovered how my own improbable story fit into the larger story of America.

Each of you will have the chance to make your own discovery in the years to come. And I say "chance" because you won't have to take it. There's no community service requirement in the real world; no one forcing you to care. You can take your diploma, walk off this stage, and chase only after the big house and the nice suits and all the other things that our money culture says you should by. You can choose to narrow your concerns and live your life in a way that tries to keep your story separate from America's.

But I hope you don't. Not because you have an obligation to those who are less fortunate, though you do have that obligation. Not because you have a debt to all those who helped you get here, though you do have that debt.

It's because you have an obligation to yourself. Because our individual salvation depends on collective salvation. Because thinking only about yourself, fulfilling your immediate wants and needs, betrays a poverty of ambition. Because it's only when you hitch your wagon to something larger than yourself that you realize your true potential and discover the role you'll play in writing the next great chapter in America's story

There are so many ways to serve and so much need at this defining moment in our history. You don't have to be a community organizer or do something crazy like run for President. Right here at Wesleyan, many of you have already volunteered at local schools, contributed to United Way, and even started a program that brings fresh produce to needy families in the area. One hundred and sixty-four graduates of this school have joined the Peace Corps since 2001, and I'm especially proud that two of you are about to leave for my father's homeland of Kenya to bring alternative sources of energy to impoverished areas.

I ask you to seek these opportunities when you leave here, because the future of this country – your future – depends on it. At a time when our security and moral standing depend on winning hearts and minds in the forgotten corners of this world, we need more of you to serve abroad. As President, I intend to grow the Foreign Service, double the Peace Corps over the next few years, and engage the young people of other nations in similar programs, so that we work side by side to take on the common challenges that confront all humanity.

At a time when our ice caps are melting and our oceans are rising, we need you to help lead a green revolution. We still have time to avoid the catastrophic consequences of climate change if we get serious about investing in renewable sources of energy, and if we get a generation of volunteers to work on renewable energy projects, and teach folks about conservation, and help clean up polluted areas; if we send talented engineers and scientists abroad to help developing countries promote clean energy.

At a time when a child in Boston must compete with children in Beijing and Bangalore, we need an army of you to become teachers and principals in schools that this nation cannot afford to give up on. I will pay our educators what they deserve, and give them more support, but I will also ask more of them to be mentors to other teachers, and serve in high-need schools and high-need subject areas like math and science.

At a time when there are children in the city of New Orleans who still spend each night in a lonely trailer, we need more of you to take a weekend or a week off from work, and head down South, and help rebuild. If you can't get the time, volunteer at the local homeless shelter or soup kitchen in your own community. Find an organization that's fighting poverty, or a candidate who promotes policies you believe in, and find a way to help them.

At a time of war, we need you to work for peace. At a time of inequality, we need you to work for opportunity. At a time of so much cynicism and so much doubt, we need you to make us believe again.

Now understand this - believing that change is possible is not the same as being naïve. Go into service with your eyes wide open, for change will not come easily. On the big issues that our nation faces, difficult choices await. We'll have to face some hard truths, and some sacrifice will be required – not only from you individually, but from the nation as a whole.

There is no magic bullet to our energy problems, for example; no perfect energy source - so all of us will have to use the energy sources we have more wisely. Deep-rooted poverty will not be reversed overnight, and will require both money and reform at a time when our federal and state budgets are strapped and Washington is skeptical that reform is possible. Transforming our education system will require not only bold government action, but a change in attitudes among parents and students. Bringing an end to the slaughter in Darfur will involve navigating extremely difficult realities on the ground, even for those with the best of intentions.

And so, should you take the path of service, should you choose to take up one of these causes as your own, know that you'll experience frustrations and failures. Even your successes will be marked by imperfections and unintended consequences. I guarantee you, there will certainly be times when friends or family urge you to pursue more sensible endeavors with more tangible rewards. And there will be times when you are tempted to take their advice.

But I hope you'll remember, during those times of doubt and frustration, that there is nothing naïve about your impulse to change this world. Because all it takes is one act of service – one blow against injustice – to send forth that tiny ripple of hope that Robert Kennedy spoke of.

You know, Ted Kennedy often tells a story about the fifth anniversary celebration of the Peace Corps. He was there, and he asked one of the young Americans why he had chosen to volunteer. And the man replied, "Because it was the first time someone asked me to do something for my country."

I don't know how many of you have been asked that question, but after today, you have no excuses. I am asking you, and if I should have the honor of serving this nation as President, I will be asking again in the coming years. We may disagree on certain issues and positions, but I believe we can be unified in service to a greater good. I intend to make it a cause of my presidency, and I believe with all my heart that this generation is ready, and eager, and up to the challenge.

We will face our share of cynics and doubters. But we always have. I can still remember a conversation I had with an older man all those years ago just before I left for Chicago. He said, "Barack, I'll give you a bit of advice. Forget this community organizing business and do something that's gonna make you some money. You can't change the world, and people won't appreciate you trying. But you've got a nice voice, so you should think about going into television broadcasting. I'm telling you, you've got a future."

Now, he may have been right about the TV thing, but he was wrong about everything else. For that old man has not seen what I have seen. He has not seen the faces of ordinary people the first time they clear a vacant lot or build a new playground or force an unresponsive leader to provide services to their community. He has not seen the face of a child brighten because of an inspiring teacher or mentor. He has not seen scores of young people educate their parents on issues like Darfur, or mobilize the conscience of a nation around the challenge of climate change. He has not seen lines of men and women that wrap around schools and churches, that stretch block after block just so they could make their voices heard, many for the very first time.

And that old man who didn't believe the world could change – who didn't think one person could make a difference – well he certainly didn't know much about the life of Joseph Kennedy's youngest son.

It is rare in this country of ours that a person exists who has touched the lives of nearly every single American without many of us even realizing it. And yet, because of Ted Kennedy, millions of children can see a doctor when they get sick. Mothers and fathers can leave work to spend time with their newborns. Working Americans are paid higher wages, and compensated for overtime, and can keep their health insurance when they change jobs. They are protected from discrimination in the workplace, and those who are born with disabilities can still get an education, and health care, and fair treatment on the job. Our schools are stronger and our colleges are filled with more Americans who can afford it. And I have a feeling that Ted Kennedy is not done just yet.

But surely, if one man can achieve so much and make such a difference in the lives of so many, then each of us can do our part. Surely, if his service and his story can forever shape America's story, then our collective service can shape the destiny of this generation. At the very least, his living example calls each of us to try. That is all I ask of you on this joyous day of new beginnings; that is what Senator Kennedy asks of you as well, and that is how we will keep so much needed work going, and the cause of justice everlasting, and the dream alive for generations to come. Thank you so much to the class of 2008, and congratulations on your graduation.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-12-31 23:29:05)

la rŕ©ponse Avec gain assurŕ©) cialis cialis 20mg

Anonymous (2010-01-02 15:09:31)

<http://foro.vivalempira.com/index.php/topic,41330.0.html>

<http://adrenalinesoftball.org/phpbb3/viewtopic.php?f=2 &t=67076 &p=81633>

<http://www.remetea.ro/forum/viewtopic.php?f=2&t=104860&p=141911>

Anonymous (2010-01-03 06:32:28)

 [url=<http://japanese-garden.org>]-£°[/url]

Anonymous (2010-01-04 21:55:43)

 [url=<http://japanese-garden.org>]-£°[/url]

Anonymous (2010-03-15 05:45:19)

It is remarkable, very amusing piece

Term Papers (2010-05-18 00:43:44)

I have been visiting various blogs for my term papers writing research. I have found your blog to be quite useful. Keep updating your blog with valuable information... Regards

Baracky (2008-05-26 07:45)

Here's a video for the holiday.

[EMBED]

And some good news – Barack Obama picked up three more superdelegates early today, all from his original home state of Hawai'i.

Chairman Brian Schatz and vice chairwoman Kari Luna say they will support Obama at the national convention. State Democrats chose retired Judge James Burns, also an Obama supporter, as the final superdelegate. (AP)

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama's Memorial Day Speech (2008-05-26 19:48)

[EMBED]

Senator Obama delivered these remarks (as prepared) today in Las Cruces, New Mexico...

On this Memorial Day, as our nation honors its unbroken line of fallen heroes, our sense of patriotism is particularly strong. Because while we gather here under open skies, we know that far beyond the Organ Mountains – in the streets of Baghdad, and the outskirts of Kabul – America's sons and daughters are sacrificing on our behalf. And our thoughts and prayers are with them.

I speak to you today with deep humility. My grandfather marched in Patton's Army, but I cannot know what it is to walk into battle like so many of you. My grandmother worked on a bomber assembly line, but I cannot know what it is for a family to sacrifice like so many of yours have.

I am the father of two young girls, and I cannot imagine what it is to lose a child. My heart breaks for the families who've lost a loved one.

These are things I cannot know. But there are also some things I do know.

I know that our sadness today is mixed with pride; that those we've lost will be remembered by a grateful nation; and that our presence here today is only possible because your loved ones, America's patriots, were willing to give their lives to defend our nation.

I know that while we may come from different places, cherish different traditions, and have different political beliefs, we all – every one of us – hold in reverence those who've given this country the full measure of their devotion.

And I know that children in New Mexico and across this country look to your children, to your brothers and sisters, mothers and fathers, and friends – to those we honor today – as a shining example of what's best about America.

Their lives are a model for us all.

What led these men and women to wear their country's uniform? What is it that leads anyone to put aside their own pursuit of life's comforts; to subordinate their own sense of survival, for something bigger – something greater?

Many of those we honor today were so young when they were killed. They had a whole life ahead of them – birthdays and weddings, holidays with children and grandchildren, homes and jobs and happiness of their own. And yet, at one moment or another, they felt the tug, just as generations of Americans did before them. Maybe it was a massacre in a Boston square; or a President's call to save the Union and free the slaves. Maybe it was the day of infamy that awakened a nation to a storm in the Pacific and a madman's death march across Europe. Or maybe it was the morning they woke up to see our walls of security crumble along with our two largest towers.

Whatever the moment was, when it came and they felt that tug, perhaps it was simply the thought of a mom or a dad, a husband or a wife, or a child not yet born that made this young American think that it was time to go; that made them think "I must serve so that the people I love can live – in happiness, and safety, and freedom."

This sense of service is what America is all about. It is what leads Americans to enter the military. It is what sustains them in the most difficult hours. And it is the safeguard of our security.

You see, America has the greatest military in the history of the world. We have the best training, the most advanced technology, the most sophisticated planning, and the most powerful weapons. And yet, in the end, though each of these things is absolutely critical, the true strength of our military lies someplace else.

It lies in the spirit of America's servicemen and women. No matter whether they faced down fascism or fought for freedom in Korea and Vietnam; liberated Kuwait or stopped ethnic cleansing in the Balkans or serve brilliantly and bravely under our flag today; no matter whether they are black, white, Latino, Asian, or Native American; whether they come from old military families, or are recent immigrants – their stories tell the same truth.

It is not simply their bravery, their insistence on doing their part – whatever the cost – to make America more secure and our world more free. It's not simply an unflinching belief in our highest ideals. It's that in the thick of battle, when their very survival is threatened, America's sons and daughters aren't thinking about themselves, they're thinking about one another; they're risking everything to save not their own lives, but the lives of their fellow soldiers and sailors, airmen and Marines. And when we lose them – in a final act of selflessness and service – we know that they died so that their brothers and sisters, so that our nation, might live.

What makes America's servicemen and women heroes is not just their sense of duty, honor, and country; it's the bigness of their hearts and the breadth of their compassion.

That is what we honor today.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once remarked that "To fight out a war, you must believe something and want something with all your might." The Americans we honor today believed. Sergeant Ryan Jopek believed. Ryan was just weeks away from coming home when he volunteered for a mission to Mosul from which he would never return. His friends remember his easy smile; I remember Ryan because of the bracelet his mother gave me that I wear every day. Next to his name, it reads: "All gave some – he gave all."

It is a living reminder of our obligation as Americans to serve Ryan as well as he served us; as well as the wounded warriors I've had the honor of meeting at Walter Reed have served us; as well as the soldiers at Fort Bliss and the troops in Iraq, Afghanistan, and around the world are serving us. That means giving the same priority to building a 21st century VA as to building a 21st century military. It means having zero tolerance for veterans sleeping on our streets. It means bringing home our POWs and MIAs. And it means treating the graves of veterans like the hallowed ground it is and banning protests near funerals.

But it also means something more. It means understanding that what Ryan and so many Americans fought and died for is not a place on a map or a certain kind of people. What they sacrificed for – what they gave all for – is a larger idea – the idea that a nation can be governed by laws, not men; that we can be equal in the eyes of those laws; that we can be free to say what we want, write what we want, and worship as we please; that we can have the right to pursue our own dreams, but the obligation to help our fellow Americans pursue theirs.

So on this day, of all days, let's memorialize our fallen heroes by honoring all who wear our country's uniform; and by completing their work to make America more secure and our world more free. But let's also do our part – service-member and civilian alike – to live up to the idea that so many of our fellow citizens have consecrated – the idea of America. That is the essence of patriotism. That is the lesson of this solemn day. And that is the task that lies ahead. May God bless you, and may God bless the United States of America.

[EMBED]

New TV ad featuring former Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle to begin airing tomorrow.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

webservant (2008-05-28 11:38:00)

Hey, I got a question for you... Does Barack Obama see dead people?

Excerpt from his speech: "On this Memorial Day, as our nation honors its unbroken line of fallen heroes, and I see many of them here today..."

Is this what he gets for adlibbing his speech writers -or- is there something we should know?

Obama News on Tuesday (2008-05-27 10:58)

Barack Obama received the endorsement today of Wyoming Democratic Party Vice Chair Nancy Drummon. He now needs only 48 more delegates to win the nomination.

Former U.S. senator George McGovern will be hosting an early voting event in South Dakota this Wednesday.

Here is the video of a new TV ad campaign in South Dakota stressing Barack's fight against lobbyist influence in Washington.

[EMBED]

'Achieve' Airs in Montana (2008-05-27 17:23)

Here is Barack Obama's new TV ad campaign for Montana. Entitled "Achieve," the ad addresses the rising cost of living and the difficulty in saving, which is due mainly to the rising price of oil. Barack's energy policy calls for increased energy independence.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Three More Superdelegates Join Barack Obama (2008-05-28 09:18)

Sen. Barack Obama picked up three more superdelegates today – Colorado Democratic Party Chair and superdelegate Pat Waak, Oregon Democratic Party Chair Meredith Wood Smith and Guam Senator and Democrat National Committeeman Ben C. Pangelinan.

Barack now needs 46 more delegates for the nomination.

Here is Pangelinan's statement:

I am honored to cast this most crucial and valuable vote to determine the next President of the United States. It is because of the nature of this vote, that I have taken such deliberate and measured consideration before making my decision" stated the Senator and former Speaker of the Guam Legislature.

While both Democratic candidates will be great for America and great for Guam, Senator Obama is my choice. I believe he is the best candidate to deliver on the promise that is America, for all of America.

In speaking to members of both teams, I have come to trust in Senator Obama's commitment to turning the promises on the issues that are important to the people of Guam, into progress for the people of Guam.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-05-28 09:18)

Sen. Barack Obama picked up three more superdelegates today – Colorado Democratic Party Chair and superdelegate Pat Waak

Battleground States (2008-05-28 10:38)

The focus of the Obama campaign is swinging toward choosing which states to target in November.

Although grassroots operations, including offices, will continue in all states, certain battleground states must be selected where the candidate will spend most of his time, where the most resources and the "A-team" staff personnel will be allocated.

These battleground states are those known as "swing states," where the vote is considered on the borderline between the two candidates.

I've analyzed the potential battleground states based mainly on polls, number of electoral votes per state, demographics, and the general enthusiasm and organization of the campaign in those states that I've witnessed. This analysis though is tentative because polls are still quite early.

The base of voters that participate in the primaries is different than that of the general election. Many more people should turn out for the latter. Many of these folk probably have not tuned in much yet, and polls will only reflect their name recognition of the candidates. As they begin to more closely examine the candidates, their choices can change quickly and often.

I'm dividing the battleground states into three categories: 1) States to Win Over, 2) States to Defend, 3) Other Battleground States.

The States to Win Over are those where Obama must go on the offensive to win. States to Defend are those where Barack looks strong, and must basically defend his position. The other states are more difficult and/or do not carry sufficient electoral votes. I would probably have the candidate spend from 50 to 80 percent of the time in the first category states with similar resource allocation, and divide the rest of the time and resources between the next two categories. Other states would only be visited for the occasional fundraiser and to keep the troops happy.

The states are listed in order of priority with the number of electoral votes for each state in parenthesis.

States to Win Over

1. Ohio (20)
2. Michigan (17)
3. Wisconsin (10)
4. Missouri (11)

States to Defend

1. Pennsylvania (21)
2. Colorado (9)
3. Iowa (7)
4. New Jersey (15)
5. Oregon (7)

Other Battleground States

1. Virginia (13)
2. New Mexico (5)
3. Nevada (5)
4. Florida (27)
5. New Hampshire (4)
6. North Carolina (15)
7. Georgia (15)

Now again, my opinion on these states could change depending as the situation is quite fluid.

Of course, there are a number of other states where Barack stands a chance of pulling upsets like Louisiana, Kansas, etc., and grassroots efforts there should be supported. Maybe these states will come into play later on during the campaign.

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama talks Education in Thornton, Colorado (2008-05-28 15:47)

Barack Obama talks about education at MESA campus in Thornton, Colorado, where all graduating seniors were accepted into college, May 28, 2008.

Many other countries are leaping ahead of America in educating their people.

[EMBED]

Some more good news today as Oregon superdelegate Wayne Kinney endorsed Obama reducing the number of delegates needed for the nomination to 45.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

RBC Meeting: How to Make a Positive Impact this Weekend (2008-05-28 18:32)

From barackobama.com :

On the RBC Meeting: How to Make a Positive Impact this Weekend

by Christopher Hass

, Wednesday, May 28, 2008 at 03:36 PM

On Saturday, the Rules and Bylaws Committee of the Democratic National Committee will meet in Washington D.C. to determine whether Florida and Michigan delegates should be allowed to participate at the Democratic convention in August. We look forward to the meeting proceeding smoothly—and we're asking that our supporters not demonstrate or disrupt the proceedings in any way.

Instead, we're urging supporters from across the region to make a positive impact this weekend by helping out with voter registration and organizational events taking place on Saturday.

Here are just a few of the many going on in Virginia this weekend:

- In Arlington, supporters will meet at the Court House Metro Stop at 10:00 AM on Saturday morning before heading out to register voters throughout the area
- Also in Arlington, Spanish speaking volunteers will be manning a nonpartisan voter registration table at the Arlington Mill Community Center, before heading out to register voters at shopping centers, grocery stores, and other high traffic areas in the neighborhood
- In Clifton, volunteers will be going door-to-door talk to unregistered voters
- In Alexandria, Gloria will be hosting an "Obama Mamas" Women For Obama House Party
- In Norfolk, supporters will be canvassing to register new voters and to recruit new volunteers
- In Manassass, supporters will be registering new voters throughout Prince William County
- In Petersburg, volunteers will be meeting at the public library before heading out to register voters

And in Richmond, Kristen is organizing a series of voter registration events as part of an ambitious, ongoing effort to register 4,000 new voters, with staging locations at:

- Chimborazo Park
- Broad Rock Sports Complex
- Battery Park Pool
- Randolph Pool

There are dozens of grassroots events like these taking place across the country this weekend, and there will be many more in the weeks and months to come. You can search for an event in your own community, or sign up and create your own.

As the attention begins to turn towards the general election, there is no better way to make an impact than by registering new voters and bringing more people into this movement. No matter where you are this weekend, you can connect with people in your own community and continue the work of building a true grassroots political machine, one new voter at a time.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-05-30 13:13:00)

I was asked to attend a meeting to become an "deputized registrar"

How can I get in touch with someone here in Milwaukee?

Thanks

Barack Obama: You vs. Bush-McCain (2008-05-29 07:16)

Here is a message sent out by Barack Obama today. Don't Bush and McCain look cute together ;)

In other news, Oregon superdelegate Gail Rasmussen endorsed Barack today, so there's 44 more delegates to go.

Paul -

Right now you have a unique opportunity to go head-to-head with George W. Bush.

This week, John McCain and George Bush gathered behind closed doors, away from the cameras, to raise money for McCain's campaign.

McCain used Bush to raise a reported $3.5 million from a group of about 500 Republican contributors.

That's a lot of money that will undoubtedly be used to attack us and make the case to continue George Bush's failed policies.

But I have an idea about how we can match it. And we don't need George Bush.

Right now, you can be the reason that someone decides to take the leap and own a piece of this campaign. If you make a donation today, your gift will match their first donation and double their impact.

You'll see the name and hometown of the person you inspired to give. And you can even choose to exchange a personal note about why you've decided to support a different kind of politics.

Your past support has helped us grow this movement. Please make another donation and double your impact.

Your donation of $25 will equal $50 for our cause. Make a matching donation now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

As the presumptive nominee of his party, John McCain has had a three-month head start to build his campaign. In that time, he's made his fundraising strategy clear.

In the words of one reporter, the gala fundraiser with Bush was "part of McCain's delicate effort to find the balance between embracing an unpopular president and taking advantage of his huge continuing draw with well-heeled Republicans."

We'll see more of this dance in the weeks and months ahead, but we already know the steps.

As we prepare to take on John McCain, now is our first chance to show that a grassroots movement of people giving only what they can afford can go toe-to-toe with the Bush-McCain fundraising machine.

And with the last three contests of the Democratic primary coming up in the next five days, the resources we're building right now are an urgent necessity.

Help build our movement by making a matching donation today:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

John McCain can run from the cameras, but he can't hide from the fact that he's aiming to continue George Bush's policies for a disastrous third term.

Let's show that we're ready to take him on.

Thank you,

Barack

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Video: Michelle Obama visits Puerto Rico (2008-05-29 12:55)

Check out the video of Michelle Obama's visit to Puerto Rico.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Two Texas Superdelegates Join Obama – 41 to go (2008-05-30 07:55)

Two Texas superdelegates – Texas Democratic Party chairman Boyd Richie and Democratic National Committee member Betty Richie – have endorsed Barack Obama today. Only 41 more delegates are needed to gain the nomination. On Sunday, 55 pledged delegates are up for grabs in Puerto Rico, and another 31 on Tuesday in Montana and South Dakota.

Obama Events in South Dakota

May 31 Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama

in Rapid City, SD

May 31 Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama

in Aberdeen, SD

Jun 1 Rally with Barack Obama

in Mitchell, SD

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Video: TV Ads in Puerto Rico (2008-05-30 13:15)

Here are Barack Obama's television ads airing in Puerto Rico.

Message to Puerto Rico [EMBED]

En Espanol: [EMBED]
"He Understands Us"
[EMBED]

En Espanol: [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack in Great Falls, Montana (2008-05-30 19:25)

Barack Obama in Great Falls, Montana, talks about the differences with John McCain on the Iraq war.
[EMBED]

If you live in Montana, make sure to vote on June 3! Find your polling location here.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Republicans: "Democrats Win Landslide Victory" (2008-05-31 07:23)

Steve Hildebrand of the Obama campaign sent out this email today.

You'll like this.

This morning someone forwarded me an email sent by the arm of the Republican Party that raises money for their Senate candidates.

The subject of the message was "Democrats Win Landslide Victory," and the writer, Republican former Senator Bill Frist, admits: "I have a real fear of waking up to this headline after the elections this fall."

He goes on to explain fears among Washington power brokers about Barack Obama's grassroots support and voter registration efforts.

He's right to be worried - we're bringing new people into the process, and Obama supporters are organizing in communities across the country like never before.

You've gotten their attention by being one of the 1.5 million donors who have gotten us this far. But Frist was raising money ahead of tonight's financial reporting deadline - the same deadline we face.

This is the last opportunity to have your donation counted for May, and the last chance to have a meaningful impact on the final three primary contests.

Will you step up again and make your donation of $25 count right now?

<https://donate.barackobama.com/maydeadline>

Here's a little bit more from Frist's email:

From: Senator Bill Frist , M.D.
Date: Thu, May 29, 2008 at 3:59 PM
Subject: "Democrats Win Landslide Victory"

Dear Republican Supporter,

I have a real fear of waking up to this headline after the elections this fall. [...]

In key states, news accounts indicate Democrats are outpacing Republicans registering voters. We also know Barack Obama's campaign is utilizing the Internet to raise record amounts of money to support his campaign and Democrats nationally ... all in the hope that new voters and record resources will produce a Democrat landslide victory this fall.

There's so much at risk, and conservatives I talk with from all across the country are feeling the rumblings of "what could be." [...]

[...] I ask for your immediate help in supporting Republican candidates running for U.S. Senate by making a contribution of $10, $25, $50 or even $100 to the NRSC [...]

What's amazing about this message referencing Barack Obama is that it's not from the McCain campaign. It's not even about the presidential race.

It's about the forces of the status quo, who don't want to change the way Washington works, worried about the prospect of ordinary people taking their rightful place in a political process that is too often dominated by lobbyists and special interests.

They've seen the writing on the wall, and they know that when Barack is the nominee, we're going to continue building a movement for change to elect Barack Obama and bring about change from the bottom up at every level of office.

There are only a few hours left before tonight's reporting deadline, so please give whatever you can now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/maydeadline>

Thank you,

Steve

Steve Hildebrand
Deputy Campaign Manager
Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Lglenn3000 (2008-05-31 12:34:00)

Check out the Obama Boogie Woogie YouTube video my friends and I put together, in support of Obama at <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2BRqe1b-SsU>.

Anonymous (2008-05-31 19:44:00)

im not good with computer but someone who is should make a video comparison of baghdad bob claiming the infidels were not in baghdad while soldiers were showering in the palace and hillary claiming she has more popular votes and that she will be the nominee

Last Contests Draw Near (2008-05-31 15:08)

The last contests of the primary election are on Sunday (Puerto Rico) and Tuesday (Montana and South Dakota). Much of the attention today, however, has been focused on the RNC meeting of the Democratic National Committee, that will decide the fates of Florida and Michigan. The ruling by this committee, expected shortly, may change the numbers needed to win the nomination.

Here are some slideshows and a video of Barack's stump stops in South Dakota.

Barack visits Mt. Rushmore

[EMBED]

Campaign stop at Rapid City, South Dakota

[EMBED]

Video from Rapid City

[EMBED]

Barack at the Prairie Edge Trading Co. in Rapid City checking out goods made by Northern Plains Indians.

[EMBED]

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

2.6 June

Obama News On Sunday (2008-06-01 07:44)

People are voting in Puerto Rico today with 55 delegates at stake. Also today, a Nevada superdelegate endorsed Barack Obama .

X

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama has picked up the support of Nevada superdelegate Yvonne Gates, nudging him closer to the nomination.

The former Clark County Commissioner and member of the national party's Rules Committee told The Associated Press late Saturday that she had been impressed by the Illinois senator's campaign.

"I have been admiring, just from afar, looking at the way they run the campaign. I have been pretty impressed with this operation," she said. "I think he would make a great president."

The RNC ruled favorably toward the Obama position on Florida and Michigan yesterday. I suspect that after Tuesday, we should see many superdelegate holdouts coming out on one side or another. Since Obama will still hold the lead in pledged delegates, we should expect that he will get most of the endorsements.

Here is a video of Barack talking about small businesses in Aberdeen, South Dakota.

[EMBED]

There are two more days until the last contests in Montana and South Dakota on Tuesday. Find out how you can help by clicking on the links below.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More Video from South Dakota (2008-06-01 13:39)

Barack Obama talks with veterans in Sioux Falls, South Dakota on June 1, 2008. Unlike John McCain, Barack supports GI Bill-like educational benefits for today's veterans.

[EMBED]

George McGovern in South Dakota talks about the grassroots organization of the Obama campaign.

[EMBED]

Rally with Barack and Michelle Obama

Xcel Energy Center
175 W. Kellogg Blvd.
St. Paul, MN 55102

Tuesday, June 3rd
Doors Open 7:00 p.m.

Public Entrance: Gates 1 and 3

The event is free and open to the public. Tickets are NOT required, but an RSVP is strongly encouraged. Admission is on a first-come, first-served basis. Please RSVP using the form to the right.

For security reasons, do not bring bags. Please limit personal items. No signs or banners permitted.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-06-01 20:41:00)

Are Larry Sinclair AND his "moma" both legal American citizens?
Just askin'.

Two More Superdelegates – 44 to go (2008-06-02 07:15)

With the last contests of the primary tomorrow, two new superdelegates have endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today bringing the number needed to win the nomination to 44.

Virginia superdelegate Democratic National Committee Member Jerome Wiley Segovia joined Barack saying:

While sharing the valuable international experience of spending a portion of my formative years overseas in a similar fashion as Senator Obama, I am excited to add my support to a campaign that has clearly demonstrated a commitment to an inclusive national field campaign, has shattered all previous campaign fundraising records, and is supportive of alternative sources of energy to begin to solve our energy crisis. I believe that with Senator Obama's leadership the DNC and all Democratic party groups and programs can continue building upon the amazing progress already begun by Governor Dean and his team.

Connecticut Democratic State Party Chairwoman and superdelegate Nancy DiNardo also endorsed Barack today.

Senator Barack Obama has helped to energize thousands upon thousands of Democrats in Connecticut and across the country. He has inspired the electorate and won their confidence by demonstrating sound judgment, strength of spirit, dedication to those in need, and belief in the transforming power of community. Although we are blessed to have two outstanding candidates for the Democratic nomination this year, Senator Obama was the choice of Connecticut Democrats on February 5th, and he is my choice to head the ticket in November.

As Chairwoman of the State Democratic Party, I believe not only is it important for me to reflect the sentiment of our Party, but I also have a responsibility to endorse the candidate who will help unite the many voices of our Party in its commitment to change and to building a secure future for generations to come. Senator Obama offers Connecticut and our country a chance for such unity – at healing the divisions caused by years of war, deficits, and partisan wrangling. He shares Connecticut's and our nation's concern for building strong communities and re-building our economy ravaged by Republican policies.

More fundamentally, Senator Obama understands the everyday struggles of Americans and is devoted to realizing the vision of a nation in which we and our families, friends and neighbors can earn a decent wage, secure affordable healthcare and housing, send our children to good schools, heat our homes, and breathe clean air. Senator Obama's experience as a community activist and his record in Congress demonstrates his focus on these issues and his ability to effect change without becoming ensnared by and beholden to the political establishment.

Senator Obama has built his campaign on an appeal to the deep-seated goodness of America – the goodness that all Americans intuitively understand. I would encourage every citizen of Connecticut to take a close look at Senator Obama's policies for our State and our great country, and to make the right choice and VOTE OBAMA in November!

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Get Out the Vote in South Dakota (2008-06-02 08:50)

There are 31 delegates at stake tomorrow in South Dakota and Montana. Barack needs 44 more delegates to win the nomination. Here's a post from barackobama.com with information on helping get out the vote in South Dakota.

Help South Dakota Get Out the Vote

by Zachary Scott Edwards

, Monday, June 02, 2008 at 07:52 AM

The intersection of Vote St. and Quest St. goes right through South Dakota. There is only one more day until we vote in South Dakota and the grassroots has mobilized to knock on doors, make the important phone calls, and work to help Get Out the Vote.

If you are in South Dakota, and need to find where to vote tomorrow, click here. You can also call 1-866-675-2008.

This is the crunch time where every minute counts. Our local offices are the best place to go if you want to get involved, but you can also call your nearest office and they can help you find a canvass near you—we need your help today!

KEVN reports...

Obama supporters continue door to door campaign

Volunteers are going door-to-door passing out literature, posting signs, and trying to get the last of the undecided voters on the Illinois Senator's side.

Richard Ptacek says, "There's an opportunity here to clarify some things. I think there are a lot of talking points out there that are not accurate and maybe today when I get out and meet some of these people I can help clarify some of those things or at least get them to look at it a little closer." Richard and his family from Piedmont have decided to spend their Sunday canvassing – hoping to share with others their belief in Obama's ability to change America. Richard Ptacek says, "A lot of times a families politics do divided families. In our case it brings us together. So we're gonna take the time to go to work together to share our experience, strength and hope with others to."

If you are able, please join us for this extremely important day of reaching out to local voters, talking about Barack, and making sure they know where they are voting on Tuesday. We'll provide all of the materials to make it easy, make sure you are comfortable and going out with a canvass buddy, and provide food and drinks to enjoy before and after you go out!

We need every voice speaking loud and clear about the importance of tomorrow's vote in South Dakota—and if you are at home, and ready to make the difference, then please, get started making calls!

Barack talks about honest solutions to the nation's problems in Mitchell, South Dakota.

[EMBED]

Ida Fast Wolf introduces Barack Obama in Rapid City, South Dakota.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Four More Superdelegates for Barack - 41.5 to go (2008-06-02 17:01)

Four more superdelegates endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today.

Southfield Mayor Brenda Lawrence, Michigan Education Association President Lu Battaglieri, Florida Democratic Party Secretary Janee Murphy and Democratic National Committee member David McDonald announced their support for Barack.

Now only 41.5 delegates are needed to clinch the nomination. Earlier in the day, two superdelegates joined the Obama campaign.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama meets with Rite Aid distribution plant workers in Waterford, Michigan
To make calls to South Dakota or Montana, click on the following button.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Superdelegates lined up for Barack Obama (2008-06-03 10:01)

Barack Obama has picked up more superdelegates reducing the total needed to 33. And reportedly dozens more are lined up to endorse either today or tomorrow. These superdelegates, if they come through, together with the pledged delegates that Obama will pick up later today in Montana and South Dakota should put him over the top.

If this happens, Hillary Clinton has two choices. She can release her delegates and supporters and unite them behind Barack. Or she can continue to fight for superdelegates, and even pledged delegates, throughout the summer to the convention in August. Most analysts will agree that if she chooses the latter it possibly could endanger the Democrats chances. By August there will be precious little time to organize the mass effort needed to win in November.

There are conflicting reports as to whether Clinton will concede or not.

The new superdelegates that have joined Obama are House Majority Whip James Clyburn (D-SC) , Rep. Jim Spratt (D-SC), Edwards pledged delegate Tim Moore of South Carolina, Congresswoman Carolyn Cheeks Kilpatrick (MI-13), Florida Edwards delegate Fred K. McDowell, State Rep. Maria Chappelle-Nadal, Michigan DNC Member Debbie Dingell , Michigan DNC Member Rick Wiener and Michigan superdelegate Joyce Lalonde.

Here is House Majority Whip James Clyburn's statement.

"Today the primary process draws to a close," said House Majority Whip James Clyburn, D-SC, in a statement this morning. "From the beginning, I have made it clear that I would put the Democratic Party's best interest first and remain publicly neutral as this process ran its course, but it is now time to make my preference known. Today I am pledging my delegate vote to Senator Barack Obama for President of the United States."

Clyburn has been officially neutral until yesterday, though he has publicly expressed disappointment at the way Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-NY, and her husband conducted themselves during her campaign.

In addition to praising the "levels of energy and excitement that I have not witnessed since the 1960's," the highest-ranking African-American in Congress also trotted out an electability argument about Obama, perhaps to contrast with Clinton's argument that she is more electable.

"Recent surveys indicate that Senator Obama is by far the most preferred presidential candidate among Democrats and independents," Clyburn said, "and I believe he is the most electable candidate that Democrats can offer. He will be able to dramatically change the electoral map for Democrats which will in turn expand our majorities here in Congress, and help elect more Democrats at the state and local levels. Furthermore, I believe that Senator Obama is the Democrat who can unite our people, help heal our nation's wounds, improve our standing on the world stage, and steer our country in a new direction. What is especially exciting about Senator Obama's candidacy is its attraction to young and independent voters. Our Party cannot hope to continue our recent successes if we don't continue to attract new voters. Senator Obama has demonstrated the ability to draw a new map for Democrats by putting traditionally red states like Colorado, Virginia and North Carolina, and swing states like New Mexico, Missouri and Iowa in play."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-06-03 11:44:00)

Congratulations on handing the election to JOHN McBUSH!

Barack Obama to Clinch Nomination (2008-06-03 14:42)

The official Obama campaign has the number at 16 at its changing constantly. CNN gives the number of delegates Barack Obama needs to win the nomination at 20. Either way, with reliable sources reporting many more endorsements on the way before the day is over and victories expected in Montana and South Dakota, it looks likely that he will clinch the nomination today.

Among those expected to endorse Barack after the polls close tonight, is former president Jimmy Carter.

According to the official Obama tally, the pledged delegates gained tonight should do the job even without further endorsements.

Also a sign that Sen. Hillary Clinton might be ready to concede the race as she is reported to have said she is open to a VP slot.

Just the thought of Clinton on the ticket with Obama sends some supporters into orbit. However, there is no doubt that she has earned the right to be seriously considered based on the large numbers of delegates and supporters she has mustered. There is a great risk of a divided party if this is not handled right.

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-06-03 19:55:00)

NO NO NO. I will vote for McCain. I hope Hillary takes you to the mattress In November.

Barack Obama becomes Presumptive Nominee (2008-06-03 21:56)

Sen. Barack Obama clinched the number of delegates needed for the Democratic nomination after a hard-fought race that lasted for a year and a half!

Here is the text of the speech, as prepared for delivery, that he gave tonight in Minnesota at the site of the upcoming Republican convention.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama

Final Primary Night

Tuesday, June 3rd, 2008

St. Paul, Minnesota

As Prepared for Delivery

Tonight, after fifty-four hard-fought contests, our primary season has finally come to an end.

Sixteen months have passed since we first stood together on the steps of the Old State Capitol in Springfield, Illinois. Thousands of miles have been traveled. Millions of voices have been heard. And because of what you said – because you decided that change must come to Washington; because you believed that this year must be different than all the rest; because you chose to listen not to your doubts or your fears but to your greatest hopes and highest aspirations, tonight we mark the end of one historic journey with the beginning of another – a journey that will bring a new and better day to America. Tonight, I can stand before you and say that I will be the Democratic nominee for President of the United States.

I want to thank every American who stood with us over the course of this campaign – through the good days and the bad; from the snows of Cedar Rapids to the sunshine of Sioux Falls. And tonight I also want to thank the men and woman who took this journey with me as fellow candidates for President.

At this defining moment for our nation, we should be proud that our party put forth one of the most talented, qualified field of individuals ever to run for this office. I have not just competed with them as rivals, I have learned from them as friends, as public servants, and as patriots who love America and are willing to work tirelessly to make this country better. They are leaders of this party, and leaders that America will turn to for years to come.

That is particularly true for the candidate who has traveled further on this journey than anyone else. Senator Hillary Clinton has made history in this campaign not just because she's a woman who has done what no woman has done before, but because she's a leader who inspires millions of Americans with her strength, her courage, and her commitment to the causes that brought us here tonight.

We've certainly had our differences over the last sixteen months. But as someone who's shared a stage with her many times, I can tell you that what gets Hillary Clinton up in the morning – even in the face of tough odds – is exactly what sent her and Bill Clinton to sign up for their first campaign in Texas all those years ago; what sent her to work at the Children's Defense Fund and made her fight for health care as

First Lady; what led her to the United States Senate and fueled her barrier-breaking campaign for the presidency – an unyielding desire to improve the lives of ordinary Americans, no matter how difficult the fight may be. And you can rest assured that when we finally win the battle for universal health care in this country, she will be central to that victory. When we transform our energy policy and lift our children out of poverty, it will be because she worked to help make it happen. Our party and our country are better off because of her, and I am a better candidate for having had the honor to compete with Hillary Rodham Clinton.

There are those who say that this primary has somehow left us weaker and more divided. Well I say that because of this primary, there are millions of Americans who have cast their ballot for the very first time. There are Independents and Republicans who understand that this election isn't just about the party in charge of Washington, it's about the need to change Washington. There are young people, and African-Americans, and Latinos, and women of all ages who have voted in numbers that have broken records and inspired a nation.

All of you chose to support a candidate you believe in deeply. But at the end of the day, we aren't the reason you came out and waited in lines that stretched block after block to make your voice heard. You didn't do that because of me or Senator Clinton or anyone else. You did it because you know in your hearts that at this moment – a moment that will define a generation – we cannot afford to keep doing what we've been doing. We owe our children a better future. We owe our country a better future. And for all those who dream of that future tonight, I say – let us begin the work together. Let us unite in common effort to chart a new course for America.

In just a few short months, the Republican Party will arrive in St. Paul with a very different agenda. They will come here to nominate John McCain, a man who has served this country heroically. I honor that service, and I respect his many accomplishments, even if he chooses to deny mine. My differences with him are not personal; they are with the policies he has proposed in this campaign.

Because while John McCain can legitimately tout moments of independence from his party in the past, such independence has not been the hallmark of his presidential campaign.

It's not change when John McCain decided to stand with George Bush ninety-five percent of the time, as he did in the Senate last year.

It's not change when he offers four more years of Bush economic policies that have failed to create well-paying jobs, or insure our workers, or help Americans afford the skyrocketing cost of college – policies that have lowered the real incomes of the average American family, widened the gap between Wall Street and Main Street, and left our children with a mountain of debt.

And it's not change when he promises to continue a policy in Iraq that asks everything of our brave men and women in uniform and nothing of Iraqi politicians – a policy where all we look for are reasons to stay in Iraq, while we spend billions of dollars a month on a war that isn't making the American people any safer.

So I'll say this – there are many words to describe John McCain's attempt to pass off his embrace of George Bush's policies as bipartisan and new. But change is not one of them.

Change is a foreign policy that doesn't begin and end with a war that should've never been authorized and never been waged. I won't stand here and pretend that there are many good options left in Iraq, but what's not an option is leaving our troops in that country for the next hundred years – especially at a time when our military is overstretched, our nation is isolated, and nearly every other threat to America is being ignored.

We must be as careful getting out of Iraq as we were careless getting in – but start leaving we must. It's time for Iraqis to take responsibility for their future. It's time to rebuild our military and give our veterans the care they need and the benefits they deserve when they come home. It's time to refocus our efforts on al Qaeda's leadership and Afghanistan, and rally the world against the common threats of the 21st century – terrorism and nuclear weapons; climate change and poverty; genocide and disease. That's what change is.

Change is realizing that meeting today's threats requires not just our firepower, but the power of our diplomacy – tough, direct diplomacy where the President of the United States isn't afraid to let any petty dictator know where America stands and what we stand for. We must once again have the courage and conviction to lead the free world. That is the legacy of Roosevelt, and Truman, and Kennedy. That's what the American people want. That's what change is.

Change is building an economy that rewards not just wealth, but the work and workers who created it. It's understanding that the struggles facing working families can't be solved by spending billions of dollars on more tax breaks for big corporations and wealthy CEOs, but by giving a the middle-class a tax break, and investing in our crumbling infrastructure, and transforming how we use energy, and improving our schools, and renewing our commitment to science and innovation. It's understanding that fiscal responsibility and shared prosperity can go hand-in-hand, as they did when Bill Clinton was President.

John McCain has spent a lot of time talking about trips to Iraq in the last few weeks, but maybe if he spent some time taking trips to the cities and towns that have been hardest hit by this economy – cities in Michigan, and Ohio, and right here in Minnesota – he'd understand the kind of change that people are looking for.

Maybe if he went to Iowa and met the student who works the night shift after a full day of class and still can't pay the medical bills for a sister who's ill, he'd understand that she can't afford four more years of a health care plan that only takes care of the healthy and wealthy. She needs us to pass health care plan that guarantees insurance to every American who wants it and brings down premiums for every family who needs it. That's the change we need.

Maybe if he went to Pennsylvania and met the man who lost his job but can't even afford the gas to drive around and look for a new one, he'd understand that we can't afford four more years of our addiction to oil from dictators. That man needs us to pass an energy policy that works with automakers to raise fuel standards, and makes corporations pay for their pollution, and oil companies invest their record profits in a clean energy future – an energy policy that will create millions of new jobs that pay well and can't be outsourced. That's the change we need.

And maybe if he spent some time in the schools of South Carolina or St. Paul or where he spoke tonight in New Orleans, he'd understand that we can't afford to leave the money behind for No Child Left Behind; that we owe it to our children to invest in early childhood education; to recruit an army of new teachers and give them better pay and more support; to finally decide that in this global economy, the chance to get a college education should not be a privilege for the wealthy few, but the birthright of every American. That's the change we need in America. That's why I'm running for President.

The other side will come here in September and offer a very different set of policies and positions, and that is a debate I look forward to. It is a debate the American people deserve. But what you don't deserve is another election that's governed by fear, and innuendo, and division. What you won't hear from this campaign or this party is the kind of politics that uses religion as a wedge, and patriotism as a bludgeon – that sees our opponents not as competitors to challenge, but enemies to demonize. Because we may call ourselves Democrats and Republicans, but we are Americans first. We are always Americans first.

Despite what the good Senator from Arizona said tonight, I have seen people of differing views and opinions find common cause many times during my two decades in public life, and I have brought many together myself. I've walked arm-in-arm with community leaders on the South Side of Chicago and watched tensions fade as black, white, and Latino fought together for good jobs and good schools. I've sat across the table from law enforcement and civil rights advocates to reform a criminal justice system that sent thirteen innocent people to death row. And I've worked with friends in the other party to provide more children with health insurance and more working families with a tax break; to curb the spread of nuclear weapons and ensure that the American people know where their tax dollars are being spent; and to reduce the influence of lobbyists who have all too often set the agenda in Washington.

In our country, I have found that this cooperation happens not because we agree on everything, but because behind all the labels and false divisions and categories that define us; beyond all the petty bickering and point-scoring in Washington, Americans are a decent, generous, compassionate people, united by common challenges and common hopes. And every so often, there are moments which call on that fundamental goodness to make this country great again.

So it was for that band of patriots who declared in a Philadelphia hall the formation of a more perfect union; and for all those who gave on the fields of Gettysburg and Antietam their last full measure of devotion to save that same union.

So it was for the Greatest Generation that conquered fear itself, and liberated a continent from tyranny, and made this country home to untold opportunity and prosperity.

So it was for the workers who stood out on the picket lines; the women who shattered glass ceilings; the children who braved a Selma bridge for freedom's cause.

So it has been for every generation that faced down the greatest challenges and the most improbable odds to leave their children a world that's better, and kinder, and more just.

And so it must be for us.

America, this is our moment. This is our time. Our time to turn the page on the policies of the past. Our time to bring new energy and new ideas to the challenges we face. Our time to offer a new direction for the country we love.

The journey will be difficult. The road will be long. I face this challenge with profound humility, and knowledge of my own limitations. But I also face it with limitless faith in the capacity of the American people. Because if we are willing to work for it, and fight for it, and believe in it, then I am absolutely certain that generations from now, we will be able to look back and tell our children that this was the moment when we began to provide care for the sick and good jobs to the jobless; this was the moment when the rise of the oceans began to slow and our planet began to heal; this was the moment when we ended a war and secured our nation and restored our image as the last, best hope on Earth. This was the moment – this was the time – when we came together to remake this great nation so that it may always reflect our very best selves, and our highest ideals. Thank you, God Bless you, and may God Bless the United States of America.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Distilling Demographics (2008-06-04 08:57)

One thing to remember about demographics is that you can not apply the results of the primary to the general election. John McCain is not Hillary Clinton.

One easy example to demonstrate this is Obama's performance in the primary among women. One might be tempted to say that Obama is weak among women just looking at the numbers. However, many women were rightfully excited about having the first viable women candidate for president. If such a strong woman candidate was not in the race, Barack probably would have done much better with this demographic.

So, we can not say that Barack Obama will not do well with women against John McCain.

How about "white working class voters?" Let's remember that most of that demographic in the Democratic primary consisted of Democrats . These Democrats have been compared to "Reagan Democrats" recently suggested they are crossover votes. But do Reagan Democrats really still exist, or have they all become independents?

I think the polls and recent elections indicate that Republicans have to worry much more about their own crossing over to Barack Obama than vice a versa.

Not saying that Obama could not use a speech writer whose specializes in reaching working-class crowds. His words, as in his electrifying speech last night after clinching the nomination, appear to be perceived as a bit high brow by some people. He may need to adjust his talking style to match the audience more effectively to win over the bread and butter crowd.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: Victory Speech in St. Paul (2008-06-04 12:09)

Check out Barack Obama's stunning victory speech from last night in St. Paul, Minnesota, which also will host the Republican convention late this summer.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-06-04 18:19:00)

As I watch what is happening in America today I am deeply disturbed. For years, the far left Marxist/ Socialist arm of the democratic party has been seeking to gain control and place their candidate in the executive office.

This is now being accomplished. Barrack Obama is the perfect candidate for their purposes. Obama hid his true agenda in the senate by being conveniently absent on votes that would have easily shown America his far left leaning. He is now distancing himself from those friends and colleagues who are anti-American and Marxist, but his heart is in the same place it has always been.

My fear is that he will ride into office with the votes of African Americans who want to see a black man elected president and young people who do not understand what Marxism and Socialism truly mean to our free enterprise system and our indepedence as a people. How tragic for our youth and a minority group to be used by those who have no intention of making America a stronger Republic or a better democracy. How unfair to black Americans who deserve better and our youth who have not been taught truth in our institutions.

Hillary Clinton to Endorse Barack Obama Friday (2008-06-04 16:03)

MSNBC just reported on air that Sen. Hillary Clinton is suspending her campaign and will endorse Sen. Barack Obama on Friday.

This is big news and will help the Democrats and the Obama campaign go forward.

Earlier in the day, Barack chose a three person team to select a vice presidential running mate consisting of Caroline Kennedy, former Deputy Attorney General Eric Holder and longtime Washington insider Jim Johnson.

Barack also received the endorsements of Tennessee Gov. Phil Bredesen and former Vice President Walter Mondale today.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama Announces New DNC Fundraising Rules (2008-06-05 07:19)

Sen. Barack Obama is announcing new money guidelines for the Democratic National Committee, his camp revealed today.

The DNC will no longer accept money from political action committees (PACs) or federal lobbyists in accordance with Obama's own campaign standards.

"We want the Democratic Party to conform to his standards of openness to reduce the influence of special interests," campaign spokeswoman Linda Douglass said today.

Barack is still mulling over whether to accept public financing for the general election campaign. His opponent John McCain challenged Obama to run his campaign with public funds well aware of Barack's fundraising prowess. Accepting public funds would free the Obama campaign from fundraising duties, although most of Barack's money now comes from online donations. This allows him to stay on the campaign trail rather than spend time attending fundraisers.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-06-05 21:05:00)

Time to focus on November. The RNC and McCain will throw everything they have at Obama. Let's make sure we are prepared. Go to Washington2008.com

47 New Endorsements (2008-06-06 07:24)

The Democratic Party is rallying behind by Sen. Barack Obama including former supporters of Hillary Clinton. The latter will announce her support of Obama tomorrow.

From barackobama.com :

Thursday Superdelegate Update: 47 New Endorsements

by HQ Blog

, Thursday, June 05, 2008 at 07:28 PM

Today, the Democratic party continued to unify around Barack Obama. Forty seven new superdelegate endorsements were announced today, including that of Ohio Governor Ted Strickland who had been a active supporter of Senator Hillary Clinton throughout the primary process. Earlier today he released the following comments, explaining his choice...

- Gov. Ted Strickland (OH)

Today, I announce my wholehearted and enthusiastic support for Barack Obama for President of the United States.

Earlier today I talked with Sen. Hillary Clinton. I thanked her for her friendship and the strong effort she put forth in this historic campaign. I pledged to work with her to unify the party and to make sure that Barack Obama wins the presidency.

Ohioans have suffered as a result of the failed policies of the Bush Administration, including job loss as a result of rising fuel prices. Ohioans desperately want real, meaningful change. And I believe Barack Obama will bring that change.

The following superdelegates also endorsed Barack Obama today:

- Rep. Jim Matheson (UT)
- Rep. Jim Inslee (WA)
- Tom Foley (WA)
- Norm Dicks (WA)
- Teamsters General President Jim Hoffa
- Georgia AFL-CIO President Richard Ray
- Sen. Jim Webb (VA)
- Rep. Alcee L. Hastings (FL)
- Rep. Corrine Brown (FL)
- Rep. Kendrick B. Meek (FL)
- Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (FL)
- The entire NY Congressional Delegation (29 members, led by Rep. Charlie Rangel)
- Virginia Democratic Party Chair Dick Cranwell
- Rep. Bob Rankin (CA)
- Rep. Diana DeGette (CO)
- Rep. Zack Space
- Sen. Sherrod Brown
- Ohio Democratic Party Chair Chris Redfern

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Reasons Not to Accept Public Funding (2008-06-06 12:05)

Although one would think that a publicly-funded campaign fits right into Sen. Barack Obama's agenda, there are good reasons he might want to avoid taking such a route.

First of all, the Republican National Committee (RNC) has raised much more money than its Democratic counterpart, the DNC. A significant amount of this money has come from special interest groups, PACs, lobbyists, etc.

Also, John McCain can't stop independent 527 groups from campaigning on his behalf with special interest money.

So, if Barack accepts public funding at this time, it may put him at a disadvantage in the end.

The Obama campaign sent out an email today illustrating why one has to look past just the numbers from McCain's fundraising efforts.

In the excitement of the past few days, there's some news you may have missed.

John McCain and the Republican National Committee released their fundraising numbers for May, and we've got our work cut out for us.

The McCain campaign raised $21 million, which will be combined with $23.7 million raised in partnership with the Republican National Committee.

That's nearly $45 million dollars in one month – money that will be used to attack Barack Obama and support John McCain's effort to extend the policies of George W. Bush for another four years.

We need to respond quickly and show that we are ready to take on Senator McCain in the general election.

You can help by encouraging a fellow supporter to take the next step and own a piece of this campaign.

Make a donation of $25 today and match the gift of a first-time donor. You can even choose to exchange a note with them about why you support Barack:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

Even more disturbing than the amount of money John McCain and the RNC have raised is the way they raised it.

They depend on donations from Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs. And top officials in McCain's campaign have been asking these donors to write checks and raise money from their clients to the tune of $50,000 each.

Barack is doing things differently.

This campaign has never accepted donations from Washington lobbyists or special interest PACs. And yesterday the Democratic National Committee announced that they will follow the same restriction.

We are going to compete in the general election the same way we have all along – by depending on a movement of more than 1.5 million people giving only what they can afford.

Make a $25 donation now and help bring a first-time donor into this campaign:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

I'm sure you've heard that Hillary Clinton is suspending her campaign and announcing her support for Barack. We all owe Senator Clinton – and her supporters – a great deal of respect for running an incredible campaign and strengthening our party in all 50 states.

But John McCain and his allies are not missing a beat in their campaign to continue the Bush agenda.

As the presumptive nominee, John McCain had a three-month head start to build his party and raise money. But we can't afford to let him have the advantage.

For all his talk of reform, John McCain is willing to rely on huge donations from Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs.

We have a historic opportunity to run a new kind of campaign and elect a new kind of leader.

Thank you for your support and for being a part of this movement,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Reaction to Obama Victory Abroad (2008-06-06 18:49)

There have been differing reactions to Barack Obama 's clinching of the Democratic nomination, but on the whole the response appears very positive.

I'll post three articles covering this subject starting with this one.

Overseas, Excitement Over Obama

In Presumptive Nominee, Many See Chance for New Direction and New Attitude

British papers heralded Obama's victory in the Democratic race. Reaction was not enthusiastic everywhere; Israel and China have policy concerns.

(By Kirsty Wigglesworth – Associated Press)

By Kevin Sullivan

Washington Post Foreign Service

Thursday, June 5, 2008; Page A10

LONDON, June 4 – For much of the world, Sen. Barack Obama's victory in the Democratic primaries was a moment to admire the United States at a time when the nation's image abroad has been seriously damaged.

From hundreds of supporters crowded around televisions in rural Kenya, Obama's ancestral homeland, to jubilant Britons writing "WE DID IT!" on the Brits for Barack discussion board on Facebook, people celebrated what they called an important racial and generational milestone for the United States.

"This is close to a miracle. I was certain that some things will not happen in my lifetime," said Sunila Patel, 62, a widow encountered on the streets of New Delhi. "A black president of the U.S. will mean that there will be more American tolerance for people around the world who are different."

The primary race generated unprecedented interest outside the United States, much of it a reflection of a desire for change from the policies of President Bush, who surveys show is deeply unpopular around the globe. At the same time, many people abroad seemed impressed – sometimes even shocked – by the wide-open nature of U.S. democracy, and the history-making race between a woman and a black man.

"The primaries showed that the U.S. is actually the nation we had believed it to be, a place that is open-minded enough to have a woman or an African American as its president," said Minoru Morita, a Tokyo political analyst.

While Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton has admirers, especially from her days as first lady, interviews on four continents suggested that Obama is the candidate who has most captured the world's imagination.

"Obama is the exciting image of what we always hoped America was," said Robin Niblett, director of Chatham House, a British foreign policy institute. "We have immensely enjoyed the ride and can't wait for the next phase."

The presumptive Republican nominee, Sen. John McCain, who has extensive overseas experience, is known and respected in much of the world. Interviews suggested that McCain is more popular than Obama in countries such as Israel, where McCain is particularly admired for his hard line against Iran.

"Although no one will admit it, Israeli leaders are worried about Obama," said Eytan Gilboa, a political scientist at Bar-Ilan University in Israel. "The feeling is that this is the time to be tough in foreign policy toward the Middle East, and he's going to be soft."

In China, leaders are widely believed to be wary that a Democratic administration might put up barriers to Chinese exports to the United States.

But elsewhere, people were praising Obama, 46, whose emphasis on using the Internet helped make him better known in more nations than perhaps any U.S. primary candidate in history.

In Kenya, Obama's victory was greeted with unvarnished glee. In Kisumu, close to the home of Obama's late father, hundreds crowded around televisions Wednesday morning to watch Obama's victory speech, chanting "Obama tosha!" – "Obama is enough!"

CONTINUED 1

2

3

Next >

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Hillary Clinton Pledges Support for Barack Obama (2008-06-07 10:30)

Sen. Hillary Clinton enthusiastically endorsed Sen. Barack Obama for president in a speech that an Obama strategist called "very generous."

In what must have been a difficult situation, Clinton used Obama campaign slogans like "Yes, we can," calling on her supporters to unite behind the Democratic nominee.

She stated that the road against John McCain and the Republicans will not be easy, but that much change is possible if a Democratic president is elected.

I think it was a good effort on her part, and the Obama website has posted a form asking his supporters to thank Hillary for her endorsement.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Why Hillary will likely be offered VP spot (2008-06-07 12:05)

It's the right thing to do.

It was the right thing for the superdelegates to follow the will of the people rather than to try and figure out who would be the best general election candidate. No one can say for sure what is going to happen in any election. Most of the seasoned pundits, for example, thought that Clinton was the inevitable nominee.

If Hillary had won, the right thing to do would be to offer the job to Barack.

Now she may not want the job. She may not be willing to undergo the vetting process that could require examination of the family's financial records. And of course if something should turn up from such vetting, then all bets are off.

But as Barack said himself, her candidacy opened up future opportunities for his own daughters. Both Hillary and Barack's campaigns smashed barriers for women and African Americans, and really for all minorities, and the fitting way to honor these accomplishments is rather obvious.

Furthermore, Barack's victory was not overwhelming. In close contests like this one, the traditional thing is to take one's opponent as a running mate. Even in the bitter contest between Ronald Reagan and George H. W. Bush, Reagan sucked it up and offered the VP slot to Bush.

Should Barack fail to offer the position to Hillary, and he loses, then we know that many people will ask how he could ignore someone who garnered nearly as many votes as himself especially as she has shown today her willingness to be his surrogate.

Of course, if he chooses her and he still loses, then people will blame it on Hillary and her "baggage" or whatever. But the argument is noticeably weaker here. Obviously Hillary supporters would not blame Barack for choosing Hillary. While some elder statesman have advised against choosing Hillary, I still think that propriety will probably win over speculation.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Wise Owl (2008-06-08 07:34:00)

If I was a citizen of the United States of America I would vote for Obama.

allthings (2008-06-08 20:03:00)

Coming soon, a limited edition framed print of Senator Obama. Only 250 beautifully framed limited edition 10x12 inch prints will be made available at just $450, including delivery to anywhere in the USA.

Drawn by a nationally recognised artist, these limited edition framed prints are collector's items of the future.

Only 250 will be made available - pre-register your interest by sending an email with "Obama" in the title to me200548@hotmail.com

This does not represent an obligation, but reserves the option to buy when this amazing artwork is released later this month.

Video: Barack in Chicago (2008-06-09 07:52)

Sen. Barack Obama speaks to staff and volunteers at the Chicago headquarters office on June 6, 2008. Obama and his family went on a bicycling trip over the weekend.

[EMBED]

ABC's Nightline looks inside the Obama campaign organization.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama to Target GOP Strongholds (2008-06-09 18:36)

Sen. Barack Obama began a two-week tour of North Carolina today speaking about economic policy in Raleigh.

Earlier, Obama campaigned in Virginia, another southern state that the campaign is targeting. There are only about 20 weeks left until the election in November, so staying two weeks in North Carolina this early shows Obama's belief in his ability to win the state.

The campaign is focusing on registering new voters as part of its effort to win states that normally vote Republican. Other southern states that may be targeted are Missouri and Georgia.

Here is Barack's speech today.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama
Change That Works for You
Monday, June 9th, 2008
Raleigh, North Carolina

As prepared for delivery

Before we begin, I just want to take a minute to thank Senator Clinton for the kind and generous support she offered on Saturday. She ran an historic campaign that shattered barriers on behalf of my daughters and women everywhere who now know there are no limits to their dreams. And more, she inspired millions of women and men with her strength, her courage, and her unyielding commitment to the causes that brought us here today – the hopes and aspirations of working Americans.

Our party and our country are stronger because of the work she has done throughout her life, and I look forward to working with her in these coming months and years to lay out the case for change and set a new course for this country.

I've often said that this election represents a defining moment in our history. On major issues like the war in Iraq or the warming of our planet, the decisions we make in November and over the next few years will shape a generation, if not a century.

That is especially true when it comes to our economy.

We have now lost jobs for five straight months – more than 320,000 since the beginning of this year. Last month we saw the biggest rise in the unemployment rate in more than twenty years. The percentage of homes in foreclosure and late mortgage payments is the highest since the Great Depression. The price of oil has never been higher and set a record on Friday for the largest one-day spike in history. The costs of health care and college tuition and even food have all hit record levels, while family incomes have fallen and the wages of our workers have stayed the same.

Read the full speech

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-06-09 20:28:00)

Who is with me for the planned July 4th fundraising event?

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/4g9f>

Sign up and get the word out!

Bob Tomasso (2008-06-10 10:30:00)

I am a Vietnam Veteran, and I support Barack Obama. I would love to have a bumper sticker that says: "Vietnam Vet for Obama". Anyone have any ideas as to where I can get such a sticker?

Unite For Change (2008-06-10 08:30)

Yesterday, Deputy Campaign Manager Steve Hildebrand announced that the Obama campaign would place staff in all 50 states, the first time this has been done in a generation.

Today, National Voter Contact Director Jon Carson called on Obama supporters to participate in a Unite for Change event on June 28.

✖ Dear Paul,

This has been a 50-state campaign from the very beginning. A year ago this week, our grassroots supporters organized a nationwide canvass in more than 1,000 cities to introduce people to Barack Obama.

Since then, we've had an unprecedented primary season that built grassroots infrastructure in all 50 states – not just for Barack, but for all of the Democratic candidates.

Now it's time to bring all of that energy together for our common cause of change.

All across the country, Democrats, Independents, and even Republicans are tired of the politics of the past and are looking for new solutions to the challenges we're facing.

That's why we're launching a nationwide day of action on June 28th called "Unite for Change" – and asking you to host a Unite for Change meeting in your neighborhood.

In all 50 states, supporters like you – seasoned veterans and first-time volunteers alike – will host house meetings with the express purpose of reaching out and bringing together folks who supported all of the Democratic candidates (and those who are just tuning into the process now).

The goal is to come together and use the common values we share to build a united volunteer organization in your neighborhood that will register new voters and build support locally.

It's going to be an amazing time, and hosting your own event is easy. We'll provide all the tools and resources you'll need.

Learn more and sign up to host a Unite for Change party on June 28th:

<http://my.barackobama.com/unite>

We're heading into a battle against John McCain, and the stakes are higher than ever before.

But the path to victory is as simple as talking to your friends and neighbors.

From the beginning, this campaign has been about ordinary people reaching out and building the bonds of community – empowering one another by coming together to make change.

With the general election approaching, it's more important than ever to keep this momentum going. And there's no better way to make this happen in your community than hosting a Unite for Change event.

You'll gather – not just with Obama supporters, but with anyone who's tired of the politics of the past and ready for something new – to share your stories and lay the plans for how to build this movement locally in the weeks and months ahead.

It requires some responsibility, but don't worry – our team will be here with all the support and resources you need to make your Unite for Change event a big success.

Learn more and sign up to host a party in your community:

<http://my.barackobama.com/unite>

Yesterday, our deputy campaign manager, Steve Hildebrand, announced that this will be the first campaign in a generation to put staff in all 50 states.

It says a lot about our movement – and about the enthusiasm and resources people like you have supplied – that this is possible.

But being in every state will not be enough.

In order to succeed in every community in America, it's going to be up to you to take the lead. Everyone who hopes for real change after November is counting on you.

Thank you,

Jon

Jon Carson

National Voter Contact Director

Obama for America

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-08-03 06:03:16)

Obama said "Time for A Change!!" Change....Middle class tax increase to pay the debt.

Wait....wasn't that the last guy in office talking?

Barack Obama on Economy in St. Louis, Missouri (2008-06-10 15:21)

Sen. Barack Obama speaks in St. Louis, Missouri today responding to John McCain's comments on the Obama economic plan.

[EMBED]

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Ozhinkleberry (2008-06-10 15:40:00)

Check out this musical parody of a Clinton return to the White House. While it definitely warrants a good laugh, I feel that it also illustrates America's desire for change. American politics needs fresh ideas and fresh figures. Besides, while we are still immersed in the intensity of election, a little political humor is always nice to take the edge off. Enjoy!

http://minimovies.com/film-128295-Welcome %20Back, %20Clinton

Contacting Voters - Lapel Pins (2008-06-11 09:51)

The summer is a great time for making voter contact and for registering voters either through tabling and attending outdoor events or though more intense direct approaches like canvassing and phone-banking.

Amanda Scott has posted a selection of label pins on the official blog that you can use to show your support for Barack Obama.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Wednesday (2008-06-11 20:53)

Women's groups are rallying behind Sen. Barack Obama now that he is the presumptive Democratic nominee. EMILY's List chief Ellen Malcolm and Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz of Florida participated in a Center for American Progress conference call today urging women to support Sen. Obama.

Barack was in Chicago today as part of his two-week tour of battleground states, where he spoke about protecting consumers.

[EMBED]

Here is the text of his speech in Chicago as prepared for delivery.

Before we begin, I just wanted to say a word about the flooding devastating so many communities. We were scheduled to be holding this event in Iowa, but we decided to cancel it because we didn't want to divert state resources from going to help with flood relief.

My heart goes out to the families in Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois and across the Midwest, who have been forced to flee their own homes, and leave their businesses and communities behind. Right now, many of them are wondering when they'll be able to return, and what they'll find when they get there. Well, we cannot assure them that their communities will be rebuilt overnight, but we can assure them that they will be rebuilt – because we'll work to ensure that the full resources of our state and federal government are there to help. And I will do everything in my power to see to it that those resources get to the people who need them as swiftly as possible.

You know, over the next two weeks, I'm going to be talking a lot about what we can do to build an economy that works for all Americans. Because for families all across this country, our economy hasn't been working for quite some time. I've met Americans who are doing everything right – who are working that extra shift, or taking on that extra job – but are still struggling just to make ends meet. And a big part of the reason is that they're paying $4 a gallon for gas, and skyrocketing costs for groceries, health care, and college tuition – at a time when their wages have stayed the same.

As a result, many of them are falling deeper and deeper into debt, and a lot of that debt is being put onto credit cards. Over the past 15 years, average household credit card debt has tripled. The typical family is now nearly $10,000 in the red. And bankruptcy rates have steadily climbed over the past year.

Now, let's be honest. Part of why our debt crisis is so bad is that some folks are making reckless decisions – racking up big credit card bills by purchasing flat-screen TVs and other luxury goods that they know they can't afford. And they should have to face the consequences of those decisions.

But many more Americans aren't falling into debt because they made an irresponsible decision; they're falling into debt because credit card companies are pushing them over the edge. For too long, credit card companies have been using unfair and deceptive practices to trick Americans into signing agreements they can't afford. The contracts you sign when you get a card have gone from being one page-long a few decades ago to more than thirty pages-long today. And they're often filled with traps and fine print that only a credit card executive could understand. These companies have been crossing the line to boost their bottom line.

But rather than stop this outrage, Washington has let them get away with it. And it's no wonder – because the credit card companies have spent millions in recent years financing political campaigns and lobbying Congress to get laws written to their liking. In the first quarter of this year alone, one such industry group spent nearly $800,000 on lobbying.

This has to stop. We cannot let the rules of the game continue to be rigged against ordinary Americans. We need a President who will look out for the interests of hardworking families, not just their big campaign donors and corporate allies.

And that will be a real difference in this election, because when it comes to Washington letting credit card companies get away with all this, John McCain has been part of the problem. When he had the chance to help families avoid falling into debt, John McCain sided with the credit card companies. When he had the chance to protect teenagers and college students from deceptive credit card practices, he sided with the credit card companies. And when I fought against the credit card industry's bankruptcy bill that made it harder for working families to climb out of debt, he supported it – and he even opposed exempting families who were only in bankruptcy because of medical expenses they couldn't pay.

Just look at the proposals he's been making on this campaign. He's calling for nearly $2 trillion in corporate tax cuts over the next decade, but he hasn't even proposed a single measure to protect hardworking Americans from credit card companies that are trying to take advantage of them.

Well, that's not the kind of change that the folks I've met are looking for. They're looking for a President who will fight for them, and restore fairness to our economy. That's the kind of President I'll be. I'll put a middle class tax cut into the pockets of hardworking families – a tax cut that will give 95 % of all families $1,000 in relief.

I'll eliminate income taxes for seniors making less than $50,000 a year. And I'll protect the rights of ordinary Americans by cracking down on companies that are trying to deceive them.

That's why back in November, I proposed a plan to help ensure that credit cards don't become the next subprime crisis. It starts with making sure that we have a system that's open and transparent. To help you understand the risks that are involved in signing up for a credit card, I'll create a five-star rating system. That way, Americans can compare credit card companies and avoid those that are stacking the deck against them.

Now, don't get me wrong. We all have a responsibility to pay what we owe. But we have to ensure that the amount we're paying is fair. That's why I've proposed a Credit Card Bill of Rights. The first thing we'll do under this bill of rights is ban unilateral changes to credit card agreements. You should pay the rate you signed up for. If the credit card company wants to raise that rate, you should be able to opt out of the agreement.

Second, we'll ban rate changes on past debt. If a credit card company wants to raise interest rates, then that new, higher rate should apply to the debt you add going forward, not what you already owe. The store can't change the price of what you bought after you bought it and neither should your credit card. Third, we'll ban interest on transaction fees. If you're late in making a payment, you have to pay a late fee. But you shouldn't be paying a fee for paying a fee.

It's time Washington established some rules of the road to level the playing field for hardworking families. It's time we had an economy that worked for companies and consumers alike. That's what my campaign is all about. So the American people will have a clear choice in November: you can choose an approach that sides with the credit card companies when it really counts; or you can choose to finally have a President who looks out for Main Street, not just Wall Street; a President who fights each day to put the American dream within reach for all Americans. And that's the kind of President I intend to be. Thank you.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Fights Smears Online (2008-06-12 09:30)

The Obama campaign has launched an online tool to fight smears against the Illinois senator.

The page, which can be reached by clicking on the graphic above, lists various smear campaigns, corrects the inaccuracies and allows users to email the true story to their family, friends and associates.

Among the smears addressed are the Michelle Obama "Whitey" tape, Barack as a Muslim and the Pledge of Allegiance/hand over heart controversy.

At the top of each page is a quote from Barack:

What you won't hear from this campaign or this party is the kind of politics that uses religion as a wedge, and patriotism as a bludgeon – that sees our opponents not as competitors to challenge, but enemies to demonize. Because we may call ourselves Democrats and Republicans, but we are Americans first. We are always Americans first.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Cory (2008-06-12 20:56:00)

A new fundraising project is getting started. Visit obamaproject.info for details.

Obama on Issues – Ethics (2008-06-12 13:04)

From barackobama.com :

Plan to Change Washington

"I am in this race to tell the corporate lobbyists that their days of setting the agenda in Washington are over. I have done more than any other candidate in this race to take on lobbyists — and won. They have not funded my campaign, they will not run my White House, and they will not drown out the voices of the American people when I am president."

— Barack Obama, Speech in Des Moines, IA, November 10, 2007

At a Glance

- Shine the Light on Washington Lobbying
- Shine the Light on Federal Contracts, Tax Breaks and Earmarks

- Bring Americans Back into their Government
- Free the Executive Branch from Special Interest Influence

Speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

- Present your ideas

Watch the Video

The Problem

Lobbyists Write National Policies: For example, Vice President Dick Cheney's Energy Task Force of oil and gas lobbyists met secretly to develop national energy policy.

Secrecy Dominates Government Actions: The Bush administration has ignored public disclosure rules and has invoked a legal tool known as the "state secrets" privilege more than any other previous administration to get cases thrown out of civil court.

Wasteful Spending is Out of Control: The current administration has abused its power by handing out contracts without competition to its politically connected friends and supporters. These abuses cost taxpayers billions of dollars each year.

Barack Obama's Plan

Shine the Light on Washington Lobbying

- Centralize Ethics and Lobbying Information for Voters: Obama will create a centralized Internet database of lobbying reports, ethics records, and campaign finance filings in a searchable, sortable and downloadable format.
- Require Independent Monitoring of Lobbying Laws and Ethics Rules: Obama will use the power of the presidency to fight for an independent watchdog agency to oversee the investigation of congressional ethics violations so that the public can be assured that ethics complaints will be investigated.
- Support Campaign Finance Reform: Obama supports public financing of campaigns combined with free television and radio time as a way to reduce the influence of moneyed special interests. Obama introduced public financing legislation in the Illinois State Senate, and is the only 2008 candidate to have sponsored Senator Russ Feingold's (D-WI) tough bill to reform the presidential public financing system.

Shine the Light on Federal Contracts, Tax Breaks and Earmarks

- Create a Public "Contracts and Influence" Database: As president, Obama will create a "contracts and influence" database that will disclose how much federal contractors spend on lobbying, and what contracts they are getting and how well they complete them.
- Expose Special Interest Tax Breaks to Public Scrutiny: Barack Obama will ensure that any tax breaks for corporate recipients — or tax earmarks — are also publicly available on the Internet in an easily searchable format.
- End Abuse of No-Bid Contracts: Barack Obama will end abuse of no-bid contracts by requiring that nearly all contract orders over $25,000 be competitively awarded.
- Sunlight Before Signing: Too often bills are rushed through Congress and to the president before the public has the opportunity to review them. As president, Obama will not sign any non-emergency bill without giving the American public an opportunity to review and comment on the White House website for five days.

- Shine Light on Earmarks and Pork Barrel Spending: Obama's Transparency and Integrity in Earmarks Act will shed light on all earmarks by disclosing the name of the legislator who asked for each earmark, along with a written justification, 72 hours before they can be approved by the full Senate.

Bring Americans Back into their Government

- Hold 21st Century Fireside Chats: Obama will bring democracy and policy directly to the people by requiring his Cabinet officials to have periodic national broadband townhall meetings to discuss issues before their agencies.
- Make White House Communications Public: Obama will amend executive orders to ensure that communications about regulatory policymaking between persons outside government and all White House staff are disclosed to the public.
- Conduct Regulatory Agency Business in Public: Obama will require his appointees who lead the executive branch departments and rulemaking agencies to conduct the significant business of the agency in public, so that any citizen can see in person or watch on the Internet these debates.
- Release Presidential Records: Obama will nullify the Bush attempts to make the timely release of presidential records more difficult.

Free the Executive Branch from Special Interest Influence

- Close the Revolving Door on Former and Future Employers: No political appointees in an Obama administration will be permitted to work on regulations or contracts directly and substantially related to their prior employer for two years. And no political appointee will be able to lobby the executive branch after leaving government service during the remainder of the administration.
- Free Career Officials from the Influence of Politics: Obama will issue an executive order asking all new hires at the agencies to sign a form affirming that no political appointee offered them the job solely on the basis of political affiliation or contribution.
- Reform the Political Appointee Process: FEMA Director Michael Brown was not qualified to head the agency, and the result was a disaster for the people of the Gulf Coast. But in an Obama administration, every official will have to rise to the standard of proven excellence in the agency's mission.

For More Information about Barack's Plan

 Read the Plan

Read and Watch the Speech

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Targeted States: Ohio (2008-06-13 09:13)

One can't revisit the importance of focusing on key swing states enough. The Obama campaign will work in all states to help build the campaign and the party – registering voters, raising money, recruiting volunteers – but it will focus a lot of its persuasion and get out the vote efforts on battleground states.

There are times when no matter how many millions one spends on TV ads, and despite the thousands of dedicated volunteers one fields, that you will still come up short in the end. You can work on these people over the long haul, but for any particular election cycle it pays to target voters who are more open and persuadable.

They identify these 'soft targets' by professional polling and reports from ground workers.

Ohio is one of the swing states with the most available electoral votes. In this primary season, the state had a much larger turnout among Democrats as compared to Republicans.

Primary Turnout in Ohio (2008) 2,233,156 (D)
1,018,865 (R)
3,450,893 (Total)

In the 2006 election, the Democrats romped to victory winning the governorship and seats in the Senate and the House. The local economy has been spiraling down for years now and there is a general dissatisfaction with the Republican Party, which is blamed for the state's woes.

The Real Clear Politics polling average shows Obama slightly ahead in recent polls.

PollDateSampleObama (D)McCain (R)Spread
RCP Average 05/13 - 05/20 - 44.0 42.7 Obama +1.3 SurveyUSA 05/16 - 05/18 600 RV 48 39 Obama +9.0
Quinnipiac 05/13 - 05/20 1244 RV 40 44 McCain +4.0 Rasmussen 05/15 - 05/15 500 LV 44 45 McCain +1.0

We should note that these polls were taken before Hillary Clinton dropped out of the race.

An Akron Buckeye Poll taken in March 2008 showed that Ohioans largely believe that the Democratic nominee will win the general election.

The major issues: "Nearly one-half of all Ohioans said that economic issues (such as jobs and prices) would be most important to their vote for president (47.5 %). Another one-quarter said foreign policy issues (like the Iraq war and terrorism) would be most important (24.8 %). Roughly one-sixth (16.8 %) chose other domestic issues (such as public services and taxes) and one-in-ten respondents said social issues (such as abortion and same-sex marriage) would be most important to their presidential vote (10.9 %)."

Obviously, Republicans are very vulnerable when the campaign is focused on the economy, so don't be surprised to see that strategy taken in the Buckeye State.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama News on Friday (2008-06-13 15:04)

The serious flooding in the Midwest could have some impact on the president's race.

Many of the states involved like Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri and Ohio are battleground states. Many of the flooded states have already been hit hard by loss of manufacturing jobs, the mortgage crisis and the general economic slowdown.

Barack Obama On Death of Tim Russert (2008-06-13 17:15)

Here is Barack Obama's statement on the news that NBC News Washington Bureau Chief Tim Russert had died suddenly of a heart attack today.

I've known Tim Russert since I first spoke at the convention in 2004. He's somebody who, over time, I came to consider not only a journalist but a friend. There wasn't a better interviewer in TV, not a more thoughtful analyst of our politics, and he was also one of the finest men I knew. Somebody who cared about America, cared about the issues, cared about family. I am grief-stricken with the loss and my thoughts and prayers go out to his family. And I hope that, even though Tim is irreplaceable, that the standard that he set in his professional life and his family life are standards that we all carry with us in our own lives.

For those who follow Washington politics, Tim Russert was one of the last true journalists. He got to the heart of the matter with as little bias as humanly possible.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Saturday (2008-06-14 12:54)

Training for Obama Organizing Fellows begins today.

Here is a slide show of the training in Ohio.

[EMBED]

In Kaukauna, Wisconsin yesterday, one of the stops on the Change that Works for You tour, Barack Obama talked about middle class tax cuts. Barack's plan offers three times more tax relief for the middle class as compared to John McCain's proposal.

[EMBED]

Grassroots supporter Jake created an Obama portrait using thumb tacks. Check out the video below.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Fellows Train to Register Voters (2008-06-15 10:42)

From barackobama.com :

Fellows Training: The Importance of Voter Registration

by Amanda Scott,

Sunday, June 15, 2008 at 10:04 AM

The first session today was focused on voter registration. Since May 10, our campaign has been focused on registering voters across the country because, as field organizer Adrian told the Fellows, "Change happens because you step up and take part in your community."

Adrian spoke about why we are registering voters and what are the best tactics to use. Here's what she said...

This election gives us the biggest opportunity in years to change the electoral map by registering new voters.

Recent Obama voter registration drives have helped register more than 200,000 new Democrats in Pennsylvania, more than 165,000 new Democrats in North Carolina, and more than 150,000 new Democrats in Indiana. Those numbers just scratch the surface of what's possible.

By adding new voters to the voter rolls across America, we can reshape the electoral map, not just for this campaign but for local campaigns as well; we can mobilize a new segment of the voting age population and put communities and states into play that have not been seriously in play in years.

The best tactics:

- Plan ahead. It is infinitely easier to register voters at schools, churches, mall or retail stores if you have a friendly local connection to help you get in. Respect the rules set out for you at that site.
- Register anyone who approaches you and wants to register - respect their right to vote.
- Target your activities to communities or organizations that are more likely to have people who will vote for Barack in the fall.
- When asking if someone is registered to vote, sound cheerful and look them in the eye.
- Talk to everyone. You must engage people proactively to get them to register. Remember, you are inviting them to take on one of the greatest honors and responsibilities of American citizenship.
- Play things by ear. In some places (schools, grocery stores, etc) arranging to get a voter registration table is the best way to reach people. In other places, it's best to just wing it.
- Wear something that shows people that you're with Barack Obama.
- Always be respectful. You represent Barack Obama.

The best sites to register new voters:

- Be sure to target Democratic or Obama-friendly areas
- High traffic areas (beauty/barber shops, grocery stores, mall, laundromats)
- Blind-knocking apartment buildings in Obama friendly areas
- Bus or subway stops, parking lots (ride the bus or the underground)
- Local community events, concerts or sporting events
- Churches in Obama-friendly areas
- Schools, churches, young people hangouts
- Anywhere people would stand to be waiting, like the DMV, movie theater, or gas stations
- Local community meetings or centers

Supporters, along with our Fellows, will be holding voter registration drives all summer long. Take action and use the information above to start a drive in your town!

[EMBED]

Fellows in training.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Tony H (2008-06-15 16:32:00)

"Listen to Barack" Tees available on our website

TheQuarterhug.com

Video: Barack Obama on Father's Day (2008-06-15 20:19)

Sen. Barack Obama gave a Father's Day speech today at the Apostolic Church of God in Chicago, in which he talked about growing up with an absent father.

[EMBED]

Yesterday, Barack went to Quincy, Illinois to help volunteers fill sandbags in their fight against rising floodwaters.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Al Gore to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-06-16 12:06)

Good to have Al onboard!

Message from Al Gore: "My Endorsement"; Watch the Live Stream Tonight at 8:30 pm EDT
by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Monday, June 16, 2008 at 11:54 AM

Former Vice President and Nobel Peace Prize laureate Al Gore just sent out this email...

Dear Friend,

✖ A few hours from now I will step on stage in Detroit, Michigan to announce my support for Senator Barack Obama. From now through Election Day, I intend to do whatever I can to make sure he is elected President of the United States.

Over the next four years, we are going to face many difficult challenges – including bringing our troops home from Iraq, fixing our economy, and solving the climate crisis. Barack Obama is clearly the candidate best able to solve these problems and bring change to America.

This moment and this election are too important to let pass without taking action.

That's why I am asking you to join me in showing your support by making a contribution to this campaign today:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/gore>

Over the past 18 months, Barack Obama has united a movement. He knows change does not come from 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue or Capitol Hill. It begins when people stand up and take action.

With the help of millions of supporters like you, Barack Obama will bring the change we so desperately need in order to solve our country's most pressing problems.

If you've already contributed to this campaign, I ask that you consider making another contribution right now. If you haven't, please take the next step and own a piece of this campaign today:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/gore>

On the issues that matter most, Barack Obama is clearly the right choice to lead our nation.

We have a lot of work to do in the next few months to elect Barack Obama president, and it begins by making a contribution to this campaign today.

Thank you for joining me,

Al Gore

LIVE TONIGHT – 8:30 p.m. EDT: Watch streaming video of Al Gore and Barack Obama at a rally in Detroit, Michigan:

<http://www.BarackObama.com>

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Photos from Detroit (2008-06-16 19:20)

Al Gore's endorsement should help position Barack Obama as the "green" choice. Here is a Flickr slide show from tonight's endorsement by the Nobel Peace Prize laureate in Detroit before a crowd of 20,000. Michigan is another one of the battleground states.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Al Gore Endorses Barack Obama at Joe Louis Arena (2008-06-17 07:52)

Here's the video of former Vice President and Nobel Peace Prize laureate Al Gore endorsing Sen. Barack Obama.
[EMBED]

An excerpt from Al Gore's endorsement:

Many people have waited for some sign that our country is awakening once again. How will we know when a massive wave of reform and recovery and regeneration is about to take hold and renew our nation? What would it look like if such a change were beginning to build? I think we might recognize it as a sign of such change if we saw millions of young people getting involved for the first time in the political process. I think we might just recognize it if we saw that new generation casting aside obsolete and hurtful distinctions and reaching out to one another across the ancient divisions that have frustrated action in the past. I think we would know this change was coming if a new generation rejected the special interest politics of the past and the big money that fueled it, and instead used the internet to get small donations and unite Americans in a common effort to realize our common destiny.

Plan for a Clean Energy Future

"Well, I don't believe that climate change is just an issue that's convenient to bring up during a campaign. I believe it's one of the greatest moral challenges of our generation. That's why I've fought successfully in the Senate to increase our investment in renewable fuels. That's why I reached across the aisle to come up with a plan to raise our fuel standards... And I didn't just give a speech about it in front of some environmental audience in California. I went to Detroit, I stood in front of a group of automakers, and I told them that when I am president, there will be no more excuses — we will help them retool their factories, but they will have to make cars that use less oil.”

— Barack Obama, Speech in Des Moines, IA, October 14, 2007

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Issues: Energy and Environment (2008-06-17 08:35)

From barackobama.com :

At a Glance

- Reduce Carbon Emissions 80 Percent by 2050
- Invest in a Clean Energy Future
- Support Next Generation Biofuels
- Set America on Path to Oil Independence
- Improve Energy Efficiency 50 Percent by 2030
- Restore U.S. Leadership on Climate Change

Speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

- Present your ideas

Videos on Energy

The Problem

Foreign Oil: America's 20-million-barrel-a-day oil habit costs our economy $1.4 billion a day, and $500 billion in 2006 alone. Every single hour, we spend $41 million on foreign oil.

Climate Change: As a result of climate change, glaciers are melting faster; the polar ice caps are shrinking; trees are blooming earlier; more people are dying in heat waves; species are migrating, and eventually many will become extinct.

Barack Obama's Plan

Reduce Carbon Emissions 80 Percent by 2050

- Cap and Trade: Obama supports implementation of a market-based cap-and-trade system to reduce carbon emissions by the amount scientists say is necessary: 80 percent below 1990 levels by 2050. Obama's cap-and-trade system will require all pollution credits to be auctioned. A 100 percent auction ensures that all polluters pay for every ton of emissions they release, rather than giving these emission rights away to coal and oil companies. Some of the revenue generated by auctioning allowances will be used to support the development of clean energy, to invest in energy efficiency improvements, and to address transition costs, including helping American workers affected by this economic transition.

- Confront Deforestation and Promote Carbon Sequestration: Obama will develop domestic incentives that reward forest owners, farmers, and ranchers when they plant trees, restore grasslands, or undertake farming practices that capture carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

Invest in a Clean Energy Future

- Invest $150 Billion over 10 Years in Clean Energy: Obama will invest $150 billion over 10 years to advance the next generation of biofuels and fuel infrastructure, accelerate the commercialization of plug-in hybrids, promote development of commercial-scale renewable energy, invest in low-emissions coal plants, and begin the transition to a new digital electricity grid. A principal focus of this fund will be devoted to ensuring that technologies that are developed in the U.S. are rapidly commercialized in the U.S. and deployed around the globe.
- Double Energy Research and Development Funding: Obama will double science and research funding for clean energy projects including those that make use of our biomass, solar and wind resources.
- Invest in a Skilled Clean Technologies Workforce: Obama will use proceeds from the cap-and-trade auction program to invest in job training and transition programs to help workers and industries adapt to clean technology development and production. Obama will also create an energy-focused Green Jobs Corps to connect disconnected and disadvantaged youth with job skills for a high-growth industry.
- Convert our Manufacturing Centers into Clean Technology Leaders: Obama will establish a federal investment program to help manufacturing centers modernize and Americans learn the new skills they need to produce green products.
- Clean Technologies Deployment Venture Capital Fund: Obama will create a Clean Technologies Venture Capital Fund to fill a critical gap in U.S. technology development. Obama will invest $10 billion per year into this fund for five years. The fund will partner with existing investment funds and our National Laboratories to ensure that promising technologies move beyond the lab and are commercialized in the U.S.
- Require 25 Percent of Renewable Electricity by 2025: Obama will establish a 25 percent federal Renewable Portfolio Standard (RPS) to require that 25 percent of electricity consumed in the U.S. is derived from clean, sustainable energy sources, like solar, wind and geothermal by 2025.
- Develop and Deploy Clean Coal Technology: Obama will significantly increase the resources devoted to the commercialization and deployment of low-carbon coal technologies. Obama will consider whatever policy tools are necessary, including standards that ban new traditional coal facilities, to ensure that we move quickly to commercialize and deploy low carbon coal technology.

Support Next Generation Biofuels

- Deploy Cellulosic Ethanol: Obama will invest federal resources, including tax incentives, cash prizes and government contracts into developing the most promising technologies with the goal of getting the first two billion gallons of cellulosic ethanol into the system by 2013.
- Expand Locally-Owned Biofuel Refineries: Less than 10 percent of new ethanol production today is from farmer-owned refineries. New ethanol refineries help jumpstart rural economies. Obama will create a number of incentives for local communities to invest in their biofuels refineries.
- Establish a National Low Carbon Fuel Standard: Barack Obama will establish a National Low Carbon Fuel Standard to speed the introduction of low-carbon non-petroleum fuels. The standard requires fuels suppliers to reduce the carbon their fuel emits by ten percent by 2020.
- Increase Renewable Fuel Standard: Obama will require 36 billion gallons of renewable fuels to be included in the fuel supply by 2022 and will increase that to at least 60 billion gallons of advanced biofuels like cellulosic ethanol by 2030.

Set America on Path to Oil Independence

Obama's plan will reduce oil consumption by at least 35 percent, or 10 million barrels per day, by 2030. This will more than offset the equivalent of the oil we would import from OPEC nations in 2030.

- Increase Fuel Economy Standards: Obama will double fuel economy standards within 18 years. His plan will provide retooling tax credits and loan guarantees for domestic auto plants and parts manufacturers, so that they can build new fuel-efficient cars rather than overseas companies. Obama will also invest in advanced vehicle technology such as advanced lightweight materials and new engines.

Improve Energy Efficiency 50 Percent by 2030

- Set National Building Efficiency Goals: Barack Obama will establish a goal of making all new buildings carbon neutral, or produce zero emissions, by 2030. He'll also establish a national goal of improving new building efficiency by 50 percent and existing building efficiency by 25 percent over the next decade to help us meet the 2030 goal.
- Establish a Grant Program for Early Adopters: Obama will create a competitive grant program to award those states and localities that take the first steps to implement new building codes that prioritize energy efficiency.
- Invest in a Digital Smart Grid: Obama will pursue a major investment in our utility grid to enable a tremendous increase in renewable generation and accommodate modern energy requirements, such as reliability, smart metering, and distributed storage

Restore U.S. Leadership on Climate Change

- Create New Forum of Largest Greenhouse Gas Emitters: Obama will create a Global Energy Forum — that includes all G-8 members plus Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa — the largest energy consuming nations from both the developed and developing world. The forum would focus exclusively on global energy and environmental issues.
- Re-Engage with the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change: The UNFCCC process is the main international forum dedicated to addressing the climate problem and an Obama administration will work constructively within it.

Barack Obama's Record

- Renewable Fuels: Obama has worked on numerous efforts in the Senate to increase access to and use of renewable fuels. Obama passed legislation with Senator Jim Talent (R-MO) to give gas stations a tax credit for installing E85 ethanol refueling pumps. The tax credit covers 30 percent of the costs of switching one or more traditional petroleum pumps to E85, which is an 85 percent ethanol/15 percent gasoline blend. Obama also sponsored an amendment that became law providing $40 million for commercialization of a combined flexible fuel vehicle/hybrid car within five years.
- CAFE: Obama introduced a bold new plan that brought Republicans and Democrats, CAFE supporters and long-time opponents together in support of legislation that will gradually increase fuel economy standards and offer what the New York Times editorial page called "real as opposed to hypothetical results."

For More Information about Barack's Plan

-  Read the Energy Plan
-  Read the Environment Plan
- Read the Speech

Also, read Barack's plan to strengthen the economy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

janeofreedom (2008-06-18 13:34:00)

I was actually thinking about voting for Obama. He is very intelligent, and seems quite articulate. On the surface he is a much better candidate than John McCain who I am less than thrilled with. I was planning on voting Huckabee, Then I was hoping for a Hillary, Turns out I may be voting Bob Barr Libertarian candidate.

Obama had my vote in the beginning I liked the Idea of ending the unjust costly war. I liked the approach of diplomacy over force. He seemed like someone who I would be very comfortable with as president. But like many other Americans I started doing my research. I found out Obamas voting record on Partial birth Abortion. Now im not what you would necessarily call a Pro-Lifer, However I do have to draw the line at the partial birth abortion. These late trimester abortions are horrific and cold. If you have not done the research into Obamas Abortion record I would advise you to do so. Here is a link. www.theobamaplan.com

Targeted States: Michigan (2008-06-17 16:47)

Michigan voted for both Al Gore in 2000 and John Kerry in 2004. However, it is considered a swing state this election. Although it probably is not sound to take the demographic results from exit polls in the primary and apply them to the general election, some pundits believe Barack Obama is weak among working class Catholics particularly Catholic males. One out of every 5 people in Michigan is Catholic according to U.S. census figures.

However, Michigan has been hit hard by the economic downturn and this should make things very difficult for John McCain who will probably get linked with the Bush economy.

There is little evidence that Barack is weak in Michigan according to the polls, although we should note it is still too early to take poll results too seriously.

General Election: McCain vs. Obama (RealClearPolitics)

PollDateSampleObama (D)McCain (R)Spread

RealClearPolitics Average 06/05 - 06/16 - 46.3 42.3 Obama +4.0 ABC News/Wash Post 06/12 - 06/15 - 49 45 Obama +4.0 Cook/RT Strategies 06/12 - 06/15 880 RV 44 40 Obama +4.0 Gallup Tracking 06/14 - 06/16 2605 RV 46 42 Obama +4.0 Rasmussen Tracking 06/14 - 06/16 3000 LV 48 44 Obama +4.0 NBC/WSJ 06/06 - 06/09 1000 RV 47 41 Obama +6.0 Hotline/FD 06/05 - 06/08 806 RV 44 42 Obama +2.0

As we can see above, Obama is consistently ahead in the polls, and usually above the margin of error.

A Detroit News/WXYZ-TV poll shows 43 percent of Michigan state voters rate the economy as the top issue facing the country, followed by the war in Iraq at 14 percent, terrorism at 13 percent, preserving traditional values at 10 percent, illegal immigration at 9 percent and health care with 7 percent.

[EMBED]

Barack visits GM workers during shift change in Flint, Michigan.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama: Senior Working Group on National Security (2008-06-18 09:43)

Sen. Barack Obama announced today his Senior Working Group on National Security to advise him on policy until the election in November.

Interestingly, there are no generals or admirals in the working group. He will meet separately though with a group of nearly 40 flag officers from the armed services.

Obama Announces Senior Working Group on National Security

by Sam Graham-Felsen,

Wednesday, June 18, 2008 at 07:56 AM

CHICAGO, IL – Senator Obama today announced the formation of his Senior Working Group on National Security, a group of advisors that he will consult on a regular basis between now and the election. Obama will meet with the group for the first time today in Washington, DC for a wide-ranging discussion of the immense challenges faced by the United States in the wake of the disastrous foreign policies of George Bush.

“Each individual here today has provided extraordinary service to our nation in the executive branch and Congress. Several have been advising my campaign for some time. We’re also honored to be joined by some of Senator Clinton’s senior advisors. In the months to come, we’ll be reaching out to others, as well as leaders in Congress,” Senator Obama said. “The stakes in this election could not be higher. John McCain wants to continue George Bush’s foreign policy which has made us less safe, less respected, and less able to lead the world. It’s time to change course. It’s time to end the war in Iraq responsibly, refocus on Afghanistan and al Qaeda, and renew our global leadership so that we can tackle the huge challenges of the 21st century.”

Later today, he will also meet with a group of nearly 40 retired Admirals and Generals to discuss the state of our armed forces, and the challenges facing our military in Iraq, Afghanistan, and around the world. This meeting is part of an ongoing dialogue between Senator Obama and current and former military officers of various ranks and views.

Senator Obama’s Senior Working Group on National Security includes:

- Secretary of State Madeleine Albright
- Senator David Boren, former Chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence
- Secretary of State Warren Christopher
- Greg Craig, former director of the State Department Office of Policy Planning

- Secretary of the Navy Richard Danzig
- Representative Lee Hamilton, former Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee
- Deputy Attorney General Eric Holder
- Dr. Tony Lake, former National Security Advisor
- Senator Sam Nunn, former Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.
- Secretary of Defense William Perry
- Dr. Susan Rice, former Assistant Secretary of State
- Representative Tim Roemer, 9/11 Commissioner
- Jim Steinberg, former Deputy National Security Advisor

Click here to read Senator Obama's plan to turn the page on the failed Bush-McCain foreign policy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama vs. Cindy McCain (2008-06-18 14:31)

Some good news today, as an ABC News/Washington Post poll released today, showed that Michelle Obama has a 9 point lead over Cindy McCain in favorable ratings.

Michelle appeared today as a guest host on ABC's "The View." Check out the YouTube clip.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama speaks before National Security Meeting (2008-06-18 18:25)

Sen. Barack Obama spoke to the press today before meeting with his National Security team in Washington, DC.

[EMBED]

Here is some of what he said.

We continue to face grave threats, not only from terrorism, but also nuclear proliferation, climate change and poverty, genocide and disease. Nearly all of these threats have grown over the last eight years because of the policies of George Bush, which I believe have left us less safe and less respected in the world.

Instead of adhering to a rigid ideology, I want to get back to the pragmatic tradition of American foreign policy which has been so ably advanced by the people in this room, a policy that's focused on using all elements of American power to protect our people and to advance our interests.

X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama Passes on Public Financing (2008-06-19 08:22)

You may have heard already that the Obama campaign has decided to pass up public financing for the general election.

Barack attempted to negotiate a deal with John McCain on the issue, but without satisfactory results. The Republican National Committee has raised much more money than its Democratic counterpart, and these funds include money from special interest groups. Also, apparently no terms could be reached on the problem of the 527 PACs, which campaign independently from the candidate, for example, the "Swift Boat" group from John Kerry's presidential bid. Here is a video of Barack explaining this decision.

[EMBED]

Transcript of message.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Declaring Independence from Broken System (2008-06-19 15:38)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe explains how the public campaign financing system is broke in an email sent out today.

A top McCain adviser told MSNBC earlier this month, "now that we're in the general election, the RNC money counts, the DNC money counts. So the truth is today, John McCain has more cash on hand and more money than Barack Obama does."

Barack announced an important decision for our campaign today.

I want to add a little context to the video message earlier announcing that we will not participate in the public financing system for the general election.

Even though we stood to receive more than $80 million in taxpayer funding for our campaign, the system has been so gamed and exploited by our opponents that it is effectively broken.

John McCain, the Republican National Committee, and their allies in so-called 527 groups that raise and spend unlimited contributions are dedicated to manipulating this broken system to raise as much money as possible – and they’ve proven that they’re very good at it.

A top McCain adviser told MSNBC earlier this month, “now that we’re in the general election, the RNC money counts, the DNC money counts. So the truth is today, John McCain has more cash on hand and more money than Barack Obama does.”

In April alone, they raised nearly $45 million. That’s more than our campaign and the Democratic National Committee combined. And that doesn’t include the plans of 527 groups like the one called “Freedom’s Watch,” which has said it will spend as much as $250 million under Karl Rove’s direction to attack and defeat Barack Obama.

To compete, Barack has put his faith in ordinary people giving only what they can afford. That’s been the strategy of this campaign from the beginning, and more than 1,500,000 supporters like you have gotten us this far.

We have a historic opportunity to prove that a movement of ordinary people has the power to change the way political campaigns are funded. And we have a clear goal as we begin this new challenge: 50,000 people declaring their independence by making a donation before July 4th.

Our supporters have gotten us this far with their prior giving. But right now you can grow our movement by giving again. If you promise to match the gift of a first time donor, you could be what convinces them to give for the first time. You’ll double your impact, and you’ll get to see the name and town of the person you match. You can even exchange a personal note about why you've chosen to support Barack. Declare your independence from our broken system. Make a matching donation now and bring someone new into this campaign.

Opting out of public matching funds was an extremely difficult decision, and frankly we are at a disadvantage when it comes to raising money. Unlike John McCain, this campaign has never accepted donations from Washington lobbyists or special interest PACs.

While McCain has built his fundraising strategy around high-dollar donors giving huge checks to the RNC, you are creating a new model for publicly financed campaigns.

Thank you for your support and for taking on the masters of a broken system,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama talks with Democratic Governors (LIVE) (2008-06-20 08:03)

Sen. Barack Obama is hosting a forum with Democratic governors at the Chicago History Museum this morning. You can watch the event live below.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama supports the DCCC (2008-06-20 11:09)

Barack Obama sent out this email asking for contributions to the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC).

The DCCC helps elect Democrats to the House of Representatives. A majority of Democrats will be important in helping Obama push his agenda.

SENATOR
Barack Obama

Dear Paul,

America, this is our moment. This is our time. Our time to turn the page on the policies of the past. Our time to bring new energy and new ideas to the challenges we face. Our time to offer a new direction for the country we love.

You and I are clear about our goal. We are out to change Washington in a deep and lasting way, charting a new course for America. That means winning the White House. But it also means building a strong foundation in Congress by electing dozens of new, change-oriented candidates nationwide.

June 30th marks the first FEC reporting deadline since I have become the presumptive Democratic nominee. It's clear that media pundits and our opponents will use Democratic fundraising totals as a measure of our party's strength this November.

Today, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC) is launching its United for Change Campaign to show Democratic strength across the electoral map by the June 30th reporting deadline. House Democrats are joining us to help and will match every gift 2-to-1 today, making any gift of $50 worth $150.

Make a matched gift now of $35, $50 or more now at www.dccc.org/obama

The sole mission of the DCCC is to guide Democratic candidates for the House to victory. They were the driving force behind the powerful 2006 victories that made Nancy Pelosi the first woman Speaker of the House.

Our campaign has the potential to redraw the political map and help Democrats get elected all across the country - especially in places where Democrats have not fared well for decades. And, already this year, House Democrats have won three remarkable special election victories in historically Republican districts - despite outside special-interest groups spending millions attacking our candidates.

Show your personal support and unity today in our first test together before the June 30th deadline. I hope you will answer our call.

Make a matched gift of $35, $50 or more now at www.dccc.org/obama

I believe we can win this election, and more importantly, I believe we can transform the electoral map and win a new majority for change, so we can finally solve the problems we have been talking about for decades. Please stand with me and support the DCCC today. Let's add our strength, energy, and stand together United for Change.

Make a matched gift of $35, $50 or more now at www.dccc.org/obama

I look forward to the moment when I can stand, as your President, before a Congress filled with dozens of new members ready, willing and able to join us in driving change forward. Your immediate donation to the DCCC can help make that moment a reality.

Thanks for helping out with this,

Barack

P.S. Answer our call for unity and strength – contribute now at www.dccc.org/obama.

PROTECT OUR DEMOCRATIC CHAMPIONS

FORWARD OUR MESSAGE TO YOUR FRIENDS AND FAMILY

If you are having trouble with any of the links, cut and paste the following into your browser:

<http://www.dccc.org/speakersos6>

To unsubscribe from this email list, please use the link below:

<http://www.dccc.org/page/unsubscribe/> To make sure you always get our emails add dccc@dccc.org to your address book.

Find out more about adding us to your address book here .

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Economy (2008-06-20 12:17)

Sen. Barack Obama talks about the economy with labor leaders on June 19, 2008 in Washington, DC.

[EMBED]

Today, in a meeting with the nation's Democratic governors, Barack said:

You deserve and you need a partner in the White House and a president who understands our prosperity doesn't come from Wall Street or Washington. We should be investing in the skills, the human capital, the education and well-being of your constituents.

You've gotta solve problems; ultimately the buck stops with you. You've gotta balance your budget. If you've got a badly drafted piece of legislation, you're the ones who have to live with it and as a consequence you end up spending less time posturing and trying to score ideological points and more time trying to govern. We need that same approach in Washington.

Also, check out Barack's economic plan.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Money in May (2008-06-20 19:43)

Barack Obama raised $21.9 million during the month of May down from the previous month.

Obama's campaign has more than $43.1 million on hand, of which $33.3 million can be used during primary season, with approximately $304,000 in debt.

In comparison, John McCain had $32 million cash on hand at the end of May reporting period. However, the Republican Party has significantly more money in the bank to help their candidates than does the Democratic Party. Obviously this is an area where Hillary Clinton can be very helpful. Like Obama, she outraised McCain during the primary season.

Clinton and her fundraisers will meet with Obama next week and the two senators will campaign together for the first time.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michael (2008-06-21 07:18:00)
Say good bye to the 4th Amendment.
And we thought Obama was different!!
NOT!!!

Targeted States: New Mexico (2008-06-21 08:11)

New Mexico voted for Al Gore in 2000, but for George W. Bush in 2004.
Currently, New Mexico has a Democratic senator, Jeff Bingaman, and a Republican one, Pete Domenici. The governor of the state is Democrat Bill Richardson.

A total of 153,299 Democrats turned out for the primary on Feb. 5, as compared to 110,438 for the Republicans on June 3. The latter contest though was held long after the Republican race was decided.

Barack Obama is consistently beating John McCain in New Mexico polls for the general election.

General Election: McCain vs. Obama (RealClearPolitics)

PollDateSampleObama (D)McCain (R)Spread
RCP Average 06/12 - 06/19 - 47.5 42.0 Obama +5.5 USA Today/Gallup 06/15 - 06/19 1310 LV 50 44 Obama +6.0 Newsweek 06/18 - 06/19 896 RV 51 36 Obama +15.0 FOX News 06/17 - 06/18 900 RV 45 41 Obama +4.0 Rasmussen Tracking 06/17 - 06/19 3000 LV 48 44 Obama +4.0 Gallup Tracking 06/16 - 06/19 2648 RV 46 44 Obama +2.0 Reuters/Zogby 06/12 - 06/14 1113 LV 47 42 Obama +5.0 ABC News/Wash Post 06/12 - 06/15 - 49 45 Obama +4.0 Cook/RT Strategies 06/12 - 06/15 880 RV 44 40 Obama +4.0

New Mexico has a large Latino population and a Gallup Poll summary of surveys taken in May shows Obama winning 62 % of Latino registered voters nationwide, compared with just 29 % for McCain.
A May poll found that about 59 percent of voters thought Iraq and the economy were the most important issues facing the nation, followed in third place by national security, the issue picked by 10 percent of voters. The same poll found that 81 % thought the country was on 'the wrong track,' indicating some trouble for the party presently in power.

⌘
⌘
⌘
⌘
⌘

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

⌘

Obama News on Saturday (2008-06-21 20:58)

Yesterday, Barack Obama explained the politics behind offshore oil rig drilling at a press conference in Jacksonville, Florida.

[EMBED]

Today, Barack appeared at the U.S. Conference of Mayor's convention in Miami where he talked about the importance of local government.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama to Attack Rampant Energy Speculation (2008-06-22 10:20)

With oil and gas prices soaring, Sen. Barack Obama announced today a plan to clamp down on excess energy speculation and shut down the "Enron Loophole."

Oil and gas prices are among the main causes of the current economic downturn, and contribute also to the rising cost of food.

Obama Announces Plan to Crack Down on Excessive Energy Speculation

by Christopher Hass,

Sunday, June 22, 2008 at 10:13 AM

Senator Obama announced a plan today to crack down on excessive energy speculation and fully close the "Enron Loophole" to ease the impact of skyrocketing gas prices. The Enron Loophole was created by McCain campaign co-chair Phil Gramm at the behest of Enron, and exempts most over-the-counter energy trades and trading on electronic energy commodity markets from regulation.

In his statement, Senator Obama explained:

For the past years, our energy policy in this country has been simply to let the special interests have their way—opening up loopholes for the oil companies and speculators so that they could reap record profits while the rest of us pay $4.00 a gallon. My plan fully closes the Enron Loophole and restores common-sense regulation as part of my broader plan to ease the burden for struggling families today while investing in a better future.

Read the full Obama Plan to Crack Down on Excessive Energy Speculation . . .

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama-Clinton? (2008-06-23 07:28)

Is the fundraising night on Thursday with Sen. Hillary Clinton and the subsequent campaign appearances a prelude to an Obama-Clinton ticket?

There are a lot of different opinions out there. Some people with supposed 'inside' connections say that Hillary has been taken off the "short list." Others claim she is the inevitable VP pick.

As I've said before, the pressure on Obama to pick Clinton is major. A very substantial chunk of the Democratic Party base, judging from the DNC votes and endorsements, are former Clinton-backers, many of them actively campaigning for Hillary as Obama's running mate.

The Obama campaign has been very secretive about the selection process, other than naming the committee that will vet the potential picks.

Clinton has enemies within the party, especially from the progressive wing, who oppose her on ideological grounds. Then, there are others who think that a "balanced" ticket should include a white male as VP.

It may be that the upcoming events will allow Obama to test the waters with Clinton, to see whether the two can work together, and to test the reaction among both camps of supporters.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

scan-design (2008-06-23 12:41:00)

cool site!

<http://tetrisdesign.blogspot.com/>

Using Caution with Polling Data (2008-06-23 13:14)

The most recent polls suggest that Barack Obama has a substantial double digit lead over John McCain. This is good news, especially when we consider that Barack might be expected to trail McCain at this time given the latter's stronger name recognition.

However, we have to be careful with polling data especially as there is still about four months to until the polls in November. That's a long time in the world of campaigning.

You might remember that there was a time last year, when pundits were ready to stick a fork in McCain's campaign. He was way behind in the polls and was nearly broke. At it was about this time last year, that Barack looked like a young, hopeful guy, but with little chance of beating the 'inevitable' Clinton machine. Some polls showed Clinton having an even wider spread than Obama enjoys now against McCain.

Experts know that many more people will vote in the general election as compared to the primaries. The fact that these folks did not bother to vote in the primaries is pretty good evidence they haven't been paying much attention. As the general election draws nearer, really in many cases in just the last few weeks, these same people will begin to focus on which candidate they want to support. They are typical swing voters. This is a time when polls can change very rapidly day to day.

Much of the effort in the campaign at the present time is in preparation for winning those swing voters over during that crucial end-game period.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama at a Working Women Forum today in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: Barack Obama @ Working Women Discussion (2008-06-23 19:23)

Here's the video of Sen. Barack Obama speaking at the Working Women Discussion in Albuquerque, New Mexico today.

[EMBED]

Barack discussed issues like middle class tax cuts, equal pay and paid leave with a group of working women.

We can't afford an economy where folks keep working harder for less. We can't let the women in our workforce get paid even less for doing the same work. And we can't keep pushing more and more of the burden on to the backs of working parents who are struggling to balance their jobs and their family. Because what binds us together, what makes us one American family, is that we stand up and fight for each other's dreams, and for the dreams of all of our children.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Hanuman Temple in India Prays for Obama Victory (2008-06-24 10:28)

According to reports, Barack Obama carries around a few lucky charms, " a bracelet belonging to an American soldier deployed in Iraq, a gambler's lucky chit, a tiny monkey god and tiny Madonna and child."

When devotees of the monkey god Hanuman in Delhi, India heard the news, they were ecstatic. They had a 15 kg. gold-plated Hanuman idol made and presented it to Carolyn Sauvage-Mar, chairperson of Democrats Abroad-India and an Obama delegate.

Democrats Abroad India Chairperson Carolyn Sauvage-Mar, center, gestures, as devotees of Hindu God Hanuman place a traditional turban on her head in New Delhi, India, Tuesday. A dozen priests chanted around a sacred fire on Tuesday as a group of Indians offered prayers to Hanuman to grant victory to Democratic U.S. presidential candidate Barack Obama. Sauvage-Mar is one of 22 delegates who will represent overseas Americans at the Democratic National Convention in Denver, Colo., and is pledged to vote for Obama. (AP Photo/Gurinder Osan)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Live Video: Barack on Energy Solutions (Las Vegas) (2008-06-24 11:02)

Sen. Barack Obama is speaking live in Las Vegas, Nevada on energy solutions. Check out the video below.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack tours Solar Energy Facility (2008-06-24 17:24)

Barack Obama toured the Springs Preserve in Nevada, which was designed to meet Platinum Leadership in Energy Design (LEED) standards for environmentally sustainable construction. Solar panels here can deliver up to kW of electricity.

[EMBED]

Barack's energy plan proposes doubling clean energy research funding and requiring 25 % clean renewable energy sourcing by 2025. Here is the text from Barack's energy policy speech today in Las Vegas.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama – as prepared for delivery

A Serious Energy Policy for Our Future

as prepared for delivery

Tuesday, June 24th, 2008

Las Vegas, Nevada

I want to start by thanking the folks here at Springs Preserve for the wonderful tour we just had. What we are seeing here – from the solar panels that power this facility to the Bombard workers who built it – is that a green, renewable energy economy isn't some pie-in-the-sky, far-off future, it is now. It is creating jobs, now. It is providing cheap alternatives to $140-a-barrel oil, now. And it can create millions of additional jobs and entire new industries if we act now.

All across the country, local leaders and entrepreneurs and small business owners are providing the innovation and initiative needed to make this transformation possible. In Pennsylvania, an old steel mill has become the home of a new wind turbine factory because of the state's push for renewable portfolio standards that require the production of more alternative energy. Wisconsin is poised to gain more than 14,000 jobs at existing manufacturing facilities because of its investment in wind power. Where we're standing in Southern Nevada happens to be one of the best sources for the generation of solar power in the world. Next week, our friend and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid will come here to cut the ribbon on a new thermal solar technology plant. And between solar, wind, and geothermal energy, this state could create upwards of 80,000 new jobs by 2025.

The possibilities of renewable energy are limitless. But to truly harness its potential, we urgently need real leadership from Washington – leadership that has been missing for decades. We have been talking about energy independence since Americans were waiting in gas lines during the 1970s. We've heard promises about it in every State of the Union for the last three decades. But each and every year, we become more, not less, addicted to oil – a 19th century fossil fuel that is dirty, dwindling, and dangerously expensive. Why?

It isn't because the resources and technology aren't there. We know this because countries like Spain, Germany, and Japan have already leapt ahead of us when it comes to renewable energy technology. Germany, a country as cloudy as the Pacific Northwest, is now a world leader in the solar power industry and the quarter million new jobs it has created. In less than eight years, before we'd ever see a drop of oil from offshore drilling, they have doubled their renewable energy output. And they did it by using technology that, in some cases, was paid for by the American people through our own Research and Development tax credits. The difference is, their government harnessed that technology by providing the necessary investments and incentives to jumpstart a renewable energy industry. Washington hasn't done that.

What Washington has done is what Washington always does – it's peddled false promises, irresponsible policy, and cheap gimmicks that might get politicians through the next election, but won't lead America toward the next generation of renewable energy. And now we're paying the price. Now we've fallen behind the rest of the world. Now we're forced to beg Saudi Arabia for more oil. Now we're facing gas prices over $4 a gallon – gas prices that are decimating the savings of families who are already struggling in this economy. Like the man I met in Pennsylvania who lost his job and couldn't even afford the gas to drive around and look for a new one. That's how badly folks are hurting. That's how badly Washington has failed.

For decades, John McCain has been a part of this failure in Washington. Yes, he has gone further than some in his party in speaking out on climate change. And that is commendable. But time and time again, he has opposed investing in the alternative sources of energy that have helped fuel some of the very same projects and businesses he's highlighting in this campaign. He's voted against biofuels. Against solar power. Against wind power. Against a 2005 energy bill that represented the largest ever investment in renewable sources of energy – a bill that Senator McCain's own campaign co-chair, called "the biggest legislative breakthrough we've had" since he's been in the Senate. That bill certainly wasn't perfect – it contained irresponsible tax breaks for oil companies that I consistently opposed, and that I will repeal as President. But the tax credits in that bill contributed to wind power growing 45 % last year, the sharpest rise in decades. If John McCain had his way, those tax credits wouldn't exist. And if we don't renew key tax incentives for alternative energy production – tax incentives that John McCain opposed continuing – we could lose up to 116,000 green jobs and $19 billion in investment just next year. And now he's talking about a tax credit for more efficient cars even though he helped George Bush block these credits twice in the last year.

After all those years in Washington, John McCain still doesn't get it. I commend him for his desire to accelerate the search for a battery that can power the cars of the future. I've been talking about this myself for the last few years. But I don't think a $300 million prize is enough. When John F. Kennedy decided that we were going to put a man on the moon, he didn't put a bounty out for some rocket scientist to win – he put the full resources of the United States government behind the project and called on the ingenuity and innovation of the American people. That's the kind of effort we need to achieve energy independence in this country, and nothing less will do. But in this campaign, John McCain offering the same old gimmicks that will provide almost no short-term relief to folks who are struggling with high gas prices; gimmicks that will only increase our oil addiction for another four years.

Senator McCain wants a gas tax holiday that will save you – at most – thirty cents a day for three months. And that's only if the oil companies don't just jack up the price and pocket the savings themselves, which is exactly what they did when we tried to do the same thing in Illinois. He's willing to spend nearly $4 billion on more tax breaks for big oil companies – including $1.2 billion for Exxon alone. He wants to open our coastlines to drilling – a proposal that his own top economic advisor admitted won't provide any short-term relief at the pump. It's a proposal that George Bush's Administration says will not provide a drop of oil – not a single drop – for at least ten years. And by the time the drilling is fully underway in twenty years, our own Department of Energy says that the effect on gas prices will be "insignificant." Insignificant.

Just yesterday, Senator McCain actually admitted this. In a town hall he said, and I quote, "I don't see an immediate relief" but "the fact that we are exploiting those reserves would have psychological impact that I think is beneficial." Psychological impact. In case you were wondering, that's Washington-speak for, "It polls well." It's an example of how Washington politicians try to convince you that they did something to make your life better when they really didn't. Well the American people don't need psychological relief or meaningless gimmicks to get politicians through the next election, they need real relief that will help them fill up their tanks and put food on their table. They need a long-term energy strategy that will reduce our dependence on foreign oil by investing in the renewable sources of energy that represent the future. That's what they need.

Meanwhile, the oil companies already own drilling rights to 68 million acres of federal lands, onshore and offshore, that they haven't touched. 68 million acres that have the potential to nearly double America's total oil production, and John McCain wants to give them more. Well that might make sense in Washington, but it doesn't make sense for America. In fact, it makes about as much sense as his proposal to build 45 new nuclear reactors without a plan to store the waste some place other than right here at Yucca Mountain. Folks, these are not serious energy policies. They are not new energy policies. And they are certainly not the kind of energy policies that will give families the relief they need or our country the oil independence we must have.

I realize that gimmicks like the gas tax holiday and offshore drilling might poll well these days. But I'm not running for President to do what polls well, I'm running to do what's right for America. I wish I could wave a magic wand and make gas prices go down, but I can't. What I can do – and what I will do – is push for a second stimulus package that will send out another round of rebate checks to the American people. What I will do as President is tax the record profits of oil companies and use the money to help struggling families pay their energy bills. I will provide a $1,000 tax cut that will go to 95 % of all workers and their families in this country. And I will close the loophole that allows corporations like Enron to engage in unregulated speculation that ends up artificially driving up the price of oil. That's how we'll provide real relief to the American people. That's the change we need.

I have a very different vision of what this country can and should achieve on energy in the next four years – in the next ten years. I have a plan to raise the fuel standards in our cars and trucks with technology we have on the shelf today – technology that will make sure we get more miles to the gallon. And we will provide financial help to our automakers and autoworkers to help them make this transition. I will invest $150 billion over the next ten years in alternative sources of energy like wind power, and solar power, and advanced biofuels – investments that will create up to five million new jobs that pay well and can't be outsourced; that will create billions of dollars in new business like you're already doing here in Nevada. And before we hand over more of our land and our coastline to oil companies, I will charge those companies a fee for every acre that they currently lease but don't drill on. If that compels them to drill, we'll get more oil. If it doesn't, the fees will go toward more investment in renewable sources of energy. When all is said and done, my plan to increase our fuel standards will save American consumers from purchasing half a trillion gallons of gas over the next eighteen years. My entire energy plan will produce three times the oil savings that John McCain's ever could – and what's more, it will actually decrease our dependence on oil while his will only grow our addiction further.

And that's the choice that you face in this election. When you're facing $4 a gallon gas, do you want a gas tax gimmick that will save you at most thirty cents a day for three months and a drilling proposal that won't provide a drop of oil for ten years, or a second rebate check and $1,000 tax cut to help your family pay the bills? When you look down the road five years from now or ten years from now, do you want to see an America that's begging dictators for more oil that we can't afford? An America that's fallen further behind the rest of the world when it comes to the jobs and industries of the future? Or do you want to see more places like Springs Preserve and Bombard Electric? More green jobs and green businesses? More innovation and ingenuity that helps this nation lead the way on affordable, renewable energy? That's the future I know we can have. That's the America I believe in. And that's where I will lead us if I have the chance to serve as your President. It will not be easy. It will not happen overnight. It will not come without cost or sacrifice. But it is possible. It is necessary. And places like this, and people like you, prove that we have the resources, and the skills, and the will to begin today. I look forward to joining you in that effort. Thank you.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama, Cellphones, Popcorn (2008-06-25 10:35)

A funny video using the cellphone-popcorn theme with a Barack Obama touch.
[EMBED]

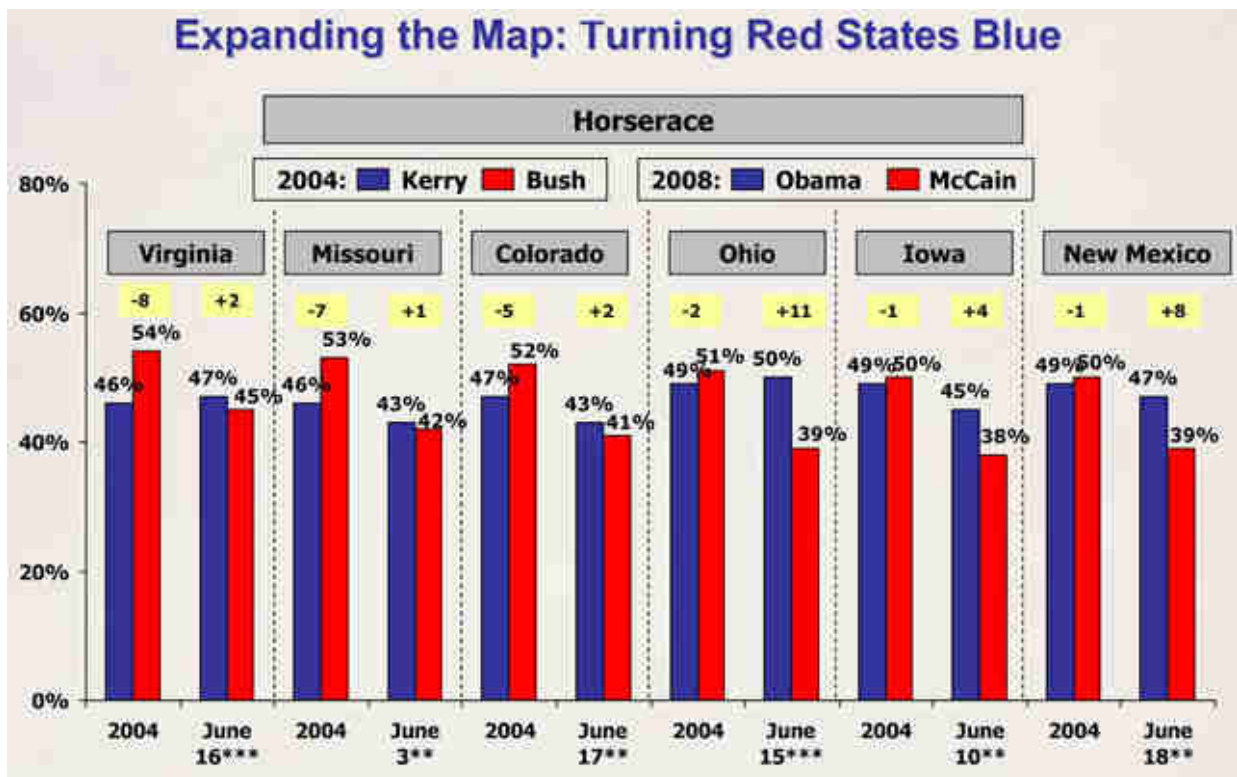

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Expanding the Map to 50 States (2008-06-25 21:48)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe briefed reporters today on the 50 state strategy planned for the general election.
The campaign involves a massive voter registration and turnout effort.

click to enlarge

Most campaigns would avoid working in any of the states but those targeted as vulnerable to swing one way or another.

The Obama strategy though activates the maximum number of supporters in all states by getting them involved in grassroots operations. In most cases, these states will pay for themselves while still contributing to the national effort.

A basic principle involved is that more people are likely to get active when they can work locally on the ground. This leads to a larger and stronger overall network with more resources, of various kinds, to apply to the battleground states also.

View the full presentation

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-06-25 21:48)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe briefed reporters today on the 50 state strategy planned for the general election.

Live Video: Barack at Economic Competitiveness Summit (2008-06-26 07:21)

Watch Sen. Barack Obama talk live at the Economic Competitiveness Summit at Carnegie Mellon in Pittsburgh.
[EMBED]

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

AFL-CIO endorses Barack Obama (2008-06-26 13:13)

The last standing major labor organization, the AFL-CIO, endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today. Leaders from the federation promised to organized their biggest ever ground operation. From barackobama.com

:

AFL-CIO Endorses Barack

by Amanda Scott

, Thursday, June 26, 2008 at 12:50 PM

Calling Sen. Barack Obama a champion for working families, the top leaders of AFL-CIO unions today voted without opposition to endorse him for president of the United States, thrusting the labor federation's largest ever grassroots mobilization effort into high gear.

AFL-CIO President John Sweeney said...

In so many ways—on jobs, health care, gas prices and the war in Iraq—our country is headed in the wrong direction. Barack Obama has proven from his days as an organizer, to his time in the Senate and his historic run for the presidency, that he's leading the fight to turn around America. He's a champion for working families who knows what it's going to take to create an economy that works for everyone, not just Big Oil, Big Pharma, the insurance companies, the giant mortgage lenders, speculators and the very wealthy. We're proud to stand with Sen. Obama to help our nation chart a course that will improve life for generations of working people and our children.

In its endorsement statement, the AFL-CIO General Board cited Obama's strong support of working families on issues such as health care reform, fair trade that will lift up workers here and around the world, retirement security and the freedom to form unions and bargain for middle-class living standards. Obama has a 98 percent voting record on working families' issues, compared to just 16 percent for Sen. John McCain.

Senator Barack Obama has secured the nomination of his party in a campaign that has energized millions of Americans and spoken to the hopes and dreams of people from every corner of our nation. His leadership can re-engage disenfranchised Americans and bring our country together. Senator Obama has advocated a change of direction for our nation that mirrors the priorities of the labor movement.

The endorsement marks the beginning of a huge, united political mobilization among working class voters. The AFL-CIO will focus on mobilizing more than 13 million union voters—including union members, families of members, retirees and members of the AFL-CIO community affiliate Working America—in 24 priority states, working to elect U.S. senators and representatives, as well as state and local candidates. AFSCME President and AFL-CIO Political Committee Chair Gerald McEntee said...

We'll work our hearts out for Barack Obama. Our program is going to be worker to worker and neighbor to neighbor. We're ready to mobilize. We're ready to rock and roll. This country and our people are ready for change.

This endorsement is a huge benefit to the campaign: hundreds of thousands of volunteers making hundreds of thousands of phone calls, distributing millions of fliers, and engaging in countless shop floor and office suite discussions about why Barack Obama is the best choice for working families. As part of its endorsement, the AFL-CIO has also launched a new web site to help union members learn about Barack's positions on issue and to give them a place to sign up to help the campaign for change, using tested organizing tactics and new technologies all being harnessed to elect Barack Obama.

If you're part of the a labor organization, visit our Labor page to join this community. And learn more about where Barack stands on worker rights, jobs and trade, health care, retirement security, and education.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama's opening remarks before the Economic Competitiveness Summit today at Carnegie Mellon in Pittsburgh.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama, Clinton in Unity (2008-06-27 08:27)

Senators Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton will appear today in Unity, New Hampshire where they fought to a tie in the primary to promote a unified general election effort.

Sen. Hillary Clinton, left, and Sen. Barack Obama leave Washington on Friday to fly to New Hampshire for a rally (CNN).

Barack has asked his big money fundraisers to help retire Clinton's primary debt, and Clinton is urging her bundlers to support Barack's presidential campaign.

As expected, there was some talk about the possibility of an Obama-Clinton ticket. Terry McAuliffe, Clinton's primary campaign manager said: "I think if she were on the ticket I think we honestly ... would control the White House for 16 years. But Sen. Obama's got to make that decision himself. He's got to do what he thinks is in the best interest of the campaign and country."

"Whatever he decides to do, whatever role for Hillary, she is ready to go. And she will do whatever they ask her to do in the fall campaign."

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Live Video: Barack and Hillary in Unity, New Hampshire (2008-06-27 10:08)

Check out the live feed from Unity, New Hampshire where Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton are rally supporters.

[EMBED]

h

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: 50 State Strategy (2008-06-27 15:40)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out an email today outlining the campaign's 50 state strategy.

Plouffe mentions the RNC having more than ten times the money on hand as the DNC, a big chunk of which will go toward supporting John McCain.

Paul –

We're trying something new today.

To bring you an important briefing on our general election strategy, I shot a short video on a laptop in my office. Our team added in some detailed slides with all of the relevant information.

It's important that you're fully briefed on the opportunities and challenges ahead, and this video details how we're going to put together the organization to win in November.

Watch the strategy briefing now, and please make a donation of $25 to help us execute this plan:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/strategyvideo>

Thank you,
David
David Plouffe
Campaign Manager
Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama Plans Overseas Trip to Middle East and Europe (2008-06-27 20:50)

Sen. Barack Obama will travel overseas at an undisclosed date to meet with leader in countries of Europe and the Middle East. He will visit France, Germany, Israel, Jordan and the United Kingdom to discuss subjects like security and climate change.

This trip will be an important opportunity for me to assess the situation in countries that are critical to American national security, and to consult with some of our closest friends and allies about the common challenges we face.

Israel is a strong and close friend of the United States, and is confronting grave threats from Gaza to Tehran. Jordan has been a close partner in the peace process and a host of other issues of common concern. France, Germany, and the United Kingdom are key anchors of the transatlantic alliance and have contributed to the mission in Afghanistan, and I look forward to discussing how we can strengthen our partnership in the years to come. This will be an important opportunity to have an exchange of views with leaders in these countries about these and other issues that are critical to American national security – and global security – in the 21st century.

John McCain has focused on security and foreign policy issues in his campaign, and he has challenged Obama in this area. A CNN poll has shown that voters favor McCain on foreign policy, one of the few issue categories where he leads the Illinois senator.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Targeted States: Nevada (2008-06-28 16:43)

Nevada is truly a swing state that both Al Gore and John Kerry lost by narrow margins. Gore lost by four points in 2000 and Kerry by three points in 2004.

An average of current polling shows that Barack Obama and John McCain are tied in the state, but McCain is winning a larger number of the surveys.

Nevada is logistically a rather simple state. A very strong grassroots operation in the Las Vegas metro area alone could be enough for victory. Reno, the second largest city in Nevada, is in many ways a carbon copy of Las Vegas with the casino industry and labor unions as dominant factors.

Although one would expect labor to vote strongly Democrat, Al Gore only picked about half the union vote in 2000. The state has a Republican governor and senator, and a Democratic senator, Harry Reid. The Nevada Assembly is ruled by Democrats, while the State Senate is controlled by Republicans.

Here is the polling data from RealClearPolitics:

Nevada: McCain vs. Obama (RealClearPolitics)

Polling Data

PollDateSampleMcCain (R)Obama (D)Spread

RCP Average 02/26 - 06/18 - 43.3 43.3 Tie

Rasmussen 06/18 - 06/18 500 LV 45 42 McCain +3.0 Mason-Dixon 06/09 - 06/11 625 LV 44 42 McCain +2.0 SurveyUSA 02/26 - 02/28 611 RV 41 46 Obama +5.0

See All Nevada: McCain vs. Obama Polling Data

Frank Sinatra, once a Democrat who turned Republican, is still an icon in Las Vegas, Reno and Lake Tahoe. And a lot of the Democrats here are rather soft in this way, hardly to be taken for granted as supporting the Democratic nominee. The Latino vote here is also very important. Latinos are the largest minority in the state. Hillary Clinton could be very helpful to Obama in securing this important voting bloc.

A Review Journal poll shows that the economy is easily the ranking issue among Nevada voters followed by Iraq and energy costs. Many people here, especially in Las Vegas, were hit hard by the mortgage meltdown.

Neighboring California can play a big role in winning Nevada. The Golden State can provide volunteers to work in Nevada, but that will require a strongly-entrenched local grassroots organization.

[EMBED]

Hillary in Unity, New Hampshire.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Slideshow: Unite for Change (2008-06-29 11:28)

Check out the Flickr slideshow of some of the more than 4,000 Unite for Change events held yesterday across the country.

The race against McCain will not be an easy one, and a unified effort is needed to assure Barack's victory in November.

[EMBED]

Supporters in Tallahassee, Florida

X

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More Unite for Change (2008-06-29 19:41)

Here's a video of Unite For Change events in Evergreen, Colorado.

[EMBED]

Sherry had an event at Mason's Pub in Huntsville, Alabama. Here's what she said about the event.

Our event was great! We had over 100 Obama supporters congregate at Mason's Pub in downtown Huntsville, and by the end of the event, they were fired up and ready to go! Many people signed up to do volunteer work, with an emphasis on a huge voter registration drive for this State. We decided that Alabama would most definitely be a swing state this year. The nicest surprise of the afternoon was the appearance of the Chair of the Alabama Veterans for Obama, a lovely young man who had served in Iraq and who, like Barack, spoke to the best in us. We were also delighted when an Obama delegate and an alternate delegate blessed us with their presence. Of course, most of all it was about all the community of people this campaign is about, and the spirit of community we felt for two hours on a Saturday afternoon will last long after everyone separated for the day. Thank you Huntsville supporters, and thank you Barack and Michelle for a very special Day of Unity.

[EMBED]

Slideshow of Unite for Change meeting in Huntsville, Alabama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Painting for Obama in Sacramento (2008-06-29 21:39)

Sacramento for Obama held an art, wine and music fundraiser for Barack Obama that attracted 300 guests. Renowned artist David Garibaldi painted portraits of Barack and John F. Kennedy in a live performance. The paintings were auctioned off with part of the proceeds going to the Obama campaign. Here is the video of Garibaldi.

[EMBED]

<http://sacramentoforobama.com/>

✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack – Deadline: Midnight (2008-06-30 08:28)

Sen. Barack Obama sent out this email today.

Dear Friend –

✕ Tonight is the crucial financial reporting deadline for June.

Your support has gotten us this far, and I am grateful. But I need your help to take on John McCain, the Republican National Committee, and the shady so-called 527 groups that are dedicated to attacking this campaign using millions of dollars in unregulated contributions.

Please support this movement by making a donation of $25 by Midnight tonight:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/june30deadline>

Together we are setting a new standard for how presidential campaigns will be organized and funded.

For the first time in a generation, a presidential campaign is putting staff in every single state for the general election. Our staff and the Obama Organizing Fellows are getting to work right now to build on grassroots energy in all 50 states.

And – unlike John McCain – we're going to do it without contributions from Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs that have held too much power for far too long in this country.

By putting our organizational and financial future in your hands, it's clear who will be responsible for our success and who we will be accountable to in the White House: the people.

But in order to match the resources of our opponents, we're going to have to do more and get more people involved than ever before. Your donation of $25 right now will help make that happen:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/june30deadline>

I'm counting on you to take the lead and build this campaign.

The stakes couldn't be higher, and every American who hopes for something better from their government is counting on us.

Thank you,

Barack

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2008-06-30 13:37:00)

This week, the "What's The New What" video squad provides you with a handy dandy guide to international hand gestures. Think of it as a primer on sign language for the hip. Check out the link below to learn why:

Link: <http://youtube.com/watch?v=w3r00i0m44A>

Obama News on Monday (2008-06-30 14:18)

Check out the pictures in the Flickr slideshow showing Barack Obama in Independence, Missouri. Barack took a walk through town after his speech and then visited the old home of President Harry Truman that was known as the "Summer White House."

[EMBED]

Here are some photos from the speech earlier in the day. As the July 4th holiday nears, Barack spoke about patriotism, and why it is improper to quickly judge another's patriotism or lack thereof.

For a young man of mixed race, without firm anchor in any particular community, without even a father's steadying hand, it is this essential American idea – that we are not constrained by the accident of birth but can make of our lives what we will – that has defined my life, just as it has defined the life of so many other Americans.

That is why, for me, patriotism is always more than just loyalty to a place on a map or a certain kind of people. Instead, it is also loyalty to America's ideals – ideals for which anyone can sacrifice, or defend, or give their last full measure of devotion. I believe it is this loyalty that allows a country teeming with different races and ethnicities, religions and customs, to come together as one.

[EMBED]

The Obama campaign also released a new television ad campaign, the second for the general election. The ad entitled "Dignity" highlights the senator's work to help struggling workers and families.

[EMBED]

President Bill Clinton and Barack spoke today according to a press release from the Obama campaign. Spokesman Bill Burton said the two spoke for about 20 minutes by phone and had a "terrific conversation."

Burton said that Obama "has always believed that Bill Clinton is one of this nation's great leaders and most brilliant minds, and looks forward to seeing him on the campaign trail and receiving his counsel in the months to come."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

McCain TV ads target Energy Policy (2008-06-30 20:57)

John McCain's recent television ad blitz is focused on energy policy and the environment as the three clips below attest.

Part of McCain's energy plan calls for building 45 new nuclear reactors by 2030.

While Barack's plan is open to nuclear energy if the present problems with that technology can be solved, his energy issues page does not include reactors as part of his program.

Plan for a Clean Energy Future

"Well, I don't believe that climate change is just an issue that's convenient to bring up during a campaign. I believe it's one of the greatest moral challenges of our generation. That's why I've fought successfully in the Senate to increase our investment in renewable fuels. That's why I reached across the aisle to come up with a plan to raise our fuel standards... And I didn't just give a speech about it in front of some environmental audience in California. I went to Detroit, I stood in front of a group of automakers, and I told them that when I am president, there will be no more excuses — we will help them retool their factories, but they will have to make cars that use less oil."

— Barack Obama, Speech in Des Moines, IA, October 14, 2007

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

2.7 July

Sen. Obama meets with Gen. Powell (2008-07-02 07:48)

News reports indicate that Barack Obama is scheduled to have two meetings with former Secretary of State Colin Powell. General Powell is a former head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the first African American to serve as Secretary of State. The two had met privately already on June 18.

Previously, Powell has made positive statements about Obama despite the fact that he is a Republican fueling speculation that he might endorse the Illinois senator. It is widely believed that Powell became disenchanted while serving in George W. Bush's administration over the intelligence information he received and used to justify the Iraq War. Some have even wondered whether Powell might be offered the VP slot although most consider it unlikely that two African Americans on the same ticket would be a good idea.

It should also be noted that Powell has made recent positive statements concerning Sen. John McCain.

The Powell meeting might also fuel some backlash that has been flaming up among Obama's more progressive-leading supporters. There has been increasing talk that Barack is moving more toward the "center" in an attempt to attract more conservative voters.

Of course, this is a fairly common electoral strategy, but some may see it as contrary to the message of change espoused by the Obama campaign.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Voter registration at Vans Warped Tour (2008-07-02 15:29)

Supporters of Barack Obama registered hundreds of people at the Vans Warped Tour at Mile High Stadium in Denver, Colorado on July 1, 2008.

[EMBED]

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Targeted States: Florida (2008-07-02 20:40)

Florida has been a tough state for Democrats in the last two presidential elections and the race looks very tight for 2008.

The state has a Republican governor and both a Democrat and Republican senator. Both the Florida State Senate and State House of Representatives are controlled by Republicans. The Florida delegation to the U.S. House of Representatives consists of 16 Republicans and 9 Democrats.

Florida, of course, was the scene of the 'hanging chad' controversy during the 2000 election when Al Gore barely lost the state costing him the election.

Presently, the RealClearPolitics average of recent polls shows John McCain ahead of Barack Obama by 2.2 points.

Florida: McCain vs. Obama

Polling Data

PollDateSampleMcCain (R)Obama (D)Spread

RCP Average 06/09 - 06/29 - 46.0 43.8 McCain +2.2 Strategic Vision (R) 06/27 - 06/29 1200 LV 49 41

McCain +8.0 PPP (D) 06/26 - 06/29 723 LV 44 46 Obama +2.0 Rasmussen 06/26 - 06/26 500 LV 48 41

McCain +7.0 Quinnipiac 06/09 - 06/16 1453 LV 43 47 Obama +4.0

See All Florida: McCain vs. Obama Polling Data

Two tough crowds in Florida for Obama are Cuban and Jewish Americans. Many conservative Cubans appear less than thrilled with Obama's more open approach toward the country's southern neighbor. The Illinois senator also may be weaker than either Gore or Kerry among Jewish voters. This fact may be complicated by the fact that Sen. Joe Lieberman, a conservative Jew who ran as Al Gore's VP, will be campaigning for McCain.

Florida also has many older voters including a huge population of retirees, who generally have not been as favorable toward Obama.

However, as in most other states, the economy is the top issue for Florida voters followed by Iraq. With many of Florida's voters on fixed incomes, the rising costs of fuel and food are worrisome, and offer an opening for the Obama campaign by concentrating people's attention on the failed Bush, and by extension, McCain economic policy.

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

vorpie (2008-07-03 02:30:00)

Did you see the vid of McCain getting rick rolled on the Daily show?

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=d-ZV2EFcfCw>

Targeted States: Wisconsin (2008-07-03 09:12)

Wisconsin was the scene of two cliffhangers in 2000 and 2004.

In 2000, Al Gore beat George W. Bush by just two-tenths of a percentage point. In 2004, Kerry won by just half of a percentage point.

While it's still early, the polls so far look very good for Barack Obama in Wisconsin.

Wisconsin: McCain vs. Obama (RealClearPolitics)

Polling Data

PollDateSampleObama (D)McCain (R)Spread

RCP Average 06/05 - 06/24 - 49.8 40.5 Obama +9.3 Quinnipiac/WSJ/WP 06/17 - 06/24 1537 LV 52 39

Obama +13.0 SurveyUSA 06/13 - 06/16 538 LV 52 43 Obama +9.0 U. of WI 06/08 - 06/10 506 LV 50 37

Obama +13.0 Rasmussen 06/05 - 06/05 500 LV 45 43 Obama +2.0

See All Wisconsin: McCain vs. Obama Polling Data

Barack will get a lot of help in Wisconsin. The governor, James Doyle Jr., is a Democrat and an early Obama supporter. Both of the state's U.S. Senators are Democrats – Russell D. Feingold and Herb Kohl.

Five of the state's eight U.S. Representatives are Democrats, and the State Senate is ruled by Democrats. It is only in the State Assembly that Republicans dominate.

Wisconsin is one of those industrial states, like Ohio and Pennsylvania, that has been hit particularly hard by the loss of manufacturing jobs. There are some analysts who believe these states should be easy wins for Obama given the dire economic situation.

Another good sign for Obama is that Democrats turned out in much larger numbers than Republicans during the primary:

Voter Turnout during Feb. 19 Primary 1,099,661 (D)

403,568 (R)

1,503,229 (Total)

Wisconsin ranked 2nd overall in voter turnout for young people between 18 and 29 during 2004. Obama is strong among young voters and should focus on getting the youth vote out in 2008.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama and FISA (2008-07-03 15:48)

The Obama official website posted the response of Sen. Barack Obama to the opposition of his support of the FISA compromise. Some Obama supporters had even signed a petition asking the senator to change his position.

In an unusual display of responsiveness to his base, three members of Obama's staff, Danielle Gray, a Deputy National Policy Director, Denis McDonough, Senior Foreign Policy Advisor, and Ben Rhodes, Foreign Policy Advisor and Senior Speechwriter, answered questions from readers of the official website blog.

I want to take this opportunity to speak directly to those of you who oppose my decision to support the FISA compromise.

This was not an easy call for me. I know that the FISA bill that passed the House is far from perfect. I wouldn't have drafted the legislation like this, and it does not resolve all of the concerns that we have about President Bush's abuse of executive power. It grants retroactive immunity to telecommunications companies that may have violated the law by cooperating with the Bush Administration's program of warrantless wiretapping. This potentially weakens the deterrent effect of the law and removes an important tool for the American people to demand accountability for past abuses. That's why I support striking Title II from the bill, and will work with Chris Dodd, Jeff Bingaman and others in an effort to remove this provision in the Senate.

But I also believe that the compromise bill is far better than the Protect America Act that I voted against last year. The exclusivity provision makes it clear to any President or telecommunications company that no law supersedes the authority of the FISA court. In a dangerous world, government must have the authority to collect the intelligence we need to protect the American people. But in a free society, that authority cannot be unlimited. As I've said many times, an independent monitor must watch the watchers to prevent abuses and to protect the civil liberties of the American people. This compromise law assures that the FISA court has that responsibility.

The Inspectors General report also provides a real mechanism for accountability and should not be discounted. It will allow a close look at past misconduct without hurdles that would exist in federal court because of classification issues. The recent investigation uncovering the illegal politicization of Justice Department hiring sets a strong example of the accountability that can come from a tough and thorough IG report.

The ability to monitor and track individuals who want to attack the United States is a vital counter-terrorism tool, and I'm persuaded that it is necessary to keep the American people safe – particularly since certain electronic surveillance orders will begin to expire later this summer. Given the choice between voting for an improved yet imperfect bill, and losing important surveillance tools, I've chosen to support the current compromise. I do so with the firm intention – once I'm sworn in as President – to have my Attorney General conduct a comprehensive review of all our surveillance programs, and to make further recommendations on any steps needed to preserve civil liberties and to prevent executive branch abuse in the future.

Now, I understand why some of you feel differently about the current bill, and I'm happy to take my lumps on this side and elsewhere. For the truth is that your organizing, your activism and your passion is an important reason why this bill is better than previous versions. No tool has been more important in focusing peoples' attention on the abuses of executive power in this Administration than the active and sustained engagement of American citizens. That holds true – not just on wiretapping, but on a range of issues where Washington has let the American people down.

I learned long ago, when working as an organizer on the South Side of Chicago, that when citizens join their voices together, they can hold their leaders accountable. I'm not exempt from that. I'm certainly not perfect, and expect to be held accountable too. I cannot promise to agree with you on every issue. But I do promise to listen to your concerns, take them seriously, and seek to earn your ongoing support to change the country. That is why we have built the largest grassroots campaign in the history of presidential politics, and that is the kind of White House that I intend to run as President of the United States – a White House that takes the Constitution seriously, conducts the peoples' business out in the open, welcomes and listens to dissenting views, and asks you to play your part in shaping our country's destiny.

Democracy cannot exist without strong differences. And going forward, some of you may decide that my FISA position is a deal breaker. That's ok. But I think it is worth pointing out that our agreement on the vast majority of issues that matter outweighs the differences we may have. After all, the choice in this election could not be clearer. Whether it is the economy, foreign policy, or the Supreme Court, my opponent has embraced the failed course of the last eight years, while I want to take this country in a new direction. Make no mistake: if John McCain is elected, the fundamental direction of this country that we love will not change. But if we come together, we have an historic opportunity to chart a new course, a better course.

So I appreciate the feedback through my.barackobama.com, and I look forward to continuing the conversation in the months and years to come. Together, we have a lot of work to do.

Obama advisers taking questions from participants at barackobama.com.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama reaffirms Iraq War Stance (2008-07-03 20:15)

After saying that he might 'refine' his Iraq withdrawal plan during a talk with veterans in Fargo, North Dakota, Barack Obama called a news conference to clarify his position.

Barack reiterated his commitment to begin an immediate withdrawal upon taking office on a schedule that should be completed in about 16 months. The hasty press conference might indicate that the Obama campaign is trying to squash perceptions that Barack is 'soft' on his stances and will not follow through when confronted with actual command decisions.

Here is the video of the meeting with reporters.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

JaaJoe (2008-07-04 00:33:00)

I think it's pretty hilarious that Obama thinks he can talk Ahmadinejad down. It really shows some ignorance of there culture. I just read a really good article,Should The President of the United States Talk to Ahmadinejad? , that does a pretty good job explaining why this probably wouldn't have great results.

Barack Obama talks about Veterans in Fargo (2008-07-04 09:00)

Sen. Barack Obama talks about veterans in Fargo, North Dakota yesterday.

[EMBED]

Barack supports a new GI Bill for veterans, and plans expansion and improvements to the Veterans Administration when he takes office. He will also have a zero-tolerance policy for homeless veterans sleeping on the streets.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-07-06 02:08:00)

John Kerry, you're off the hook. John Edwards, we're giving you a well-deserved break. You guys were great flip-floppers in your day, but now you've been seriously upstaged. All hail the new King of Flip-Flop - Barack Obama.

As a rookie flip-flopper, Obama first drew the attention of the environmental lobby about this time last year:

Although summer hasn't officially begun, flip-flop season is well underway and it appears Senator Obama has joined the club. Typically flip-floppers are criticized for their inability to stay firm on an issue, but in Obama's case, his flop has many environmentalists flipping back his way.

On Tuesday Obama, whose support for coal-to-liquid has been widely criticized by environmentalists, sent out a press release clarifying his position on liquid coal:

Senator Obama supports research into all technologies to help solve our climate change and energy dependence problems, including shifting our energy use to renewable fuels and investing in technology that could make coal a clean-burning source of energy...However, unless and until this technology is perfected, Senator Obama will not support the development of any coal-to-liquid fuels unless they emit at least 20 % less life-cycle carbon than conventional fuels.

This "clarification" is an important step for the Obama campaign in trying to gain support from environmental organizations and voters.

For the Candidate of Hope and Change, there were bigger and better flip-flops yet to come. As his campain began to toss Obama's positions on issue after issue under the bus, the Senate's most liberal member made quite an impression on the Washington Post. Back in February, WaPo cited these "Top Obama Flip-Flops":

1. Special interests In January, the Obama campaign described union contributions to the campaigns of Clinton and John Edwards as "special interest" money. Obama changed his tune as he began gathering his own union endorsements. He now refers respectfully to unions as the representatives of "working people" and says he is "thrilled" by their support.
2. Public financing Obama replied "yes" in September 2007 when asked if he would agree to public financing of the presidential election if his GOP opponent did the same. Obama has now attached several conditions to such an agreement, including regulating spending by outside groups. His spokesman says the candidate never committed himself on the matter.
3. The Cuba embargo In January 2004, Obama said it was time "to end the embargo with Cuba" because it had "utterly failed in the effort to overthrow Castro." Speaking to a Cuban American audience in Miami in August 2007, he said he would not "take off the embargo" as president because it is "an important inducement for change."
4. Illegal immigration In a March 2004 questionnaire, Obama was asked if the government should "crack down on businesses that hire illegal immigrants." He replied "Oppose." In a Jan. 31, 2008, televised debate, he said that "we do have to crack down on those employers that are taking advantage of the situation."

5. Decriminalization of marijuana While running for the U.S. Senate in January 2004, Obama told Illinois college students that he supported eliminating criminal penalties for marijuana use. In the Oct. 30, 2007, presidential debate, he joined other Democratic candidates in opposing the decriminalization of marijuana.

Top flip-flops? Pshaw, that was nearly four full months ago, and the man was just getting warmed up. And Obama's squirming on campaign finance hadn't even gotten off the ground. The New York Post recently ripped Obama for flipping on this and some other issues as well:

This isn't the first time Obama has, um, "changed" political lanes:

He ripped Hillary Clinton for months for voting to list Iran's Revolutionary Guard as a terrorist organization. Days after Clinton conceded, Obama flipped and said he supported the definition.

Obama repeatedly vowed to meet with various heads of terror states - most notably Ahmadinejad of Iran - "without preconditions." Then, with the nomination in sight, he zigzagged: "There's no reason why we would necessarily meet with Ahmadinejad. He's not the most powerful person in Iran."

In October, he supported NAFTA expansion. In March, campaigning in the Ohio primary, he called for a "reopening" of the trade pact's terms. This week, he called his own primary rhetoric "overheated" and said NAFTA has had a positive effect on the US economy.

Yesterday, after signaling opposition to nuclear power, he told Democratic governors he's open to expanding it.

That Obama is now the King of Flip-Flop will come as a surprise only to his devoted followers who have been too busy swooning over him to notice. Those of us not so easily smitten could have predicted this turn of events. In fact, some did. Consider this blogger who - in a post from August of 2007 titled "Obama The Anti-War Candidate NOW Says He'll Invade Another Country!" - predicted:

I guarantee this guy is going to turn into the flip-flopping candidate just like his buddy Kerry did in 2003, 2004.

Obama's flip-flop on campaign finance was one that did manage to capture the attention of Mark Shields, a liberal columnist who, unlike most of his peers, still has some integrity.

Barack Obama made history this week. He became the first presidential nominee since Richard Nixon in 1972 to state that his campaign will be funded totally by private donations with no limits on spending.

It was a flip-flop of epic proportions. It was one that he could not rationalize or justify. His video was unconvincing. He looked like someone who was being kept as a hostage somewhere he was so absolutely unconvincing in it. It could not have passed a polygraph test.

I mean, coming up with this bogus argument the Republicans have so much more money - the Republicans don't have so much more money. He's raised three times as much as John McCain has.

He has every possible committee, except Republican National Committee, Democrats at the Senate level, congressional level have this lopsided edge over Republicans. They spent three times as much, did Democratic leaning 527s, in the last election as did Republicans.

So what Obama didn't admit was, up until February of this year, when he told Tim Russert that not only would he aggressively seek an agreement on public financing, that he personally would sit down with John McCain and work it out, then, all of a sudden, they realized that all these small contributions were coming in and he was going to have a financial advantage in the fall against the Republican, and they grabbed it.

Hat Tip: NewsBusters' Noel Sheppard

Name an issue. Chances are, Obama has flipped on it. Jerusalem?

Within 24 hours of expressing his firm support for a united Jerusalem in a speech to a pro-Israel lobby organization, US Senator Barack Obama found himself forced to backtrack in the face of Arab anger on Thursday.

Debates with John McCain? Here's Obama before McCain challenged him to a series of town hall debates:

If John McCain wants to meet me anywhere, anytime, to have a debate about our respective policies in Iraq, Iran, the Middle East or around the world, that is a conversation I am happy to have.

Here's an Obama spokesperson after:

Mr. Plouffe called the McCain campaign's offer "appealing," but said they would prefer a format that is "less structured and lengthier than the McCain campaign suggests, one that more closely resembles the historic debates between Abraham Lincoln and Stephen Douglas."

Oh, well. So much for "anywhere, anytime." Obama fears going mano a mano with McCain on McCain's terms. No one would blame Obama for holding out for a more favorable deal, if only he had not said, "Anywhere, anytime."

If campaign finance was the most opportunistic of Obama's flip-flops, this one has to be the most disingenuous: In 2007, his campaign told the Chicago Tribune he believed the Washington, D.C. gun ban was constitutional. Now they say that was an "inartful" explanation. Now, the public is supposed to believe the message of the day from the Obama campaign, which is that of course he knew the gun ban was unconstitutional. Obama seems to be working hard to make John Kerry look like a straight-shooter. Now plenty of people oppose gun rights (I am not one of them), and if Obama really is one of these, why play politics with such a fundamental issue? Oh wait, playing politics with issues is what Barack Obama does.

-snip-

- Obama wants to reimpose a federal gun ban.
- Obama voted against the sale of almost all ammunition used regularly for sport shooting and hunting.
- Obama opposes Right to Carry laws.
- Obama supports a complete ban on hand-gun ownership.

So now the King of Flip-Flop seems to want to run up the score. That worked so well for John Kerry in 2004, don't you think?

Anonymous (2008-07-06 02:09:00)

Oh my! Are the pieces of the puzzle falling into place about Obama? The truth always comes out in time.

- 1) Refuses to wear an American Flag lapel pin.
- 2) Doesn't put his hand over his heart.
- 3) His wife has never been proud of America as an adult until now.
- 4) Farrakhan now endorses Obama.
- 5) The picture is out.
- 6) I read somewhere that he is not a strong supporter of Israel.

This is so scary. What kind of change is he talking about? I believe our country was founded on christian values and we need to make sure that it stays that way. These 6 items may not be anything important-but We cannot gamble with this.

Obama claims to be for all American's and that he will unite the Blue and Red States by winning over Republicans and Independents. So, how does Obama plan to reach out to win over Republicans and Independents in these states?

Here is how Obama is reaching out so far. He refuses to display the traditions of Republicans and Independents.

He refuses to wear an American flag lapel pin.

He refuses to place his hand on his heart when reciting the Pledge of Allegiance or the National Anthem.

He does not salute the US Flag.

His wife claims she has been really proud of her country only once in her adult life.

A diplomat would never insult a foreign country by behaving as Obama does in HIS OWN COUNTRY.

How can we have a Commander in Chief that is uncomfortable wearing an American Flag lapel pin, but is right at home in Muslim garb?

Obama is losing to McCain in the key and crossover red states. With Obamas crass attitude, there is no way he will win over Republicans or Independents there.

Obama will lose the General Election in one of the biggest landslides. That will be the end of his career and thank God for that.

Targeted States: Virginia (2008-07-04 14:29)

Virginia has voted for the Republican candidate in every presidential election except 1964, when Lyndon B. Johnson won, since 1952. The state voted for George W. Bush over both Al Gore Jr. and John Kerry by a little over eight percent of the vote.

However, the state is in play for Barack Obama in 2008 according to most pundits. During the primary, we saw a significantly large number of Democrats voting as compared to Republicans.

Voter turnout during 2008 Virginia Primary 973,931 (D)
475,484 (R)
1,449,415 (Total)

Virginia has a Democratic governor, Tim Kaine, and its first Democratic senator since 2001 in Jim Webb who beat incumbent George Allen in 2007. Webb's campaign platform included opposition to the Iraq War. The Virginia State House of Delegates is ruled by Republicans while Democrats dominate the State Senate. McCain has a slight lead according the RealClearPolitics average of recent polls, but Obama has won three of the four most recent surveys.

Virginia: McCain vs. Obama

Polling Data

PollDateSampleMcCain (R)Obama (D)Spread

RCP Average 05/12 - 06/22 - 45.0 44.3 McCain +0.7 SurveyUSA 06/20 - 06/22 630 LV 47 49 Obama +2.0

PPP (D) 06/14 - 06/16 893 LV 45 47 Obama +2.0 Rasmussen 06/12 - 06/12 500 LV 44 45 Obama +1.0 VCU

05/12 - 05/18 852 RV 44 36 McCain +8.0

See All Virginia: McCain vs. Obama Polling Data

Both Tim Kaine and Jim Webb have been suggested as possible running mates for Barack Obama, and both will be very helpful in helping him contest the state of Virginia.

Obama might also benefit from the fact that evangelicals, a powerful force in Virginia, are far from excited about John McCain, who has sparred with evangelicals in the past.

Virginia has a large African American population, and, for a southern state, a surprising large number of people who oppose the Iraq War . Large turnout among both groups could decide this state.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The McCain Strategy (2008-07-05 11:22)

We can examine a bit of what John McCain might be planning for the general election.

The McCain campaign has opened 10 offices:

Pennsylvania & Ohio Regional Headquarters

Columbus, OH

NJ and NY Regional Headquarters & The New Jersey State Office

Woodbridge, NJ

New England Regional Headquarters

Manchester, NH

Mid-Atlantic Regional Headquarters and Virginia State Office
Arlington, VA

South Central Regional Headquarters
Centennial, CO

Midwest Regional Headquarters
Urbandale, IA

Great Lakes Regional Headquarters & Michigan State Office
Farmington Hills, MI

North Mountain Regional Headquarters and Minnesota State Office
Saint Paul, MN

Southwest Regional Headquarters
Phoenix, AZ

West Regional Headquarters & Nevada State Office
Henderson, NV

The calendar events at McCain's website indicates that they will also be opening an office soon in California:

Upcoming McCain Campaign Events Town Hall Meeting in Portsmouth, OH – 07-09

California

Campaign

HQ Grand Opening – 07-09

Town Hall Meeting in Albuquerque, NM – 07-15

Whether the California office is primarily designed to raise funds, or whether McCain believes that he can really take the Golden State, maybe with the help of the state's governor Arnold Schwarzenegger, is hard to say.

Generally, we can expect that the locations of the offices and headquarters indicate the states that McCain will be targeting up to this point.

JohnMcCain.com also lists four groups for special interests:

- Veterans for McCain – Leveraging McCain's own illustrious military service
- Women for McCain – Obviously aiming at disaffected Hillary Clinton supporters
- Lawyers for McCain – Maybe for fundraising? Both Barack and Michelle are lawyers
- Sportsmen for
McCain -
- NRA gun vote

Here is McCain's campaign strategist Rick Davis on their own plan (June 7, 2008):
[EMBED]

So far, it looks like the McCain camp is still searching around for the right issues as it hasn't focused its message yet. Knowing what the McCain camp is doing at all times, is essential knowledge that the Obama side will need to plan their own strategy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

tomabrahams (2008-07-05 19:19:00)
have you seen the new obama video?
<http://thevote.abc13.com/2008/07/another-obama-p.html>

Vote for Change in Philadelphia (2008-07-06 08:51)

The Vote for Change effort continues to register and mobilize new voters in all 50 states. Barack Obama and his supporters have had great success in bringing in people who had never been involved in the political process before. These new voters and volunteers will play a key role in winning the general election.

Here's a post from Amanda Scott at the official blog on registration events in Philadelphia on July 4.

Vote for Change: July 4th In Philadelphia

by Amanda Scott,

Saturday, July 05, 2008 at 09:32 PM

David in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, has been active in voter registration efforts since March. And yesterday he held three events, at the Party on the Parkway, the local July 4th Parade, and the fireworks show. Each of these events is part of the "Welcome America Festival" held in Philadelphia for a week.

I chose this week to do voter registration because Welcome America draws huge crowds, especially on the night of the 4th and 5th, when there are fireworks. We had 61 volunteers sign up to help at the events today, although because it started raining around 7pm, only about 12 showed up.

Despite the rain, we got a total of 112 registrations for the day. People seemed eager to register, probably because the connection between the holiday and the idea of civic participation and patriotism.

I started doing voter registration back in March, for the Pennsylvania primary. I stood on the corner next to the grocery store near my house and registered 394 people over the course of 10 days. When I wasn't doing voter registrations, I was in the Philadelphia headquarters doing data entry and voter protection.

After the Primary in Pennsylvania, David traveled to North Carolina to help with the Get Out The Vote efforts. He then got involved with the local volunteers in Philadelphia.

I attended the kickoff for Vote for Change and have tried to either organize or attend a voter registration event every week. I really love doing voter registration because I find it satisfying to have a tangible result - a stack of completed forms - at the end of the event. Also, people really seem to appreciate that you are out there volunteering and helping others vote.

Philadelphia has a lot of colorful characters, and I like interacting with people on the street and answering their questions about voting, if I can. We've really increased Democratic voter registration in Pennsylvania since last year, and I feel like we will do even better as the summer goes by. My goal is to help Sen. Obama win Pennsylvania by a record margin of victory.

Nothing is more patriotic than making your voice heard by voting. Like David says increasing Democratic voters can make the difference this November. Sign up for a voter registration event in your town and then tell us about it at blog@barackobama.com. And if you attended an event this weekend, send us your pictures at photos@barackobama.com.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

McCain targets California? (2008-07-06 16:48)

Rick Davis, the campaign manager of John McCain, has said that he believes his candidate can win California. They're even opening up a headquarters in the Golden State.

Is this serious, or perhaps just a ploy to force Barack Obama to waste resources in California?

Yes, we have a Republican governor here but he happens to be a major Hollywood celebrity, and celebrities routinely transcend normal electoral equations. McCain, though, is no celebrity.

Besides Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, every statewide executive office is held by a Democrat. The Republicans only hold a few district-wide seats on the Board of Equalization. Both the State Assembly and State Senate are ruled by Democrats.

The congressional delegation is dominated by Democrats including both U.S. Senators - Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer. The state's cities are mainly run by Democrats.

Barack enjoys wide double digit leads in the polls.

California: McCain vs. Obama

Polling Data

PollDateSampleObama (D)McCain (R)Spread

RCP Average 05/12 - 06/23 - 52.8 36.6 Obama +16.2 Rasmussen 06/23 - 06/23 500 LV 58 30 Obama +28.0

SurveyUSA 06/17 - 06/19 503 LV 53 41 Obama +12.0 Field 05/16 - 05/27 914 LV 52 35 Obama +17.0 LA

Times/KTLA 05/20 - 05/21 705 RV 47 40 Obama +7.0 PPIC 05/12 - 05/18 1086 LV 54 37 Obama +17.0

See All California: McCain vs. Obama Polling Data

McCain has not won any polls against Obama in California and has always lost well above the margin of error.

The only thing I can think of is that McCain's handlers may think that Californians will say one thing in the opinion surveys and do another thing in the privacy of the voting booth – when the candidate is black. This idea originates from the gubernatorial bids of Tom Bradley more than two decades ago. Bradley would lead in the polls but then on election day would end up coming up short. The conclusion of many pundits was that white voters could not 'close the deal' with a black candidate in such a high office. A lot of things have changed though since that time. For example, the state is much more liberal now, comparable to the days of Gov. Jerry Brown. The Latino and Asian Pacific Islander votes are much more important than they were when Bradley was running. Indeed, Davies does mention the Latino vote when discussing McCain's California strategy. He thinks that the Arizona senator's record on immigration reform and his proximity to southern California can help him win over the state's Latinos. I think its a tall order though. Again, if we ignore the understandable Arnold exception, no statewide Republican has been able to woo Latinos in the big races. The API vote is also pretty solidly Democrat now as compared to just a decade ago.

X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-07-06 21:44)

The John McCain camp is starting to feel some heat over the situation in Afghanistan and the rise of radical Islamism in North Africa. Barack Obama has argued that the Iraq War has diverted resources from attacking the heart of the al-Qaeda organization.

X

GulfNews

As Afghanistan boils, McCain keeps focus on Iraq
Christian Science Monitor - 7 hours ago

For voters, a resurgent Taliban may challenge McCain's view that Iraq is the center of the war on terror. By Ariel Sabar | Staff writer of The Christian Science Monitor WASHINGTON - John McCain has called Iraq the "central front" of the war on terror, ...

McCain Camp Hits Obama Again FOXNews

Lieberman: Obama 'shifting' United Press International

Obama opts for larger nomination venue (2008-07-07 08:10)

In a break from tradition, the Democratic Party announced that Barack Obama will accept the party's nomination at a separate venue than that used for the Democratic Convention in Denver.

The event will be held at the Invesco Stadium in Mile High, which holds more than 75,000 people, a much larger capacity than the Pepsi Center where the convention is held. With more people in the audience, Obama's speech is expected to have a major PR impact.

"The Democratic Party is nominating a true change candidate this August, and it is only fitting that we make some big changes in how we put on the Convention," said Gov. Howard Dean, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee (DNC).

A special block of seats will be reserved at the event for Colorado residents who present the proper credentials.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama plane sidetracked, speech delivered in St. Louis (2008-07-07 14:38)

Sen. Obama's plane made an unscheduled landing in St. Louis, Missouri to address a maintenance issue. He was scheduled to make a speech in North Carolina on his economic plan for the middle class.

Instead he called a press conference in St. Louis and delivered the speech there. Here is the text of the speech as prepared for delivery.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama
An Agenda for Middle-Class Success
Press Avail
Monday, July 7th, 2008
St. Louis, Missouri
As prepared for delivery

Since we had to change venues this morning, I just want to speak briefly about the economy for a few minutes and then I'll take your questions.

This is going to be a defining issue in this campaign, because Senator McCain and I have very different views of where our economy is today, and where we need to go.

Senator McCain said earlier this year that America has made "great progress economically" over the past eight years. He believes we're on the right track, and he's launching a new economic tour today with policies that are very much the same as those we have seen from the Bush Administration.

In fact, the central component of Senator McCain's economic plan is $300 billion more in tax cuts for big corporations and multimillionaires – less than a quarter of which will benefit the 80 % of American families that make up the bulk of our middle-class. Less than a quarter.

Under Senator McCain's economic plan, Exxon Mobil – a company that recently reported the biggest profit in history – would get $1.2 billion in tax breaks, while less than a quarter of the benefits would go to the middle-class. What's worse – he has no concrete plan to pay for these tax breaks, so his policies would actually add more than $2 or $3 trillion to the national debt over the next decade and weaken our economy even further. If this sounds familiar, it's because it's exactly what George Bush has done for the last eight years.

Now, I won't stand here and pretend that we can or should undo the economic transformations that have taken place over the last few decades. There are jobs that aren't coming back and this world will always be more competitive. But I do believe that if all of us are willing to share the burdens and benefits of this new economy, then all of us will prosper – not just because government makes it so, but because we're willing to take responsibility as individuals to work harder and think more and innovate further.

Last week I outlined an agenda to keep America competitive by providing all Americans with a world-class education, investing in researching and innovation, devising an energy policy that creates job and reduces our oil dependence, and making sure that our trade policies work for American workers.

But today I want to talk about my plan to not only ensure the economic security of middle-class families in the short-term, but to give them the chance to achieve economic success in the long-term; to make sure that Americans aren't just getting by, but getting ahead – that they're able to get a world-class education, build a nest egg and provide a better life for their children.

The first step is to offer immediate relief to families who are struggling right now while helping to jump-start economic growth and create jobs. Between a sluggish economy and gas prices rising above $4 a gallon, the American people cannot wait another six months for help. Instead of Washington gimmicks like a three-month gas tax holiday that will only pad oil company profits, we need to do what I called for months ago and pass a second stimulus package that provides energy rebate checks for working families, a fund to help families avoid foreclosure, and increased assistance for states that have been hard-hit by the economic downturn. A few days ago I called on Senator McCain and all members of Congress to come together – Republicans and Democrats – in support of this $50 billion stimulus package. There are many policies we'll disagree on, but immediate relief for families who are struggling shouldn't be one of them. And so while I haven't received a response from Senator McCain yet, I look forward to hearing one soon. The second step in my agenda is to help provide economic security for families who've been dealing with skyrocketing costs and stagnant wages for years. I believe it's time to reform our tax code so that it rewards work and not just wealth. So when I'm President, I'll shut down the corporate loopholes and tax havens, and I'll use the money to help pay for a middle-class tax cut that will provide $1,000 of relief to 95 % of workers and their families. We'll also eliminate income taxes for every retiree making less than $50,000 per year, because every senior deserves to live out their life in dignity and respect.

And if Senator McCain wants a debate about taxes in this campaign, that's a debate I'm happy to have. Because if you're a family making less than $250,000, my plan will not raise your taxes – not your income taxes, not your payroll taxes, not your capital gains taxes, not any of your taxes. In fact, what Senator McCain should explain is why his tax cut for the middle class would leave out 101 million households, and why, for families that are lucky enough to get the tax cut, it would be worth only about $125 in the first year. The difference is – he trusts that prosperity will trickle down from corporations and the wealthiest few to everyone else. I believe that it's the hard work of middle-class Americans that fuels this nation's prosperity.

I'll also help families who are struggling under the crushing burden of health care costs by passing a plan that brings the typical family's premiums down by $2500 and guarantees coverage to everyone who wants it. Senator McCain's health care plan not only fails to cover every American and holds out less hope of cutting health care costs, it would actually tax your health care benefits for the first time ever. Over time this tax would grow and after just a few years it would be so large that middle-class families would face an overall tax increase from his plans. So that is a real choice in this election.

As we help families deal with rising costs, we also have to help those families who find themselves mired in credit card debt. That's why I'll establish a Credit Card Bill of Rights that will ban unilateral changes to credit card agreements; ban rate hikes on debt people already had; and ban interest charges on late fees. I'll also reform our bankruptcy laws to make sure that if you can demonstrate that you went bankrupt because of medical expenses, you can relieve that debt and get back on your feet.

But even as we take these steps, we also know that it's not enough to just get families back on their feet. We need to help hardworking families get ahead. That's why the third step in my agenda is to give families the help they need to build that nest egg and provide a better life for their children.

To make saving easier, we'll automatically enroll every worker in a workplace pension plan that stays with you from job to job. And for working families who earn under $75,000, we will start that nest egg by matching 50 percent of the first $1,000 you save and depositing it directly into their account.

To make a college education affordable for every American family, we'll provide $4,000 of tuition if students will provide community or national service when they graduate. To make it easier for families to own their own home and stay in that home, we'll crack down on predatory lenders, help more Americans refinance their mortgages, and provide ten million homeowners a mortgage tax credit that will take ten percent off their interest rate.

To help those mothers and fathers who are juggling work and family, I'll expand the Child Care Tax Credit, extend the Family Medical Leave Act, and make sure that every worker in America has access to seven days of paid sick leave. I'll make sure that women get equal pay for an equal day's work. And to help those families who own small businesses that are the engine of prosperity in America, I will eliminate all capital gains taxes on start-ups and small businesses to encourage more innovation and job creation.

There is no doubt that this agenda is ambitious. It will take resources in the wake of policies our debt like a war in Iraq that's costing us $10 billion a month. But the answer to our fiscal problems is not to short-change investments that will help our families get ahead – investments that are vital to our long-term growth as a nation. The answer is to make sure that we are finding a way to pay for these investments but cutting where we can. My plan is detailed and specific when it comes to cutting spending. In fact, all my new spending proposals would be more than paid for by spending reductions. I have a plan to responsibly end the war in Iraq and reduce overpayments for private plans in Medicare, something John McCain has no specific plan to do. I would also curb subsidies to banks making student loans, return earmarks to their 2001 levels and reform no-bid contracts. I do this because I believe we can have a smarter government that pays its way while investing in our country's future.

The Americans I've met over the last sixteen months may come from different places and have different backgrounds, but they hold common hopes and dream the same simple dreams. They know government can't solve all their problems, and they don't expect it to. They believe in personal responsibility, and hard work, and self-reliance. They don't like seeing their tax dollars wasted.

But we also believe in fairness and opportunity – in an America where jobs are there for the willing; where hard work is rewarded with a decent living; where no matter how much you start with or where you come from or who your parents are, you can not just get by, but actually get ahead. That's the promise of this country, and I believe we can keep that promise together if we change course and get to work in the months and years ahead. Thank you.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-07-07 20:07:00)

i saw him get off the plane today live on fox news. it was exhilarating.
buy obama stickers to show your support

Video: Barack and Michelle (2008-07-07 20:19)

Here's Barack Obama's speech today on economic policy, diverted from North Carolina to St. Louis, Missouri, where his plane had to land for maintenance.

[EMBED]

Michelle Obama was interviewed today on ABC's Good Morning America. Here's the YouTube clip.

[EMBED]

Also, here's the article from the ABC News website:

Michelle Obama's Passions

Wife, Mother, Intellectual, American Woman

by CLAIRE SHIPMAN, SUSAN RUCCI and EMILY YACUS

July 7, 2008

As this November's presidential election draws closer, many people want to know more about Michelle Obama. Who is this mother of two, who rose from the rough South Side of Chicago to become a force in her own right during this crucial run for the White House? And what drives her? One way to figure this out is to ask the people who have known her the longest, her family and friends.

More Photos

They seem to be held in awe.

Close friend and businesswoman Valerie Jarrett says, "I don't think I've ever met anybody quite like Michelle."

"She's very genuine," says friend and fellow parent Yvonne Dalia, while her college roommate describes her as "your best girlfriend."

And her brother says simply, "She's good at what she's good at."

This is the puzzle that is Michelle Obama, the Target-shopping, blunt-talking, Jimmy Choo-wearing, fist-bumping potential first lady, as seen through the eyes of those closest to her.

Related

WATCH: The First Wives Club

Michelle Obama Looks to Soften Image

Michelle Obama in for 'Very Ugly Stuff'

Her defining passions, her friends say, started early. As a little girl on Chicago's South Side, she had, some would say, an obsession with achievement.

Her mother, Marian Robinson, said her children could do anything, and their father inspired them. As a city worker who was debilitated by multiple sclerosis, Fraser Robinson commanded respect.

"When you see a guy who gets up every day and goes to work and it's hard for him," said Obama's only brother, Craig Robinson, "it makes it hard for a teenager to lay around all day."

The Robinsons expected their children to fill their lives with well-rounded extra-curriculars and meaningful family discussions.

"You didn't want him to be disappointed with you or upset with you," continued Robinson, "because we held him in such high-esteem."

Robinson and his sister are close. They talk several times a week, and he said his dad had a soft spot for "Meesh," as he used to call her.

"My sister had to be in her 30s when my dad died," said Robinson. He ruminated on Michelle's closeness to her father: "My mom and I used to crack up. She used to sit in his lap up until the week before he died."

- 1|2|3|4

NEXT >

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Shaping the Democratic Party's Platform (2008-07-08 09:23)

Barack Obama sent out the following message announcing an open platform for the Democratic Party.

There have been plenty of rumblings recently over Barack's supposed drift toward the "center." This perception may have been exacerbated by the fact that the Illinois senator is campaigning a lot in red states with a message obviously crafted for those states.

The new Democratic Party platform will be formulated after receiving input from Platform Meetings that will take place across the country for two weeks in July.

This will allow Obama supporters to sound off about which direction they think the party and their candidate should take.

Paul-

✖ Every four years, the Democratic Party assembles a platform that outlines the party's position on a number of issues. Traditionally, the drafting of the platform is not open to ordinary people. This year, that's going to change.

For two weeks in July, people all across America will hold Platform Meetings in their own communities to discuss the issues and share their input. The outcome of these meetings will be reviewed by the Drafting Committee as it creates the final Platform.

No political experience is required. Your thoughts and experiences are all that matter, and they will shape a platform that – like this campaign – is owned by the people.

...This year, ordinary people like you will gather in their homes, community centers, places of worship, and even coffee shops to discuss the issues that matter to them and help decide what should be at the heart of the Democratic platform for change.

The input we get from these meetings will help shape the platform at the Democratic Convention in August.

Platform Meetings are a great way to connect with fellow supporters and help write the next chapter in the history of the Democratic Party.

We'll make sure you have all the resources and support you need to succeed. All you need to provide are your ideas for America and your hunger for change.

I hope you'll take advantage of this opportunity to make your voice heard in the political process.

Thank you for all that you do,

Barack

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama addresses League of United Latin American Citizens (2008-07-08 18:43)

Barack Obama addresses League Of United Latin American Citizens (2008-07-08 19:11)

Sen. Barack Obama spoke before the League Of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) National Conference today in Washington DC.

[EMBED] Latinos will be one of the more important voting blocs to win over in the presidential election.

...I'm told that today's theme is "diversity in government." So I've been thinking about why that's important and about what it means to have a government that represents all Americans. It's not just about making sure that men and women of every race, religion, and background are represented at every level of government – though that's a critical part of it. It's not just about sending a message to our children that everyone can lead and everyone can serve – although that too is important. It's about making sure that we have a government that knows that a problem facing any American is a problem facing all Americans.

It's about making sure our government knows that when there's a Hispanic girl stuck in a crumbling school who graduates without learning to read or doesn't graduate at all, that isn't just a Hispanic-American problem, that's an American problem.

When Hispanics lose their jobs faster than almost anybody else, or work jobs that pay less, and come with fewer benefits than almost anybody else, that isn't a Hispanic-American problem, that's an American problem.

When 12 million people live in hiding in this country and hundreds of thousands of people cross our borders illegally each year; when companies hire undocumented workers instead of legal citizens to avoid paying overtime or to avoid a union; and a nursing mother is torn away from her baby by an immigration raid, that is a problem that all of us – black, white, and brown – must solve as one nation.

A government that works for all Americans – that's the kind of government I'm talking about. And that's the kind of government I've been fighting to build throughout my over 20 years in public service.

[EMBED]

Read the entire speech as prepared for delivery.

You can read the Latino Blueprint for Change and join Latinos for Obama here.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: Obama Family Interview (2008-07-08 19:54)

Access Hollywood has a great interview by Maria Menounos of the whole Obama family. It's the first time I've heard the kids Malia and Sasha sound off in a televised interview.

[EMBED]

Part II of the interview.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2012-12-22 07:08:48)

Greetings! This is my first comment here so I just wanted to give a quick shout out and tell you I genuinely enjoy reading your articles. Can you recommend any other blogs/websites/forums that deal with the same subjects? Thanks a lot!
*my web page: marketing

Video: Obama on Economy (2008-07-09 08:18)

Barack Obama talks about the economy, economic security and bankruptcy in Powder Springs, Georgia.

[EMBED]

A new television ad airing in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Michigan, "New Energy" clarifies Obama's energy policy and responds to false attacks by John McCain and the Republican party.

[EMBED]

X X

X X

X X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack, Hillary and Caroline Kennedy Live from NY (2008-07-09 17:57)

Watch Barack Obama, Hillary Clinton and Caroline Clinton live from New York.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Is Barack Obama 'talking down' to folk (2008-07-10 10:13)

The newest controversy created by the Rev. Jesse Jackson's "private" comments bring up the question as to whether there is a perception that Barack Obama is, as Jackson puts it, 'talking down' to people.

Jackson mentions specifically black people, but there was also the case of the comments about "bitter" rural folk (read white people) clinging to God and guns. These two cases are not exactly similar as Jackson was talking about Obama's chastening of absent black fathers, were the senator was speaking directly to his own community, while the "bitter" comments were made while talking about rural people to an urban crowd, apparently referring to those in and around the Appalachias.

Either way, such comments run the danger of making Obama appear condescending, patronizing and out-of-touch. Not that these problems do not exist, but in both cases they exist in communities that are down-trodden in general. Many would argue that there are external causes for these problems.

I remember one college course I had with the late Sacramento mayor Joe Serna. He talked about how Mexicans coming to the United States from Mexico and moving into wrecked neighborhoods changed socially. Coming from the family-oriented culture of Mexico, the new immigrants with each passing generation in these tough neighborhoods began to adopt a family structure similar to those of the black "hood" i.e. single parent families with mostly the fathers being absent and non-supportive.

Not that Obama is wrong about how these communities need to take ultimate responsibility for their own destinies. Part of that responsibility includes making their government accountable.

The power of words, especially coming from a potential national leader, though, must not be underestimated.

LIVE: Barack in Fairfax, Virginia (2008-07-10 10:50)

Barack Obama continues his tour of conservative battleground states with a stop in Fairfax, Virginia. Here is a live video feed of his talk there on economic security.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Targeted States: Missouri (2008-07-10 15:03)

John McCain is leading in most polls out of Missouri, but just yesterday the Obama campaign tripled their staff presence in the Show Me State.

Obama for America announced it has 150 paid staffers in the state to direct the Illinois senator's army of volunteers. The total exceeds the combined peak numbers of both John Kerry who had as many as 80 Missouri staffers and George W. Bush who had up to 50 in the last presidential election.

"We have started really ramping up on the staffing, we're going to start to open offices across the state and we're really excited to talk with the people here," Debbie Mesloh with Obama For America said.

Missouri: McCain vs. Obama (RealClearPolitics)

Polling Data

PollDateSampleMcCain (R)Obama (D)Spread

RCP Average 06/20 - 07/07 - 49.0 44.0 McCain +5.0 Rasmussen 07/07 - 07/07 500 LV 50 45 McCain +5.0
PPP (D) 07/02 - 07/05 723 LV 47 44 McCain +3.0 SurveyUSA 06/20 - 06/22 543 LV 50 43 McCain +7.0
Rasmussen 06/03 - 06/03 500 LV 42 43 Obama +1.0 SurveyUSA 05/16 - 05/18 1523 LV 48 45 McCain +3.0
Rasmussen 05/06 - 05/06 500 LV 47 41 McCain +6.0 SurveyUSA 04/11 - 04/13 542 RV 50 42 McCain +8.0
Rasmussen 03/24 - 03/24 500 LV 53 38 McCain +15.0 SurveyUSA 03/14 - 03/16 536 RV 53 39 McCain
+14.0 SurveyUSA 02/26 - 02/28 632 RV 48 42 McCain +6.0 Rasmussen 02/11 - 02/11 500 LV 42 40 McCain
+2.0 SurveyUSA 01/11 - 01/13 562 RV 51 40 McCain +11.0 SurveyUSA 12/13 - 12/15 547 RV 44 47 Obama
+3.0

George W. Bush beat both Al Gore in 2000 and John Kerry in 2004 in Missouri. Indeed, a Democrat hasn't won Missouri since 1964.

Missouri has a Republican governor, Matt Blunt. In both 2000 and 2004, the governor was a Democrat. There is a Republican senator and a Democratic one, the latter being early Obama supporter Claire McCaskill.

McCaskill has been a very active campaigner for Obama and often appears on national news coverage representing the campaign.

The Missouri state legislature, both the assembly and the senate, are dominated by Republicans.

Despite the strong Republican presence in the state, there was one very good sign for Obama that occurred during the primary. A total of 824,453 voters cast ballots in the Democratic primary, compared to 584,618 for the Republicans. In comparison, in 2000, 44 % more Republicans voted in the primary than Democrats. Also, in the most recent statewide election, McCaskill was able to unseat an incumbent Republican possibly indicating weakening support for the party.

Efforts by the Obama campaign and the DNC to register and activate Democrats in the state are reported to be bearing fruit. So much so, that incumbent Republican Gov. Blunt has decided not to run for reelection.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Live Chat on Obama's Economic Plan for Women (2008-07-11 11:14)

The Obama for America blog is hosting a live chat on women's economic security with Campaign Deputy National Policy Director Danielle Gray, Domestic Policy Director Neera Tanden, and Economic Policy Advisor Brian Deese for approximately 45 minutes starting at 11:00 am PST.

Here are some details on Obama's plan for working women.

Obama's Plan for Economic Security for America's Working Women

Tax cut for working women. Barack Obama will provide 71 million working women with a tax cut of up to $500–or $1000 per family–to help offset the impact of stagnant wages and skyrocketing costs.

Balancing work and family. Obama will help address the challenge of balancing work and family by guaranteeing seven days of paid sick leave to the 22 million working women who currently have none. Obama will also expand child care tax credits, double funding for afterschool programs to serve 1 million more children, and will create a summer learning program to serve an additional 1 million young people. Health care for every American. As President, Obama will reduce health care costs by $2,500 for a typical family, while providing affordable health care for every American.

A secure retirement. Obama will strengthen retirement security for working women, who currently enter retirement with less than half the retirement savings of men. Obama's plan will automatically enroll workers in retirement accounts (with the option to opt-out) and make these accounts portable to help working parents save while balancing their family obligations.

Equal Pay. Obama will fight for paycheck equity and to close the pay gap that leaves women earning only 78 cents for every dollar earned by men. The pay gap is even more pronounced for minority working women—with Hispanic women earning only 53 cents and African American women only 62 cents for every dollar of male earnings.

Affordable college. Obama will put the cost of college in reach for by providing a $4,000 refundable tax credit available at the time of enrollment in exchange for community service.

Raise the minimum wage. Obama will help low-wage working women move into the middle class by increasing the minimum wage to $9.50 by 2011, and indexing it to inflation—and expanding the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC).

Support Women-Owned Small Businesses. Obama will help women-owned small businesses innovate, grow and create jobs by cutting their capital gains tax rate to zero, and implementing the Women Owned Business contracting program that has been abandoned by the Bush Administration.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Why negative attacks against Obama are risky (2008-07-12 13:58)

Among many pundits and street level supporters alike, there are those who believe that conservatives will subject Barack Obama to a massive assault of negative ads similar to the "swiftboating" campaign used against John Kerry. However, there are some indications out there that Obama's supporters may not be that certain about the effectiveness of swiftboat attacks against the Illinois senator. Already, there have been at least several widespread anti-Obama 'whisper campaigns' over the internet, and yet Obama is still leading in the most swing states according to the polls.

In 2004, we did not have the social networking sites and YouTube as we do today. These networks allow politicians to test what will or will not work against a candidate, and what might be worth spending TV ad money on. In fact, these internet networks alone can often sink a candidate as we saw during the congressional races of 2006.

Another thing about Obama is that he does not let negative attacks shape his own campaign. Kerry, while often refusing to respond directly to the swiftboaters, began appearing frequently with his old swift boat crew and with supporting military flag officers in apparent reaction to the attacks. These supporters acted as Kerry's surrogates and soon the bickering between them and the swiftboaters began to dominate news cycles.

Obama's ability to keep the focus on change in Washington makes it difficult for his opponents to come up with a workable negative attack strategy.

Swiftboating attacks will tend to erode Obama's support among conservative members of his own party. Therefore, it's important that he keeps his progressive base of supporters strongly behind him.

X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-07-12 15:14:00)

The biggest thing that Obama will have to do is try to convince the middle of the roaders or moderates that he is the most qualified candidate, which he isn't. Not that I like McCain any better but no one can exactly tell us what Sen. Obama has done in his very short Senatorial career. He hasn't even finished a single term in the Senate yet.

I can't even believe that he is the most qualified Democrat much less candidate for POTUS.

Slowly but surely people will eventually see him as nothing more than an empty suit.

Anonymous (2008-07-15 06:32:00)

How can Obama run as President when one of the qualifications is that the person's parents must be American Citizens.

what did he mark down as race on his form for filing for president of the United States, or could he be charged with falsifying a Federal Leagl Form

Barack Obama to speak at National Council of La Raza (2008-07-13 09:21)

Barack Obama will speak at the National Council of La Raza (NCLR) today as it celebrates 40 years of activism in the Latino Community.

New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson, Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and other Latino leaders have been campaigning hard for Obama within the Latino community.

The Latino vote is critical in a number of swing states including New Mexico, Nevada and Florida.

For more info, read Barack's Latino Blueprint For Change.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack Obama at La Raza Conference (2008-07-13 15:57)

Here is the video of Sen. Barack Obama today addressing the National Conference of La Raza in San Diego, California. Barack talks about his work as a community organizer in the south area of Chicago, which includes large Latino neighborhoods. He says that change comes not from the top down but from the bottom up.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

American Federation of Teachers endorses Barack Obama (2008-07-14 07:40)

The American Federation of Teachers (AFT) endorsed Sen. Barack Obama yesterday.

The AFT represents more than 1.4 million pre-K through 12th-grade teachers; paraprofessionals and other school-related personnel; higher education faculty and professional staff; federal, state and local government employees; nurses and healthcare workers; and early childhood educators.

Here is the union's press release:

American Federation of Teachers Endorses Sen. Barack Obama
Illinois Senator Welcomes Endorsement, Addresses AFT Convention

CHICAGO – The 3,000-plus delegates to the American Federation of Teachers convention today voted overwhelmingly to endorse the presidential candidacy of Sen. Barack Obama, setting in motion the union's powerful and proven political program on his behalf. Immediately following the endorsement, Obama thanked the delegates live via satellite, saying he was "honored" by the endorsement.

"Sen. Obama believes, as we do, that our leaders have a responsibility to build the economy, not on the backs of poor and middle-class Americans, but for the benefit and well-being of all. His plans—to replace NCLB with education law that truly helps schools, instead of hurts them; to ensure all Americans have access to affordable, high-quality healthcare; and to bring home American troops as soon as possible—will help usher in a new era of progress and opportunity,” said AFT President Edward J. McElroy.

With this endorsement, the AFT launches an all-out effort to inform its more than 1.4 million members about where the candidates stand on the issues, and to mobilize them to help elect Obama in November. The AFT turned out a record number of members to vote in the presidential primaries, and plans to build on that effort during the general election campaign.

Obama told the delegates he needed the union’s help to get to the White House, adding:

”From your earliest days in Chicago, you’ve stood up for change. When minorities weren’t allowed full union membership; when parents fought to integrate our schools; when it was time to take the march for civil rights to Washington—you stood up. And if you stand up with me in these next four months ... then I promise you this: We will win this election; we will change education in this country; and we will bring about a better future for our children and for this country we love.”

”AFT members will work tirelessly to elect Sen. Obama as the next president of the United States,” McElroy said, “for the sake of our country, the institutions in which we work, and the children and citizens we serve.”

And here is Sen. Obama’s response to the endorsement:

Remarks to the 80th Convention of the American Federation of Teachers

(As prepared for delivery)

Senator Barack Obama

July 13, 2008

Hello, everybody. I’m sorry I can’t join you all in person today, but thank you for letting me say a few words. First and foremost, I am honored to have your endorsement, and I appreciate the commitment you’re making to help us win in November.

I want to thank your president, Ed McElroy, your Secretary-Treasurer, Nat LaCour, and your Executive Vice President, Toni Cortese. Ed and Nat, congratulations on your retirements. We are all grateful for your steady leadership and tireless efforts to guarantee our students their fundamental right to a quality education. And I look forward to working with your new officers.

And I want to say hello to my friends from Illinois - Ed Geppert, the President of the Illinois Federation of Teachers; Marilyn Stewart, the president of the Chicago Teachers Union; and AFT Vice President Jim Dougherty, and all my allies with whom I’ve worked so closely.

Over the course of this campaign, I’ve had the opportunity to visit schools and talk to teachers and students; paraprofessionals and support staff; college faculty and employees; public employees, nurses and health care workers all across this country. But so much of what informs my visits comes from an experience I had a few years ago at Dodge Elementary School in Chicago, not far from where you’re assembled today.

I asked a young teacher there what she saw as the biggest challenge facing her students. She gave me an answer I had never heard before. She talked about what she called “These Kids Syndrome” - the tendency to explain away the shortcomings and failures of our education system by saying “these kids can’t learn” or “these kids don’t want to learn” or “these kids are just too far behind.” And after a while, “these kids” become somebody else’s problem.

And she looked at me and said, “When I hear that term, it drives me crazy. They’re not ‘these kids.’ They’re our kids. All of them.”

She’s absolutely right. These children are our children. Their future is our future. And it’s time we understood that their education is our responsibility.

I am running for President to guarantee that all of our children have the best possible chance in life. And I am tired of hearing you blamed for our problems. I want to lead a new era of mutual responsibility in education, where we all come together: parents and educators, the AFT and leaders in Washington, citizens all across America; united for the sake of our children's success.

Bringing about that future begins with fixing the broken promises of No Child Left Behind. Now, I believe that the goals of this law - educating every child with an excellent teacher, closing the achievement gap, ensuring more accountability and higher standards - were right. But promising all this while leaving the resources behind is wrong. Labeling a school and its students as failures one day and then abandoning them the next is wrong.

We must fix the failures of No Child Left Behind by providing the funding that was promised, giving states the resources they need, and finally meeting our commitment to special education. But that alone is not an education policy. It's just a starting point.

Now, John McCain is an honorable man and I respect his service to our country, but he won't even get us to that starting point. For someone who's been in Washington nearly 30 years, he's got a pretty slim record on education, and when he has taken a stand, it's been the wrong one.

He voted against increased funding for No Child Left Behind to preserve billions in tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans - tax breaks he wants to extend without saying how he'd pay for them. He voted against increasing funds for Head Start, and Pell Grants, and the hiring of 100,000 new teachers again and again and again.

In fact, his only proposal seems to be recycling tired rhetoric about vouchers and school choice. Now, I've been a proponent of public school choice throughout my career. I applaud AFT for your leadership in representing charter school teachers and support staff all across this country, and for even operating your own charters in New York. Because we know well-designed public charter schools have a lot to offer, and I've actually helped pass legislation to expand them. But what I do oppose is using public money for private school vouchers. We need to focus on fixing and improving our public schools; not throwing our hands up and walking away from them.

Real change is finally giving our kids everything they need to have a fighting chance in today's world. That begins with recognizing that the single most important factor in determining a child's achievement is not the color of their skin or where they come from; it's not who their parents are or how much money they have. It's who their teacher is. It's the paraprofessionals and support staff and all of you in this room. It's those who spend their own money on books and supplies, come early and stay late comparing lesson plans, who devote their lives to our next generation and serve as role models for the children who need one most because you believe that's what makes the extra difference. And it does. After all, I have two daughters. I know what their teachers mean to them.

So it's time to start treating our teachers properly. That means residency programs that supply exceptional recruits to high-need schools. That means mentoring programs that pair experienced, successful teachers with new ones. That means service scholarships that say if you commit your life to teaching, America will commit to paying for your college education.

And when our educators succeed, I won't just talk about how great they are; I will reward them for it. Under my plan, districts will be able to give teachers who mentor, or teach in underserved areas, or take on added responsibilities, or learn new skills to serve students better, or consistently excel in the classroom, the salary increase they deserve. And whether it's the plans AFT helped create in Cincinnati or Chicago, you've shown that it is possible to find new ways to increase teacher pay that are developed with teachers, not imposed on them.

And together, we will begin changing the odds for our at-risk children by providing quality, affordable early childhood education for all our children. To address the achievement gap, we'll expand afterschool and summer learning opportunities. To address the dropout crisis that condemns so many futures, we'll intervene much earlier in a child's education - because the forces that lead a high school student to drop out start well before the ninth grade.

But there is no program and no policy that can substitute for a parent who is involved in their child's education from day one, who makes sure that child is in school on time, helps them with their homework, and attends those parent-teacher conferences; who is willing to turn off the TV once in awhile, put away the video games, and read to their child. Responsibility for our children's education starts at home. We have to set high standards for them, and spend time with them, and love them. We have to hold ourselves accountable.

This is the commitment we must make to our kids. This is the chance they must have. We all know there are too many young men and women in America right now who are slipping away from us as we speak - students who've lost all hope that they can make something of their lives. You know these kids. And I know these kids. I began my career over two decades ago in communities on Chicago's South Side. And I worked with parents and teachers and local leaders to fight for their future. We set up after school programs and protested outside government offices so that we could get those who had dropped out into alternative schools. And in time, we changed the odds for our children.

But while I know hopelessness, I also know hope. In May, I visited a high school in Colorado where just three years ago, only half of the seniors were accepted to college. But thanks to the hard work of caring parents, innovative educators, and some very committed students, all forty-four seniors of this year's class were accepted to more than seventy colleges and universities across the country. And the example they set trickles down. While there, I met an eighth grader named Theo Rodriguez, who now sets his sights a little higher - he wants to go to Oxford and study criminology.

That's what hope is. That's the promise of education in America - that no matter what we look like or where we come from or who our parents are, each of us should have the opportunity to fulfill our God-given potential. Each of us should have the chance to achieve the American Dream.

That's why I'm running for President, AFT. To make sure all our kids have that chance. But I need your help to get there. From your earliest days in Chicago, you've stood up for change - when minorities weren't allowed full union membership; when parents fought to integrate our schools; when it was time to take the march for civil rights to Washington, you stood up.

And if you stand up with me these next four months; if you march with me and knock on doors and make phone calls and register voters, and talk to your friends and co-workers and neighbors; then I promise you this: we will win this election; we will change education in this country; and we will bring about a better future for our children and for this country we love. Thank you.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jim Johnson (2008-07-14 07:51:00)

The Bend Oregon real estate market needs help. I'm wondering what the candidates can do for the economy. We are also in a fuel crisis and should be pumping American oil.

run a car on water (2008-07-14 12:46:00)

It is going to be an interesting election. The candidate that comes up with the most believable cure to our fuel situation and addresses the housing market will get elected.

(2008-07-14 19:22)

Sen. Barack Obama had an opinion article published in the New York Times today outlining his plans to withdraw troops from Iraq upon taking office.

The Illinois senator came under fire when he was perceived as possibly backing on his Iraq War stance by saying he might 'refine' his position upon visiting the country and talking with military commanders there. Barack makes it clear in the op-ed that he has not changed his position. He has not come up with firm plans yet on the specifics of a "residual force" to remain in Iraq after the main troop pullout.

My Plan for Iraq

By BARACK OBAMA

Published: July 14, 2008

CHICAGO — The call by Prime Minister Nuri Kamal al-Maliki for a timetable for the removal of American troops from Iraq presents an enormous opportunity. We should seize this moment to begin the phased redeployment of combat troops that I have long advocated, and that is needed for long-term success in Iraq and the security interests of the United States.

Skip to next paragraph

Enlarge This Image

Paul Hoppe

The differences on Iraq in this campaign are deep. Unlike Senator John McCain, I opposed the war in Iraq before it began, and would end it as president. I believed it was a grave mistake to allow ourselves to be distracted from the fight against Al Qaeda and the Taliban by invading a country that posed no imminent threat and had nothing to do with the 9/11 attacks. Since then, more than 4,000 Americans have died and we have spent nearly $1 trillion. Our military is overstretched. Nearly every threat we face — from Afghanistan to Al Qaeda to Iran — has grown.

In the 18 months since President Bush announced the surge, our troops have performed heroically in bringing down the level of violence. New tactics have protected the Iraqi population, and the Sunni tribes have rejected Al Qaeda — greatly weakening its effectiveness.

But the same factors that led me to oppose the surge still hold true. The strain on our military has grown, the situation in Afghanistan has deteriorated and we've spent nearly $200 billion more in Iraq than we had budgeted. Iraq's leaders have failed to invest tens of billions of dollars in oil revenues in rebuilding their own country, and they have not reached the political accommodation that was the stated purpose of the surge.

The good news is that Iraq's leaders want to take responsibility for their country by negotiating a timetable for the removal of American troops. Meanwhile, Lt. Gen. James Dubik, the American officer in charge of training Iraq's security forces, estimates that the Iraqi Army and police will be ready to assume responsibility for security in 2009.

Only by redeploying our troops can we press the Iraqis to reach comprehensive political accommodation and achieve a successful transition to Iraqis' taking responsibility for the security and stability of their country. Instead of seizing the moment and encouraging Iraqis to step up, the Bush administration and Senator McCain are refusing to embrace this transition — despite their previous commitments to respect the will of Iraq's sovereign government. They call any timetable for the removal of American troops "surrender," even though we would be turning Iraq over to a sovereign Iraqi government.

But this is not a strategy for success — it is a strategy for staying that runs contrary to the will of the Iraqi people, the American people and the security interests of the United States. That is why, on my first day in office, I would give the military a new mission: ending this war.

As I've said many times, we must be as careful getting out of Iraq as we were careless getting in. We can safely redeploy our combat brigades at a pace that would remove them in 16 months. That would be the summer of 2010 — two years from now, and more than seven years after the war began. After this redeployment, a residual force in Iraq would perform limited missions: going after any remnants of Al Qaeda in Mesopotamia, protecting American service members and, so long as the Iraqis make political progress, training Iraqi security forces. That would not be a precipitous withdrawal.

In carrying out this strategy, we would inevitably need to make tactical adjustments. As I have often said, I would consult with commanders on the ground and the Iraqi government to ensure that our troops were redeployed safely, and our interests protected. We would move them from secure areas first and volatile areas later. We would pursue a diplomatic offensive with every nation in the region on behalf of Iraq's stability, and commit $2 billion to a new international effort to support Iraq's refugees.

Ending the war is essential to meeting our broader strategic goals, starting in Afghanistan and Pakistan, where the Taliban is resurgent and Al Qaeda has a safe haven. Iraq is not the central front in the war on terrorism, and it never has been. As Adm. Mike Mullen, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, recently pointed out, we won't have sufficient resources to finish the job in Afghanistan until we reduce our commitment to Iraq.

As president, I would pursue a new strategy, and begin by providing at least two additional combat brigades to support our effort in Afghanistan. We need more troops, more helicopters, better intelligence-gathering and more nonmilitary assistance to accomplish the mission there. I would not hold our military, our resources and our foreign policy hostage to a misguided desire to maintain permanent bases in Iraq.

In this campaign, there are honest differences over Iraq, and we should discuss them with the thoroughness they deserve. Unlike Senator McCain, I would make it absolutely clear that we seek no presence in Iraq similar to our permanent bases in South Korea, and would redeploy our troops out of Iraq and focus on the broader security challenges that we face. But for far too long, those responsible for the greatest strategic blunder in the recent history of American foreign policy have ignored useful debate in favor of making false charges about flip-flops and surrender.

It's not going to work this time. It's time to end this war.

Barack Obama, a United States senator from Illinois, is the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Christine (2008-07-15 07:42:00)

just wanted to draw your attention to a website- www.obamatracker.com

This site posts dozens of stories regarding Barack Obama daily, from all different news organizations. We currently have over 3,000 stories, and we're only adding more as they come! It's a great resource for finding out anything about Obama.

Anonymous (2008-07-15 12:21:00)

I truly believe Sen. Obama means well, but there are several flaws in his approach to Iraq and the overall world situation that exists.

The value of having a democratic country with influence in the Mid East is staggering to the future of the region. We must stay focused on the stability and the future of the conflict; to ensure it comes to the desired close. A stable democracy in the region. No doubt we have spent lives and resources to get this far. It accomplishes nothing to play the blame game. We as a country are in this situation and we must remain focused to bring it to an end that is worth our sacrifices.

We all know we need to increase our level of commitment in Afghanistan. The end of the Taliban and Al Qaeda is imperative. We should soberly assess our military strengths and make the necessary adjustments to achieve these goals. Including an increase of troops not only in that country but quite possibly an increase in our overall military posture as a country. Anything less will prove harmful if not fatal to our country's vitality.

Obama Addresses National Security Issues in DC (2008-07-15 10:21)

Ahead of a major address by Sen. Barack Obama on his policy on Iraq, Afghanistan and other national security issues, the campaign released a new TV ad highlighting the senator's work on stopping the smuggling of nuclear weapons. The ad titled "America's Leadership" will air in Alaska, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Virginia.

The selection of states for this ad might give some indication of which states the Obama campaign is targeting as battleground areas.

[EMBED]

Read the text of Barack's address "A Strategy for A New World" as prepared for delivery in Washington DC today.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Videos: NAACP and Security Address (2008-07-15 17:31)

Sen. Barack Obama addresses the NAACP Annual Conference in Cincinnati, Ohio during Youth Night.

If elected, Obama will become the first African American president on the 100th anniversary of the NAACP.

[EMBED]

Here's the video of Barack's speech on the Iraq War and national security in Washington DC today. He said:

I am running for President of the United States to lead this country in a new direction – to seize this moment's promise. Instead of being distracted from the most pressing threats that we face, I want to overcome them. Instead of pushing the entire burden of our foreign policy on to the brave men and women of our military, I want to use all elements of American power to keep us safe, and prosperous, and free. Instead of alienating ourselves from the world, I want America – once again – to lead.

As President, I will pursue a tough, smart and principled national security strategy – one that recognizes that we have interests not just in Baghdad, but in Kandahar and Karachi, in Tokyo and London, in Beijing and Berlin. I will focus this strategy on five goals essential to making America safer: ending the war in Iraq responsibly; finishing the fight against al Qaeda and the Taliban; securing all nuclear weapons and materials from terrorists and rogue states; achieving true energy security; and rebuilding our alliances to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

Clearly Iraq is the one issue that stand out so clearly as a difference between Barack Obama and John McCain.

[EMBED]

And's here a Flickr slideshow from the Washington talk:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-07-25 10:04:00)

It reminds me of Berlin in 1939 - except it was Hitler with the 'golden tongue' who captured the German people.

Backstage with Barack (2008-07-16 07:16)

Obama for America sent out this email today announcing that ten donors to the campaign will be selected for a backstage pass with Barack during the Democratic National Convention.

Each person selected will be allowed to bring one guest and will be provided transportation and two nights accommodation. They will meet privately with Barack prior to his historic acceptance speech before a crowd of 75,000 people. In order to qualify, you must donate in any amount before July 31.

 Friend -

 I'm out here in Denver, Colorado visiting the site of the Democratic National Convention, and there is excitement in the mountain air.

Folks are working hard on Barack's plan for a truly open convention. It will be a historic event, and you can be a part of it.

If you make a donation in any amount before midnight on July 31st, you could be selected to travel to Denver for the last two days of the convention, including the final event - Barack's acceptance of the Democratic nomination for President before 75,000 people.

Ten supporters will be selected from all over the country, and each will be able to bring one guest. We'll provide airfare, accommodations, and two days of convention activities - including a private meeting with Barack before his historic speech.

Our team shot a short video of the stadium to give you a sense of the event. Watch the video and make a donation of $25 today, and you could go Backstage with Barack:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/backstage>

Supporters like you are the reason this campaign has been possible. We are thrilled that some of you will be able to celebrate what you accomplished with us in Denver.

But we have a long way to go, and Barack can't do this without you.

Thanks,

Steve

Steve Hildebrand

Deputy Campaign Manager

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

LIVE: Barack talks security in West Lafayette (2008-07-16 08:48)

Sen. Barack Obama is getting ready for a live talk on nuclear proliferation, bioterrorism, cyber security and emerging national security threats.

You can watch the live webcast from West Lafayette, Indiana in the viewer below.

Recently, Obama has discussed national security issues quite a bit possibly in preparation for his overseas trip to Europe and the Middle East.

The Illinois senator will be joined in the video by Senators Evan Bayh and Sam Nunn, Dr. Graham Allison, an expert on nuclear non-proliferation, and a Professor and former Dean of the Kennedy School of Government, two renowned experts on bio security—Dr. Tara O’Toole, Center for Bio Security at the University of Pittsburgh, and Dr. David Relman, Stanford University Medical School—and two cyber security experts—Paul Kurtz, a former senior member on the National Security Council and Homeland Security Council, and Alan Wade, former Chief Information Officer for the CIA.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Organizing Fellows (2008-07-16 19:17)

[EMBED]

Obama Organizing Fellow Andy rides his bike to register new voters in Ohio. During the primary, Andy skipped his college graduation commencement ceremonies to help out the campaign in Indiana.

[EMBED]

Mr. Frank Watson, a 92-year-old Republican supporter of Barack and Gregory, an Organizing Fellow, talk about supporting the campaign in Denver, Colorado.

One way everybody can get involved is by taking part in shaping the Democratic Party Platform by participating in one of the 1,200 platform meetings in all 50 states from July 19 to July 27.

You still have time to host or attend a Platform Meeting in your community to help set the agenda for the Democratic Party and its presumptive presidential nominee, Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama doubles McCain fundraising in June (2008-07-17 07:02)

Obama Campaign Manager David Plouffe sent out this email today.

Barack Obama raised a very healthy $52 million in June easily surpassing John McCain on brought in $22 million. On the barackobama.com blog, it says that there is a mistake in the email and that the figure of $72 million cash on hand is for Obama for America only, and not the combined total with the DNC.

The DNC and Obama for America have a combined total of $92.3 cash on hand, so still behind the figure for the RNC and the McCain campaign, which is about $95 million. The DNC has been spending money at a much higher rate than the RNC.

Obviously though, if fundraising in the months to come is anything comparable to what happened in June, the Democrats will easily overtake the Republicans in cash.

Paul –

X We have some big news we want to share with you.

Because of your generosity and commitment, we're reporting to the press today that this campaign is in a very strong financial position.

In the month of June, supporters like you helped raise $52 million.

But more impressive than the number is how you did it. Hundreds of thousands of ordinary people contributed to building our campaign for change. Many were first-time donors, giving only what they could afford – and the average donation was just $68.

You continue to prove what ordinary Americans committed to change can accomplish, despite the Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs funding so much of our opponents' campaign.

But we can't stop now.

It's going to take everything we've got to defeat John McCain and the Republican National Committee in November. And we can't do it without your continued support.

Can you make a donation of $25 now to strengthen our movement for change?

<https://donate.barackobama.com/junenumbers>

I also wanted to share with you another promising piece of news.

The Obama campaign and the DNC ended June with a combined total of nearly $72 million in the bank. It's a healthy number. But McCain and the RNC together still have a huge cash advantage, and we need your help to close the gap.

As I mentioned in my video message to you earlier in the week, we're facing a Republican machine with unprecedented resources at its disposal. The McCain campaign and the Republican National Committee finished June with nearly $100 million in the bank.

Our campaign does not accept donations from Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs, and neither does the Democratic National Committee. But John McCain and the RNC have no such standards. Along with the vast amounts of unregulated money being raised by shadowy outside groups, there's no telling how much they'll spend running attack ads.

We must work together and fight back against their efforts.

Please make a donation of $25 now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/junenumbers>

I know this isn't the first time we've asked you for money, and it won't be the last.

We have developed a strategy – a very aggressive strategy – that will only work if our millions of supporters continue to contribute their time and their money.

We are now on the air with TV ads in 18 states – including 14 that George W. Bush carried in the 2004 election. And in each one we're also building extensive grassroots field organizations.

It's all part of our strategy to spread Barack's positive message and compete in all 50 states.

That strategy will work, and it has to. The stakes are too high and the need for change too great. We are thrilled to be on this journey with you and thank you for all you have done so far. But victory is only possible with your continued help.

Please give $25 now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/junenumbers>

We can't do this without you.

Thanks,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack endorses Al Gore's Plan (2008-07-17 14:32)

Barack Obama responded today to Al Gore's speech at Constitution Hall in Washington DC, where Gore called for a zero-carbon America by 2018.

For decades, Al Gore has challenged the skeptics in Washington on climate change and awakened the conscience of a nation to the urgency of this threat. I strongly agree with Vice President Gore that we cannot drill our way to energy independence, but must fast-track investments in renewable sources of energy like solar power, wind power and advanced biofuels, and those are the investments I will make as President. It's a strategy that will create millions of new jobs that pay well and cannot be outsourced, and one that will leave our children a world that is cleaner and safer.

Gore's vision is not far-fetched technically; politics is the main hurdle particularly the resistance that would be encountered from the oil and other polluting energy industries. It could take ten years, the time between now and 2018, just to get legislation passed that would begin such a process. Unless, of course, the equation changes in Washington with more like-minded legislators coming into office.

The former vice president mentioned that the price of silicon, used to make solar energy cells, is coming down fast and no one doubts that with increased demand that prices will plummet further. The same thing happened in the computer industry.

"To those who say the challenge is not politically viable: I suggest they go before the American people and try to defend the status quo. Then bear witness to the people's appetite for change," Gore said. "Some of our greatest accomplishments as a nation have resulted from commitments to reach a goal that fell well beyond the next election: the Marshall Plan, Social Security, the interstate highway system."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Voices from Fairfax, Virginia (2008-07-18 09:21)

In the following video, audience members give their thoughts on Sen. Barack Obama's talk on women's empowerment in Fairfax, Virginia.

[EMBED]

Where Barack Stands

"From the first moment a woman dared to speak that hope - dared to believe that the American Dream was meant for her too - ordinary women have taken on extraordinary odds to give their daughters the chance for something else; for a life more equal, more free, and filled with more opportunity than they ever had. In so many ways we have succeeded, but in so many areas we have much work left to do."

Barack Obama, Speech in Washington, DC, 11/10/05

For more info on where Barack stands, visit his page on women's issues.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New Campaign Office Opens in Denver (2008-07-18 15:08)

Here's video of an Obama campaign office opening in Denver, Colorado.

Colorado is one of the more important battleground states that Obama and McCain will be vying for.

[EMBED]

A poll today suggests that Barack Obama supporters are much more enthusiastic than those of John McCain. An Associated Press/Yahoo News poll shows that 38 % of Obama's supporters say the election is exciting compared with only 9 % of McCain's.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama tours Afghanistan war zone (2008-07-19 09:35)

Sen. Barack Obama visited Kuwait and Afghanistan as part of an official congressional delegation and kicking off his tour of foreign countries.

Obama hopes to visit Jalalabad airfield, if the weather permits, and he will meet with President Hamid Karzai during his stay in Afghanistan.

The Illinois senator is traveling with Sens. Chuck Hagel , a Nebraska Republican and Jack Reed , a Democrat from Rhode Island, both of whom are war veterans.

"This is a war that we have to win," he said. "I will send at least two additional combat brigades to Afghanistan, and use this commitment to seek greater contributions — with fewer restrictions — from NATO allies. I will focus on training Afghan security forces and supporting an Afghan judiciary, with more resources and incentives for American officers who perform these missions," Obama said in a speech earlier this week. He is also expected to visit Jordan, Israel , Germany, France and the United Kingdom, traveling on a jet chartered by his presidential campaign, before returning to the United States.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Susan Rice on Iraqi PM Maliki's Support for Obama Plan (2008-07-19 13:37)

From barackobama.com :

Statement from Obama Campaign's Dr. Susan Rice in Response to PM Maliki's Support for Senator Obama's Iraq Plan
by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Saturday, July 19, 2008 at 10:47 AM

Below is a statement from Obama Campaign Senior National Security Advisor, Dr. Susan Rice, in response to Prime Minister Maliki's support for Senator Obama's Iraq plan...

Senator Obama welcomes Prime Minister Maliki's support for a 16 month timeline for the redeployment of U.S combat brigades. This presents an important opportunity to transition to Iraqi responsibility, while restoring our military and increasing our commitment to finish the fight in Afghanistan.

Read the Der Spiegel article: Iraq Leader Maliki Supports Obama's Withdrawal Plans

In an interview with SPIEGEL, Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki said Barack Obama "is right when he talks about 16 months." It is time, he said, for an official timetable.

Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki supports US presidential candidate Barack Obama's plan to withdraw US troops from Iraq within 16 months. When asked in an interview with SPIEGEL when he thinks US troops should leave Iraq, Maliki responded "as soon as possible, as far as we are concerned." He then continued: "US presidential candidate Barack Obama is right when he talks about 16 months."

Maliki was careful to back away from outright support for Obama. "Of course, this is by no means an election endorsement. Who they choose as their president is the Americans' business," he said. But then, apparently referring to Republican candidate John McCain's more open-ended Iraq policy, Maliki said: "Those who operate on the premise of short time periods in Iraq today are being more realistic. Artificially prolonging the tenure of US troops in Iraq would cause problems."

Iraq, Maliki went on to say, "would like to see the establishment of a long-term strategic treaty with the United States, which would govern the basic aspects of our economic and cultural relations." He also emphasized though that the security agreement between the two countries should only "remain in effect in the short term."

The comments by the Iraqi leader come as Obama embarks on a trip to both Afghanistan and Iraq as well as to Europe. Obama was in Afghanistan on Saturday to, as he said prior to his trip, "see what the situation on the ground is . and thank our troops for the heroic work that they've been doing." The exact itinerary of the candidate's trip has not been made public out of security concerns, but it is widely expected that he will arrive in Iraq on Sunday to meet with Maliki.

Maliki has long shown impatience with the open-ended presence of US troops in Iraq. In his conversation with SPIEGEL, he was once again candid about his frustration over the Bush administration's hesitancy about agreeing to a timetable for the withdrawal of US troops. But he did say he was optimistic that such a schedule would be drawn up before Bush leaves the White House next January – a confidence that appeared justified following Friday's joint announcement in Baghdad and Washington that Bush has now, for the first time, spoken of "a general time horizon" for moving US troops out of Iraq.

"So far the Americans have had trouble agreeing to a concrete timetable for withdrawal, because they feel it would appear tantamount to an admission of defeat," Maliki told SPIEGEL. "But that isn't the case at all. If we come to an agreement, it is not evidence of a defeat, but of a victory, of a severe blow we have inflicted on al-Qaida and the militias."

He also bemoaned the fact that Baghdad has little control over the US troops in Iraq. "It is a fundamental problem for us that it should not be possible, in my country, to prosecute offences or crimes committed by US soldiers against our population," Maliki said.

cgh/SPIEGEL

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Google-My-Brain (2008-07-20 13:37:00)

Say what you want but Obama has something that McCain doesn't. That is character - relaxed and very intelligible speeches unlike McCain. McCain overall sound too scripted and forced. Top of that, he sound childish.

20 field offices open in Virginia (2008-07-20 10:11)

One can tell a lot about the Obama campaign's focus on battleground states by observing the buildup of resources in each of these states.

In Virginia, the campaign has opened 20 new field offices, a clear sign of how important that state will be in the general election. There will be much work on voter registration and volunteer recruitment leading up to the official start of the campaign after the Democratic Convention in Denver.

Here is a Flickr slide-show of the office-opening events in Virginia.

[EMBED]

The ground campaign will work in concert with online efforts, and Barack Obama addressed the Netroots Nation gathering in Texas last week.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama meets with Afghan President Karzai (2008-07-20 16:09)

AFP/HO Photo: Afghan President Hamid Karzai (left) walks with US Democratic Presidential contender Barack Obama in Kabul. Obama met with Afghan Karzai, who has been criticised by the Illinois senator for not doing enough to rebuild his war-torn country.(AFP/HO/HO)

Sen. Barack Obama met today with Afghanistan's President Hamid Karzai in Kabul as he continues his overseas tour. In a joint statement, Obama together with Sens. Chuck Hagel and Jack Reed said: ""Our message to the Afghan government is this: We want a strong partnership based on 'more for more' — more resources from the United States and NATO , and more action from the Afghan government to improve the lives of the Afghan people. We need a sense of urgency and determination."

Fighting has escalated in Afghanistan as the Taliban and al-Qaeda continue to regroup in the country particularly near the Pakistani border. Some experts believe resources diverted toward the "surge" in Iraq have prevented the international force from adequately dealing with the threat in Afghanistan.

The Afghan government operates as under siege and in many ways it is with the countryside largely controlled by insurgents.

Attacks in eastern Afghanistan are up 40 percent from the same time last year.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

League of Conservation Voters to back Barack Obama (2008-07-21 08:19)

The League of Conservation Voters will endorse Sen. Barack Obama for president according to a statement released by the group today.

On its environmental issues scorecard, the group gave Obama a score of 67 compared to zero for John McCain.

"When you look specifically at the twin challenges of cutting global warming pollution and moving toward a clean energy future, on those issues Barack Obama has the most comprehensive plan we have ever seen for a presidential nominee," said league president Gene Karpinski.

Two other major environmental groups, Friends of the Earth and the Sierra Club, endorsed Obama earlier this year.

Read more about Barack Obama's plan for the environment and energy.

[EMBED]

Obama volunteers in Florida.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Iraqi Leaders back Obama Plan w/o timetables (2008-07-21 14:38)

Sen. Barack Obama got a lift again today when Iraqi leaders apparently endorsed his plan for a U.S. troop withdrawal, but stopping short of supporting actual timetables.

Obama has promised to withdraw troops in about 16 months from taking office on a schedule of about two brigades a month.

The Iraqi response to Obama's overtures have angered both John McCain and the White House. "When you win wars, troops come home," said McCain, while visiting with former President George H. Bush.

The obvious retort to McCain is what he means by "win." Is the "surge" bringing us closer to 'winning?'

Obama's position has been that the Iraq War is draining resources needed to fight al-Qaeda in its home base of Afghanistan. Before the U.S. invasion of Iraq, al-Qaeda had no appreciable presence in Iraq. Since the war, the organization has been able to open a second major front of operations.

X

Mon Jul 21, 3:27 PM ET

AFP graphic showing official and stops during Obama's international tour. Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama is in Iraq for talks with local leaders and US commanders, after pledging to pull out US troops in 16 months if he takes over the White House next year. Some of Obama's flights are sponsored by the Obama for American campaign.

(AFP Graphic via Yahoo News)

X

Mon Jul 21, 2:23 PM ET

U.S. Commander in Iraq General David Petraeus (C) shares a laugh with visiting U.S. Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama (L) and U.S. senator Chuck Hagel during an aerial tour of Baghdad upon their arrival in Iraq July 21, 2008. REUTERS/SSG Lorie Jewell/US Army/Handout via Yahoo News.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Truth First (2008-07-21 22:50:00)

TF: During the past eight years we've seen the United States conduct a rather hostile foreign policy towards much of the world. America has attacked two Middle Eastern nations, resulting in many deaths, torture and the imprisonment of innocents. As President what can you do to correct these wrongs?

Senator Obama: As I have said from the beginning it was a mistake to go into Iraq for the reasons you cited. America has lost respect and does not have the credibility it had prior to the current administration. I intend to pull American forces out from Iraq as soon as we can. That's the first thing. What America has failed to do is seek justice. The current policy is more like a quest for vengeance, it is counter-productive. It has not made us safer.

We have to work with other nations instead of alienating them, we have common interests and we have to respect them and we have to learn how to work with other nations. We cannot be sloppy and cut corners. The Bush administration has been undermining the virtues of America that will I plan to lead America by.

TF: So you will stop the imprisonments?

Senator Obama: The Supreme Court has ruled that what the current administration is doing is illegal. It is a shameful chapter in American history when people are picked up in battle and imprisoned without access to legal representation. This has not happened before in American history. I intend to restore respect for the law and for human rights. That should always be the end-goal in all U.S. policy especially with foreign policy. We have to show our best, not our worst characteristics.

TF: Senator Obama, the people of Iran are understandably concerned that their nation may come under attack. What can be done between now and January to prevent another unnecessary conflict?

Senator Obama: We must continue to remind the current administration that war is not the solution here. Iran has not attacked us and Iran is not going to attack us. They have every right to develop nuclear power if that is their wish and removing American forces from Iraq would relieve tensions considerably.

We must not be afraid of diplomacy, not just with Iran but with Syria, the Saudis, Jordan, the United Nations Security Council program members as well. Once it is clear that we're not planning to stay in Iraq for 10, 20 years, all these nations will have an interest in working out how we can best stabilize the situation.

Anonymous (2008-07-22 20:07:00)

"Obama has promised to withdraw troops in about 16 months from taking office..." It's not 16 months, it's 7 year 2 months since the war started that Obama has promised to withdraw troops from Iraq. Isn't over 7 years and tons of billions of dollars enough time and money for the Iraq's to figure out it's up to themselves if they want a free Iraq?

Clearly, Barack Obama Is a Muslim (2008-07-21 21:21)

About Barack Obama

Read the Article at HuffingtonPost

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Wheels down in Amman, Jordan (Obama Road Blog) (2008-07-22 09:05)

From barackobama.com :

Road Blog: Wheels down in Amman, Jordan

by Obama Road Blog,

Monday, July 21, 2008 at 05:45 PM

Yesterday, Senator Obama's traveling staff and press corps took a ride on the recently refurbished and repainted campaign plane. This vessel has been home to the many of us who travel full time with the Senator and we welcomed it back with open arms.

The plane's first voyage was a particularly auspicious one. We flew to Jordan to meet up with Barack Obama, who is stopping in Amman following a fact-finding tour of Afghanistan and Iraq. He will hold a press conference tomorrow with Senator's Reed (D-RI) and Hagel (R-NE) to discuss his trip thus far. Barack will also be making stops in Israel, Germany, France, and England before returning home.

We caught up with Senior Foreign Policy Advisor, Richard Danzig, on the plane ride over to Jordan. He was equally excited about the trip: "This a great opportunity for Senator Obama to meet leaders who he will be working with, should Barack become President of the United States, as I hope and expect." Richard reminded us that these one-on-one meetings on the ground provide a more human element than is otherwise possible, and provide a deeper understanding of populations around the globe. Enjoy these pictures of this first voyage on the new plane.

Arun Chaudhary

July 21, 2008

Amman, Jordan

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Why the Math favors Obama (2008-07-22 13:48)

If you look at the voter turnout rates during the primary, then anything close to a repetition of that performance should give the Democrats a landslide victory in November.

Not only did Democrats turn out in much larger numbers overall, but in most of the key swing states they also easily outdid the Republicans.

Of course, the caveat here is that the people who turned out for Hillary Clinton, John Edwards and the other candidates also turn out for Barack Obama in the fall.

In most cases this is probably not a problem, however Hillary Clinton's campaign is a bit different. As the first viable woman presidential candidate, Hillary probably attracted a lot of people to vote in Democratic primaries who might not have done so otherwise.

Some of these women may have voted for Hillary in open primaries, or may have switched to Democrat just to vote for Sen. Clinton. So, these are not necessarily loyal Democrats.

The obvious way to attract this voting segment would be for Obama to select a woman running mate. While John McCain could counter by selecting a woman vice president of his own, I think overall this would play better for Democrats. There are a lot more "old-fashioned" conservatives in the Republican Party who might be less enthusiastic about a woman vice president.

Now, some might think a woman running with Obama is too much. The first black man and the first woman on the same ticket? However, for those inclined to vote for Obama, it would seem unlikely they would not vote for him just because he does not have a white male running mate. If you're open-minded about a black candidate, you're less likely to be close-minded about a woman candidate.

Now it may be that the woman on the ticket should be seen as a strong, earthy type to balance the airy Camelot atmosphere that surrounds Barack. Someone with plenty of foreign policy experience, and experience in general.

[EMBED]

Burma shave signs for Obama in Iowa.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Supporting Barack (2008-07-22 19:46)

MyBarackObama.com volunteers at the Netroot Nations event talk about their volunteer experience.

[EMBED]

Protesters in Warren, Michigan at an invitation-only "town hall meeting" in the GM Tech Center for Sen. John McCain.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Europeans fired up and ready for Obama (2008-07-23 06:49)

Obamamania is reportedly alive and well in Europe. It's a touchy subject among some Barack Obama supporters who believe that there is suspicion among certain segments of American voters over an American leader who is popular abroad.

Polls show that Obama is the overwhelming favorite among U.S. presidential candidates among Germans, French and British.

Obama's first stop will be at one of Berlin's most famous landmarks, the Victory Column, on Thursday. The German news magazine Der Spiegel splashed the headline "Germany meets the superstar" over a photo of Obama on its cover this week.

The Illinois senator's call for a "Marshall Plan" to alleviate world poverty has sentimental value in this part of the world that America helped rebuild after World War II.

Obama is also seen as a type of "anti-Bush," on a continent where the current U.S. president is far from popular. Josef Braml, an America expert with the German Council on Foreign Relations, says simply about Europe's passion for Obama: "He's not Bush."

But most believe that European admiration for Obama goes deeper and that his message of change and unity rings a bell with most people in the region.

Reuters

Berlin wonders about Obama visit

Report

Jul 09, 2008

Barack Obama's campaign unveiled a sparkling makeover for his chartered plane, seen here, ahead of the presumptive Democratic nominee's high-profile tour of the Middle East and Europe (AFP)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Road Trip: Scenes from the Middle East (2008-07-23 10:46)

Check out this Flickr slideshow from Jordan.

Jordan's King Abdullah personally drove Sen. Obama to the airport in his Mercedes with Barack riding shotgun.

[EMBED]

From Jordan, Barack and his entourage flew to Jerusalem where he visited the Yad Vashem Museum. Obama staffer Arun Chaudhary relayed the note left by the senator in the museum's guestbook:

I am grateful to Yad Vashem and all of those responsible for this remarkable institution.

At a time of great peril and promise, war and strife, we are blessed to have such a powerful reminder of man's potential for great evil, but also our capacity to rise from tragedy and remake our world. Let our children come here, and know this history, so they can add their voices to proclaim "never again". And may we remember those who perished, not only as victims but also as individuals who hoped and loved and dreamed like us, and who have become symbols of the human spirit.

Here's a video of Barack's remarks after the tour of the museum.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Forces Flip-Flops to Paralyze McCain (2008-07-23 16:11)

About Barack Obama

Read the Article at HuffingtonPost

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

LIVE: Barack Obama speaking in Berlin (2008-07-24 10:34)

As I write this, Barack Obama is talking live in Berlin. You may be able to catch it at this webpage:

<http://www.barackobama.com/live/>

CNN is also carrying the speech live.

Earlier in the morning, Obama met with Chancellor Angela Merkel at the German Chancellery. Here's a Flickr slide show from barackobama.com:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-07-25 10:06:00)

It reminds me of Berlin in 1939 when another man with a 'golden tongue' won over the German people. Beware of cult leaders.

(2008-07-24 10:43)

Let's Talk

by Michelle Obama

Hi everybody,

I'm excited to be posting on BlogHer. Not only because blogging is something I've actually been able to beat my daughters to; but because it gives me the opportunity to tell you a little bit about them, my husband, myself, and our experiences traveling all over this great country.

Over the course of this campaign, I've been hosting roundtable discussions with working women all across America. I'm there to talk about my husband, of course – but more importantly, I'm there to listen. We talk about what it's like to play multiple roles at once and what it's like to feel stretched thin between the demands of a career and family.

And of course, we talk about our children. How they're the first thing we think about when we wake up in the morning, and the last thing we think about when we go to bed at night. I know that no matter where I am – work, the campaign trail, wherever – my girls are always on my mind.

What I find is that our stories are similar. But what I also hear at each roundtable is that women are struggling. They are working hard and playing by the rules, doing the most important job of raising the next generation, but somehow can never get ahead. They're desperate for change.

I've heard from mothers struggling to make ends meet because their salaries aren't keeping up with the cost of groceries. But if they take a second job, they can't afford the additional cost of childcare. Or the moms who are nervous about taking time from their jobs to care for a sick child. Or the moms-to-be who are scared of getting fired if the boss finds out they're pregnant.

Then there are women who work hard every day doing the same jobs as men, but earning less. And the military families, who struggle to make ends meet with one paycheck where there used to be two. They welcome their loved ones home with full hearts but little support from their government for their service.

I hear similar stories everywhere I go. These struggles – the struggles of working women and families across America – aren't new to me or to any of us. And they're certainly not new to Barack.

He was raised by two strong, working women – his mother and his grandmother. Growing up, he saw his single mother put herself through school while raising him and his sister alone. She was determined to show them that in America, there are no barriers to success if you're willing to work for it. But he also saw her struggle to make ends meet, at times worrying about how she would pay the bills.

He saw his grandmother, the primary breadwinner for his family, work her way up at a bank. But he also saw how, once she got to a certain level, she hit a glass ceiling despite her hard work and abilities. He saw that she was passed over and underpaid, a problem that persists today for too many women.

And he sees me, his wife, trying to juggle jobs and raise kids; often feeling like when I'm with the kids, I'm shortchanging work, and when I'm at work or campaigning, I'm shortchanging the kids. I know you understand these struggles. Barack understands them too.

That's why he's worked to give families the tools they need to make a better life for their kids for over twenty years – from his years in Chicago working with a group of churches to help families devastated when local steel plants shut down; to the Illinois State Senate, where he worked to move families from welfare to work and expand early childhood education and child health care; to his fights in the U.S. Senate for equal pay and a fair economy.

As President, he'll continue these fights. And he'll build an economy that rewards work over wealth, ensures a world-class education, and creates quality, affordable health care for everyone who wants it.

He'll do all this because he's determined to change Washington so that instead of just talking about family values, we actually have policies that value families. Policies that actually make it easier for women to support, care for, and raise their families without having to choose between their kids and their careers.

I'll be honest – when Barack first told me he was thinking about running for President, I had mixed feelings. I worried about my girls and what a campaign might do to their lives. I wanted the best life possible for them, and a presidential campaign wasn't part of that equation.

But then I thought about it. And the world I want for them is a world where they're paid fairly and equally for their work; where they don't have to choose between kids and careers; where they can dream without limits without a glass ceiling standing in their way. And I realized that if that's the world I want for them, then I had to do my part to elect someone like my husband.

We all need to do our part to keep women's issues at the forefront of the national debate. That's why communities like BlogHer are so important. It's not just a forum or sounding board; it's an energetic space that lets women know they're not alone. It's our own national virtual roundtable. But we need to take these online conversations offline as well. I'll do my part, and so will Barack. But we need you all too.

Thanks for allowing me to post here. I plan to continue blogging – and listening.

200,000 view Obama Speech in Berlin (2008-07-24 12:18)

European media is estimating that a crowd of 200,000 showed up for Sen. Barack Obama's speech near the Victory Gate (Siegessäule). This makes it easily the largest public gathering ever for the Illinois senator. In comparison, his crowd at the Oregon rally and the expected attendance at his acceptance of the Democratic nomination in Denver are in the 70,000 ballpark.

Thu Jul 24, 1:31 PM ET

U.S. Democratic presidential candidate Senator Barack Obama waves to the gathered crowd as he arrives to make a speech in front of the Victory Column (Siegessäule) in Berlin July 24, 2008. Obama on Thursday will give his only formal address of a week-long foreign tour. REUTERS/Tobias Schwarz

(GERMANY) US PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN 2008 Here is the text of the speech as prepared for delivery:

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama (as prepared for delivery)
"A World that Stands as One"

July 24th, 2008

Berlin, Germany

Thank you to the citizens of Berlin and to the people of Germany. Let me thank Chancellor Merkel and Foreign Minister Steinmeier for welcoming me earlier today. Thank you Mayor Wowereit, the Berlin Senate, the police, and most of all thank you for this welcome.

I come to Berlin as so many of my countrymen have come before. Tonight, I speak to you not as a candidate for President, but as a citizen – a proud citizen of the United States, and a fellow citizen of the world.

I know that I don't look like the Americans who've previously spoken in this great city. The journey that led me here is improbable. My mother was born in the heartland of America, but my father grew up herding goats in Kenya. His father – my grandfather – was a cook, a domestic servant to the British.

At the height of the Cold War, my father decided, like so many others in the forgotten corners of the world, that his yearning – his dream – required the freedom and opportunity promised by the West. And so he wrote letter after letter to universities all across America until somebody, somewhere answered his prayer for a better life.

That is why I'm here. And you are here because you too know that yearning. This city, of all cities, knows the dream of freedom. And you know that the only reason we stand here tonight is because men and women from both of our nations came together to work, and struggle, and sacrifice for that better life.

Ours is a partnership that truly began sixty years ago this summer, on the day when the first American plane touched down at Tempelhof.

On that day, much of this continent still lay in ruin. The rubble of this city had yet to be built into a wall. The Soviet shadow had swept across Eastern Europe, while in the West, America, Britain, and France took stock of their losses, and pondered how the world might be remade.

This is where the two sides met. And on the twenty-fourth of June, 1948, the Communists chose to blockade the western part of the city. They cut off food and supplies to more than two million Germans in an effort to extinguish the last flame of freedom in Berlin.

The size of our forces was no match for the much larger Soviet Army. And yet retreat would have allowed Communism to march across Europe. Where the last war had ended, another World War could have easily begun. All that stood in the way was Berlin.

And that's when the airlift began – when the largest and most unlikely rescue in history brought food and hope to the people of this city.

The odds were stacked against success. In the winter, a heavy fog filled the sky above, and many planes were forced to turn back without dropping off the needed supplies. The streets where we stand were filled with hungry families who had no comfort from the cold.

But in the darkest hours, the people of Berlin kept the flame of hope burning. The people of Berlin refused to give up. And on one fall day, hundreds of thousands of Berliners came here, to the Tiergarten, and heard the city's mayor implore the world not to give up on freedom. "There is only one possibility," he said. "For us to stand together united until this battle is won...The people of Berlin have spoken. We have done our duty, and we will keep on doing our duty. People of the world: now do your duty...People of the world, look at Berlin!"

People of the world – look at Berlin!

Look at Berlin, where Germans and Americans learned to work together and trust each other less than three years after facing each other on the field of battle.

Look at Berlin, where the determination of a people met the generosity of the Marshall Plan and created a German miracle; where a victory over tyranny gave rise to NATO, the greatest alliance ever formed to defend our common security.

Look at Berlin, where the bullet holes in the buildings and the somber stones and pillars near the Brandenburg Gate insist that we never forget our common humanity.

People of the world – look at Berlin, where a wall came down, a continent came together, and history proved that there is no challenge too great for a world that stands as one.

Sixty years after the airlift, we are called upon again. History has led us to a new crossroad, with new promise and new peril. When you, the German people, tore down that wall – a wall that divided East and West; freedom and tyranny; fear and hope – walls came tumbling down around the world. From Kiev to Cape Town, prison camps were closed, and the doors of democracy were opened. Markets opened too, and the spread of information and technology reduced barriers to opportunity and prosperity. While the 20th century taught us that we share a common destiny, the 21st has revealed a world more intertwined than at any time in human history.

The fall of the Berlin Wall brought new hope. But that very closeness has given rise to new dangers – dangers that cannot be contained within the borders of a country or by the distance of an ocean.

The terrorists of September 11th plotted in Hamburg and trained in Kandahar and Karachi before killing thousands from all over the globe on American soil.

As we speak, cars in Boston and factories in Beijing are melting the ice caps in the Arctic, shrinking coastlines in the Atlantic, and bringing drought to farms from Kansas to Kenya.

Poorly secured nuclear material in the former Soviet Union, or secrets from a scientist in Pakistan could help build a bomb that detonates in Paris. The poppies in Afghanistan become the heroin in Berlin. The poverty and violence in Somalia breeds the terror of tomorrow. The genocide in Darfur shames the conscience of us all.

In this new world, such dangerous currents have swept along faster than our efforts to contain them. That is why we cannot afford to be divided. No one nation, no matter how large or powerful, can defeat such challenges alone. None of us can deny these threats, or escape responsibility in meeting them. Yet, in the absence of Soviet tanks and a terrible wall, it has become easy to forget this truth. And if we're honest with each other, we know that sometimes, on both sides of the Atlantic, we have drifted apart, and forgotten our shared destiny.

In Europe, the view that America is part of what has gone wrong in our world, rather than a force to help make it right, has become all too common. In America, there are voices that deride and deny the importance of Europe's role in our security and our future. Both views miss the truth – that Europeans today are bearing new burdens and taking more responsibility in critical parts of the world; and that just as American bases built in the last century still help to defend the security of this continent, so does our country still sacrifice greatly for freedom around the globe.

Yes, there have been differences between America and Europe. No doubt, there will be differences in the future. But the burdens of global citizenship continue to bind us together. A change of leadership in Washington will not lift this burden. In this new century, Americans and Europeans alike will be required to do more – not less. Partnership and cooperation among nations is not a choice; it is the one way, the only way, to protect our common security and advance our common humanity.

That is why the greatest danger of all is to allow new walls to divide us from one another.

The walls between old allies on either side of the Atlantic cannot stand. The walls between the countries with the most and those with the least cannot stand. The walls between races and tribes; natives and immigrants; Christian and Muslim and Jew cannot stand. These now are the walls we must tear down.

We know they have fallen before. After centuries of strife, the people of Europe have formed a Union of promise and prosperity. Here, at the base of a column built to mark victory in war, we meet in the center of a Europe at peace. Not only have walls come down in Berlin, but they have come down in Belfast, where Protestant and Catholic found a way to live together; in the Balkans, where our Atlantic alliance ended wars and brought savage war criminals to justice; and in South Africa, where the struggle of a courageous people defeated apartheid.

So history reminds us that walls can be torn down. But the task is never easy. True partnership and true progress requires constant work and sustained sacrifice. They require sharing the burdens of development and diplomacy; of progress and peace. They require allies who will listen to each other, learn from each other and, most of all, trust each other.

That is why America cannot turn inward. That is why Europe cannot turn inward. America has no better partner than Europe. Now is the time to build new bridges across the globe as strong as the one that bound us across the Atlantic. Now is the time to join together, through constant cooperation, strong institutions, shared sacrifice, and a global commitment to progress, to meet the challenges of the 21st century. It was this spirit that led airlift planes to appear in the sky above our heads, and people to assemble where we stand today. And this is the moment when our nations – and all nations – must summon that spirit anew.

This is the moment when we must defeat terror and dry up the well of extremism that supports it. This threat is real and we cannot shrink from our responsibility to combat it. If we could create NATO to face down the Soviet Union, we can join in a new and global partnership to dismantle the networks that have struck in Madrid and Amman; in London and Bali; in Washington and New York. If we could win a battle of ideas against the communists, we can stand with the vast majority of Muslims who reject the extremism that leads to hate instead of hope.

This is the moment when we must renew our resolve to rout the terrorists who threaten our security in Afghanistan, and the traffickers who sell drugs on your streets. No one welcomes war. I recognize the enormous difficulties in Afghanistan. But my country and yours have a stake in seeing that NATO's first mission beyond Europe's borders is a success. For the people of Afghanistan, and for our shared security, the work must be done. America cannot do this alone. The Afghan people need our troops and your troops; our support and your support to defeat the Taliban and al Qaeda, to develop their economy, and to help them rebuild their nation. We have too much at stake to turn back now.

This is the moment when we must renew the goal of a world without nuclear weapons. The two superpowers that faced each other across the wall of this city came too close too often to destroying all we have built and all that we love. With that wall gone, we need not stand idly by and watch the further spread of the deadly atom. It is time to secure all loose nuclear materials; to stop the spread of nuclear weapons; and to reduce the arsenals from another era. This is the moment to begin the work of seeking the peace of a world without nuclear weapons.

This is the moment when every nation in Europe must have the chance to choose its own tomorrow free from the shadows of yesterday. In this century, we need a strong European Union that deepens the security and prosperity of this continent, while extending a hand abroad. In this century – in this city of all cities – we must reject the Cold War mind-set of the past, and resolve to work with Russia when we can, to stand up for our values when we must, and to seek a partnership that extends across this entire continent.

This is the moment when we must build on the wealth that open markets have created, and share its benefits more equitably. Trade has been a cornerstone of our growth and global development. But we will not be able to sustain this growth if it favors the few, and not the many. Together, we must forge trade that truly rewards the work that creates wealth, with meaningful protections for our people and our planet. This is the moment for trade that is free and fair for all.

This is the moment we must help answer the call for a new dawn in the Middle East. My country must stand with yours and with Europe in sending a direct message to Iran that it must abandon its nuclear ambitions. We must support the Lebanese who have marched and bled for democracy, and the Israelis and Palestinians who seek a secure and lasting peace. And despite past differences, this is the moment when the world should support the millions of Iraqis who seek to rebuild their lives, even as we pass responsibility to the Iraqi government and finally bring this war to a close.

This is the moment when we must come together to save this planet. Let us resolve that we will not leave our children a world where the oceans rise and famine spreads and terrible storms devastate our lands. Let us resolve that all nations – including my own – will act with the same seriousness of purpose as has your nation, and reduce the carbon we send into our atmosphere. This is the moment to give our children back their future. This is the moment to stand as one.

And this is the moment when we must give hope to those left behind in a globalized world. We must remember that the Cold War born in this city was not a battle for land or treasure. Sixty years ago, the planes that flew over Berlin did not drop bombs; instead they delivered food, and coal, and candy to grateful children. And in that show of solidarity, those pilots won more than a military victory. They won hearts and minds; love and loyalty and trust – not just from the people in this city, but from all those who heard the story of what they did here.

Now the world will watch and remember what we do here – what we do with this moment. Will we extend our hand to the people in the forgotten corners of this world who yearn for lives marked by dignity and opportunity; by security and justice? Will we lift the child in Bangladesh from poverty, shelter the refugee in Chad, and banish the scourge of AIDS in our time?

Will we stand for the human rights of the dissident in Burma, the blogger in Iran, or the voter in Zimbabwe? Will we give meaning to the words “never again” in Darfur?

Will we acknowledge that there is no more powerful example than the one each of our nations projects to the world? Will we reject torture and stand for the rule of law? Will we welcome immigrants from different lands, and shun discrimination against those who don’t look like us or worship like we do, and keep the promise of equality and opportunity for all of our people?

People of Berlin – people of the world – this is our moment. This is our time.

I know my country has not perfected itself. At times, we’ve struggled to keep the promise of liberty and equality for all of our people. We’ve made our share of mistakes, and there are times when our actions around the world have not lived up to our best intentions.

But I also know how much I love America. I know that for more than two centuries, we have strived – at great cost and great sacrifice – to form a more perfect union; to seek, with other nations, a more hopeful world. Our allegiance has never been to any particular tribe or kingdom – indeed, every language is spoken in our country; every culture has left its imprint on ours; every point of view is expressed in our public squares. What has always united us – what has always driven our people; what drew my father to America’s shores – is a set of ideals that speak to aspirations shared by all people: that we can live free from fear and free from want; that we can speak our minds and assemble with whomever we choose and worship as we please.

These are the aspirations that joined the fates of all nations in this city. These aspirations are bigger than anything that drives us apart. It is because of these aspirations that the airlift began. It is because of these aspirations that all free people – everywhere – became citizens of Berlin. It is in pursuit of these aspirations that a new generation – our generation – must make our mark on the world.

People of Berlin – and people of the world – the scale of our challenge is great. The road ahead will be long. But I come before you to say that we are heirs to a struggle for freedom. We are a people of improbable hope. With an eye toward the future, with resolve in our hearts, let us remember this history, and answer our destiny, and remake the world once again.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

tanker (2008-07-24 13:32:00)

There was a concert befor obama got there! That’s why there were so many germans there. I lived in germany and they were not there to see him. What a joke. I was noot going to vote this year but I have to vote for McCain. obama is such a looser!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Sanjay (2008-07-24 18:09:00)

This was a great speech!

Even conservatives agree, I went on a conservative blog, and they praised him

<http://stockparadise.blogspot.com/2008/07/debreif-obamas-speech.html>

Obama Bounce? (2008-07-25 07:44)

Fox News released a poll yesterday suggesting that Barack Obama got no bounce from his overseas road trip. It seems a little early to me to be taking such a survey in the first place. Usually takes a few days to several days for events like this to register in poll results.

However, I think the big thing about the global tour is how it registers with the Democratic base. This is something not lost to Republicans who over the last few decades have always played to their base – known to many Democrats as "right-wing nut-jobs."

On the Democratic side though, it has been the practice for many years now for candidates to distance themselves from the base, known to Republican stalwarts as "bleeding heart liberals." However, lately the latter, who are also known as "Yellow Dog Democrats" have been getting more love especially since Howard Dean ran for office. The opposite of a Yellow Dog is a Blue Dog. Among Blue Dogs, Bill Clinton is known as "Big Dog."

Barack Obama is in many ways a Howard Dean kind of guy. He's following Dean's 50 state strategy, for example. And Obama knows how to fire up some libs when he's in that mood.

Of course, there was much distress recently among the Yellow Dogs when Obama seemingly began to 'drift' toward the center after clinching the Democratic nomination. But this world trip, is just what the doctor ordered for the progressive bunch. Liberals like a president who is popular overseas with our allies. Conservatives tend to think of Europe as "socialist."

While conservative may have looked at the huge crowd of 200,000 Germans who came to see Obama in Berlin with a suspicious eye, the bleeding hearts of lefties were more likely filled with joy.

And Obama will need the base of the party for his 50 state strategy to work. It is from this base that he will pull the volunteers needed to register voters and then assure they go to vote in November.

I'm betting that this trip has pacified many of Barack's supporters on the left who were fearing that Barack was going Blue Dog on them.

[EMBED]

Obama on the road.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-07-25 09:16)

Watch the press conference of Sen. Barack Obama and French President Nicolas Sarkozy live in Paris.

[EMBED]

More on McCain Strategy by David Plouffe (2008-07-25 16:18)

Obama Campaign Manager David Plouffe discusses in the following video the treasure chest raised by John McCain and the Republican National Committee.

In June they had raised nearly $100 million, and are currently spending about three times as much on television ads compared to the Obama campaign. Plouffe calls on Obama's grassroots supporters to pitch in to combat the money assault.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

German Moments: Obama and McCain (2008-07-25 20:24)

X

Barack Obama in front of the Victory Tower before his speech in Berlin.

X

John McCain press conference in front of Schimdt's Fudge Haus in Columbus.

Crowd of 200,000 gathered to hear Sen. Obama.

X

Tim Dick, owner of Schidmt's Fudge Haus waits for Sen. McCain and Sen. Graham to pay for their box of fudge, positioning himself between the senators and their vehicles.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama in London (2008-07-26 09:48)

Sen. Barack Obama met today with British Prime Minister Gordon Brown at his London residence, and former Prime Minister Tony Blair and Conservative Party leader David Cameron at 10 Downing Street.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

News coverage of Obama's European visit from yesterday.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama sends letter to the Dalai Lama (2008-07-26 13:15)

Sen. John McCain's decision to meet with His Holiness the Dalai Lama, who is on a speaking tour of the United States, surprised many pundits.

Republicans tend to be closer to China than Democrats, especially on issues of trade. And for that reason, China often publicly endorses Republican candidates for the U.S. presidency. This trade relationship tends to supersede any concern for human rights in the fast-growing Asian nation.

It may be that he wanted to appear as tougher on China than previous Republican administrations, and McCain was one of the first people to say he would boycott the Olympic Opening Ceremonies to protest the harsh crackdown on Tibetan dissidents.

Sen. Obama also has said that he would boycott the opening ceremonies and today he had a letter delivered by Ambassador Jeffrey Bader to the Dalai Lama.

Barack Obama

July 24, 2008

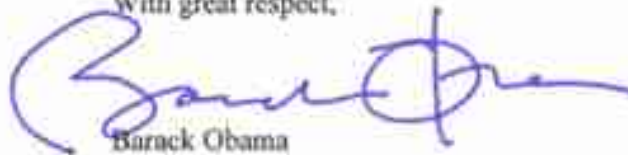

Your Holiness,

I regret that our respective travel schedules will prevent us from meeting during your visit to the United States this month, but I wanted to take the opportunity to reassure you of my highest respect and support for you, your mission and your people at this critical time. I hope that this letter and your meeting with Senator McCain will make clear that American attention to and backing for the people of Tibet is widespread and transcends the divisions of our political contest in this important election year.

I was heartened to read of the continuing dialogue between your representatives and the government of the People's Republic of China. Although progress is likely to be slow, and the travails of the people of Tibet will continue, I am hopeful that the process of dialogue and negotiation will bring positive results if both sides demonstrate good intentions and mutual respect. I remain optimistic that this process will continue beyond the Beijing Olympics, and pledge that I will continue to support it. The right to practice their religious beliefs without punishment or obstruction is one that should be accorded the people of Tibet, and I will continue to encourage the Chinese government to put aside its suspicions and act in accordance with its own constitution.

I will continue to support you and the rights of Tibetans. People of all faiths can admire what you are doing and what you stand for, and I look forward to meeting you at another time.

With great respect,

Barack Obama

Obama for America • PO Box 8210 • Chicago, IL 60680 • BarackObama.com

Paid for by Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack Obama @ 10 Downing Street (2008-07-26 18:24)

Here's video of Barack Obama answering reporters questions in front of 10 Downing St. in London, the capital of the United Kingdom.

[EMBED]

An astute European observer on Facebook asked whether I thought Barack would be taking any more foreign trips. After all, he notes, the Illinois senator got a good bump in the latest national polls. The bounce is much larger than the slight gains McCain received in a few swing states where the increase was less than the margin of error for either the current poll or the preceding one.

The old-timers say its unusual for a presidential candidate to take such long foreign trips especially at this point in the election. They would rather be in swing states pressing the flesh with voters. So, if there is a foreign trip it will probably be a short one, for example, a visit to the Beijing Olympics. Barack has already said he would not attend the opening ceremonies in protest of the Chinese crackdown in Tibet, but he could decide to stop by. He's a sports fan and the trip could be justified by his handlers as a great PR opportunity. Obama for America is already spending millions in a nearly unprecedented Olympics television ad campaign.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

David Miller (2008-07-27 05:41:00)

I must say the Obama is looking pretty presidential in his recent visits to the Middle East and Europe. Let's hope that the country, and in particular the economy, improve.

100 Days to go (2008-07-27 11:32)

With 100 days left until the November presidential election, Barack Obama returned to the United States for more direct campaigning.

Barack started with an appearance at the UNITY '08 Convention of minority journalists.

X

Sun Jul 27, 1:35 PM ET

Democratic presidential candidate, Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., left, speaks during a forum at the UNITY '08 Convention in Chicago, Sunday, July 27, 2008, with CNN anchor Suzanne Malveaux and Romesh Ratnesar with Time Magazine.

(AP Photo/Jae C. Hong)

UNITY: Journalists of Color, Inc. is a coalition of the Asian American Journalists Association, the National Association of Black Journalists, the National Association of Hispanic Journalists and the Native American Journalists Association.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack at Unity 08 Convention (2008-07-27 18:27)

Here' video of Sen. Barack Obama at the quadrennial Unity 08 Convention of minority journalists in Chicago. CNN's Suzanne Malveaux and Time world editor Romesh Ratnesar interview the senator on issues that include Afghanistan, Iraq and the national economy. Sen. John McCain was also invited but was unable to attend.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama and McCain Split on Affirmative Action (2008-07-28 07:26)

An Arizona ballot initiative to ban affirmative action is bringing into focus another clear difference between presidential candidates John McCain and Barack Obama.

The affirmative action ban is sponsored by Ward Connerly, an African American conservative from Sacramento who spearheaded a ban in California and is campaigning for the cause in other states.

McCain supports the initiative, something Obama has characterized as a flip-flop from the senator's earlier position in which he supported affirmative action in some cases. In 1998, McCain opposed state legislation to end affirmative action in Arizona.

Obama reiterated his support for affirmative action at the Unity Convention of minority journalists yesterday.

"I am a strong supporter of affirmative action when properly structured so there it is not a quota, but it is acknowledging and taking into account some of the hardships and difficulties that communities of color may have experienced, continue to experience, and it also speaks to the value of diversity in all walks of American life," he said.

The issue could become an important one especially in the neighboring battleground states of New Mexico and Nevada, where there are large Latino and Native American populations.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama's Plan for Working Women and Families (2008-07-28 13:00)

Michelle Obama will unveil her husband's full plan for working women and families today at a Women for Obama luncheon in Chicago.

Women are more frequent voters than men and the Obama campaign is making significant efforts to reach out to them.

Following is a note by Michelle on working women and their families, followed by the plan itself in iPaper format.

For working families trying to balance jobs and kids and maybe even aging parents of their own, the American Dream can feel like it's slipping away.

Over the course of this campaign, I've had the chance to sit down with so many working women across the country. I've talked with mothers struggling to make ends meet because their salaries aren't keeping up with the cost of groceries or the price of gas. I've listened to the moms who are nervous about taking time off to care for a sick child, and the moms-to-be who are scared of getting fired if the boss finds out they're pregnant.

Then there are women who work hard every day doing the same jobs as men, but earning less. And the military families, who struggle to make ends meet with one paycheck where there used to be two. They welcome their loved ones home with full hearts but little support from their government for their service. These struggles – the struggles of working women and families across America – aren't new to me or to any of us. And they're certainly not new to Barack.

As President, Barack will expand the Family and Medical Leave Act, so that millions of additional Americans will be able to take time off to care for a baby or an elderly parent – or just to have a few hours to attend a school play or a parent-teacher conference or take a child to the doctor. Barack will require employers to provide all their workers with at least seven paid sick days a year, and ensure that women are paid fairly for their hard work.

This agenda is about helping women reclaim their dreams for themselves and their families. It's about giving them a helping hand, not a handout. The subjects here are near to my heart, and they're at the center of this campaign. But the policies will only succeed if they address your needs. So please let us know what you think.

Best,

Michelle Obama

Barack Obama's Plan to Support Working Women and Families - Upload a Document to Scribd

Read this document on Scribd: Barack Obama's Plan to Support Working Women and Families

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack meets with Top Economic Advisers in DC (2008-07-29 07:25)

Sen. Barack Obama met yesterday with economic advisers that included Warren Buffett, former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker and Google Chairman Eric Schmidt in Washington DC.

In a statement before the meeting, Obama mentioned the housing crisis and those who had "gamed" the system to the harm of many, and also the increasing number of people 'mired in debt.' Among the key points of his economic plan include reducing reliance on foreign oil while at the same time creating jobs by investing billions in green energy sources, delivering a universal health care system and improving the education system.

Yesterday, the Bush administration announced that this year's national budget deficit would reach an all-time record of nearly half a trillion dollars. Record numbers of Americans are in deep personal debt. The use of credit cards to pay for ordinary living expenses has become so high that many companies watch for signs of "emergency spending," in order to cancel lines of credit. Young people report the use of credit cards because their pay is not enough for basic living costs.

[EMBED]

Here's a video of the Obama's statement.

[EMBED]

The economic leaders who met with Senator Obama yesterday included:

- Jared Bernstein (Senior Economist, Economic Policy Institute)
- Bill Bradley (Former Senator, D-N.J., U.S. Senate 1979-1997)
- Warren Buffet (Chairman and CEO, Berkshire Hathaway) - joined the meeting by phone
- Anna Burger (Chair, Change to Win; International Secretary-Treasurer, Service Employees International Union)
- Jon Corzine (Governor, State of New Jersey)
- William Daley (Chairman of the Midwest, JP Morgan Chase; Former Secretary, U.S. Dept of Commerce, 1997-2000)
- James Dimon (Chairman and CEO, JPMorgan Chase)
- William Donaldson (27th Chairman of the SEC 2003-2005)
- Indra Nooyi (Chairman and CEO, PepsiCo Inc.)
- Paul O'Neill (Special Advisor, Blackstone Group, Former Secretary, U.S. Dept of Treasury, 2001-2002; Former CEO, Alcoa)
- Federico Peña (Managing Director, Vestar Capital Partners; Former Secretary, U.S. Dept. of Energy, 1997-1998; Former Secretary, U.S. Dept. of Transportation, 1993-1997; Former Mayor, City of Denver 1983-1991)
- Penny Pritzker (CEO, Classic Residence by Hyatt)
- Robert Reich (University of California, Berkeley; Former Secretary, U.S. Dept of Labor, 1993-1997)
- Robert Rubin (Chairman and Director of the Executive Committee, Citigroup; Former Secretary, U.S. Dept of Treasury, 1995-1999)
- Eric Schmidt (Chairman and CEO, Google)
- William Spriggs (Professor and Chair of the Department of Economics, Howard University)
- Lawrence Summers (Harvard University; Managing Director, D.E. Shaw; Former Secretary, U.S. Dept of Treasury, 1999-2001)
- John Sweeney (President, AFL-CIO)
- Laura Tyson (Haas School of Business, University of California, Berkeley; Former Chairman, National Economic Council, 1995-1996; Former Chairman, President's Council of Economic Advisors, 1993-1995)
- Paul Volcker (Former Chairman, U.S. Federal Reserve 1979-1987)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama Backstage with Barack (2008-07-29 12:49)

Michelle Obama sent out this email to campaign supporters today.

Amanda –

Barack likes to tell a story about the two of us standing backstage before his speech at the 2004 Democratic Convention.

The way he tells it, he was too busy in the days before the convention to feel any pressure – but about an hour before the speech, I could tell he was getting a little nervous.

To break the tension, right before he went out on stage I leaned in close and said, "Just don't screw it up, buddy.”

We laughed. And then Barack brought the house down.

This year, the house is going to be a lot bigger. More than 75,000 people will be in Denver to be part of this important moment, and I want to tell you about an opportunity to join Barack backstage before his acceptance speech.

Ten supporters who make a donation in any amount by midnight this Thursday, July 31st, will be selected to fly to Denver, spend a couple of nights in a hotel, participate in the convention, and go Backstage with Barack. Each supporter who is selected will also get to bring a guest along to share the experience. Make a contribution today and you could have your own Backstage with Barack story to tell:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/backstage>

Barack’s speech at the convention will be a culmination of the unlikely journey that has brought all of us so far over the past 17 months.

He will call on us to come together and work for change – not just to win this election, but to make things better for all Americans.

Seeing it in person will be a once-in-a-lifetime experience. I’m excited about being there, and if you make a donation before the deadline, you could join Barack backstage:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/backstage>

Thanks for everything you’ve done to get us here.

Michelle

[EMBED]

Michelle Obama speaking at a Women for Obama lunch reception in Chicago, IL, yesterday, about the Obama campaign’s Blueprint for America’s Working Women and Families.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Tuesday (2008-07-29 18:00)

The McCain campaign and the RNC have launched a full-scale negative ad campaign against presidential opponent Barack Obama.

One ad attacked Obama during this European trip claiming that the Illinois senator would not visit wounded troops without the press tagging along. However, Barack had already made such visits sans the press corps earlier in Iraq.

Most recently, the RNC has launched a website, BarackBook.com, a play on the popular FaceBook site where Obama’s page has enlisted more than 1.2 million supporters.

Now negative ads can work sometimes, just like positive ads, but it depends on the situation that exists at the time. It’s common practice to use them, though, when you’re consistently behind in the polls as McCain has been. He did manage to lead a recent USA Today/Gallup poll, the first survey he’s won since early May.

VP Gossip

There has been a lot of buzz out there over the fact that Barack is meeting with this vice presidential vetting team. According to the rumors, a number of people have passed muster and are not on the short list, or the shorter list including Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine.

Kaine was an early supporter of Obama and can only serve one term as governor. If chosen, it would give the Democratic ticket a very youthful look, which can be viewed either positively or negatively. On the positive side, youthfulness can symbolize change. Detractors though might harp on the relative lack of experience although Kaine can claim that he has governed a state.

One curious and possible beneficial side of a Kaine pick is that his last name a lot like "McCain." In fact, I heard the two get mixed up on the news today. It's definitely possible that some voters looking for McCain might get confused and pick Kaine instead!

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama holds Town Hall in Springfield, Missouri (2008-07-30 08:48)

Sen. Barack Obama held a town hall meeting in Springfield, Missouri that was broadcast live on barackobama.com. Barack has been surging in the state lately and the campaign sharply expanded its infrastructure in response. Among the subjects Barack discussed included healthcare, especially the need for expansion of preventative care, and the need for holding big business accountable for environmental degradation. Barack plans to post legislation on the internet for comments, and to have his Cabinet hold town hall meetings to discuss issues with ordinary people rather than simply interacting with lobbyists. His administration will also restrict appointees from taking lobbyist jobs. Sen. Obama also accommodated an audience member who asked for a fist bump. In other news, John McCain continued his negative ad campaign with a new television spot that flashes pictures of Britney Spears and Paris Hilton over the background of Obama's Berlin speech, in trying to downplay Barack's celebrity.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-07-30 13:03)

The LA Times blog, Hero Complex, is reporting that both Barack Obama and

Fundraising Deadline is Tomorrow (2008-07-30 15:59)

The July fundraising deadline is tomorrow, July 31, at midnight. This month should be interesting because if the previous month is any indication, then the Obama campaign and the DNC should pull ahead of McCain and the RNC is war-chest funds.

1268

Possibly McCain has been spending more than Obama this month with more than three times as many television ads for the Republicans. However, the Obama camp has also been spending money in opening up offices and expanding staff personnel. McCain's television spending is likely an attempt to catch up in the polls where he's been lagging behind his opponent.

Most of the money the candidates are raising now, must be spent before the start of the general election season, which starts after the respective party convention.

The numbers for fundraising may be released early to avoid the distraction of the Olympics once they start about a week from now. There are also rumors that both candidates may announce their VP picks before the Beijing opening ceremonies in order to dominate the news cycle, which will be impossible once the games start.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: "Low Road" (2008-07-30 21:14)

Barack Obama's campaign released a new television ad addressing the negative attack ad blitz by the McCain camp. The ad titled "Low Road," shows newspaper quotes refuting the attacks and then outlines Obama's correct positions including a $1,000 middle class tax cut, and an energy plan that breaks dependence on foreign oil and invests in clean renewable energy.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's New Energy Initiative (2008-07-31 08:46)

Campaigning deep in Republican territory, Barack Obama called for a national energy independence initiative similar to the 1960s Apollo mission to the moon.

Obama and McCain have split on the issue of offshore oil drilling with McCain supporting George W. Bush's call for new exploration. Obama notes that it will take at least 10 years to bring oil to the market with new drilling by which time it will only account for a minuscule percent of American consumption.

The Illinois senator instead suggests investing $15 billion a year for 10 years in new spending on clean energy technologies.

Practically this 10 year plan will provide a more lasting and effective solution than a resumption of offshore drilling with the latter plan likely generating intense opposition.

The money for Obama's green energy spending will come from ending tax breaks and loopholes that currently exist for energy companies, and by taxing companies that emit large quantities of climate-changing carbon into the atmosphere.

Barack also wants to initiate a plan that will increase overall energy efficiency by 50 percent by the year 2030.

For More Information about Barack's Plan

- ✖ Read the Energy Plan
- ✖ Read the Environment Plan

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

'Paris Hilton Tax Break' (2008-07-31 14:38)

In response to John McCain's television ad comparing Barack Obama to Paris Hilton and Britney Spears, Dogtown-ink.com has released a funny video highlighting the "Paris Hilton tax cut."

The Paris Hilton tax cut is W's 'bleeding heart' tax aide aimed for the wealthiest of wealthy Americans. McCain promises to maintain the rich folk tax breaks, while Obama pledges to roll them back to pre-Bush levels.

Here's the video.

[EMBED]

Also, an interesting tidbit of news. It appears that heiress Paris Hilton's dad is a contributor to the McCain campaign.

[EMBED]

Slide show from Obama's Economic Security Town Hall in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Read Sen. Obama's full remarks, as prepared for delivery . . .

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Econniff (2008-07-31 17:13:00)

Haha! That's great! He deserves it after making such a childish attack. Here's another good parody of it that i found:

<http://www.iklipz.com/MovieDetail.aspx?MovieID=2dcdee63-0f9c-45ce-9064-92e6a9331acf>

2.8 August

Obama announces Emergency Economic Plan (2008-08-01 07:34)

Sen. Barack Obama announced a dramatic emergency economy plan today.

To help families cope with the rising costs of energy, Obama is proposing an energy rebate of $1000 for families ($500 for individuals).

In addition, the Illinois senator proposes a $50 million economic stimulus plan. Half of the money will go to states to help prevent program cuts due to revenue shortfalls. The other half will fund infrastructure, specifically highways, bridges and schools.

Money for the plan will come from excess oil company profits.

The announcement of the plan demonstrates Barack's recognition of the pressing economic difficulties caused by rising fuel and food prices, dwindling credit, the housing crisis and other factors.

In comparison, John McCain's plan simply calls for a gas tax holiday. How though will the government make up for lost revenues given the already huge budget shortfalls?

Here is Obama's statement on the new plan.

Today, we learned that 51,000 jobs were lost last month, the seventh straight month of job loss – now totaling 463,00 jobs lost since the beginning of this year. I've already called for an economic stimulus package on two different occasions this year, and much of what I've proposed has passed in Congress. These efforts have made some difference. But with job losses mounting, prices rising, increased turbulence in our financial system, and a growing credit crunch, we need to do more.

That's why today I'm announcing a two-part emergency plan to help struggling families make ends meet and get our economy back on track. The first part of my plan is a $1,000 emergency energy rebate that could go out to families as soon as this fall. This rebate will be enough to offset the increased cost of gas for a working family over the next 4 months. Or, if you live in a state where it gets very cold in the winter, it will be enough to cover the entire increase in your heating bills. Or you could use the rebate for any of your other bills or even to pay down debt. As we provide relief, we must also be mindful of the swelling budget deficit. That is why I am proposing that we pay for this rebate by taxing the windfall profits of oil companies so we can use some of their record profits to help families pay record prices.

The second part of my plan is a $50 billion stimulus to help jump-start job creation and help local communities that are struggling due to our economic downturn. Half of this stimulus will go to state governments that are facing big budget shortfalls. The other half of this stimulus will be used to invest in our national infrastructure, replenish the Highway Trust Fund, rebuild our crumbling roads and bridges, and repair our crumbling schools.

Today's jobs report is an urgent reminder that we cannot afford four more years of the failed Bush economic policies, and that is what Senator McCain is offering. He's proposing to cut the gasoline tax paid by the oil companies and trust that they will pass on the savings in the form of lower prices at the pump. And he's also proposing tax cuts for corporations and the wealthiest Americans in the hopes that a little bit of it will trickle down to ordinary Americans. I do not believe that giving $4 billion in new tax cuts to oil companies will create any jobs or save you any money. I believe that if we want relief for families, we should give relief to families, not oil companies. If we want to create jobs, we should do more to make work pay for ordinary Americans, not boost the profits of oil companies. It's time to restore fairness and balance to our economy and we can start by passing the emergency economic plan that I'm proposing today.

Read the full plan.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-08-01 12:46:00)

Have you guys seen the new animated version of Get Your War On? Whichever side of the aisle you're on, I'm pretty sure you'll find this video funny, whether you're a terrorist, non-terrorist, or simply a neglected unlisted terrorist: http://www.236.com/video/2008/get_your_war_on_the_watch_list_1_8056.php

Video: Obama on the Road (2008-08-01 18:26)

On August 1st, 2008, Barack Obama held a town hall meeting in St. Petersburg, Florida where he talked about the Bush economy. Florida is in recession for the first time in 60 years.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama answers a question at a town hall meeting in Rolla, Missouri.

[EMBED]

In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Barack listens to questions by people affected by last month's flooding.

[EMBED]

Also, check out Barack's page at Scribd.com/BarackObama where there are already more than 30 documents detailing Obama's policy including:

Barack's Working Women and Families Blueprint

Barack Obama's Emergency Economic Plan

Barack Obama's Policy Positions on Healthcare

Barack Obama's Policy Positions on Energy

And Barack Obama's Blueprint for Change.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Speaks at 'Space City, USA' (2008-08-02 08:56)

Sen. Barack Obama spoke in Titusville, Florida, close to the Kennedy Space Center and NASA, and known as "Space City, USA."

Barack notes how the current administration has been anti-science and will leave the space program dependent on Russian spacecraft after the shuttle program terminates in 2010. He proposes adding an additional shuttle flight and speeding up the development of the shuttle's successor craft.

[EMBED]

An Obama administration will use technology developed at NASA to help deal with other problems related to climate change and energy independence.

Here are the senator's remarks as prepared for delivery.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama

Town Hall on the Economy

As Prepared For Delivery

Titusville, Florida

Saturday, August 2, 2008

I've often said that this election is a defining moment in our history. On major issues like the war in Iraq or the warming of our planet, the decisions we make in November and over the next few years will shape a generation, if not a century. Nowhere is that more true than when it comes to our economy.

You don't have to watch TV or read the newspaper to know what's happening – you feel it in your own lives and in your own communities. July was the seventh straight month of job loss. Gas prices are out of control. Food prices are soaring. If you're lucky enough to have health care, your copays, deductibles, and premiums are skyrocketing. College is becoming less affordable. And we've seen more foreclosures than at any time since the Great Depression. Back in the 1990s, your incomes grew by $6,000, and over the last several years, they've actually fallen by nearly $1,000.

So for millions of families, these anxieties are growing worse. Many people are losing faith in that fundamental promise of America – that if you work hard, you'll be able to build a better life not just for yourself, but for your children and grandchildren.

Part of it has to do with fundamental changes in our economy. Over the last few decades, revolutions in technology and communication have made it so that corporations can send good jobs wherever there's an internet connection. Children here in Titusville aren't just growing up competing for good jobs with children in California or Indiana, but with children in Beijing and Bangalore.

But what we also have to remember is that our economic problems aren't simply due to changes in how our economy works, and they aren't just a normal part of the business cycle. They're also due to irresponsible decisions that were made on Wall Street and in Washington. In recent years, we have relearned the essential truth that in the long run, we cannot have a thriving Wall Street and a struggling Main Street. When wages are flat, prices are rising, and more Americans are mired in debt, the economy as a whole suffers. When a reckless few game the system, as we've seen in this housing crisis, millions suffer and we're all affected. When special interests put their thumb on the scale, and distort the free market, the people who compete by the rules come in last. And when our government fails to meet its obligation – to provide sensible oversight and stand on the side of working people and invest in their future – America pays a heavy price.

So we have a choice to make in this election. We can either choose a new direction for our economy, or we can keep doing what we've been doing. My opponent believes we're on the right course. He's said our economy has made great progress these past eight years. He's embraced the Bush economic policies and promises to continue them.

Well, I just want to ask you a simple question. Are you better off now than you were four years ago or eight years ago? Can you afford another four years of the same economic policies that we've had under George W. Bush?

We've tried those policies. They haven't worked. It's time to leave them in the past where they belong. It's time for something new. It's time to restore balance and fairness to our economy so it works for all Americans, recognizing that we must grow together, Wall Street and Main Street, profits and wages.

That starts with easing the burden on hardworking families. If I'm elected President, I'll put a $1,000 tax cut in the pockets of 95 % of workers and their families. I'll provide relief to struggling homeowners. I'll eliminate income taxes for seniors making under $50,000 a year. And I'll give working parents the support they need by making childcare affordable and expanding paid leave – and we'll make sure that women get equal pay for equal work.

But you need relief right now. That's why yesterday, I announced a two-part emergency plan to help struggling families make ends meet and get our economy back on track. The first part of my plan is to tax the windfall profits of oil companies and use some of that money to help you pay the rising price of gas. Now, this is an area where my opponent and I disagree – because he opposes using this money to help you pay your bills.

The other day, we learned that Exxon Mobil made nearly $12 billion last quarter. To put it another way, they made $1,500 every second. That's more than $300,000 in the time it takes you to fill up a tank of gas. And Senator McCain actually wants to give oil companies like Exxon another $4 billion in tax cuts. Well, I don't think we should be giving tax breaks to oil companies that are doing better than ever at a time when you're struggling more than ever. It's time to use some of their record profits to help you pay record prices by putting a $1,000 emergency energy rebate in the pockets of working families.

The second part of my plan is a $50 billion stimulus to help jump-start job creation and help local communities that are struggling due to our economic downturn. Half of this stimulus will go to state governments that are facing big budget shortfalls. And we'll invest the other half in our national infrastructure so we can create new jobs and save over one million jobs that are in danger of being cut, rebuild our crumbling roads and bridges, and repair our crumbling schools.

And we have to do more than provide short-term relief. We have to secure our long-term prosperity and strengthen America's competitiveness in the 21st century. One of the areas where we are in danger of losing our competitive edge is our space program. When I was growing up, NASA inspired the world with achievements we are still proud of. Today, we have an administration that has set ambitious goals for NASA without giving NASA the support it needs to reach them. As a result, they've had to cut back on research, and trim their programs, which means that after the Space Shuttle shuts down in 2010, we're going to have to rely on Russian spacecraft to keep us in orbit.

We cannot cede our leadership in space. That's why I will help close the gap and ensure that our space program doesn't suffer when the Shuttle goes out of service by working with Senator Bill Nelson to add at least one additional Space Shuttle flight beyond 2010; by supporting continued funding for NASA; by speeding the development of the Shuttle's successor; and by making sure that all those who work in the space industry in Florida do not lose their jobs when the Shuttle is retired – because we cannot afford to lose their expertise.

More broadly, we need a real vision for space exploration. To help formulate this vision, I'll reestablish the National Aeronautics and Space Council so that we can develop a plan to explore the solar system – a plan that involves both human and robotic missions, and enlists both international partners and the private sector. And as America leads the world to long-term exploration of the moon, Mars, and beyond, let's also tap NASA's ingenuity to build the airplanes of tomorrow and to study our own planet so we can combat global climate change. Under my watch, NASA will inspire the world, make America stronger, and help grow the economy here in Florida.

That's what this election is all about. It's about raising our sights, seizing this moment, and reclaiming our destiny in this country. And yet, at a time when the stakes could not be higher – when the challenges facing our country could not be greater – my opponent is talking about Britney and Paris. Well, I think the American people deserve better. Senator McCain and I have real differences and that's what we should be talking about – because we have a real choice to make in November.

We can choose to go another four years without truly solving our energy crisis; or we can invest in renewable energies, create up to five million green jobs that pay well and can't be outsourced, and build an American green energy sector so that we're less vulnerable to oil price shocks and $4 a gallon gas. That's what we can choose to do in this election.

We can choose to do nothing about disappearing jobs and shuttered factories for another four years, or we can encourage job creation in the United States of America. We can end tax breaks for corporations that ship jobs overseas and give them to companies that create jobs here in this country.

We can choose to go another four years with a broken health care system; or we can finally guarantee health care for anyone who wants it, make it affordable for anyone who needs it, and cut health care costs for manufactures to help make them more competitive. That's a choice we can make in this election.

We can choose to stay mired in the same education debate that's consumed Washington for decades, or we can invest in early childhood education, recruit an army of qualified teachers with better pay and more support, and make college affordable by offering an annual $4,000 tax credit in exchange for community or national service. That's how we'll prepare every American to compete and succeed in our global economy.

We can choose to go another four years with the same reckless fiscal policies that have busted our budget, wreaked havoc on our economy, and mortgaged our children's future on a mountain of debt; or we can restore fiscal responsibility in Washington by winding down a war in Iraq that's costing $10 billion a month, by cutting wasteful spending, by shutting corporate loopholes and tax havens, and by rolling back the Bush tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans.

These are the choices we face in November. We can choose to remain on the path that has led our economy into so much trouble, or we can reclaim the idea that here in this country, you can make it if you try.

In the end, that's all most Americans are asking for. It's not a lot. You don't expect government to solve all your problems. You want to be self-reliant and independent. You want to be responsible for your own lives and take care of your own families. But what you do expect is a government that isn't run by the special interests. What you do expect is that if you're willing to work hard, you should be able to find a job that pays a decent wage, that you shouldn't go bankrupt when you get sick, that you should be able to send your children to college even if you're not rich, and that you should be able to retire with dignity and security.

That's what you should expect. And that's why I'm running for President of the United States. And if you're willing to stand with me and work with me and vote for me, then we will not just win Florida, we will win this election, and then you and I together will change this country and change this world.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Power of the Network (2008-08-03 07:30)

Many still do not know how Barack Obama came from nowhere to beat powerhouse Hillary Clinton. They don't quite get what all the fuss about his online social network.

Think of all those Verizon "Power of the Network" commercials where the "Can You Hear Me Now?" guy leads a vast throng of support folk behind the cellphone user. For Barack, on websites like Facebook, that support rolls over a million deep.

It's that huge throng of people who made it possible for Barack to land 100,000 contributors, including many first-time donors, on July 31 alone, the deadline for the July fundraising period.

Like the Verizon network, the Obama crowd includes a vast diversity of people with varied talents and skills. They are linked on a local level, but also an online group level. Through the internet, they can easily reach out to relatives, old friend and classmates, etc. regardless of where they live.

And, of course, the internet makes exchange of information and updates quick, cheap and easy.

Currently, Barack's network is registering and engaging voters across the country, and when crunch time rolls around, they will mobilize to make sure every Obama supporter votes. It's this closing "get out the vote" effort that often wins presidential elections.

[EMBED]

Barack had a busy day yesterday with morning press conferences, a town hall meeting in Titusville and an address at the annual National Urban League Conference in Orlando.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama urges full voting rights for Michigan and Florida Delegates (2008-08-03 18:50)

Sen. Barack Obama is not calling for delegates from Florida and Michigan to have full voting rights at the Democratic National Convention.

"As these delegates go about the important business of the Convention, I believe Party unity calls for the delegates from Florida and Michigan to be able to participate fully alongside the delegates from the other states and territories," Obama wrote in a letter to the chairmen of the party's credentials committee.

Delegates from the two states had been allowed only half a vote each in punishment for holding their primaries before Feb. 5 against Democratic National Committee rules. Obama urged the credentials committee to pass a resolution during their Aug. 24 meeting granting the delegates full votes.

Races in both states appear close with Obama seemingly gaining momentum in Florida while McCain has been edging closer in Michigan. The Obama campaign now has 20 field offices in Michigan with the opening of the Kalamazoo office yesterday.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bourbonnais (2008-08-04 01:16:00)

He is 100 % right, I hope they will follow him on this.

Obama Camp releases New Energy for America Ad (2008-08-04 08:11)

Today, Aug. 4 is Barack Obama 's birthday. He's 47 years old.

Barack is expected to attend a big fundraiser in downtown Boston as part of his birthday celebration. Cost per couple is reported at $28,500.

The Illinois senator has many connections in Boston from his time at Harvard Law School. He is also good friends with Gov. Deval Patrick, a former Chicago resident.

The campaign released a new television ad today focused on Obama new energy plan. From barackobama.com:

Obama Campaign Releases TV Ad on Obama's New Energy for America Plan

by Laurin Manning,

Monday, August 04, 2008 at 07:26 AM

Obama Campaign Releases TV Ad on Obama's New Energy for America Plan

30-Second Spot Highlights Senator Obama's Plan to Offset the Costs of Rising Energy and Addresses Oil Industry Contributions to John McCain's Campaign.

CHICAGO - As Barack Obama announces his New Energy for America Plan today, the Obama campaign unveiled a new ad, one that illustrates the clear choice in this election between an approach that keeps us sending billions to oil companies and foreign governments and one that gives middle class families a $1,000 rebate funded by a windfall profits tax on the oil companies. Pocket highlights that for far too long, we've had an energy policy that has worked for the oil companies. Barack Obama believes it's time we had an energy policy that works for the American people.

Today Senator Obama is outlining his New Energy for America plan in a speech in Lansing, Michigan. Obama's plan will provide an immediate energy rebate to Americans struggling with high gas prices, create five million new green jobs, and eliminate our need for Middle Eastern oil in 10 years.

Watch the ad below:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

How Bad is the Economy? (2008-08-04 09:29)

John McCain generally agrees with the direction that George W. Bush has taken on the economy.

Some Bush supporters have pointed to the recent news that the economy has expanded by about 2 percent as evidence that things are not so bad.

We need to look at this news though in the proper light. We can't compare economic growth under the Clinton administration, for example, when the budget was balanced, to debt-driven Bush GDP growth.

The Bush administration will register a record budget deficit this year of nearly $500 billion.

Bragging about GDP growth like this is akin to someone boasting that they "earned" $300,000, when they really mortgaged their house.

Debt woes

While the U.S. economy will grow by about $275 billion this year, the amount borrowed by the government is expected to exceed $500 billion most of which will be spent on the current budget.

Quite obviously one can say that without record government debt spending, the economy would be shrinking. Also much of the borrowed money is coming from foreign sources.

If one takes the overall debt into account, what is known as the current account deficit, the U.S. will pay about 0.8 percent of GDP this year on international debt service payments according to some estimates. That's more than 40 percent of the projected growth for 2008.

As with the dotcom and mortgage meltdowns, at some point the chickens will come home to roost on any bad debt scheme. For awhile things look great, then...

However, things already are not looking that great. People are definitely feeling the pinch. One of the reasons for this is that much of the GDP growth is just paper or transactional growth. It's not your grandpa's type of economic growth. Few or no jobs are created by this phenomenon, which can be described basically as market speculation. However, since it is taxable it is included in the GDP figures.

If you look at other statistics including money supply (M1 and M3) we are already well into recession.

Employment

Recent figures show a sharp increase in unemployment, but Bush supporters like McCain claim that unemployment figures are still at 'historically low' levels.

Again we have to know the context in order to ascertain the true meaning of these statistics.

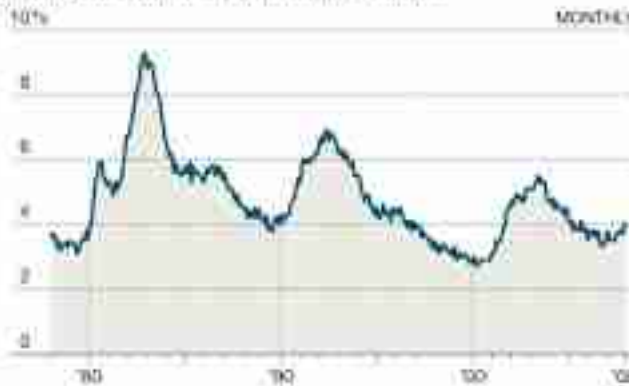

It would not be correct to compare unemployment statistics of today with those of Reagan's or Carter's time. The manner in which these stats are gleaned has changed. It's more difficult now to get unemployment checks, and facilities have been scaled down. Many people, especially in certain industries, no longer bother to register at employment offices with their long lines and ineffective services. They already know when they are ineligible or unlikely to receive any payments.

These people, along with those who give up searching due to frustration or what-not, are dropped from unemployment rolls.

The Misleading Jobless Rate

Although the unemployment rate among men ages 25 to 54 is now at a relatively low level (4 percent in January 2009), the percentage of adult men not working has risen from about 9 percent in January 1979 to almost 13 percent today.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE AMONG MEN AGES 25 TO 54

PERCENTAGE OF MEN AGES 25 TO 54 NOT WORKING

Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics

THE NEW YORK TIMES

From the graphic above, we can see that among adult men, at least, the percentage actually not working has no agreement with the official unemployment rate. In fact, the rates of working age men that are not working is the highest since World War II.

I won't go into all the ways that the government has found to take people off the employment rolls but they are numerous and include excluding those on Social Security disability checks and those who are incarcerated.

Another thing that has skewed unemployment rates is the high and increasing rate of underemployment. We are just beginning to fully understand the problem of underemployment brought on by the increasing practice of using part-time and temporary workers. Underemployed people often know they are not eligible for unemployment insurance and thus do not bother registering as unemployed.

Other Debts

As goes Washington, so goes the nation.

The national debt is not the only debt problem a new president will have to deal with. Everybody else seems to have followed Washington's lead from consumers to state governments.

Barack's recently announced emergency economic plan includes money to help states that are having their own deficit dilemmas.

On the corporate front, we have seen recently a number of federal bailouts for leading financial institutions. Most recently, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have joined the ranks of troubled lenders. According to the buzz, more trouble is on the way.

Consumers are also over their head in debt, and the inflation problem is not helping. Many have taken to using credit cards for ordinary living expenses. Debt to disposable income has risen to 140 % from 100 % in 2000.

Oil-centric Approach

Traditional oil politics, to which some would include the decision to invade Iraq, has allowed America's competitors to leapfrog ahead in the world of clean, renewable technology.

Not only Japan and Germany, but even nations like China and Brazil are advancing forward at a more rapid pace than the United States.

If one were to predict $130 a barrel oil, or even oil at today's price of $120, at the start of the first Bush administration you would have been branded a false prophet or alarmist by most "level-headed" analysts. But the fact is that all experts, including conservatives, know that it is only a matter of time before oil moves even much higher.

When the condition known as peak oil arrives, those nations that have not invested sufficiently in green tech will fall seriously behind. Offshore drilling and opening reserve stocks only distracts from the necessary steps that are needed to prepare for a new world economy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video and iPaper: New Energy for America Plan (2008-08-04 19:03)

Barack Obama announced his New Energy for America plan this morning in Lansing, Michigan.

The main points of the plan as listed on the barackobama.com blog are:

- Providing short-term relief to American families facing pain at the pump
- Helping create five million new jobs by strategically investing $150 billion over the next ten years to catalyze private efforts to build a clean energy future.
- Within 10 years, saving more oil than we currently import from the Middle East and Venezuela combined.
- Putting 1 million Plug-In Hybrid cars – cars that can get up to 150 miles per gallon – on the road by 2015, cars that we will work to make sure are built here in America.
- Ensuring 10 percent of our electricity comes from renewable sources by 2012, and 25 percent by 2025.
- Implementing an economy-wide cap-and-trade program to reduce greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050.

Barack also said that in 10 years following his plan the U.S. would "eliminate the need for oil from the Middle East and Venezuela."

Here's video of the entire speech.

[EMBED]

And you can read the entire energy plan below:

Barack Obama's New Energy Plan For America - Upload a Document to Scribd

Read this document on Scribd: Barack Obama's New Energy Plan For America

[EMBED]

Barack on the road from Michigan to Ohio.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama raises $5 million on Bday (2008-08-05 08:59)

According to the Boston Globe, Barack Obama raised about $5 million during his birthday bash in Beantown last night.

The event was also reportedly designed to help mend fences between the Obama and the old Clinton camp.

Birthday guests included Mass. Gov. Deval Patrick, Sen. John Kerry and former presidential nominee Michael Dukakis.

According to Kerry, Obama wished for three things on his birthday: Indiana, Colorado and Virginia.

Barack Obama serves birthday cake to the press corps aboard his campaign plane. Obama turned 47 years old on Monday. (AP) The new cash is welcome news as the McCain campaign has announced that it is outspending Sen. Obama on Beijing Olympics television ads. McCain's last-minute buy involves $6 million worth of ads, while Obama reportedly purchased a $5 million campaign.

[EMBED]

Barack discusses his New Energy for America plan in Youngstown, Ohio.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-08-05 12:28:00)

All of Mr. Obama's energy proposals (with the exception of conservation measures) will INCREASE the cost of energy. Cap and Trade is a massive tax increase in disguise – and any time you tax something you increase its cost. Increasing taxes on the oil companies (who already pay about 50 % of their profits to the government) will further increase the cost of oil and the cost of gas at the pump. Failure to develop our MASSIVE domestic energy reserves (oil, natural gas, and coal) will increase the cost of fossil fuels and increase our dependence on foreign sources for energy. The purchase price of alternative energy vehicles (including hybrids) is so much higher than their standard gasoline alternatives that they never result in net savings over the life of the vehicle.

Video: Offices open in Colorado (2008-08-05 13:42)

Here's video of field office openings in Colorado.

[EMBED]

Barack has 20 offices throughout Colorado, one of states considered a major battleground for the general election. According to John Kerry, this was one of three states that Obama wished for on his birthday yesterday.

Democrats will hold their convention in Denver and that should help give Obama a boost in the state.

[EMBED]

Check out the pictures of birthday celebrations held for Barack throughout the country yesterday.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Molten Core of Barack: Why Obama Can't Win (2008-08-05 16:47)

Alex, John McCain has been spending more, a lot more, on television ads to get his poll numbers up.

He was trailing badly especially in the state-by-state electoral count and was probably getting pressure from party leaders to recuperate his standings. So they've been outspending the Obama campaign by about 3 to 1 running mostly negative ads to artificially inflate his poll numbers.

The Obama campaign is looking good so they've been spending their money and time more on building up their ground campaign for a 50 state strategy. They are conserving money now with the exception of the big Olympics tv ad campaign.

Still, even with all the media efforts of McCain and the Republican National Committee (RNC), Obama still looks much better right now in the electoral vote polls.

Check out the RealClearPolitics site.

<http://realclearpolitics/polls>

When it comes time to close the show a few weeks before the election, I believe you will see the Obama campaign open up the purse strings because that's when many people really start paying attention and deciding on who to vote for.

About Barack Obama

Read the Article at HuffingtonPost

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More Obama News from Monday (2008-08-05 20:28)

Academy Award winning actor George Clooney is organizing a big fundraiser for Barack Obama in Switzerland on Sept. 2.

There will be a reception with tickets at $1,000 followed by a dinner at the house of NFC member Charles Adams for guests who raised at least $10,000 from multiple sources.

Why the event is taking place overseas is not explained, but the campaign states that only U.S. citizens with passports will be allowed to donate.

Tire pressure claim correct

Barack's claims on oil savings from simply keeping your tires properly inflated and getting regular tuneups is correct. The savings in fact, if practiced widely, could easily exceed the amount of oil obtained from any new offshore drilling. McCain had mocked Obama's suggestions pointing instead to his plan to expand offshore drilling.

Also, it has been widely reported that Barack now supports some offshore drilling himself. Haven't seen the evidence though. He has said that he might consider some new drilling as part of a compromise plan were the good gained would offset the negatives of new drilling.

Barack in Ohio

In the following video, Barack talks in Ohio about his new energy plan and other economic matters. He notes that during the last eight years it has been the wealthy, the oil companies, the big contractors and lobbys who have gained, while the American people have suffered. He promises to shift the emphasis back to the people.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

gate (2008-08-07 08:03:00)

I thought you might be interested in this:

<http://cgi.ebay.com/ebaymotors/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&item=110277515563>

I'm trying to turn the tables on the McCain folks and their stupid tire gauge stunt. I'm having gauges made and selling them on eBay in hopes of raising $2300 for Obama (the max contribution). If you are down, can you please forward this on to other like minded folks. Thanks!

LIVE: Barack Obama at Town Hall in Elkhart, Indiana (2008-08-06 08:02)

Watch Sen. Barack Obama speak live at Concord High School in Elkhart, Indiana.

Senator Barack Obama

in Elkhart, IN

Watch Now

Right now, Barack is talking about using executive order to make the federal government, the largest user of energy in the world, more energy-efficient.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-08-06 08:23:00)

Paris Hilton Spoof Shirt available @ <http://www.uneekgeek.etsy.com>

Get yours with Obama on the back!

Visit the blog at <http://www.uneek-geek.com/blog>

Barack and Family heading for 'Da Kine' Vacation (2008-08-06 14:44)

Barack Obama , his wife and two daughters are heading for a week-long vacation in Hawai'i, the first real time off since starting the campaign in Feb. 2007.

The family leaves on Friday and that leaves open the question as to whether the Illinois senator will, according to conventional wisdom, announce his VP pick before the Olympic opening ceremonies.

Some suspected that such an event would happen today as Obama campaigned in Indiana with Sen. Evan Bayh, but that doesn't look like it's going to happen.

Obama for America has displayed quite dramatically that there are no ship-sinking loose lips aboard. Nobody seems to have a clue as to who or when regarding the VP pick. There have been rumors of course, but these seem to change randomly.

Hillary Clinton will be campaigning for Barack on Friday in Henderson, Nevada, but again that's when the family should be leaving for Hawai'i.

That leaves tomorrow, Thursday, as the last chance for an announcement before opening ceremonies on Friday.

The only thing I can see in the news wires is that Hillary will be having a web chat early on Thursday at 9 am PDT. Now, that's awful early for New York or Washington DC, so I have to wonder if she will be on the West Coast at the time of the web chat.

Of course, the West Coast would also be a good spot for a Hawai'i departure flight!

But then again, who knows? I can't figure out where Obama will be on Thursday.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama in Elkhart, Indiana.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Baracking down the Issues (2008-08-07 09:04)

At Barack Obama's scribd.com site, you can find iPapers covering a wide selection to topics.

There are 34 documents uploaded so far including the recent plan for military families and Barack's New Energy for America proposal. If you have a blog or website, you can embed these papers using the provided code. Click on "iPaper," then select "Embed Codes."

Here is Barack's plan for military families in Virginia.

Barack Obama's Plan To Support Virginia Military Families - Upload a Document to Scribd

Read this document on Scribd: Barack Obama's Plan To Support Virginia Military Families

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama to appear at Keahi Lagoon Beach Park (2008-08-07 21:59)

Barack Obama's vacation will not only be fun and relaxation.

In addition to a fundraiser, Obama is scheduled to appear at a free public rally at Keahi Lagoon Beach Park in Honolulu.

Obama has not been back to Hawai'i, where he spent most of his childhood, since 2006 when he was still pondering over whether to run for president.

"I'm going to see my grandma who I've haven't seen in almost 18-19 months and who's getting to the age where I want to make sure I spend time with her on a consistent basis and so she can see her great-grandchildren," Obama said about his Hawaiian trip.

It's not looking much like he or his opponent John McCain will announce their VP picks before the Olympic Games being as many had once expected. Although it's still possible to hold a press conference sometime early tomorrow. Check out this story on how island life in Hawai'i shaped the presumptive Democratic nominee.

"Hawaii's spirit of tolerance might not have been perfect or complete. But it was — and is — real," Obama wrote in a 1999 essay for the Punahou alumni magazine. "The opportunity that Hawaii offered — to experience a variety of cultures in a climate of mutual respect — became an integral part of my world view, and a basis for the values that I hold most dear."

And here's a story on Obama's grandmother who broke many barriers of her own allowing the family to send Barack to the elite Punahou School.

Disco generation Barack "Barry" Obama, second row right, in a 1978 senior yearbook photo at the Punahou School, the prestigious private academy in Honolulu, Hawaii. Punahou Schools / AP

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

"Hands" to get the job done (2008-08-08 11:18)

The Obama campaign will air a new television ad called "Hands" that highlights Barack's New Energy for America plan. The spot talks about investing in renewable energy like wind and solar, and developing more fuel-efficient cars. The plan will generate millions of new, high-paying jobs.

Hands starts on Saturday and will run through the Olympics in all 50 states.

[EMBED]

In other news, Barack revealed in an interview with Entertainment Weekly, that his favorite superheroes at a younger age were Spiderman and Batman. "I was always into the Spider-Man/Batman model. The guys who have too many powers, like Superman, that always made me think they weren't really earning their superhero status. It's a little too easy. Whereas Spider-Man and Batman, they have some inner turmoil. They get knocked around a little bit."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Vacations are Good (2008-08-09 08:29)

Hula dancers from the Japanese city of Obama known as the "Obama Girls" traveled to Hawai'i to show their support for the islands' native son.

[EMBED]

Barack told a crowd of 4,000 in Honolulu he would be having a plate lunch, some shave ice and would be spending time on the beach with his family body-surfing and swimming. His main reason for visiting though is to visit his aged grandmother. He will also be visiting the family of his sister Maya Soetoro-Ng. Here's some video from Honolulu's KGMB News:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

David Miller (2008-08-09 10:48:00)

I wish Barack well, and love to see all the support he is getting!

TV Ad: Celebrity and Bear Hugs (2008-08-11 07:56)

Obama for America released today the television ad "Embrace" that gives a humorous response to McCain's "celebrity" ads.

The ad features a number of McCain-Bush bear hugs, hence the title, and suggests that McCain is the greatest celebrity in Washington here he has been a favorite of special interest lobbies.

[EMBED] e

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gov. Mark Warner to deliver Convention Keynote Address (2008-08-13 10:04)

Some possible insight today in the choice of former Virginia Gov. Mark Warner to deliver the keynote address on Aug. 26 at the Democratic Convention in Denver.

Virginia is one of the main battleground states, where both candidates have been battling in the polls. There are about 11 other states that are viewed as "toss-ups" at the current time.

Here is the campaign statement released today.

MARK WARNER TO DELIVER CONVENTION KEYNOTE ADDRESS ON TUESDAY, AUG. 26th

CHICAGO - The Obama for America campaign announced today that former Virginia Governor Mark Warner will deliver the keynote address at the 2008 Democratic Convention on Tuesday, August 26th, the second night of the Convention.

An innovative businessman known for his ability to work with Republicans, Democrats and Independents, campaign officials said that Warner's vision for Virginia and his leadership style echoed the Convention's theme of Americans coming together for change.

"Barack Obama believes you can't have a strong economy when you have a weak middle class," said Obama Campaign Manager David Plouffe. "Millions of Americans are struggling to get by, forced to make impossible choices about their future and the future of their families. Tuesday's Convention program will feature the voices of Americans who share Obama's concerns and strongly support his detailed economic plan to grow the economy, create jobs, restore fairness, and expand opportunity. As Governor of Virginia, Warner used his experience in business to help deliver jobs and hope to the citizens of Virginia. His work creating jobs in Southwest and Southside Virginia is a model for the rest of the Country. Like Barack Obama, Mark Warner is not afraid to challenge the status quo to bring people together and get things moving. It's that kind of spirit and innovation that resulted in his selection as keynote speaker on a night when we will be discussing how to renew America's promise."

Warner, a candidate for the United States Senate in Virginia, will speak on Tuesday night of the Democratic Convention. The theme of Tuesday's night program at the Convention is Renewing America's Promise.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama responds to Inflation News (2008-08-14 09:35)

Sen. Barack Obama today released a statement on the new government report on skyrocketing inflation.

Inflation is usually associated with an "overheated" economy i.e., one that is growing too rapidly. Even in the case of an expanding economy, inflation can be problematic.

However, most indications show that the economy now is contracting, or at least it is slowing down dramatically. So we have the compounded problem of a weak economy and rising gas and food prices.

The Bush debt spending strategy is not working.

Barack has a long-term solution that includes increasing energy independence and investing in green technology that will create millions of new jobs.

However, to relieve those who are getting hit the hardest by soaring inflation, Barack also has a short-term assistance program that will provide, for example, an immediate $1,000 energy rebate.

Here's the statement released this morning.

Today, we got the truly shocking news that inflation hit a 17-year high of 5.6 percent as the prices of gas and groceries continued to soar. Families have now lost an entire decade's worth of raises to inflation as weekly earnings adjusted for inflation lie below the level they reached in August 1998. While Senator McCain apparently thinks the economy is doing just fine, and refuses to support any meaningful, short-term relief for America's struggling families, Barack Obama has proposed an Emergency Economic Plan that would immediately put $1,000 in the pocket of families to help them pay for gasoline, groceries and other necessities. In addition, the Obama plan includes $50 billion in immediate measures to save more than one million jobs from being lost. America cannot afford four more years of a policy that puts tax cuts for the wealthy and corporations ahead of the real change America's middle-class families need.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Dan Cheek (2008-08-14 11:55:00)

McCain's statement on the economic inflation:

"Everything is fine. Or not. I don't really know what inflation means, anyway. I was in a war! 9/11!"

-Dan Cheek

Video: Barack II (2008-08-14 16:13)

Ok, you've waited patiently and now it's finally arrived – Barack II!

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Surf's Up (2008-08-15 17:37)

Photos of possibly America's first body-surfing president.

X

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., body surfs at Sandy Beach in Honolulu, Hawaii, Thursday, Aug. 14, 2008. Sen. Obama is in Hawaii for a vacation. (AP Photo/Alex Brandon)

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

What Polls don't show (2008-08-16 07:28)

When you read about polling data this early in the race, it's good to keep in mind one thing.

All polling groups survey only people they think of as likely to vote, or as already registered to vote. In most cases, they select names of folk who have voted in the last election or in the last two elections.

So, if a campaign is doing a good job at registering new voters and activating registered people who haven't voted lately, the pollsters will often miss these folk. George W. Bush, for all his faults, managed to really turn voters out on election day in 2004 resulting in a surprisingly strong victory.

Tracking polls especially survey a small group of likely voters over and over again to see how their opinions of the candidates change. To some extent they are more or less a referendum among that group of people based on the latest news coverage. However, they do not really account for changes in voter demographics.

So the final outcome depends a great deal on activity going on behind the scenes as both campaigns attempt to register and enlist new voters, and on election day make sure all their supporters go to vote.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-08-18 22:32:00)

President of the United States should be held to a higher standard!

I dropped out of high school (10th Grade) To join the United States army. I scored so high on my entrance exam that I was given a choice as to what (MOS) Job I wanted in the Army.

I chose The Nike Hercules Missile system as a crewman and nuclear weapon specialist for surface to air missiles. After successful boot camp I went into my Advanced Individual Training school. (AIT) The time was January of 1976 The school was in Fort Bliss Texas. When it came time to move into a Top Secret classroom environment, I was the last person given a Top Secret clearance and had to sweat making it into the class.

The reason and the point I am making was that the United states government had to send government officials in to my old neighborhood in Anchorage Alaska, where I had lived and talk to many of my neighbors and friends to determine if I had Ever used drugs or alcohol and to determine my character. I later found out that there were two individuals that knocked on residence doors and asked specifically about Marijuana use and other drugs.

During my work with nuclear weapons (I was 17 years old) I was continually in front of the Battery Commander and asked specific questions regarding drug use and or Past or present Alcohol abuse. If a person in my unit were even suspected of past or present use of drugs regardless of when it occurred he or she would not be permitted to work with or around Nuclear weapons.

The army regulation is AR50-5.

My question is how in the world can a commander in chief (The President of the United States) Admit to past drug use and be allowed the entire nuclear arsenal that the Military commands at his disposal.

As a footnote: In my Barracks were the photos on the wall of the chain of command. Starting with my 1st sergeant and going to the commander in chief. (The president) This is still in every Barracks in the Military!

If I would have been denied my clearance, and at the top of the chain of command was a person who admitted to drug use, How would I have felt. Better yet, how does the commander in chief circumvent this military law? Even if he is a civilian commander of the Armed forces how can you be allowed to control this nuclear arsenal after admitting to past drug use when no military personnel would even be allowed to get near one?

Obama raises $51 million (2008-08-16 10:15)

Obama for America announced today that it had raised a cool $51 million in July far outstripping opponent John McCain's $27 million for the same period.

The Obama campaign has $65.8 million cash on hand for the start of August, while the Democratic National Committee has $28.5 million available for a total of $94.3 million.

McCain and the RNC had $96 million cash on hand for August mainly due to the RNC's superior stockpile at the end of the primary season. However, in July the DNC raised $27.7 million compared to nearly $26 million for the RNC.

Some of the cash on hand must be spent before the party convention of the respective candidate.

More than 65,000 New Donors Contributed to the Obama Campaign in July, Bringing July Total to Over $51 Million

Obama campaign has $65.8 million on hand

CHICAGO – Senator Barack Obama’s campaign announced today that more than 65,000 new donors contributed to the Obama campaign during the month of July, bringing the total raised for the month to over $51 million. More than 2 million people have now contributed to the campaign.

“The 65,000 new donors to the Obama campaign demonstrate just how strongly the American people are looking to fundamentally change business as usual in Washington. We are proud of the millions of volunteers and more than two million donors to the Obama campaign who will provide the backbone of our campaign to put America back on track and reject the old politics and failed Bush policies, which is all John McCain is offering,” said David Plouffe, campaign manager of Obama for America.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Donors vs. Dollars (2008-08-17 08:49)

Barack Obama outperformed John McCain in fundraising last month, but more important in my view is the number of contributors that donated to his campaign.

Overall, Obama has 2 million contributors compared to John McCain’s 600,000. And polls indicate Obama’s supporters are much more enthusiastic than McCain’s. That will likely translate to more people volunteering for Obama and more people enthusiastically talking him up to family and friends.

Social networkers know that its those best endorsements comes from someone in one’s own network of trusted family, friends and colleagues. A recommendation from the latter is usually more effective than one from a stranger knocking at one’s door or calling on the phone. Television ads usually work best with those who have not been getting sufficient input from their real life networks.

The large base of supporters also bodes well when looked at purely from the money standpoint. Many of Obama’s donors give small amounts and thus are unlikely to reach legal contribution limits. Wealthy donors tend to give the maximum amount in one shot during big fundraising parties were they have an opportunity to meet the candidate personally. Obama can look forward to repeated donations from his mass of middle class and lower income contributors.

[EMBED]

Camp Obama in Austin, Texas.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack visits Reno (2008-08-17 17:28)

Sen. Barack Obama returned to the campaign trail today speaking at Earl Wooster High School in Reno, Nevada. Among the subjects Barack discussed was the housing crisis, which has hit Nevada particularly hard.

Here is a video of Barack's opening remarks.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-09-20 06:22:00)

Would the AIG bailout save Wall Street and the financial markets? I don't know. I do believe the cost of this bailout will be born mainly by the middle class. Is there another way to save the markets without harm to the middle class? Are there not other companies in similar straights? Isn't it the declining housing market that has lead to the recent bank failures? Will this help eliminate the record number of foreclosures? Is this actually the best way to improve the economy? Could this $85,000,000,000 be better spent?

What if instead, Congress immediately passed legislation to provide help to people who actually pay the mortgages? Wouldn't this create not just incentive to pay the mortgages, but also increase the ability to make the payment? I would like to see Congress consider an immediate (retroactive to the beginning of this year) bill to make the first $2000 payment per month of a primary residence mortgage 100 % deductible for individuals or couples with an income limit for eligibility. This does not affect in any way the other mortgage related deductions, such as interest payment.

The amount of Adjusted Gross Income and the deduction could be similar to:

Single Married Monthly mortgage limit

<35,000 <70,000 $2000

<40,000 <80,000 $1750

<45,000 <90,000 $1500

...

>or = 85,000 >Or = $170,000 $0

However, I am less concerned with the actual income limits than with a move to drive the economy by empowering the middle class. If all these $24000 annual reductions of taxable income are assumed to be in the 25 % tax bracket, then this becomes a $6,000 tax saving per individual or couple. For the same number as proposed for AIG - $85,000,000,000 divided by 6000 means this can be used by over 14 million tax payers before it costs more. Considering Fannie, Freddie, the banks and other institutions, this is much less expensive.

Can't we address the problem? People cannot afford their mortgages, demand for and values of houses are declining. Instead the current proposal addresses the symptom, which is companies who bought mortgage based securities are going broke. Solve the problem and the symptoms disappear. The assets of the companies recover, crisis averted.

Tom Strickland

Avoiding the "Toughness" Lure (2008-08-18 12:13)

We've seen it happen before. It's a common Republican tactic. Focus on issue around security, war, terrorism and the like and lure the ever-willing Democrat into your territory.

Lately though the model hasn't worked that well. At least not in the more regional races. Republican incumbents have been defeated recently in strongholds where Democrats could not have imagined winning just several years ago. However, it is still a question as whether this strategy will or will not work on a national level. After all, the president is commander in chief. Maybe it's just the fact that the Democrats have a tendency of letting themselves be lured into these traps that is perceived as a weakness.

John McCain is noticeably stepping up talk about his Vietnam war experiences and I expect that he and the RNC will keep "toughness" and "tough guy" issues as the theme of the election, trying to keep the economy and other matters off the table.

What are the predictable responses to the Republican moves? Select a tough 'good ol' boy' VP running mate, appear often in public with military flag officers, hold more security forums; basically do everything to help the Republicans turn the election into what will simply be a referendum on who is the more conservative candidate. Guess who would win that kind of race!

[EMBED]

Barack in Reno

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack on Working Women in Albuquerque (2008-08-18 17:19)

Sen. Barack Obama today held a round table talk at the City Government Library in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Speaking on the subject of working women, Barack recalled how his own late mother had to work while attending school when he was a child. At certain times, the family needed food stamps to put enough on the table. Barack promised to fight for pay equity for single working mothers, like his own mother. Currently women make only 77 cents for every dollar that a man makes for the same work.

Here is part of what Barack discussed at the round table.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

VP choice expected this week (2008-08-19 11:54)

The media is reporting that Barack Obama will announce his choice for vice presidential running mate at the end of this week possibly as early as Wednesday. However, the media got it wrong when they thought the candidates would announce before the start of the Olympics.

This time though there are reports that Obama staffers at the Chicago headquarters have been hastily preparing to transition in the Obama's pick.

Speculation, of course, is running wild with most commentators placing their bets on Joe Biden, Evan Bayh, Bill Richardson or Kathleen Sebelius. I still think that Hillary is a slight favorite, but her husband Bill might have hurt her chances. Barack's weakness has been with the more strident Hillary supporters. By choosing her, it's hard to imagine they could still oppose the Illinois senator.

Most people think that John McCain will wait until after the Democratic Convention to announce his choice in an attempt to upstage any "bounce" that Barack might gain from all the attention.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Veepstakes: What Happened To Sebelius? (2008-08-19 15:23)

There's some chatter on the net that Obama for America bought the site obamasebelius.com and take that as indication that Sebelius will be the pick. They based their views on the fact that this site has the same domain name company and name server as barackobama.com, Sen. Obama's official primary site. However, I've found a few other Obama-Clinton sites and an Obama-Biden site with the same setup.

About Kathleen Sebelius

Read the Article at HuffingtonPost

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Caroline Kennedy for VP? (2008-08-20 11:12)

There's a lot of buzz out there that Caroline Kennedy may be a surprise pick for Sen. Barack Obama's vice presidential running mate.

An Obama staffer said that Obama has already made his pick and it was going to be a big surprise. None of the people generally under consideration.

Will update soon.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-08-20 15:25:00)

I am really struggling with a decision on this campaign. I would definitely voted for Mrs. Clinton. I really do not want to vote for Obama. I have decided that if he picks Senator Clinton as his running mate I would still vote for him. I will not vote for him if he does not pick her.

Three Times: Barack's Tax Cuts for the Middle Class (2008-08-20 15:29)

Obama for America announced today that it is releasing a new 30 second television highlighting Barack's tax plan. Unlike Sen. McCain whose plan gives the greatest share of tax cuts to big corporations, Sen. Obama's proposal will give middle class families three times the McCain tax cuts. Hence the TV ad is named "Three Times."

About 100 million Americans will receive no relief at all from McCain's tax proposal. Three Times will air in Colorado, Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Virginia beginning today.

You can watch the ad below, provided by Barack's official YouTube site.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack with Mark Warner in Virginia (2008-08-20 22:48)

Barack Obama appeared in Virginia today together with former Virginia Governor Mark Warner.

[EMBED]

On Saturday, Barack will hold a rally in Illinois at the same location that he announced his candidacy in 2007. It appears that reliable campaign sources have stated that Obama's vice president pick will also be present there with the presumptive Democratic nominee.

Still, no reliable leaks on when Obama's choice will be announced or who the lucky winner is.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

McCain's Housing Crisis: Losing Track of Dream Homes (2008-08-21 12:37)

John McCain thinks the Bush economy is just fine, and vows to follow the same track. Not surprising given the fact that he owns seven homes worth $13 million averaging out to about $1.85 million each.

Many Americans though have had their homes foreclosed due to the mortgage meltdown. McCain said that he had lost track of how many homes he owned when questioned by reporters today.

Indeed, McCain probably wants to avoid the mortgage crisis altogether as it might bring back memories of his days as one of the "Keating Five" when he was censured for exercising "poor judgment" during that savings and loan crisis.

The Obama campaign released a rapid response TV ad on McCain's response.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-08-22 07:44:00)

So Obama camp - where is the "change" all I see is the same old mud slinging and promises to do it better. Give me a break!

Andrew Peace (2008-08-28 09:11:00)

I noticed you don't post sources or references. Let me correct your inaccuracies:

"John McCain thinks the Bush economy is just fine, and vows to follow the same track."

No. He said that it was "fundamentally strong", which it is. Go to Google Finance and look at a graph of the Dow Jones Industrial Average. At the end of the Clinton Administration, it skyrocketed, and has continued to be strong. Also, unemployment has been lower under Bush. Go ahead and download the PDF from the census bureau.

Also, John McCain owns zero homes. His wife and family own a total of eight.

On my blog, I refute this argument. And I use sources.

Obama is just as out of touch as McCain

That said, I love what you are doing here. You are speaking out in favor of Obama and trying to educate. Keep it up! Try to convince your audience by using sources. I love to see both sides in an equal battle.

We should blog-debate sometime :D

Peace out!

Anonymous (2008-11-02 08:51:00)

The economy is not Bush's fault,/remember Sept 11/ it's an international problem. As far as the Dow Jones, thats simply a market correction. If Obama becomes Pres. expect higher taxes, a weakening of our military, and an economy that spins farther out of control. GOD HELP US ALL!

Emmy Herrebrugh (2008-11-02 18:38:00)

Obama's polls are strong. His voter turnout is weak. McCain can win if we ALL GO OUT AND VOTE FOR HIM! Don't just cheer him on from the couch, but VOTE! We CANNOT let Obama ruin this great nation during this already troublesome time! McCain '08! PLEASE PLEASE GOP SUPPORTERS...Don't forget to VOTE!!!

Video Roundup on Thursday (2008-08-21 18:29)

Latinos for Obama meeting in Aurora, Colorado with former Secretary of Energy

[EMBED]

Barack talks in Chester, Virginia on Aug. 21 about John McCain's views on the economy.

[EMBED]

McCain has said that a "rich person" would make about $5 million a year, possibly people owning seven houses like himself. No wonder he thinks the 'economic fundamentals' under the Bush administration are "strong."

For ordinary one-house people, the economy may not be so great.

The new TV ad "Backyard" exposes John McCain's support for the Yucca nuclear dump site in Nevada, while opposing nuclear waste in his own home state of Arizona.

[EMBED]

In other news, it has been reported (let's see) that Barack will announce his VP pick by text message some time tomorrow.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Madoca/Brasil (2008-11-05 10:25:00)

Sir Obama presidente! Parabéns! Muitas, muitas e muitas felicidades!

(2008-08-21 18:29)

Latinos for Obama meeting in Aurora, Colorado with former Secretary of Energy

Houses (2008-08-22 11:27)

Philadelphia residents talk about the McCain housing dilemma i.e., what to do when you have so many houses you can't keep track of them all.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

chris (2008-10-03 00:09:00)

vote obama www.sevenquest.info

Joe (2008-10-28 11:26:00)

I really think Obama is the right fit at this time of crisis. John McCain is hugging the corporate world, because they will be giving him multi-million dollar on top of the billion dollars he has.

Vote Obama Obama 08

Scoping Ohio (and Indiana) (2008-08-22 13:21)

Since I made my last analysis of battleground states, it still looks like Ohio is the most important of these targets. And a new state can be added to the list – Indiana.

Indiana is sandwiched between Ohio and Obama's home state of Illinois, and it would be relatively easy to reach both Ohio and Indiana from the main campaign headquarters.

The race in Ohio still looks very tight and I think the campaign has a better chance there than in Florida, although that could change. The Democratic governor in Ohio compared to Florida's Republican governor is very helpful. Both states had some significant voting irregularities in the last two presidential elections.

Ohio is close enough to Illinois for road trips by dedicated Obama volunteers as well as paid staff.

Northwest Indiana is part of the Chicago Metropolitan Area. People regularly commute between both places especially from Indiana into Chicago for work. Given that Obama's ground support is likely strongest in his home state of Illinois, it is very practical to spill over into Indiana and make a run at this usually Republican-leaning state.

In both states, Obama will have to reach out to very similar populations consisting of working class people who have been hit hard by recent economic woes. Evan Bayh is a good possible VP choice for targeting Indiana, while Gov. Ted Strickland would be logical for Ohio. Hillary Clinton and her husband are very popular with the swing voting segment in these states.

X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X

O

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

NBC: Bayh, Kaine not chosen for VP (2008-08-22 17:36)

According to NBC News, Indiana Sen. Evan Bayh and Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine have been told they were not selected as Barack Obama's vice presidential running mate.

Now it seems unlikely that they would announce the selection this late and some news agencies are saying that the announcement is scheduled for early tomorrow morning. There have been complaints though that all this suspense building is taking away from focusing on important campaign issues.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-08-29 19:30:00)

McCain is too old and his opponent is too young. Check out mccain72.blogspot.com and discuss!

Anonymous (2008-09-13 01:49:00)

There's nothing wrong in fighting against predatory lenders, in fact it's good. I commend him for his future plan. But Obama should take into consideration the acts of lending industries before taking the necessary action. Not all lending industries are predatory or steals money from working people. He should study first the case of these industries before giving the act.

Post Courtesy of Personal Money Store

Professional Blogging Team

Feed Back: 1-866-641-3406

Home: <http://personalmoneystore.com/NoFaxPaydayLoans.html>

Blog: <http://personalmoneystore.com/moneyblog/>

Anonymous (2008-09-23 19:47:00)

I love this shirt:

http://www.cafepress.com/McNastyDawg_03.309549669

Nadia Ali (2008-10-14 04:13:00)

If obama work for peace then i vote it. otehr wise...NO

Anonymous (2008-10-21 20:24:00)

I have a website here that really is great!

<http://www.theSmallCapAlert.com> - It's a Blog about investing that speaks to you in plain english, but also, they have a newsletter that they send out with Market updates, company profiles and other ideas surrounding the Stock Market.

Anonymous (2008-10-22 14:00:00)

Berg stated that he filed Requests for Admissions on September 15, 2008 with a response by way of answer or objection had to be served within thirty [30] days. No response to the Requests for Admissions was served by way of response or objection. Thus, all of the Admissions directed to Obama and the DNC are deemed "ADMITTED." Therefore, Obama must immediately withdraw his candidacy for President.

OBAMA - Admitted:

1. I was born in Kenya.
2. I am a Kenya "natural born" citizen.
3. My foreign birth was registered in the State of Hawaii.
4. My father, Barrack Hussein Obama, Sr. admitted Paternity of me.
5. My mother gave birth to me in Mombosa, Kenya.
6. My mother's maiden name is Stanley Ann Dunham a/k/a Ann Dunham.
7. The COLB [Certification of Live Birth] posted on the website "Fightthesmears.com" is a forgery.
8. I was adopted by a Foreign Citizen.
9. I was adopted by Lolo Soetoro, M.A. a citizen of Indonesia.
10. I was not born in Hawaii.
11. I was not born at the Queens Medical Center in Hawaii.
12. I was not born at Kapi'olani Medical Center for Women and Children in Hawaii.
13. I was not born in a Hospital in Hawaii.
14. I am a citizen of Indonesia.
15. I never took the "Oath of Allegiance" to regain my U.S. Citizenship status.
16. I am not a "natural born" United States citizen.
17. My date of birth is August 4, 1961.
18. I traveled to Pakistan in 1981 with my Pakistan friends.
19. In 1981, I went to Indonesia on my way to Pakistan.
20. Pakistan was a no travel zone in 1981 for American Citizens.
21. In 1981, Pakistan was not allowing American Citizens to enter their country.
22. I traveled on my Indonesian Passport to Pakistan.
23. I renewed my Indonesian Passport on my way to Pakistan.
24. My senior campaign staff is aware I am not a "natural born" United States Citizen.
25. I am proud of my Kenya Heritage.
26. My relatives have requested changes to the portion of my birth certificate that identifies my first name.
27. My relatives have requested changes to the portion of my birth certificate that identifies my last name.
28. My relatives have requested changes to the portion of my birth certificate that identifies my place of birth.
29. I requested changes to the portion of my birth certificate that identifies my first name.
30. I requested changes to the portion of my birth certificate that identifies my last name.
31. I requested changes to the portion of my birth certificate that identifies my place of birth.
32. The document identified as my Indonesian School record from Fransiskus Assisi School in Jakarta, Indonesia is genuine.
33. I went to a Judge in Hawaii to have my name changed.
34. I went to a Senator and/or Congressman or other public official in Hawaii to have my name changed.
35. I had a passport issued to me from the Government of Indonesia.
36. The United States Constitution does not allow for a Person to hold the office of President of the United States unless that person is a "natural born" United States citizen.
37. I am ineligible pursuant to the United States Constitution to serve as President and/or Vice President of the United States.

38. I never renounced my citizenship as it relates to my citizenship to the country of Indonesia.
39. I never renounced my citizenship as it relates to my citizenship to the country of Kenya.
40. I am an Attorney who specializes in Constitutional Law.
41. Kenya was a part of the British Colonies at the time of my birth.
42. Kenya did not become its own Republic until 1963.
43. I am not a "Naturalized" United States Citizen.
44. I obtained $200 Million dollars in campaign funds by fraudulent means.
45. I cannot produce a "vault" (original) long version of a birth certificate showing my birth in Hawaii.
46. My "vault" (original) long version birth certificate shows my birth in Kenya.
47. The only times I was to a Hospital in Hawaii was for check-ups or medical treatments for illnesses.
48. Queens Medical Center in Honolulu, Hawaii does not have any record of my mother, Stanley Ann Dunham (Obama) giving birth to me.
49. Kapi'olani Medical Center for Women and Children in Honolulu, Hawaii does not have any record of my mother, Stanley Ann Dunham (Obama) giving birth to me.
50. I was born in the Coast Province Hospital in Mombasa, Kenya.
51. I represented on my State Bar application in Illinois that I never used any other name other than Barack Hussein Obama.
52. I went by the name Barry Soetoro in Indonesia.
53. My Indonesian school records are under the name of Barry Soetoro.
54. I took an Oath to uphold the United States Constitution when admitted to the State Bar of Illinois to practice Law.
55. I took an Oath to uphold the United States Constitution when I was Sworn into my United States Senate Office.
56. I hold dual citizenship with at least one other Country besides the United States of America.

DNC - Admitted:

1. The DNC nominated Barrack Hussein Obama as the Democratic Nominee for President.
2. The DNC has not vetted Barrack Hussein Obama.
3. The DNC did not have a background check performed on Barrack Hussein Obama.
4. The DNC did not verify Barrack Hussein Obama's eligibility to serve as President of the United States.
5. The DNC admits Barrack Hussein Obama was born in Kenya.
6. The DNC admits Barrack Hussein Obama is not a "natural born" United States citizen.
7. The DNC admits Barrack Hussein Obama was not born in Hawaii.
8. The DNC admits they have not inquired into Barrack Hussein Obama's citizenship status.
9. The DNC admits they have a duty to properly vet the Democratic Nominee for President.
10. The DNC admits Lolo Soetoro, M.A., an Indonesian citizen adopted Barrack Hussein Obama.
11. The DNC admits the Credentials Committee has been aware of this lawsuit since August 22, 2008 as the lawsuit was faxed to our Washington D.C. Office on August 22, 2008.
12. The DNC admits their Credentials Committee failed to verify and/or inquire into the credentials of Barack Hussein Obama to serve as the President of the United States.
13. The DNC admits their Credential Committee's Report failed to address the issues of Barack Hussein Obama's ineligibility to serve as President of the United States.
14. The DNC admits Howard Dean, Chair Person has and had knowledge Barack Hussein Obama was born in Kenya and ineligible to serve as the President of the United States.
15. The DNC admits Plaintiff and all Democratic citizens of the United States have been personally injured as a result of not having a qualified Democratic Presidential Nominee to cast their votes upon.
16. The DNC admits Plaintiff and all citizens of the United States have a Constitutional Right to vote for the President of the United States and to have two (2) qualified candidates of which to choose from.
17. The DNC admits Plaintiff and all citizens of the United States have a Constitutional right to have a properly vetted Democratic Presidential Nominee of which to cast their vote.
18. The DNC admits an FBI background check is not performed on the Presidential or Vice Presidential Candidates.
19. The DNC admits the United States Constitution does not allow for a Person to hold the office of President of the United States unless that person is a "natural born" United States citizen.
20. The DNC admits they collected donations on behalf of Barack Hussein Obama for his Presidential campaign.

21. The DNC admits Plaintiff and Democratic citizens donated money based on false representations that Barack Hussein Obama was qualified to serve as the President of the United States.
22. The DNC admits if Barack Hussein Obama is elected as President and allowed to serve as President of the United States in violation of our Constitution, it will create a Constitutional crisis.
23. The DNC admits Barack Hussein Obama took an Oath to uphold the United States Constitution.
24. The DNC admits allowing a person who is not a "natural born" citizen to serve as President of the United States violates Plaintiff's rights to due process of law in violation of the United States Constitution.
25. The DNC admits allowing a person who is not a "natural born" citizen to serve as President of the United States violates Plaintiff's rights to Equal Protection of the laws in violation of the United States Constitution.
26. The DNC admits the function of the DNC is to secure a Democratic Presidential Candidate who will protect Democratic citizen's interests, fight for their equal opportunities and fight for justice for all Americans.
27. The DNC admits the Democratic National Committee has been promoting Barack Hussein Obama's Presidential election knowing he was ineligible to serve as President of the United States.

Shelly (2008-10-26 12:02:00)

Obama is making promises that are nearly impossible to keep. Mc Cain is not to old he is experienced. Only today Obama is heading to California to seek the Latino vote. Maybe he should check to see how many of those Latinos are even able to vote. Our borders in California are weak and a large population of latinos are illegal and having children and "sucking off our system"..only one of many problems with this country. Obama wants to give give give...who is paying for all this "giving"..Our national budget is a joke, unemployment is at an all time high..basic like groceries and gas are rediculously high..His helath care plan is a joke..who is going to pay for it...He promies, promises promsies...you can't "write checks" if you have nothing in the bank..Obama appeals to the blue collar population..everyone wants "freebies" but who pays for them?...the people that educate themselves, work hard make over 250k per year and are taxed to support all these programs for people who have the same opportunity as anyone else. Nope! no Obama!..He scares the hell out of me!!

Press confirms Joe Biden as VP Pick (2008-08-22 21:58)

The Associated Press, CNN, MSNBC and Fox News are all confirming that Sen. Joe Biden will be Sen. Barack Obama's pick for VP running mate claiming unnamed Democratic sources. If true, this would preempt the text messaging surprise promised by the Obama campaign.

Secret Service have reportedly been dispatched to pick up Biden, but media coverage shows the house surrounded by reporters.

Biden is one of the most experienced senators with expertise in foreign policy.

More analysis later. However, we should note that no official announcement has been made yet.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-08-23 14:14:00)

This is very exciting news, and they are a real powerhouse team together. Looking for progress and change to follow!

Denise Michaels (2008-08-24 08:23:00)

If you're a Democrat you already know this election season is historic on many levels. What may not be clear to many Americans is that Hillary Clinton and her supporters have not gone away graciously or united the party even though Barack Obama clearly has more delegates and super delegates for the Democratic nomination when Clinton "suspended" her campaign June 3rd.

It may surprise you to learn Clinton supporters have mounted a nasty fight - complete with lies and manufactured conspiracy theories to create havoc at the Democratic Convention which begins in Denver this Monday, August 25th. Clinton could've have told these supporters emphatically to get behind the candidacy of Obama - but she failed to do that - so great is her ambition to be President no matter what the American people say they want.

After fighting and pushing - as of Friday 8-22, both Senator Obama and Senator Clinton will be placed in nomination in Denver and a roll call vote will take place on the convention floor. Some Clinton supporters don't seem ready to deal with the fact that their candidate simply didn't get enough votes. So they fought on - putting the election of a Democrat in the White House at serious risk.

The Super Delegate vote at the convention and will choose who becomes the nominee of the Democratic Party. Super Delegates are mostly elected officials and party operatives obliged to consider the opinions of their constituents.

If you don't want the convention next week hijacked by the candidate who did not get the greatest number of votes and delegates tell them what you think and how to vote. They're supposed to vote in accordance with their constituents - so be sure to tell the delegates in your state.

Click on this link and let your Super Delegate hear from you. This spring's primaries were hard-fought to bring Barack Obama so far. We actually have to chance to have a president who will make positive changes in the way politics are played.

Here's the link.

<http://lobbydelegates.com/>

FineArtVideoBlog.com (2008-08-26 11:16:00)

Have you heard? BarackObiden.com

BarackObiden.com

Anonymous (2008-08-27 11:49:00)

Check out this cool T-Shirt with the CNN headline "Clinton: 'no way, no how, no McCain'":

http://www.cnn.com/tshirt/?hash=3be81bd0afb7a57e5adfc1722167927c&return_uri=http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/08/26/dnc.main/index.html

Chris Dailey (2008-08-27 12:29:00)

Please visit my blog if you are open to intelligent debate aimed at helping me understand the Obama phenomenon.

<http://chrisdailey.wordpress.com>

Disgruntled (2008-08-28 03:03:00)

I find this piece enlightening, informative and brave. I believe that people should take a look at this.

Top Three things to Know Before Voting OBAMA:

- (1) Obama needs to prove he is a US citizen - <http://tinyurl.com/Prove-UR-US-OK>
- (2) Obama is not an alternative to right wing McCain
- (3) Read the book "Obama the Postmodern Coup" to see he will support war and repressive social policies bath (2008-08-29 23:41:00)

Fun page here around the theme of the presidential race in the USA

<http://www.wdbathrooms.co.uk/acatalog/Shower-or-Bath.html>

All Inclusive Family Vacations (2008-08-30 12:41:00)

Now that the cat is out of the bag. What does the American public have to look forward to. More money for the rich and who knows what for the poor.

Anonymous (2008-09-01 03:58:00)

Caught this GREAT song and video on youtube about "rocking the vote" and thought I would pass it on because it is what it seems to be going on in America right now.

Cool story...underdog musical artist sweeps nation with tune!!!

you should check it out at:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nBrKceZXoeE>

Its called ROCK THE VOTE by JK Citizen. This dude has it going on!!!

Anonymous (2008-09-02 10:53:00)

href="http://palinobama.blogspot.com/" target="_blank">PILF.vs.VPILF

Anonymous (2008-09-03 09:52:00)

who should i vote for obama or mccain obama seems cool but i know nothing about eaither canadet

A Bitter White Male (2008-09-04 15:25:00)

BITTER WHITE FOLKS FOR OBAMA: A NEW BLOG

My family were part of the 41 million who migrated from the Appalachian/Southern region to the Midwestern states in the postwar period: precisely the demographic from which support for Obama (and progressive politics as such) is supposed to be non-existent. But it was the economic policies of Reagan and the Clinton and Bush dynasties that produced such atrocities as the 2,200 square miles of strip-mining in Appalachia that have put thousands out of work, reduced the average income to the level of Mexico and forced migration to the North in search of jobs. So of course Appalachian and Midwestern communities are "bitter" - and it cannot be denied that more than a few have been mislead into believing that these elites somehow hear their voices. With the increasingly patronizing tone of the Republicans however, many are becoming unconvinced - at least Obama speaks about the situation as it really is: as he put it in that same speech, "you can go into the toughest neighborhoods, you know working-class lunch-pail folks, you'll find Obama enthusiasts. And you can go into places where you think I'd be very strong and people will just be skeptical".

bitterwhitefolksforobama.blogspot.com/

budwhite (2008-09-08 09:11:00)

Great e-mail regarding the smears:

Dear Friend:

I received your email with the attachment about Sarah Palin. While this report might be scary and threatening to some, to me it sounds like the same the kind of trash written about Hillary Clinton, Bill Clinton and even Barack Obama. However, since the Clintons are no longer in the race we can leave them out. But what I wonder is why it's okay to say that Palin is a fundamentalist Christian but not okay to ask why Obama spent twenty years in the pews of Jeremiah Wright's intolerant church? And why is it okay to allege that Palin wants to destroy Alaska's wildlife but not okay to ask if Obama plans to support Hamas instead of Israel? And people can can accuse Palin of racism based on rumor and hearsay but not hold Obama accountable for playing the race card, quoting Malcolm X and accusing good people, particularly the Clintons, of racism. While I may not agree with Palin's politics, I am unmoved by the smear campaign launched against her. Please do not send me any more political emails. While this e-mail goes to great lengths to appear to be politically correct and to be doing me a favor, it's actually savaging someone's reputation based on shoddy evidence or outright lies. After forty years of voting for the Democratic candidate for president, I want you to know that these sexist and hateful lies against Sarah Palin you forwarded go against the reason I am a Democrat. Therefore, under no circumstance will I be voting for Obama.

Best Regards

tristanichabod (2008-09-09 09:48:00)

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Jt58T4-lRvg> - check out

this video!! it's eye-opening

Anonymous (2008-09-09 13:16:00)

Obama turn up the heat even hotter on unknown pallin, Send her back to nowheresville crying, never to be heard from again.
Cassey frm PA

thepplway (2008-09-10 16:25:00)

beware the Republican may be use Osama's tape again

Thanks to visit my blog!

Anonymous (2008-09-11 04:58:00)

I sleep well knowing that, with Obama, our nation will make the changes necessary to improve quality of life for us all. And sleeping well begins with comfy pajamas - Ojamas.

nijd (2008-09-14 07:57:00)

I like OBAMA a lot even though I'm Asian but I'm extremely aware of US Elections. I'm looking forward to the winning of Sen. Obama. I hope you won't dislike Asian migrants.

I extremely dislike those who creates blooper videos of Obama, especially this one. <http://www.linkbucks.com/link/f5e56e82> which was uploaded on youtube. Please comment on this blooper video to show your support to Sen. Obama any idea who's leading the popular vote at the moment?

Lion (2008-09-15 15:07:00)

LUCAS (2008-09-15 17:11:00)

show ur support..

who will win? LOVES OBAMA

<http://www.cafepress.com/myelection08>

JKEJ Mission Viejo (2008-09-15 22:51:00)

Check this out! www.yeswecanaroundtheworld.com! Obama gets support from a young french artist/entrepreneur who is "for hope and for change"! He has designed Obama t-shirts in different languages (Spanish, Chinese, Korean, Vietnamese, Arabic, Hindi, Russian, Portuguese & more to come...I'm sure he'll take requests if you'll send him the translated phrase of the language of your choice!). You can order through cafepress.com & zazzle.com, check out his website! He's getting some good French press like ELLE magazine. Anyone knows how he might get some American press to pick him up?

Anonymous (2008-09-16 09:09:00)

Obama Lashes Out:

http://www.judiciaryreport.com/obama_lashes_out.htm

Anonymous (2008-09-17 09:53:00)

Visit <http://obama-4pres.blogspot.com/2008/09/obama.html> to see what Obama may look like after serving two terms as president. Real cool photo!

L2 (2008-09-21 11:39:00)

If anyone's interested in Obama gear, check out this Obama Fresh tee by Peoples Republic of Clothing:

www.prcclothing.bigcartel.com

It features an old school pic of Obama posing with his high school basketball team and comes in black or white in both men's and women's fits.

Bob Andersen (2008-09-23 21:51:00)

We must buy AIG 30 %

don't lend. Lending is the same as Mom I need to pay the electric bill. 5 months later, the same thing....

BUY, the US needs to own it's own homes.

Ragerage (2008-09-26 12:05:00)
ROCK THEM 'BAMA!

Anonymous (2008-09-27 00:47:00)
Put lipstick on George W Bush & you get Sarah Palin. Obama represents change, McCain the same failed policies.

rinosip (2008-09-27 13:06:00)
Mc Cain puso énfasis en sus años de experiencia política versus la juventud de Obama. Lo importante sería saber que aprendió de bueno en esos años.
Napoleón decía que su caballo había participado en todos sus combates y sin embargo nunca aprendió nada de estrategia.

rinosip (2008-09-27 13:08:00)
Mc Cain puso énfasis en sus años de experiencia política versus la juventud de Obama. Lo importante sería saber que aprendió de bueno en esos años.
Napoleón decía que su caballo había participado en todos sus combates y sin embargo nunca aprendió nada de estrategia.

Neema (2008-09-29 13:07:00)
I recently saw this video called yes we can @ http://digg.com/politics/Nat_Wolff_and_Natasha_Bedingfield_Obama_Video_Yes_we_can
It was done by a two young brothers singing and it supports Barack Obama. It is an inspirational video that is truly perfect for Obama.

Hille (2008-09-29 15:46:00)
Post your Obama or McCain photos to www.mobypicture.com and add election in the title or subject.
All election postings are aggregated on <http://mobypicture.com/?election>.
You can also get the widget for your site!
Just use the contact form on www.mobypicture.com and we'll send you the script!

Ali (2008-09-29 20:28:00)
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kYdsU8996zo>

Why a vote for Obama is un-American:

1. Life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness – Barack Obama supports abortions into the third month of development. Interesting how killing a three month old fetus is okay, but Sarah Palin shooting wolves (which by the way, is a way of life in Alaska) is viewed as evil. Tell the woman who cannot have children that the child moving in someone else's womb is not a living being.
2. Amendment #1 - Freedom of expression. How is it that Obama is idolized in the American media (he's a freaking lawyer people - they tell you what you want to hear), yet they unfairly attack McCain who has served our country with his own blood (after being tortured for five years) and serving in our senate since 1981. He has a record of crossing party lines and standing up to special interest groups. Yet, liberal media wingdings, like Whoopie Goldberg, can roll her eyes during an interview with McCain, while sipping tea and talking fashion with Michelle Obama. Doesn't everybody remember when Elisabeth Hasselbeck was grilled for exposing the fact that Michelle Obama would only answer questions she knew in advance. Why is it that the media didn't even question Whoopie's disrespect towards a guest? How about NOprah Winfrey??? I'm fine with the fact that she supports Obama. But when she says she will not use her show as a political platform, I expect her to keep her promises. Two weeks after the Sarah Palin debacle, where viewers questioned why she would not interview Palin, she invites Bill Clinton on her show? Isn't he like on tour right now preaching to the choir?...Then when questions emerge about a possible bailout for the financial markets, she invites "experts," who just happen to share Barack Obama's views. Hmmm....that doesn't sound right to me...stupid b. It's okay for Matt Damon to make fun of Palin, but heaven forbid someone pick on the black man. Just wait America, political correctness is going to take on a whole new meaning.
3. Amendment #2 – "A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed. (Right to bear arms.)" According to the NRA, Obama would ban the use of firearms for home defense (try taking away my guns Obama). He would also restore voting rights for five million criminals including those who have been convicted of using a gun to commit a violent crime. Check out nra.org.

4. Amendment #10 – “The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.” (Limited Government). Our Founding Fathers knew the danger of big government. Under Obama, government will control more and more of our lives. His health care plan – put everyone under the same plan. Hmmm...how can one argue with free health care?? I support health care for every American citizen. But everyone, under the same plan??? What happens, heaven forbid, if your parent or loved one is in dire need of a heart transplant? Do we wait while partisan politics fight over who has first dibs on that new heart? Do we let the civil rights lawyer, Barack Obama, decide that the illegal immigrant should be covered under our system?? That my neighbor's life is more important than mine?? John McCain understands the Health Care crisis, but he also understands the value of the free market system. He would provide each taxpayer with a tax credit to find their own provider, based on his or her family's medical needs. America is about freedom of choice...I know where I want to go if I break my arm, deliver my first child, or send my family, should I have to make a medical decision for them. Do not tell me which hospital I am assigned to...and believe me, once government gets their hands on health care, it will be all tied up in red tape. Just look at what's happening to the proposed financial bailout. People's retirements are in limbo and partisan politics have blocked any sort of agreement. Where's the personal responsibility...for government, who actually caused this mess, for banks, who gave out risky loans, for the individual homeowner who took out a bigger mortgage than they could afford, for the civil rights lawyers, who demanded all people, regardless of race, color, etc. etc. should receive a mortgage, even if it was one they could never afford.

Pumpkins33d (2008-09-30 09:19:00)

I also saw the naked brothers band video it was amazing because it speaks for all those too young to speak, such as myself. I am ready for change and that video inspired me to believe that there is a way of change for this country.

Pumpkins33d

ps here's the link

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mexxv9QbqN8>

Anonymous (2008-10-04 01:16:00)

Recently an insurance company nearly wind up....

A bank is nearly bankrupt.....

How it affect you? Did you buy insurance? Did you buy mini note or bonds?

They bailout trouble finance company, but they will not bail out your credit card bills.....You got no choice, but you can prevent similar things from happen again.....

Who fault?

The top management of the Public listed company (belong to "public") salary should be tied a portion of it to the shares price (IPO or ave 5 years).... so when the shares price drop, it don't just penalise the investors, but those who don't take care of the company.....If this rule is pass on, without any need of further regulation, all industries (as long as it is public listed) will be self regulated.....

Sign a petition to your favourite president candidate, congress member, House of representative again and ask for their views to comment on this, and what regulations they are going to raise for implementation.....If you agree on my point, please share with many people as possible....

<http://remindmyselfinstock.blogspot.com/>

Anonymous (2008-10-05 13:17:00)

I can't support Obama because he supports Shepard Fairey. A criminal who is one reason why the US spends over 10 billion per year on street clean nationwide. How can Obama praise an artist who puts stickers over stop signs risking the lives of citizens? Most people don't realize that the artist behind the HOPE poster is a criminal who has been arrested dozens of times for damaging public property. He was arrested after the Democrat convention this year for spray painting a wall. Not to the mention that he has stolen images from other artists.

Look it up. Know your facts. And ask why Obama would associate with Fairey.

M (2008-10-09 09:35:00)
www.helpobamasbrotha.com

Anonymous (2008-10-14 08:07:00)
I love this new Obama commercial just saw it today
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=utirJ1RHINs> send it to friends it sends the point home - YOU WILL AGREE good going guys

Dan Rust (2008-10-14 10:49:00)
For one person's perspective on how you can make a decision to support Obama AND vote for John McCain, see the YouTube video below:
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=PpsdKUQ1nKA>
Feel free to forward this to any "undecided" voters you know of. This will be a VERY close election and we need every single vote we can get. Demonizing Obama will get us a few votes (and also lose us at least a few votes) but I hope that a rational, positive thought process will persuade a few people who are still on the fence.
Regards, Dan

Anonymous (2008-10-17 03:03:00)
Hey, can you link my blog in your list.
<http://www.obamavideoblog.blogspot.com>
THANK YOU!

theplway (2008-10-17 07:35:00)
ok

FF (2008-10-20 07:32:00)
Now we just got to effectively fundraise!

Ojamas (2008-10-22 06:43:00)
Hey, Paul. It's been a while since you've posted anything. Hope all's well. Have you seen Obama pajamas? They're called Ojamas!

VA Loans (2008-10-22 13:49:00)
A little outdated. I guess that's okay though. I just wanted to say that with the market as it is, the only thing that i va loan work at is that obabma is purchase king. He needs to go to work. refinance

Anonymous (2008-10-22 18:21:00)
It's going to be a tough race. Hopefully Obama wins!!
http://www.pica7design.com/obama_shirt.html

Anonymous (2008-10-23 05:17:00)
The whole Obama/Biden Story compressed into a 2 minute music video
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dJOzGJpqZs>
All you need to know about American Politics 2008
Life Is Barack (And His Name Is Obama). Enjoy!

Elizabeth (2008-10-23 08:50:00)
I do not support Obama, because he does not meet the constitutional standard. He is not a natural born citizen. He offers a pretty, little story and refuses to refute these arguments in court. Don't vote for someone if you cannot answer this. Study the facts. Heavy research will prove. Whether you vote for him or not, you should know his record well so you can at least defend him. I dare you to research...somebody prove me wrong, because I hope I am. I'm tired of the Republicans, but WE still need to follow the constitution. If Barack Obama cannot fulfill the basic 3 requirements, he should withdraw. Any TRUE American would gladly and simply give the courts original documents. What is he hiding...?

www.restoretherepublic.com/elections/obama-dnc-admit-all-allegations-in-berg-v-obama

chris (2008-10-24 10:32:00)

biden was a very smart choice. i like his enthusiasm.

Obama Will Be Our Next President (2008-10-24 17:29:00)

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SjjOG0EKEHk>

For every person who watches this increases it's power and message.

This is a Music video was made to help promote getting out and voting for Obama.

If this gets a minimum of 14,000 views it will make it on a CNN segment.

Please if you have 1-2 minutes, follow the link and tell everyone about it. If your in support of Obama winning this presidency, I'm confident you'll view this and tell others about it.

Here's the link again: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SjjOG0EKEHk>

Thank you for your support

Dave (2008-10-29 09:39:00)

Voting for Obama will turn out to be the worst decision you ever make.

He is going to tax the heck out of the business man to give to those who make little or dont work at all.

If you dont make over 250k a year you are still the person who will be paying the taxes...

You see, his plan wont work.

If you tax the big companies to death (he's gonna raise taxes substantially) then they will do one of two things...

They will leave the country to do their business like most already have or they will simply pass their tax costs down to you, the employee and the consumer.

This is just one reason not to vote for Obama.

Anonymous (2008-10-29 09:39:00)

Voting for Obama will turn out to be the worst decision you ever make.

He is going to tax the heck out of the business man to give to those who make little or dont work at all.

If you dont make over 250k a year you are still the person who will be paying the taxes...

You see, his plan wont work.

If you tax the big companies to death (he's gonna raise taxes substantially) then they will do one of two things...

They will leave the country to do their business like most already have or they will simply pass their tax costs down to you, the employee and the consumer.

This is just one reason not to vote for Obama.

Anonymous (2008-10-29 09:58:00)

Republicans are in a world of hurt. Early voting is favoring Democrats by a wide margin. Now this is usually a Republican strength. Last time around they outworked Democrats in voter turnout but this time it looks like the Dems will run away with the numbers. Early voting is a great indicator of the overall turnout figures.

obamarox (2008-11-04 03:41:00) spread the message, get your friends to vote! Make sure they're near their phone ;) (its FREE to all Obama supporters)

<http://www.yourcallforchange.com>

Anonymous (2008-11-09 02:13:00)

President Obama did not remove the american flag from his plane. You conservitave nit wits need to pay attention: YOU LOST. Please be aware that it will be about 20 years before you can attempt any sort of power. The Liberals have regained power for good.

notlesu (2008-11-09 14:42:00)

President elect, Obama did not remove the american flag from his plane. You conservitave nit wits need to pay attention: on top of that, YOU LOST. Please be aware that your base is the old folks. You can't count on them in 4-20 years. The Liberals have courted the youth, which will be around for 50 years.

Don't get me wrong. Republicans are very nice people, its just the extreme right wing, nit wits (the flag pin crowd) who shed a bad light on Republicans.

One thing is certain: The USA will again, have respect from the rest of the world.

2.9 November

Barack Obama elected 44th President of United States (2008-11-04 21:44)

Sen. Barack Obama has been projected to win the United States presidential election by a significant margin. Major television networks called the race at 8 pm PST after polls in California and other western states had closed. At 8:56 pm PST, Obama had garnered 338 electoral votes to 156 for Sen. John McCain. The event marks the first election of an African American as US president.

Tue Nov 4, 11:22 PM ET

Supporters of Barack Obama react in Grant Park on election night in Chicago, Illinois. Americans elected Democrat Obama as their first black president, in a transformational election which will reshape US politics and reposition the United States on the world stage. (AFP/Timothy A. Clary)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Costa Rica Real Estate (2008-11-04 22:10:00)

Now the work begins for rising the US out of this God forbidden mess Bush created. We all hope this new President elect will bring great change.

di (2008-11-05 00:57:00)

congratulations!! from portugal

creditos (2008-11-05 02:35:00)

Un negro en la Casa Blanca

Tengo que reconocerlo: no podía imaginar a un negro como presidente de los EEUU.

Sólo en algunas películas de ciencia ficción se daba esta circunstancia, que de por sí, ya era cómica.

La realidad ha superado a la ficción.

Ahora sólo falta un negro como lehendakari.
Todo llegará...

Anonymous (2008-11-05 02:51:00)
http://www.dailymotion.com/video/x5svpm_ministry-of-information-bulletin-3_shortfilms

Anonymous (2008-11-05 03:24:00)
YEs, he won! Watch his victory speech here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=c8etsiZAmK4>

Joan (2008-11-05 09:09:00)
Yes, we can!
From spain:
<http://www.estrategiaynegocio.com/?p=259>

Madoca/Brasil (2008-11-05 10:30:00)
Sir barack Obama, desejo-lhe muitas, muitas e muitas felicidades. Parabéns!

erika Wright (2008-11-05 14:31:00)
I think it is a wonderful day to see a man of mixed descent reach the White House. To me it shows the ultimate unity when the country can come together, put their racial differences aside, and vote for a man born of the union of a white woman and a black man when in years past both white and black people have discriminated against people of mixed descent. There is no greater symbol of unity that I can imagine. Congratulations to Obama and I pray that the country stands behind him all the way. He is a highly intelligent man with great conviction. May God Bless him and his family as they embark on this treacherous journey to save this country.

Despite Logic (2008-11-05 20:18:00)
As a senior enlisted member of the United States Navy and a life long republican I am one of your more unlikely Obama supporters, however, to put it mildly, I have crossed party lines, nay, jumped party lines with arms wide open to embrace this man who can lead our country and the world into the future. Hail to the Chief! Change has come!

Anonymous (2008-11-05 21:41:00)
WOW - It's been a no-sleep night here in Atlanta!
My friend has compiled power moves that built Barack Obama into a $660 Million-Dollar Brand and how it can help build us! The article is giveb below- if you like it, please pass it along...
I thought it was incredible! Let me know what you think; if you like it, please forward to everyone you know and go to www.brandmeline.com to learn more -YES WE DID!!!
Brand Me Like Obama!
Brand Me Minutes:
My name is Melissa Dawn Johnson, entrepreneur, personal brand strategist and Author of the book, Brand Me. Make Your Mark: Turn Passion into Profit. I'm so thrilled to share a few thoughts on such a momentous occasion. Today, I want to offer you an insider's perspective on three power moves that built the Barack Obama Brand and how these insights can help you turn your passion into profit NOW.
In these devastating economic times, I want to congratulate you on your BIG promotion. Yes, today you are appointed to CEO and Commander in Chief of Brand Me. You've held the position all along, but now is the time to take charge and run your life as a business.
On the heels of the unprecedented election, I wanted to give my professional point of view on three key power moves that built the $660 million dollar brand called Barack Obama. If he could build a brand to the highest office in the land, in a time of recession, so can you. I'll cover these three points today, but will offer a free coaching session in much more detail on these points and more on www.brandmeline.com.

Here are three keys to victory:

Change the Game – Not only did Barack Obama launch his brand from the position of CHANGE, he embodied it. Everything from his approach, grassroots fire, igniting social networking tools and the youth vote to his name and ethnic heritage all embodied CHANGING the traditional game of politics. NOW is a moment where the unprecedented is ruling over tradition. How will you position yourself to change the game in your industry, your community, your family, your country? Change will cost you...but the benefits can be staggering if you know how to shift the game in your favor. Everyday, ask yourself: Is this move a game-changer? Am I able to inspire more to get behind my vision, can I show the benefits of playing on my team, can I create a competitive advantage, will I be empowering others to become their best? If not, go back to the drawing board.

Create a compelling story – Brands are all about great story telling. Nike has a story, America has a story...what is yours? Senator Barack Obama's story was rooted in his personal and professional journey. How are you packaging your story into something that people will find compelling and inspiring? Most importantly, how are you encouraging other people to share your story in a digital world? I can't tell you the number of email forwards I received from co-workers, family, friends and strangers with pictures, video clips, media headlines all telling some element of the Barack Obama story. You want to make your story as easy and engaging as a forward email. How are you helping those around you "forward" your story of perseverance, overcoming obstacles, unexpected success to others so they can give a voice and life to your brand?

Consistency clinches victory – Barack was able to consistently stay on message and deliver his brand. Even when he was tempted or distracted to shift his strategy, he stayed the course. In turbulent times, people are looking for an anchor. How are you able to be consistent in your delivery. Are you on time? Are you on target? Do you stand by your word? Do you deliver no matter what? Being dependable and being consistent will clinch the victory. Stay steady baby, that is what leaders do. (MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL INTERVIEW WITH CHRIS...)

We are all a part of the American dream. Don't miss this exclusive offer for a free brand me like Obama coaching session. Please visit, www.brandmeline.com to be the first to sign up by Tuesday, November 18th. I will take you through simple and powerful branding techniques that built the Barack Obama brand and can help build yours. He made history...now its your turn!

Brand Your Best,
Melissa Dawn Johnson
Personal Brand Strategist

Madoca/Brasil (2008-11-07 11:56:00)

Cometi um erro de digitação: O nome de Barack entrou com letra minúscula.

Madoca/São Paulo (SP)/Brasil (2008-11-09 04:51:00)

Madoca acha que sir Obama vai retirar todos os soldados americanos que se encontram no Iraque. Madoca sabe que Obama é sionista e pacifista e que os EUA irão readquirir o status perdido com os oito anos sob o comando de Bush.

Madoca é branca e ama os negros, amarelos e vermelhos porque todos nós fazemos parte da criação de Deus.

A boy with glasses (2008-11-10 06:59:00)

I felt very strong emotions the night of the election, which I had the fortune to spend at Grant Park in Chicago. A huge crowd gathered and saw history unfold...

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mYfmg5frW9U>

Madoca/São Paulo(SP)Brasil (2008-11-10 10:22:00)

Hi

My english is much basic.

Doorway affrro-brazilian:

<http://www.mundonegrocom.br>

(this doorway not is my authorship).

Stock market reaction to Obama election (2008-11-05 15:02)

Historically, it is not unusual for the stock market to slide after the election of a Democratic president. The fact that it was the biggest slump ever after an election has to be taken in the context of an extremely volatile market.

On the previous day, we also saw a record surge in the market for a presidential election day.

There was a bad report on jobs and service industries, but it's really hard to analyze what happened between these two days. Most of this volatile activity is due to day and swing traders who often trade according to patterns on charts or graphs known as "Japanese candlesticks." There may be little actual relationship to the election itself.

Americans generally turn to the Democrats during tough economic times. The best example of this was during the Great Depression. Bill Clinton also appeared to have benefited from the recession that hit during George H.W. Bush's term. There appears to be a general perception that Democrats will do more to help struggling workers and families, and those who are down and out.

Reuters US stock index futures down after Obama win

Reuters - 11 hours ago

By Joanne Frearson LONDON, Nov 5 (Reuters) - US stock futures were down on Wednesday, pointing to a lower open on Wall Street, as investors focused on the ...

Has Obama's Rise Caused the Markets to Fall? Forbes

Stock Set To Pull Back Wednesday Morning After Obama Elected President RTT News

US stock index futures fall after Obama win Reuters

Play

Obama Facing Daunting Economic Task

CBS 3 Philadelphia via Yahoo! News - 16 minutes ago

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Hannah (2008-11-05 18:45:00)

My humble musical letter to president Obama:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=f4bZw9FmXZ4>

Best,

Hannah Friedman

Alan (2008-11-06 06:45:00)

I am optimistic about Obama's ability to drive an increase in the stock market. He just needs time to put his team together...and he could benefit from patience from my fellow Americans. For those who are in the market, this is the time to wait it out, not sell off.

best,
Alan
<http://www.ObamaCollectors.com>

Possibilities for a progressive and green transition (2008-11-06 07:56)

President-elect Barack Obama has named former Clinton chief of staff, John Podesta, to run his transition team. Obama is wasting no time in selecting a cabinet to face the tremendous challenges lined up against his administration. The selection of Podesta might indicate a desire to seek old Clinton operatives rather than bringing in outsiders. However, it is expected that Obama will appoint some non-Washington faces to stay consistent with his message of change. Obviously as Clinton was the only Democratic president to serve in nearly three decades, most experienced Washington insiders within the party would have served in his administration. Although the push has been toward the "center right," here are some possible progressive and green choices that Obama could make in choosing his cabinet.

Secretary of Climate Change

Ok, such a position does not exist, but many are suggesting that Obama create an office to tackle the climate change crisis. Here are some possible picks:

Van Jones – founding president of Green For All and a senior fellow with the Center for American Progress. He is also the author of The Green Collar Economy. Not much Washington experience here – a true outsider – and an African American. Many people of color will be looking to see whether the first African American president toes the line on diversity in the appointment process.

Gov. Bill Richardson – He has done a great job in cleaning up his state of New Mexico. Promised to be the "energy president" before dropping out of the primary. Also, would help in developing a diversity profile as he is a Latino American.

Secretary of State

Al Gore – probably not likely that he would accept this position but Gore's stock around the world has risen due to his work on global climate change. Of course, this would make him a good candidate for climate change czar as well.

Susan Rice – one of Obama's foreign policy advisers, she is a former assistant secretary of state and a strong proponent of multilateral engagement. A woman and African American.

Sen. John Kerry – an early and strong Obama supporter, Kerry is one of the betting favorites for this position. He would be a good choice. He has strong network of international connections.

Secretary of Energy

Jason Grumet – head of the National Commission on Energy Policy and the Bipartisan Policy Center, and chief Obama adviser on energy and the environment.

Dan Reichert – formerly assistant energy secretary under President Clinton, a lawyer for the Natural Resources Defense Council, and a sales executive at a renewable energy firm. Now he is director of climate change and energy initiatives at Google.org.

Ian Bowles – secretary of energy and environmental affairs in Massachusetts under Gov. Deval Patrick.

More to come later.

Play

Napolitano part of Obama's transition team

KTVK 3TV Phoenix via Yahoo! News - Nov 05 4:28 PM

Play

Transition Time

FOX News via Yahoo! News - Nov 05 9:03 AM

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on transition (2008-11-06 10:29)

Secretary of Education

Colin Powell – There is speculation that Barack will appoint at least one Republican to his cabinet.

The former secretary of state is one logical choice. In 1997, he founded America's Promise, an alliance of national organizations dedicated to teaching today's youth , and in 2008 was spokesperson for National Mentoring Month.

Alma Vivian Powell – wife of Colin Powell and Co-Ch air of America's Promise. Both her father and uncle were high school principals. She has authored two children's books, America's Promise and My Little Red Wagon .

HUD Secretary

Rep. James Clyburn – a South Carolina representative has been a champion of low income housing.

Mayor Shirley Franklin – has worked hard for affordable housing, housing for homeless veterans, etc. in Atlanta, where she is mayor.

Secretary of the Interior

Gov. Ed Rendell – he's done a good job cleaning things up in his home state of Pennsylvania.

Jamie Rappaport Clark – Bill Clinton's former Fish and Wildlife Service director managed Endangered Species Act protections and expanded the National Wildlife Refuge System. She would make a great choice.

Jay Inslee – a congressional rep. from Seattle, he authored the book Apollo's Fire: Igniting America's Clean Energy Economy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Judith (2008-11-07 07:40:00)

What are the chances of the official "political servants" in the House, Senate and Congress taking cuts in their wages and/or benefits, so the rest of the population, the workhorses of the US, have fair-pay jobs, health, and retirement benefits – if nothing else it could be a symbol of the integrity that Obama has started to inject into our ailing democracy. Will Obama continue the tradition of political leaders having multiple places to live around the states and world?

jmb, Polk County, TN

More on Transition (3) (2008-11-07 10:44)

The first confirmed appointment by President-elect Barack Obama is Rep. Rahm Emanuel from Obama's hometown of Chicago.

Obama called Emanuel the best person he knows at getting things done. The Illinois congressman is known both for his steady stream of expletives and results. He offers the urgency in an urgent situation in contrast to Obama's usual easy-going style.

Emanuel's flashy, fiery get-it-done approach may be meant to balance Obama's more cerebral tendencies.

Some Republicans have complained that Emanuel is too partisan and confrontational, but others note that he has been effective at working across party lines.

Here are some more progressive suggestions for cabinet positions:

Secretary of Defense

Gen. Wesley Clark – this might require some burying of the hatchet, but Clark has the obvious combination of military and political experience.

Sen. James Webb – he opposes the Iraq War and introduced a bill that would prevent military spending for any confrontation in Iran. A Vietnam veteran and former Secretary of the Navy, he resigned the latter post in protest to cuts in the military budget. However, there is no indication that he opposes Obama's proposed cuts in military spending.

National Security Adviser

James Steinberg –
deputy national security adviser during Clinton administration.

Dr. Susan Rice – also recommended for Secretary of State.

Dr. Samantha Powers – good pick but maybe unlikely due to her outburst against the Clinton campaign during the primary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama conferring with world leaders (2008-11-09 09:50)

President-elect Barack Obama has talked with various world leaders since winning Tuesday's election. In a telephone conversation with Chinese Hu Jintao, the two reportedly discussed mutual concerns including the Taiwan situation.

Obama also talked with Russian President Dmitry Medvedev and the two reportedly have agreed to meet in person soon. Medvedev said that Obama gives Russia a "second wind" in relations with the United States.

Among other leaders whom Obama has spoken with include Pakistan President Asif Ali Zardari, President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, President Lech Kaczynski and Prime Minister Donald Tusk of Poland, Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi of Italy, King Abdullah of Saudi Arabia and Prime Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero of Spain.

X

Boston Globe

X

Hu, Obama discuss China-US relations: state media

AFP - 2 hours ago

BEIJING (AFP) - China and the United States should "accommodate each other's concerns," Chinese President Hu Jintao told US President-elect Barack Obama Saturday in a telephone conversation, state media reported.

Hu, Obama have post-election phone call United Press International

China urges Obama-led US to be careful on Taiwan Reuters

X

Calgary Herald

X

Obama and Medvedev to meet soon, Kremlin says

Reuters - 6 hours ago

MOSCOW (Reuters) - Russian President Dmitry Medvedev and US President-elect Barack Obama agreed to meet in person in the near future during a telephone conversation on Saturday, a Kremlin spokesman said.

Video: Medvedev hopes for 'second wind' with US under Obama RussiaToday

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/v/KWGHm1hwBLO>

Medvedev Speech Sparks Rumor of Putin's Return New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on Transition (4) (2008-11-10 19:48)

Treasury Secretary

Sheila Bair – chair of the FDIC, she has been a proponent of greater regulation. She has supported direct assistance to distressed homeowners and is a believer of recovery from the bottom up.

Meredith Whitney – managing director of Oppenheimer & Co., she correctly predicted much of the current financial mess that faces the country and world.

Commerce Secretary

Federico Pena – former Secretary of Transportation and Secretary of Energy during Clinton administration. An early supporter of Obama and one of his Latino co-chairs.

Penny Pritzker – business executive, Obama fundraiser.

Health and Human Services Secretary

Dr. Howard Dean – a medical doctor and current head of the Democratic Party. Dean reportedly is interested in the position.

Sen. Hillary Clinton – a bit unlikely, but she would not be a bad choice.

Sen. Daniel Akaka – defender of Medicaid access, Akaka might benefit from coming from Obama's homestate of Hawai'i.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rossi (2008-11-11 06:31:00)

Mr. Obama, adopt one of my cute little dogs

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QLb7Qai-p7M>

Poodle Toy Apricot, with parents with good temper, nice structure and perfect for a family with children like mine.

Hey Mr. Obama, consider taking one of my puppies, as a gift. I know you will take good care of any of them.

Anonymous (2008-11-13 05:29:00)

This public employee threatened OBAMA.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tNe_91z-7nw

Alonso Xa (2008-11-13 13:06:00)

Will there be any real change. The world is a really grim place at the moment

César (2008-11-14 10:51:00)

<http://www.obamatothewhitehouse.com/>

Can't wait for Obama's inauguration

César (2008-11-14 10:51:00)

<http://www.obamatothewhitehouse.com/>

Can't wait for Obama's inauguration

Comment: Obama must act with all 'deliberate haste' (2008-11-11 11:19)

President-elect Barack Obama knows that time is of the essence.

Some 16 years ago, Bill Clinton also swept into office with a stunning victory including wins in many southern states where Democrats had not won in a long time. Clinton's party enjoyed full control of Congress also with numbers very similar to Obama's current advantage.

However, within just two years, the Democrats had lost control of Congress for the first time in 40 years. Republicans have dominated the legislature for most of the period since that time until the 2006 elections.

Obama is already reviewing George W. Bush's executive orders and is expected to reverse many of them. Unlike Clinton, Obama is wasting no time in making key appointments.

While Clinton faced an economic recession upon entering office, most analysts will agree that his problems pale in comparison to those Obama must tackle.

BBC News Editorial: Undoing Bush's executive orders

San Jose Mercury News, USA - 15 hours ago

Among the best is Obama's opportunity to overturn some of Bush's worst executive orders. Where to begin: Stem cell research ban? Gone. ...

Obama team: No decisions on reversing Bush orders Reuters

Obama Plans to Overturn Bush Executive Orders Environment News Service

Obama Team Reviewing Bush Orders 'Across-the-Board' (Update1) Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on Transition (5) (2008-11-12 08:40)

Attorney General

Gov. Deval Patrick – of Massachusetts and former assistant U.S. attorney for civil rights.

Gov. Janet Napolitano – governor of Arizona.

Rep. Artur Davis , D-Ala. – member of House Judiciary Committee.

Jerry Brown – current Attorney General and former governor of the State of California.

Labor Secretary

Maria Elena Durazo – executive secretary-treasurer of the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor, AFL-CIO and national co-chair of Obama campaign.

Rep. George Miller , D-Calif., chairman of House Education and Labor Committee.

John Chiang – current California state controller and former Board of Equalization member. Stood up for state worker salaries against Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Transportation Secretary

Rep. Doris Matsui , D-CA – member of House Transportation Committee.

Jane Garvey – former head of Federal Aviation Administration.

Rep. James Oberstar , D-Minn. – chairman of House Transportation Committee.

Rep. Peter DeFazio , D-Ore. – member of the House Transportation Committee.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

How did Obama do it? (2008-11-13 09:21)

Arguably no presidential candidate had faced the challenge that Barack Obama faced in winning the highest office in America.

Not only would he need to overcome the race barrier as the first African American president, but he had many other strikes going against him as well. He was young – he will be the fifth youngest president ever to take office – and his political resume was not that extensive.

He grew up in Hawai'i and Indonesia, areas not exactly known for churning out presidents, and he had an immigrant African father. These factors meant that Obama would have to fight even for some African American votes in the early going.

His father granted him a strange name including a tricky middle name of "Hussein."

It would be hard to imagine a family farther away from "Middle America" than Obama's, at least if we use the traditional definition of that concept. His mother was in fact from that region, Kansas to be precise, but his father was born into a Muslim family, and he has a sister who is half-Indonesian and Buddhist by religion.

Obama ran from the Midwestern state of Illinois, which had produced Abraham Lincoln, a candidate whose experience closely matched Obama's. However, the last time a candidate based in a Midwestern state had won the presidential election was in the 1920s when Warren G. Harding from Ohio was elected. The last 15 elections had been won by candidates from the states of Texas, California, Arkansas, Georgia and Massachusetts.

Probably most importantly, Obama faced one of the most "inevitable" candidates imaginable. Hillary Clinton had all the big connections thought necessary for success. The great bulk of the Democratic establishment was behind her. The major hope for support against Hillary came from more activist labor unions that tended to instead support John Edwards.

Even after winning the primary, many thought that Barack would still have a tough time gaining the presidency. There was constant talk of the "Bradley effect" and early on about divisions in the Democratic Party.

So then, how was Barack Obama able to engineer the greatest "upset" in presidential history?

First of all, Barack was an ideal candidate especially in terms of timing. He made few mistakes and his message of change was right on target. Indeed, he embodied change in terms of his career and message. Even his strangeness in name, family, upbringing, etc., by which his opponents sought to distance him from the electorate, acted indirectly to bolster his linkage with the concept of change.

Barack selected people for his campaign team, who like him, made few mistakes.

And like many other successful candidates in the past, Barack embraced a new medium to reach voters and supporters and took it to the level needed to win. Howard Dean, and even his opponent John McCain, pioneered campaigning on the internet to a great extent, but it was the Obama team that came up with the winning formula.

Social networking and texting were in their infancies in this country during the Dean campaign, but were used by Obama and his supporters to the full extent. The ease, cost effectiveness and reach of online networks were fully demonstrated during this election cycle.

Online organizing was used to support traditional campaign work like phone-banking, canvassing, tabling and rallies but also for more spectacular efforts in other media. The large publicity event was used to the fullest extent by the Obama team. At first, Obama's opponents hammered him for show-boating, but before long they too embraced the ideas of big rallies and other press events.

Television, of course, is still the main media for reaching voters. The television audience is still much larger than its online counterpart especially when one considers that most people still use the internet only for email and do not bother to surf the web. Online videos are still too choppy for most connections to compare with full sensory television ads.

However, as more people come online, and more young texters reach voting age, the situation will continue to flow toward electronic campaigning. An online video is much, much cheaper to distribute, for example, than a national television ad even if it reaches fewer people. And when you build up your online network, you can tap them for money to buy those expensive tv ads later on down the road.

By using online networks at levels never before fathomed, Obama wielded a 'secret weapon' that his opponents were never able to deal with effectively.

That together with the timing of Obama's appearance on the scene, the consistency of his message with his life and work, all worked together to overcome the tremendous obstacles in his path toward victory.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

shepherdess (2008-11-13 21:48:00)

Hey! I wrote Oprah this letter, I don't know if she heard me. Anybody?

Dear Oprah!

Over the years I have written you, I have sent you my book, and musical project. Somehow my heart never spoke loud enough for you to hear me.

However this time I am crying out to you as loudly as I can. I almost gave up, and thought, "Perhaps I am just too low", and no one can hear me from way down here. Though I keep trying to be heard, my cry sometimes has been muted by despair.

Then the night before last night, 'Inside-Edition', reported that President Elect Barack Obama had slept outside on top of his luggage, on a street in NYC for a night. He had gone there to attend Columbia University. The person he was suppose to stay with did not answer the door.

I thought to myself – if that man had given up, he would have never known what it would be like to sleep in the White House. (The Peoples House Now). I got up and said...my white house is somewhere out there, I have got to get up and cry louder.

Oprah, I have written a song, called, "World Heal Thyself". I sing it for God although I want to sing it to the world and for our First Family. I know I'm the most unlikely and so was he [Obama], so were you, although someone took your hand and pulled you up.

They had to look past a lot to do it, the color of your skin, your background, your pain, but somebody heard you. You have heard many cries over the years....can you hear me?

I am not as young as I once was and perhaps I should not reach up so high for your hand but if Barack had not reached, if he had not believed, if there had not been the, "Yes We Can" somewhere down in his spirit, way before we ever heard him utter the words — We would have never heard him say those words today.

Oprah, I'm crying, as loud as I can today....Does your heart hear mine?

At the Saviors Feet, Crying, "God Let Oprah Hear Me".

Shepherdess

Peru offers hairless dog for Obamas (2008-11-13 18:29)

The Association of Friends of Hairless Dogs of Peru (AFHDP) sent a letter to the US embassy in Peru suggesting that the Peruvian Hairless Dog would be a good choice for the Obamas, the new US first family.

President-elect Barack Obama had promised his kids a new puppy if he were elected to the Whitehouse, but his daughter Malia has allergic asthma.

The Peruvian Hairless Dog is generally considered hypoallergenic as it has no hair or dander.

KAREL NAVARRO/Associated Press

A four-month-old puppy called Machu Picchu is seen today in Lima, Peru. The owners of the Peruvian hairless dog have offered it to U.S. President-elect Barack Obama. Obama has promised his daughters a new pet for the White House but one of them is allergic to most breeds. The owners of the Peruvian Hairless Dog say it is perfect for kids who are sensitive to dogs.

Will it be a Peruvian dog for the Obamas?

NDTV.com, India - 8 hours ago

US President-elect Obama had earlier said that choosing a pet dog for his daughters is a 'major issue.'

The Peruvian puppy being offered to the Obamas is ...

Peru offers flealess dog to Obamas The Press Association

Peru offers to send a bald dog to the Obamas Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Hillary Clinton for Secretary of State? (2008-11-14 10:35)

Looks like Sen. Hillary Clinton will be strongly considered for the position of secretary of state based on unusual leaks from the Obama transition team, and a meeting between Clinton and President-elect Barack Obama.

Should Clinton accept it might indicate that she is keeping open the possibility of running for president again in 2016 when she will be 67 years old. In comparison, Sen. John McCain would have been 72 if had won the election.

By becoming secretary of state, Clinton could rack up some executive branch experience and would be better positioned to compete for an Obama endorsement and for his social networking support.

Obama, Clinton meet to talk about her future

CNN International - 47 minutes ago

(CNN) – President-elect Barack Obama met with his former rival Sen. Hillary Clinton to see if she would be interested in a role in his administration, two sources told CNN Friday.

Hillary Clinton mum on political future Reuters

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

mansid (2008-11-15 15:38:00)

Hillary Clinton is the best choice to be the Secretary of State. She has vast experience and knowledge about international economics

Obama urges fast response on economy (2008-11-15 10:10)

President-elect pushed for Congress to pass a quick economic stimulus plan and said if they failed he would make such a package his first priority in office.

Obama also specifically asked for a "down payment" on his rescue plan in the form of an extension of unemployment benefits. He made the appeal on his YouTube address, a planned weekly communication with the public.

✕

Voice of America

1320

Obama Urges Congress to Make 'Down Payment' on Economic Rescue

Bloomberg - 2 hours ago

By Vincent Del Giudice Nov. 15 (Bloomberg) – President-elect Barack Obama urged Congress to extend unemployment benefits as part of a “down payment” on a US economic rescue plan as world leaders meet in Washington today to fight the global recession ...

Obama urges Congress to quickly pass rescue plan Reuters

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Polly (2008-11-16 14:58:00)

Hello! I'm making a survey on my blog under the title: "Only a dream"

If you could make a question, a plea, a wish to Obama, what would you say?

Please visit my blog and let all our voices be heard!

Thank you. Polly.

Barack Obama resigns senate seat, appoints more staff (2008-11-16 10:17)

President-elect Barack Obama officially resigned his seat in the U.S. Senate representing Illinois on Sunday. Obama was the second African American senator from that state.

Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, a Democrat, will appoint Obama's successor. Some rumor that he may choose Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr.

Obama also announced more staff appointments including longtime friend and supporter Valerie Jarret as a White House senior adviser. Pete Rouse, Obama's senate chief of staff, will also come aboard as a senior adviser.

It looks almost certain that Sen. Hillary Clinton will be the new Secretary of State. As the situation stands with all the media hoopla it would be awkward if either Obama failed to offer her the position or if she refused.

Palin preparing for 2012?

With all the media appearances of Gov. Sarah Palin, it looks rather obvious that she is getting ready for a possible run for president in 2012.

Really when you think about it, there are not many other good Republican contenders out there. Most people cannot name a prominent Republican who has name recognition and would make a feasible candidate.

Palin obviously needs a lot of polishing especially when it comes to national television interviews.

Voice of America Schiliro Added to Team

Washington Post, United States - 9 hours ago

and the House Oversight Committee, and a policy director for Obama adviser and former senator Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.). Jarrett's job was described by ...

Obama names campaign insider as senior White House adviser CBC.ca

Clinton Said to Be Frontrunner for Secretary of State (Update1) Bloomberg

Obama urges aid for homeowners and automakers Chicago Tribune

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

eon (2008-11-17 15:45:00)

The Republicans would surely have won if they'd let Sarah Palin be more like Michael Palin. As an Alaskan she's a natural for the lumberjack song.

And when those interviewers caught her out she would've garnered a lot more sympathy if they'd gone 'never heard of the Bush doctrine? That's a chip up the nose, Sarah'.

Obama, free trade and outsourcing (2008-11-16 16:00)

Now that Barack Obama is president-elect, some nations are worried about his policies on foreign economic relations. Latin nations are worried about Obama's free trade policies, while many Asian nations are more concerned about his views on outsourcing.

X

Conservative protesters, holding pictures of U.S. President-elect Barack Obama (L) and South Korean President Lee Myung-bak, shout slogans during a rally supporting the U.S.-South Korea free trade agreement (FTA) talks in Seoul November 11, 2008. Obama has said he opposes the free-trade deal with South Korea unless it is renegotiated to grant greater access to the Asian market for U.S. automakers. REUTERS/Jo Yong-Hak (SOUTH KOREA)

However, given the current jittery world economy, it would appear unlikely that Obama would take any moves seen as drastic on either front. Realistically, many American corporations just will not be able to compete if they are forced to manufacture or provide services in the United States. This is a reality facing all developed countries competing in the global market place.

At the same time, Obama has voiced concern about the lack of environmental and labor standards in some countries that want "free trade."

A trade war, of course, would be very detrimental at this time. The start of the Great Depression was characterized by many nations of the world drawing inward to "protect" their economies. This stifled trade and the flow of capital and resources worsening the situation according to most historians.

One such American policy was the protectionist 1930 Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act that raised import fees on some 20,000 items to record levels.

The new world trade order under President Obama?

Philippine Star, Philippines - Nov 7, 2008

During the campaign, candidate Obama said that he would not encourage US firms that "export jobs", ie outsourcing by taking away their tax breaks. ..

No Free Pass for Free Trade

Motley Fool - Nov 7, 2008

I'm a strong believer in the benefits of globalization, so I jumped at the opportunity to review President-elect Obama's platform on trade. ...

Capitalist confusion Indiana Daily Student

Obama against outsourcing?

Legal Business Online, Australia - Nov 13, 2008

In-house departments can breathe a sigh of relief as, according to the president of outsourcing trade body Nasscom Ganesh Natarajan, there are no specific ...

Christian Science Monitor Latin jitters over Obama's free-trade policies

Christian Science Monitor, MA - 1 hour ago

Despite concerns among Latin American free-traders, analysts note that Obama is not against the idea. He supported a trade deal with Peru once labor and ...

Trade pact with Colombia would benefit the US Longview Daily News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

money magnet (2008-11-17 04:58:00)
good articles

Obama pledges support for flailing auto industry (2008-11-17 15:09)

Barack Obama will support the Detroit calling a potential auto industry collapse "a disaster." However, the president-elect said the assistance "cant' be a blank check" either.

Saving Detroit, though, may be a difficult task. The industry has been ailing for some time and it continued to push big cars and SUVs in poor judgment and lack of vision for the future. Still there is a lot of pride and jobs tied into American automobile manufacturing.

A single payout is unlikely to work due to the current economic situation. So one really knows how much money it may take to get the "Big Three" back on their feet.

ABC News Facing the Angry Ducks

Human Events, DC - 14 hours ago

Last week, both Speaker Pelosi and President-elect Obama said they want some undefined part of the $700 billion bailout to go to the automobile industry and ...

Pelosi outlines aid package for US automakers The Associated Press

Dems Attach Strings To Auto Bailout CBS News

The Bailout Blues: Taxpayers can't fix what's ailing auto industry TheReporter.com

Washington Post Obama: Auto industry collapse would be 'a disaster'

CNN - 22 hours ago

"It's my belief that we need to provide assistance to the auto industry," Obama tells veteran correspondent Steve Kroft, according to excerpts released by ... [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-11-18 09:22:00)

Barack Obama President Find the BIT

hey guys check this out, it is quite cool

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jFlizN2ZAQ4>

Conservatives: How Obama won (2008-11-18 09:24)

There's an interesting conservative analysis "How Obama got elected" by John Ziegler who interviewed a dozen voters, and also commissioned a Zogby poll.

The study, which was featured on Fox News, claims that the news media was responsible for electing Obama despite his "extreme liberal positions and radical political alliances."

[EMBED]

According to the site, those interviewed in the video above were chosen for the following reasons:

On Election day twelve Obama voters were interviewed extensively right after they voted to learn how the news media impacted their knowledge of what occurred during the campaign. These voters were chosen for their apparent intelligence/verbal abilities and willingness to express their opinions to a large audience. The rather shocking video below seeks to provide some insight into which information broke through the news media clutter and which did not.

Of course, that fact that those interviewed were screened (by whom?) brings in to question the randomness of the sample and how much it represents the general voting population.

Ziegler asks more obscure questions about Obama and Biden, as compared to questions on well-publicized information on McCain and Palin.

Obviously, the Palin information was covered extensively on the media. Anyone who followed the Obama campaign knows that there was equally a lot of negative coverage on the president-elect as well. For example, the Rev. Jeremiah Wright controversy.

Here is my analysis on how Obama won.

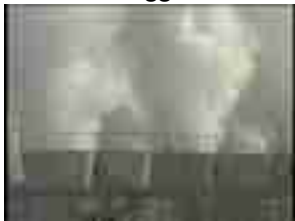

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Schwarzenegger opens climate change conf. with Obama (2008-11-18 15:00)

California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger opened an international climate change summit Tuesday in Beverly Hills with special guest President-elect Barack Obama.

Schwarzenegger wants to reduce emissions by 33 percent in California by the year 2020.

Reuters

Climate change price tag

Report

Oct 31, 2008

Schwarzenegger's conference included government officials from Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Poland and the United Kingdom.

Schwarzenegger opens climate summit with Obama

The Associated Press - 22 minutes ago

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) - Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger opened his international climate change summit on Tuesday by upstaging himself with an even bigger political star - President-elect Barack Obama.

Video: Obama Pledges New Direction on Climate Change AssociatedPress

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/v/UwaGWP_xvQ8

Obama vows climate action despite financial crisis Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Eric Holder set for Attorney General post (2008-11-18 20:44)

News agencies are reporting that President-elect Barack Obama has informed Eric H. Holder Jr. that he will likely be selected as Attorney General, although the final decision has not been made yet.

When confirmed, Holder will become the first African American to hold this Cabinet position. He was appointed the first African American deputy attorney general during the Clinton administration.

Reports also indicate that Obama will choose Peter R. Orszag as director of the Congressional Budget Office, and Jacob Lew, Clinton's budget director, as director of the National Economic Council.

So far, it looks like Obama will bring back many of Clinton's old team for their experience in Washington in handling key positions. Many of Obama's Chicago and Senate associates are taking adviser staff positions up to this point.

BBC News Holder Seen as Pick for Justice Post as Obama Begins to Settle on Team

New York Times - 59 minutes ago

By ERIC LICHTBLAU and JOHN M. BRODER WASHINGTON - President-elect Barack Obama's transition team has signaled to Eric H. Holder Jr.

Barack Obama wants to pick Eric Holder Jr. as attorney general Chicago Tribune
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Al-Qaeda tape lambasts Obama (2008-11-19 10:19)

Al-Qaeda has released a new tape with No. 2 Ayman al-Zawahiri criticizing President-elect Barack Obama.

Al-Zawahiri compares Obama unfavorably to Malcolm X, the black nationalist leader who parted from the Nation of Islam to become an orthodox Sunni Muslim. He praised Malcolm X for fighting against the West's oppression of peoples throughout the world, stating that Obama instead will uphold US policies of hegemony.

"That's why it wasn't strange that Malik al-Shabazz (may Allah have mercy on him) was killed, while you have climbed the rungs of the presidency to take over the leadership of the greatest criminal force in the history of mankind and the leadership of the most violent crusade ever against the Muslims," he said.

[EMBED]

Al-Zawahiri used the Arabic term abayd al bayt "slave of the house," to roughly conform to Malcolm X's "House Negroes" claiming that Obama would serve white interests.

In contrast to Malcolm X, who left the Nation of Islam, considered outside the pale to orthodox Muslims, Obama was said to have drifted in the opposite direction.

"You were born to a Muslim father, but you chose to stand in the ranks of the enemies of the Muslims, and pray the prayer of the Jews, although you claim to be Christian, in order to climb the rungs of leadership in America. And so you promised to back Israel, and you threatened to strike the tribal regions in Pakistan, and to send thousands more troops to Afghanistan, in order for the crimes of the American crusade in it to continue," the message said. The message was confirmed by U.S. counterterrorism officials on Wednesday. Osama bin Laden and Ayman al-Zawahiri are believed to be in hiding in the border regions of Afghanistan and Pakistan, although most experts admit that their general locations are not known.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Tom Daschle to serve as Secretary of Health and Human Services (2008-11-19 14:09)

Former Senate majority leader Tom Daschle has accepted an offer by President-elect Barack Obama to run Health and Human Services.

Daschle was one of Obama's earliest supporters and many of Obama's campaign and senate staff had come from the former South Dakota senator own former staff or from his recommendations.

CTV.ca Tom Daschle accepts Obama offer to lead Health and Human Services

Los Angeles Times - 1 hour ago

Ron Edmonds / AP Daschle, a former Senate majority leader, would head the agency that will handle the incoming administration's efforts to expand health insurance coverage, a Democratic source says.

Sources close to Sen. Hillary Clinton say that she is also considering whether to take the job of secretary of state. Obama reportedly has made it known to Clinton that he wants her to accept the job.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Napolitano, Pritzker vetted for cabinet positions (2008-11-20 09:14)

Arizona Gov. Janet Napolitano and billionaire Penny Pritzker are being vetted for the positions of homeland security secretary and commerce secretary respectively, according to Democratic sources.

Napolitano was one of Obama's earliest supporters among state governors and Pritzker served as Obama's national finance chair. Pritzker is one of several Chicago associates that Obama is considering appointing to key positions.

Thu Nov 20, 7:40 AM ET

Arizona Governor Janet Napolitano speaks during closing ceremonies of the 26th Border Governors Conference in Los Angeles, August 15, 2008.

(Fred Prouser/Reuters)

BBC News

Sources: Pritzker, Napolitano being vetted

CNN - 2 hours ago

(CNN) – Arizona Gov. Janet Napolitano is President-elect Barack Obama's top choice for homeland security secretary, according to multiple Democratic sources close to the transition.

Arizona governor in line for homeland security post Boston Globe

[EMBED]

Napolitano is DHS secretary pick

[EMBED]

Hillary may be announced as secretary of state within the next week

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-11-20 18:34:00)

I started a video blog commenting on Obama's address to the nation. Seemed like something up your alley:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=zlaZMqQGFD8>

It's pretty silly, enjoy!

J Milken (2008-11-20 22:55:00)

And I created a score card for Obama

<http://theobamascorecard.blogspot.com/>

Clinton to be named Secretary of State after Thanksgiving (2008-11-21 11:16)

According to an anonymous Obama transition aide, the president-elect will nominate Sen. Hillary Clinton for secretary of state after the Nov. 27 Thanksgiving holiday.

Such leaks from the Obama team were rare during the campaign process, but are now common with the transition probably as a means of airing out possible Obama choices.

Should Clinton accept, which seems likely for a number of reasons including husband Bill's willingness to be vetted, she would become the third woman to hold the post. Madeline Albright, who served under Bill Clinton, and current Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, are the first two women to serve as secretaries of state.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anti-war groups fear Obama cabinet of "hawks" (2008-11-21 14:55)

A Los Angeles Times article today reported that antiwar activists are fearful that President-elect Barack Obama is selecting hawkish appointees for key national security posts.

During the early part of his campaign, Obama attracted media attention for his consistent opposition to the Iraq War, which set him apart from his opponents.

However, so far, Obama has leaned heavily toward nominees who supported the war. Sam Hussein of the Institute for Public Accuracy noted: "It's astonishing that not one of the 23 senators or 133 House members who voted against the war is in the mix" for cabinet positions.

Many groups are worried about Obama's current commitment to pull out troops from Iraq in 16 months, a key campaign promise that he reiterated repeatedly throughout both the primary and general election campaigns.

Others believe that Obama should be given a chance, and note that he's not even in office yet. "I take him at his word that he is committed to ending the occupation of Iraq in 16 months and that he's going to assemble a team that's committed to that goal," said Tom Andrews, national director of Win Without War.

Obama has also said that he plans to ratchet military operations in Afghanistan and also possibly Pakistan in pursuit of al-Qaeda and the Taliban. However, many military commanders are ready to negotiate with the Taliban, at least, frustrated in their efforts to squash the fundamentalist organization.

Family Security Matters Anti-war groups fear Obama appointees are too hawkish

Newsday, NY - 13 hours ago

BY PAUL RICHTER | LOS ANGELES TIMES WASHINGTON - Anti-war groups and liberal activists are increasingly concerned at signs that Barack Obama's national ...

Activists: Obama Cabinet picks backed war United Press International

Keep Gates Wall Street Journal

Iraq war protesters fear cabinet shortlist Sydney Morning Herald

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama announces job creation plan (2008-11-22 09:14)

Addressing the nation on his YouTube/radio address, President-elect promised a plan that would create 2.5 million jobs by 2011.

The plan is not worked out yet, but from the video it sounds like it will involve repairing crumbling infrastructure and investments in new green energy. No estimate on a price tag, or method of payment either. Hopefully it will involve raising taxes on the wealthiest Americans.

[EMBED]

New York Times - 1 hour ago

Following is a transcript of President-elect Barack Obama's radio address for Saturday, Nov. 22, as released by the president-elect's office.

Plan would create 2.5 million jobs by 2011, he says CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

JabberJan (2008-11-22 09:41:00)

I hope he will include high speed train rails - I think we need our infrastructure rebuilt and this would be better for all than just sending an unemployment check.

Anonymous (2008-11-22 11:25:00)

Just found this other really weird Obama video on youtube while watching the video you posted <http://uk.youtube.com/watch?v=yV9p160tKFw>

Looks like a real Obama celebration??

Anonymous (2008-11-22 16:09:00)

It is of course of form of insanity, since it will all be done on money created out of air—which will devalue the existing money—your savings and earnings—and also be created, for no reason except that its part of a scam, as debt ... Any idiot in the world can dream up ways to spend magic money in Happy Land ... This isn't a public service. He's simply writing pretend checks against your real labor and real property for a fantasy scheme to keep the unwashed masses pacified.

What people don't understand is the real cost of all of these schemes is shown in the loss of free will and actual prosperity. The currency is destroyed and in the process the ability to maintain one's business, to be employed at one of these businesses, to make house payments, car payments, to be, in short, in charge of your own destiny, is lost ... So the crisis is created by reckless money creation and central manipulation of the economy, and the solution is what? Creating ten times the money, and making the national economy the sole property of the people who destroyed it.

If the money was created as a public service, a free tool to facilitate trade, we could, conceivably, go a thousand years without a depression. Ask yourself why this valueless paper is created as debt, with constantly mounting interest ... There is no reason whatsoever. Ask yourself why the amount in circulation isn't regulated according to economic activity so there is never too much or too little and the value is always maintained ...The equation to achieve this is absurdly simple. Look up colonial scrip. Obama isn't offering solutions, he's offering some big doses of the problem. There may be temporary pleasant side effects, but the end result is destruction of our savings and earnings and destruction of our liberties. Get educated.

Barack Obama: Superhero (2008-11-22 18:52)

Barack Obama is the first president from the 'Star Trek generation' and possibly the first one to admit to collecting comic book collector

Barack Obama: Superhero (2008-11-22 19:10)

Barack Obama is the first president from the 'Star Trek generation' and possibly the first one to admit to collecting comic books as a youngster.

In an interview with Entertainment Weekly, President-elect Obama said: "I was always into the Spider-Man/Batman model. The guys who have too many powers, like Superman, that always made me think they weren't really earning their superhero status. It's a little too easy. Whereas Spider-Man and Batman, they have some inner turmoil. They get knocked around a little bit."

And during a celebrity roast in New York City this year, Obama quipped while lampooning Sen. John McCain. "Contrary to the rumors you've heard, I was not born in a manger. I was actually born on Krypton and sent here by my father Jor-El to save the planet Earth."

He has also mentioned on the campaign trail that he watched Star Trek as a kid. "I grew up on Star Trek. I believe in the final frontier," he said.

According to Leonard Nimoy, who played Lt. Commander Spock on the sci-fi series, when he first met Obama the then-candidate greeted him with the Vulcan hand salute.

Comics and movies have always been popular during tough economic times, so it will be interesting to see how Obama responds to the current crisis. Will he be able to "save the day?"

[EMBED]

Leonard Nimoy, who played Spock on Star Trek, recalls an encounter with Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-11-22 19:54:00)

Obama has already responded to the economic crisis, Paul. He fell over himself to give criminal bankers authority to print themselves billions and hand it to each other and generally do whatever they want without any oversight or input from the American public—except we get to pick up the tab while we lose our homes.

Obama has stated loudly and clearly that he is a tool and servant for the monetary powers that run our country. And in other areas, such as the war he voted to fund, the government spying and "thoughtcrime" laws he voted for, who funded him, the controlled media's love affair with him, and who he's surrounding himself with, he has already demonstrated beyond doubt that his change amounts to a face-lift for the fascist policies of both Bush and Clinton.

It's really stunning how people are blinded by inane publicity and the selling of personality over policy.

Obama to nominate Geithner on Monday (2008-11-23 08:15)

President-elect Barack Obama is expected to nominate Timothy F. Geithner as his Treasury Secretary on Monday. Larry Summers will likely also be appointed as head of the president's National Economic Council.

These choices probably do not indicate a move toward serious regulation in the financial industry, which may explain why the swing traders drove the stock exchange upward on news of the Geithner pick. For example, he opposes the Treasury plan to regulate the Federal Reserve Bank, and also opposes mandated capital requirements for hedge funds.

He has even characterized the current regulatory system has "an enormously complex web of rules that create perverse incentives and leave huge opportunities for arbitrage and evasion, and creates the risk of large gaps in our knowledge and authority."

However, in congressional testimony last summer, Geithner did stress the need for "substantial reforms" of the system claiming that the Fed needs "broader" authority to handle the crisis.

X

Canada.com Will Geithner at Treasury Keep Fighting For the Fed?

Wall Street Journal Blogs, NY - Nov 21, 2008

With Mr. Geithner as President-elect Barack Obama's pick to be Treasury secretary, the Treasury plan for Fed regulation is effectively dead. ...

A Treasury Contender Schooled in Crisis As Head of New York Fed ...

Washington Post

Wall Street lauds likely Treasury pick Minneapolis Star Tribune

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-11-23 18:08:00)

The Fed created the crisis quite deliberately. Watch the Money Masters on Google Video or watch Fiat Empire or try Freedom to Fascism ...

With each announcement, Obama provides more evidence that he's an unprincipled political belly-crawler. Understand money and you will understand the corrupt nature of the system. Why wallow in ignorance? Challenge yourself! The time you spend on this blog could be spent presenting real issues to the public. Personality worship is the stuff of fascism.

Karzai, Obama discuss Afghanistan security (2008-11-23 18:52)

Afghanistan's President Hamid Karzai spoke with US President-elect Barack Obama on Sunday for the first time. The two discussed the security situation in Afghanistan.

During the campaign, Obama promised to reinforce the US presence in Afghanistan by at least one brigade or about 4,000 troops. Karzai has publicly requested that Obama send 20,000 more troops to the country. Insurgent attacks in Afghanistan are up 30 percent from 2007.

Canada.com

Obama, Karzai Discuss Afghan Security

Voice of America - 10 hours ago

By VOA News Afghan President Hamid Karzai says he has spoken with US President-elect Barack Obama for the first time since Mr. Obama won the US election.

Obama committed to Afghanistan, says Karzai's office AFP

Obama tells Karzai Afghan security will be priority Reuters

US defense chief: More forces for Afghanistan vote The Associated Press

[EMBED]

A Taliban attack on a supply convoy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama readies $500 billion rescue plan (2008-11-24 09:27)

Advisers and aides of President-elect Barack Obama say that he is preparing a $500 billion stimulus package that includes new federal spending and tax cuts over the next two years. This is a significant increase over the $175 billion plan offered during the presidential campaign.

No details of the plan are available so it can not be said how much of this will contribute to the federal budget deficit. Obama has promised to roll back Bush tax cuts for the rich, but when that will happen and whether it will be enough to cover the bill are unknown.

Today we also hear that the Bush administration will bail out Citigroup, the latest in a line of financial institutions to be saved from the brink of insolvency.

Obviously, this nation has not seen this type of corporate chaos since the Great Depression, when the government spent more than a decade bailing out banks and corporations. Possibly the big difference here will be in the method in which these bailouts are paid for.

During the Great Depression, the government raised taxes very sharply and especially on the rich to help pay for the bailouts. This time around, so far, the corporate dole-outs are being paid for 100 % by growing the national debt.

New York Daily News Obama Eyes $500 Billion in Stimulus; Paulson Weighs Ramping Up Aid ...

Wall Street Journal - 1 hour ago

By JONATHAN WEISMAN, DEBORAH SOLOMON, and JON HILSENATH Aides to President-elect Barack Obama and President George W. Bush are rushing to craft measures to shore up financial markets and prevent a policy vacuum from further harming the economy during ...

Ahead of the Bell: Slow impact seen in stimulus CNNMoney.com

House leaders clash over economic stimulus MarketWatch

The Associated Press - New York Times - Reuters - Forbes

[EMBED]

Obama economic team

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Santa Monica Sue (2008-11-25 23:23:00)

With all this press about various rescue plans, I have seen little comment about Obama's extraordinarily disappointing statement that he is reneging on his oft repeated campaign promise to roll back the tax cuts for the very wealthy to the Reagan era cuts. He justified this most eloquently and clearly, as well as standing clear about keeping his campaign pledges. Obama's knows better, and his seeming willingness to capitulate on this is most disillusioning.

Going back to the 1994 tax standards is not "raising taxes during an economic crisis." It is a small step toward creating a little more balance between the super rich and the rest of us about whom the Bush administration cared so little.

Anonymous (2008-11-26 07:11:00)

Yeah, Obama has fallen into the 'supply side economics' argument that dominated U.S. politics since Reagan that got us into this crisis. Taxing the super rich will NOT hurt the current economy. Decades of damage will not be undone by one or two stimulus plans. There is serious restructuring of the economy that is needed.

Barack Obama unveils economic team (2008-11-24 17:45)

Barack Obama named his economic team today in a press conference in Chicago including Timothy Geithner as his Treasury Secretary nominee and Lawrence Summers as the director of the National Economic Council.

"I've sought leaders who could offer both sound judgment and fresh thinking, both a depth of experience and a wealth of bold, new ideas, and most of all who share my fundamental belief that we cannot have a thriving Wall Street without a thriving Main Street,” Obama said. The news came as Goldman Sachs Inc. predicted that the economy will shrink in the fourth quarter and the first quarter of next year in the deepest recession since 1982.

Play

Chicagoans React To Obama's Economic Announcements
CBS 2 Chicago via Yahoo! News - 23 minutes ago

Play

Obama Announces Economic Team
CNBC via Yahoo! News - Nov 24 10:45 AM

Geithner, Summers have eye for stimulus, restraint

Forbes - 28 minutes ago

By JIM KUHNHENN , 11.24.08, 07:01 PM EST In the president-elect's new economic team, these are not mutually exclusive views of the world.

Obama names his economic team CNNMoney.com

Economic odd couple to lead US crisis rescue Reuters

Mon Nov 24, 6:23 PM ET

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Peter Bosshard (2008-11-24 19:09:00)

During their earlier tenures at the Treasury and the IMF, Larry Summers and Tim Geithner have consistently pushed policies of financial deregulation under the Washington Consensus. They have helped create the crises which they were subsequently asked to manage. It's disappointing that Geithner and Summers are now joining the Obama administration, while people who got it right (such as Joe Stiglitz and Paul Krugman) are not even on the Transition Economic Advisory Board.

On November 4, Barack Obama said that this was "our victory." With appointments such as Summers and Geithner, his administration doesn't look like "our government" unfortunately.

For more detailed comments, see www.internationalrivers.org/en/node/3522 / and www.internationalrivers.org/en/node/3510/

Mberenis (2008-11-25 02:43:00)

There is a light to our poor financial situation. You would be surprised at how many low APR loans, bailout's, and other grants that everyone is missing out on right now.

Bailout Assistance for Everyone

Jason (2008-11-25 12:00:00)

With the Treasury Secretary on his spending spree he surely isn't trying to get a good return on the tax payers' investment. The bailout was to buy up bad mortgage debt but it never did. What is the purpose of the fund? Paulson's has warrants on many banks and they average 1 – 3 percent when enacted. Yet the cash investment is about 20 percent of the market cap. Maybe the next Treasury Secretary will be less erratic.

<http://nomedals.blogspot.com>

Anonymous (2008-11-26 08:41:00)

And what will happen to those bad mortgages? I thought the world was supposed to end if they did not address them.

Obama picks OMB Director (2008-11-25 14:05)

President-elect Barack Obama named his pick for OMB Director today. Pledging to cut wasteful budget spending Obama announced that he will choose Peter R. Orszag director of the Office of Management and Budget.

The announcement comes as a Case-Shiller survey reveals a record 16.6 % annual decline in home prices over the summer to compound the steady stream of bad economic news.

Obama Names OMB Director

Washington Post - 55 minutes ago

President-elect Barack Obama pledged Tuesday to eliminate unnecessary government spending and programs. He vowed to get rid of programs that have outlived their usefulness, or that exist solely because of the power of politicians.

Obama Vows to Cut Budget Waste New York Times

[EMBED]

Obama pledges to cut wasteful spending.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's economic strategy (2008-11-26 08:42)

As four negative economic reports were released today, President-elect Barack Obama announced the formation of a new economic recovery board that will be headed by former Fed chair Paul Volcker.

Jobless claims remained high, while consumers cut back on spending by the largest amount since the 2001 terrorist attacks. The new government reports also indicate that orders to U.S. factories dived, and homes sales fell to the lowest level in nearly 18 years.

"As soon as the recovery is well under way, we need to set up a long-term plan to reduce the structural deficit and make sure we are not leaving a mountain of debt for the next generation," Obama said during the press conference in Chicago.

The statement indicates that Obama is willing to continue high deficit spending throughout the recessionary period. With the government scraping the barrel for cash, it may end up drying up credit markets further rather than freeing them up as intended. In effect, the government is borrowing money and then infusing into ailing institutions hoping they will resume lending out money. However, many of these banks are such bad shape they need to raise cash to keep their books in order.

And what may be enough to keep a specific institution afloat one day, may not be enough the next day depending on the stock market, the value of the bank's holdings, and other conditions. So some banks may very well be "black holes," while on the other hand the credit market is not an "inexhaustible vessel of plenty."

guardian.co.uk Volcker Tapped for Advisory Role

Wall Street Journal - 2 hours ago

By JONATHAN WEISMAN President-elect Barack Obama will appoint former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker on Wednesday to be the chairman of a new White ...

Obama Names Volcker to Head Panel on Reviving Economy (Update3)

Bloomberg

Obama chooses Volcker as economic adviser MarketWatch

Obama picks Volcker to head economic group CNNMoney.com

[EMBED]

Obama names Volcker to head new econ advisers @ Yahoo! Video

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jason (2008-11-26 16:56:00)

What is wrong with giving the American household a check for $13,000? The $13,000 would do much better in the people's hands. The $13,000 is less than the government is spending on the original bailout and the new proposed $800 billion. If an economic advisory board cannot put the people before their selfish reasons something is very wrong. If the people had the money they would spend it and then jobs would be added, manufacturing would grow, and last but not least the states would gain money in the form of sales taxes not to mention the added income taxes from the extra workers.

<http://nomedals.blogspot.com>

Condoleezza Rice briefs Barack Obama on Mumbai attacks (2008-11-28 15:15)

U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice briefed President-elect Barack Obama on coordinated attacks in Mumbai, the State Department said Friday.

"I can confirm on the record that Secretary of State Rice has called president-elect Obama twice since the attacks on Mumbai began to brief him on the situation," said spokesman Gordon Duguid. The attacks left at least 160 dead, including two Americans, and hundreds more injured.

Many see the attack as the first international challenge to the incoming Obama administration. The attacks were specifically aimed at foreigners particularly Americans, British and Israelis although most killed were Indian citizens. There are some clues leading toward neighboring Pakistan, and possible al-Qaeda links.

American forces have been unilaterally striking at targets in Pakistan with drone aircraft from across the border in Pakistan. Obama also indicated during the campaign that he might conduct unilateral strikes against terrorist targets in Pakistan.

Mumbai is no stranger to terrorist attacks but this is the first time such a brazen and prolonged operation has been carried out against such high profile targets. It also marks the first time an Islamist group has targeted primarily foreign targets during an attack on Indian soil.

Voice of America Rice briefs Obama on Mumbai attacks

AFP - 2 hours ago

WASHINGTON (AFP) — US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice has called and briefed president-elect Barack Obama on the series of attacks in Mumbai, ...

Iran outpost decision up to Obama, Rice says Deseret News

Obama Speaks Again to Rice, Gets Briefed on Mumbai Attacks ABC News

Obama speaks to Rice on Mumbai terror attack Times of India

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-11-29 20:26:00)

This is off topic, but I can't find what I want. I had so much faith in Obama that at the age of 69 for the first time I voted on the Democratic ticket. Now I wonder.

Obama says he wants to fix the economy and yet he is talking to McCain about granting amnesty to millions of illegal immigrants. Doesn't he understand that there are legals that need those jobs and WILL take them? That would help put the populous back to work. PLEASE, PLEASE DON'T GRANT AMNESTY TO THOSE HERE ILLEGALLY.

Obama gives hope at Poznan climate change conference (2008-11-29 16:29)

Nice to hear that Barack Obama is causing a buzz at the Poznan conference on global climate change. Delegates from 190 countries are meeting in Poznan, Poland to discuss measures to combat climate change, which is at the midpoint of two-year talks to replace the 1997 Kyoto Protocol.

The United States refused to sign on at Kyoto, and many nations of the world believe there is now hope for a breakthrough with the country when Obama takes over in January of next year.

Obama is including major restructuring toward clean, renewable forms of energy as part of his economic recovery plan that could involve hundreds of billions of dollars.

The Age Poznań Climate Change Conference Begins Dec. 1

Earth911.com, Arizona - 4 hours ago

In Poznań, new legislation to replace the Protocol once it expires in 2012 will begin to be determined. Working with startup technology companies, ...

Five things to watch in Poznan It's Getting Hot In Here

The Poznan talks Globe and Mail

Poznan Brings the Battle Against Climate Change to the Next Stage Voxy

The Age Global warming summit will need the Obama touch

Kansas City Star, MO - 8 hours ago

By Yael T. Abouhalkah, Kansas City Star Editorial Page columnist Barack Obama says he'll lead a nation that will fight global warming. ...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

dan (2008-11-30 18:37:00)

PRESS RELEASE

for immediate release: December 1, 2008

contact: Dan Bloom: danbloom@gmail.com

Lawsuit against world leaders for $1 billion for global warming impact on future?

Tags: Environment, climate treaty, crimes against humanity, global warming, greenhouse emissions, international criminal court

In a global publicity stunt, a U.S. environmental activist is poised to lodge a US $1 billion damages class action lawsuit at the International Criminal Court (ICC) against all world leaders for failing to prevent global warming.

Climate ctivist and blogger Dan Bloom, 60, a graduate of Tufts University in 1971, says he will sue world leaders for "intent to commit manslaughter against future generations of human beings by allowing murderous amounts of fossil fuels to be harvested, burned and sent into the atmosphere as CO2".

He intends to lodge the lawsuit on Dec. 6 at the ICC in the Hague.

The prosecutor's office at the ICC, the world's first permanent court (pictured below right) for war crimes, genocide and crimes against humanity, says it is allowed to receive information on crimes that may fall within the court's jurisdiction from any source.

"Such information does not per se trigger a judicial proceeding," the prosecutor's office hastened to add.

The question for media analysts and reporters is: will or should the prosecutor take on the case?

One might argue in defense that world leaders are in fact trying to impose climate-saving measures. In Vienna last year, almost all rich nations agreed to consider cuts in greenhouse emissions of 25-40 percent below 1990 levels by 2020. Talks on a new climate treaty will be held in Poznan, Poland, from Dec. 1-12.

Rajendra Pachauri, head of the U.N. Climate Panel, says the cuts are needed to limit temperature increase to 2 degrees Celsius, an amount seen by the EU, some other nations and many environmentalists as a threshold for "dangerous" climate change.

Granted then that there is growing consensus that climate change poses a real threat, is it not only world leaders who are failing to prevent global warming?

Perhaps the global collective of individuals, governments and industry is to blame and the ICC lawsuit a valid publicity stunt in the constant battle to raise awareness and prompt action?

Because it's action we need — and now, right?

Barack Obama to nominate Hillary Clinton on Monday (2008-11-30 08:39)

Democratic officials said that Barack Obama will announce his new security team including Hillary Clinton as Secretary of State.

Obama is also expected to announce that he is keeping Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates, a move that is angering his more progressive supporters. He will reportedly appoint General James L. Jones, a retired Marine commandant and NATO supreme commander, as his national security adviser; with Eric H. Holder Jr. a former deputy attorney general, as his choice for attorney general and Gov. Janet Napolitano of Arizona as secretary of homeland security, the sources said.

Susan E. Rice, a campaign adviser and former assistant secretary of state, will be nominated as ambassador to the United Nations, a position that will be elevated to cabinet level.

X

Washington Post Obama likely to name Hillary Clinton to Cabinet. But wait! Can he?

Los Angeles Times, CA - 2 hours ago

The president-elect, no-drama Barack Obama, is expected to name his new secretary of State, all-drama Hillary Clinton, as early as tomorrow as part of the ...

Officials: Obama set to introduce Clinton Monday The Associated Press

Bill Clinton Is Said to Agree to Release Names of Donors New York Times

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Mumbai attacks: Preemptive strike against Obama? (2008-11-30 19:34)

A new theory suggests that the Mumbai attacks were focused on neutralizing President-elect Barack Obama 's strategy in the region.

"There's a lot of clamour for action against Pakistan from India," Pratap Bhanu Mehta, the head of the Centre for Policy Research. "This attack was not just an attempt to scuttle India's peace process with Pakistan. It was in many ways a pre-emptive strike against [Barack] Obama's strategy for the region."

Obama had promised to focus US efforts on the tribal regions that border Afghanistan and Pakistan, including pressuring Islamabad to step up pressure against al-Qaeda and Taliban operatives working in the area.

However, if Pakistan diverts its forces to the border with India in fear of possible reprisal for the Mumbai attacks, Washington will have to tread more carefully in the region.

Vancouver Sun

Mumbai attacks 'were a ploy to wreck Obama plan to isolate al-Qaeda'

Times Online - 4 hours ago

Relations between India and Pakistan were on a knife edge last night amid fears that Delhi's response to the Mumbai attacks could undermine the Pakistani army's campaign against Islamic militants on the frontier with Afghanistan.

The Region: India and Israel: The parallels Jerusalem Post

Pak shifts from Afghanistan to India PRESS TV

TopNews

Obama: Mumbai attacks will not defeat India's democracy

Jerusalem Post, Israel - Nov 28, 2008

Obama was monitoring the situation in Mumbai, where more than 150 people were killed in violence that began Wednesday night when gunmen attacked 10 sites ...

Investigation Begins as Assault in Mumbai Ends Washington Post

Obama sends condolences to Indian PM for Mumbai attacks victims Xinhua

A message to Obama? Ynetnews

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

2.10 December

Barack Obama introduces security team (2008-12-01 09:03)

Barack Obama and Joe Biden are introducing their new security picks. You can watch live on CNN by clicking the link below:

<http://www.cnn.com/video/flashLive/live.html?stream=stream2>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama picks Cabinet at record speed (2008-12-02 09:38)

President-elect Barack Obama is choosing his Cabinet at record speed putting together a "team of rivals" from all sides of the political spectrum.

David Sirota argues that the real rivalry here is not between the Cabinet members but between Obama's campaign promises and his future policy decisions. He rightly notes that Obama must be given the chance to deliver on his promise that all policy emanates from him and not from his Cabinet and staff.

Having competing voices is generally a good thing as long as friction does not interfere with results. Few presidents have entered office with the kinds of tests Obama is facing. Possibly only Franklin Delano Roosevelt inherited a more battered economy, and the country is mired in two wars that are part of a larger "war on terrorism." The broader geopolitical situation is heating up with the possibility of a new strategic arms race also around the corner.

Here are the new members of the national security team:

Hillary Clinton , will serve as Secretary of State , arguably the highest profile position next to the president.

Secretary Robert Gates , the current Secretary of Defense, will continue to serve and presumably will have no problem implementing a 16-month pullout from Iraq, if that policy is indeed implemented.

Eric Holder, former Deputy Attorney General and a former United States Attorney for the District of Columbia, will serve as Attorney General . He will be the first African American to serve in that post.

Janet Napolitano , Governor and former U.S. Attorney for Arizona , will serve as Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security . The first woman to serve in this position that was just created during the Bush administration.

Dr. Susan E. Rice, a Senior Foreign Policy Advisor to the Obama for America campaign, a Senior Fellow at the Brookings Institution , and former U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, will serve as Ambassador to the United Nations .

General Jim Jones, USMC (Ret), former Allied Commander, Europe, and Commander of the United States European Command , will serve as National Security Advisor .

Washington Post Obama Dazzles Dems and GOP with Cabinet Picks

FOXNews - 1 hour ago

President-elect Barack Obama has named half of his Cabinet members at record speed and earned positive reviews from both sides of the political aisle.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Deskapahendri (2008-12-02 20:34:00)
Good Luck Obama

Obama to nominate Richardson for Commerce (2008-12-03 07:53)

President-elect Barack Obama will announce Gov. Bill Richardson as his nominee for secretary of commerce, according to Democratic sources.

Richardson is one of the highest profile Latino elected officials in the country. During the campaign, Obama energetically courted the Latino vote and won that segment handily during the general election. Richardson endorsed Obama over Hillary Clinton during the primary season.

Richardson has excellent credentials but his nomination will attract some controversy from Chinese Americans, who objected to his handling of the Wen Ho Lee spy case when Richardson was secretary of energy during the Clinton administration. Some Chinese Americans are protesting the nomination demanding a formal apology from Richardson.

[EMBED]

Malaysia Star Obama to nominate Richardson for Cabinet

CNN International - 1 hour ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) – President-elect Barack Obama will announce New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson as his pick for secretary of commerce on Wednesday, a Democratic source told CNN.

Obama to name Richardson for Commerce on Wednesday The Associated Press

Chinese-American activists oppose any Bill Richardson cabinet ... San Jose Mercury News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Comment: Obama's first setback? (2008-12-03 10:17)

The Democrats loss in the runoff election for the Georgia senate seat reminds us of how fast things can turn in the world of politics. Bill Clinton enjoyed success very similar to Barack Obama when he won the first time against George H.W. Bush, but within two years Democrats loss control of Congress.

Clinton inherited a recession from the elder Bush, but Obama is bequeathed with the deepest recession and most severe financial crisis since the Great Depression. Clinton had to deal with a hostile Iraq but not quite a "war," while Obama has two wars and a potential arms race beckoning on the horizon.

Fortunately, Americans tend to back Democrats during hard financial times. FDR served longer than any other president throughout the Great Depression. Although the stock market bottomed out and unemployment reached its lowest level well into his first term, Americans did not lose faith in him or the Democrats.

There is no doubt that Obama is losing confidence fastest among progressives, the base of the Democratic Party that strongly supported him especially during the early part of his presidential campaign. In turn, the same actions that are bothering progressives or liberals are attracting more conservative-leaning folk toward him and his administration.

Can he keep his extraordinary movement together without the progressive "change" element? Will those small donations continue to roll in, and the volunteers still show up when called? Hopefully, the loss in Georgia is not a sign of things to come down the road.

Although the liberal commentators have been generally disappointed with Obama's cabinet and staff picks, at least his commitment to green energy transition appears as strong as ever despite the market turbulence. That alone may be enough to keep the "bleeding hearts" on his side.

BBC News Low Turnout Saves Chambliss; Progressives Look Ahead - Dec 03

Beyond Chron, CA - 6 hours ago

Saxby Chambliss gets to remain in Washington for another six years, and I fully expect him to play "obstructionist" in the US Senate to Obama's progressive ...

For Republicans, a Welcome and Resounding Win in Georgia National Review Online Blogs

12/3: The GOP Comeback Begins? National Journal

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Oprah show in DC during inauguration (2008-12-04 13:03)

Oprah Winfrey will host her television show The Oprah Winfrey Show live from the nation's capital on Jan. 19, the day before Barack Obama is inaugurated into office. Another show is also being arranged for Jan. 21.

Winfrey, who strongly supported Obama during his campaign, will broadcast the show from the Kennedy Center Opera House.

"That's where I'm going to be," told "Access Hollywood," the television show that first reported the news. "That's the place to be."

No word on who will be making guest appearances on the show during the DC broadcasts.

Washington Post Oprah Winfrey to host TV show from Washington

The Associated Press - 55 minutes ago

Winfrey will host a live episode of "The Oprah Winfrey Show" from the Kennedy Center Opera House on Jan. 19, the day before Barack Obama takes the ...

Oprah Brings Her Show to DC New York Times

Ms. Winfrey goes to Washington: Oprah to take show to DC for ... New York Daily News

Oprah Winfrey mum on Obama inauguration bash Chicago Sun-Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

obamaquest (2008-12-04 21:01:00)

The crowd estimates are in the millions. Being in DC for the days surrounding the inauguration itself will be an event worth remembering

Should Obama take the lead? (2008-12-05 08:02)

With the economy staggering, there are many who believe that President-elect Barack Obama should be more out front on the issues i.e., the automobile industry bailout .

Obama has said that there is only one president at a time, and indeed he is not yet invested with the executive powers of office. He needs to show a degree of respect for the president currently in office although Congressman Barney Frank may have had it right suggesting that currently there are no presidents in sight.

However, with all the "emergency" bailout money being requested by different sectors, it may be a good thing for someone to actually sit back and analyze the situation. No one doubts the seriousness of the crisis. The bad economic reports continue to roll out. For example, just today we found out that job losses in November totaled 533000, the worse drop since 1974.

The last great financial bailout in this country was during the savings & loan crisis in the late 1980s and that cost a total of only $160 billion. The current mess, when all the goodies are counted, has cost so far around $9 trillion, and no one now suggests that the payouts are nearly ending.

Many of us can remember the Chrysler bailout, but today all of the Big Three are facing bankruptcy and unlike 1979, things look a lot bleaker for American automakers. They failed to read the tea leaves and design cars for the future. Clearly this is not an ordinary cyclical downturn. The current crisis is the result of continuously failing to address structural and policy problems by rolling them over with new debt spending. Supply-side economics, deregulated markets, and tax breaks for the super rich do not work, but no one is really ready to admit that yet by making the required changes.

It is now almost normal to see triple digit changes in the stock market, and drops of several hundred points are now hardly shocking as they have become so common. The volatility demonstrates the uncertainty, fear and the simple fact that most experts have no idea what is going on. They don't know that the system they have believed in for the last few decades – the easy money system of rampant speculation, leveraging and fixed hedge fund markets for the wealthy – does not work.

So, it probably is a good idea for the incoming administration to sit back a bit and analyze the problem from a distance. Let the current officials in power do their job and fulfill their responsibility. Figure out what really needs to be done and then develop a program to implement starting on Jan. 20.

We've already seen how rushing to the rescue of doomsday-warning corporations with trillions of taxpayer dollars does not work.

Washington Post November job losses steepest since 1974

Reuters - 1 hour ago

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Employers axed payrolls by a shocking 533000 in November for the weakest performance in 34 years, government data on Friday showed, as the recession inflicted a mounting toll on the US labor market.

533000 US jobs lost in November Bizjournals.com

Employers cut 533K jobs in Nov., most in 34 years The Associated Press

Seattle Post Intelligencer Automakers Take Plea for Bailout to House Committee

Washington Post - 2 hours ago

By Lori Montgomery and Kendra Marr The chief executives of General Motors, Chrysler and Ford will take their plea for a rescue package to the House of Representatives today, appearing with the president of the United Auto Workers before a key ...

Ahead of the Bell: Auto execs head to the House MSN Money

Auto bailout could be tied to gov't-run overhaul The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Thomasjaz (2008-12-07 21:19:00)

The Government should consider issuing $10,000 incentive checks for those who will be willing to buy a car from Chrysler, Ford or Chevrolet. The checks can be used only as down payment for a new car from those companies. If used they could sell 2.5 million cars and solve their cash flow problems, keep employees working and be able to pay the government back via taxes etc...

Barack Obama pledges massive infrastructure works (2008-12-06 14:34)

Barack Obama promised today on his YouTube/radio address to implement a public works program unseen since the federal highway system was built in the 1950s.

Obama's pledge comes after bleak unemployment figures were released for November, the worse since 1974.

The new plan would include spending on roads, bridges, schools, sewer systems, mass transit, electric grids, dams and other public utilities. He also promised to improve schools, expand broadband coverage, make government buildings more energy efficient and improve information technology at medical facilities. Estimates of costs for the plan have ranged from about $400 billion to more than $1 trillion. As Obama has been less committal on rolling back the Bush tax cuts for the wealthy, we have to assume that the program will be funded through deficit spending.

CBS News Obama Pledges Public Works on a Vast Scale

New York Times, United States - 2 hours ago

By PETER BAKER and JOHN M. BRODER WASHINGTON — President-elect Barack Obama committed Saturday to the largest public works construction program since the ...

Obama Offers Highlights of His Economic Stimulus Plan Washington Post

Obama pledges to rebuild US BBC News

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama to nominate Eric Shinseki for Veterans Affairs (2008-12-06 18:18)

Democratic sources said Saturday that President-elect Barack Obama will nominate retired Gen. Eric Shinseki as secretary of Veterans Affairs.

Shinseki gained attention when he testified that many more troops were needed to pacify Iraq. His statements drew anger from administration officials and Shinseki retired a few months later.

Obama is expected to formally announce the nomination of the highly-decorated Vietnam War veteran on Sunday – Pearl Harbor Day. Shinseki is a Japanese-American from Hawai'i and is Obama's first Asian or Pacific Islander selected for a Cabinet position.

 This Feb. 25, 2003 file photo shows Gen. Eric K. Shinseki, then Chief of Staff of the United States Army, attends the Senate Armed Services committee hearing regarding the Defense Authorization Request for 2004 on Capitol Hill in Washington. U.S. President-elect Barack Obama has selected retired Gen. Eric K. Shinseki to be VA secretary according to Democratic officials, Saturday Dec. 6, 2008. (AP Photo/Charles Dharapak, File)

 Then U.S. Army Chief of Staff General Eric Shinseki reviews the guard of honour in New Delhi February 3, 2003. President-elect Barack Obama has selected Shinseki to be the next secretary of veterans affairs, Democratic sources said. REUTERS/B Mathur

ABC News Obama takes Shinseki for Cabinet, sources say

CNN - 1 hour ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) – President-elect Barack Obama will nominate retired Gen. Eric Shinseki to be secretary of Veterans Affairs, two Democratic sources said Saturday.

Obama picks general to lead veterans affairs Reuters

Dem officials: Shinseki to be named VA secretary The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

hernadi-key (2008-12-07 10:58:00)

information for you..

=====

Obama, Ideas and Solutions !!!

As I'm sure that you have noticed, Hillary Clinton is trying to sell us this lie that Obama doesn't have any ideas or solutions and yet in the same breath claims he has stolen her ideas. She can't have it both ways. Which one is it Mrs. Clinton? And if they both has similar ideas, which they do then what is the difference between the two?

He represents true change, a fresh face, an inspirational orator, a more electable candidate who has cross-over appeal into the Independent voting block as well as some Republicans. He seeks to run a mostly positive campaign while she has been and continues to try and drag him into fights and mud-slinging. It looks desperate and nothing turns off an electorate more than playing dirty and negative attacks...

read more...

<http://usa-barackobama.blogspot.com/>

=====

Video: Obama to announce Shinseki nomination in Chicago (2008-12-07 07:41)

[EMBED]

An Associated Press video on the news that President-elect Barack Obama will announce retired Gen. Eric Shinseki as his secretary of Veterans Affairs today at a news conference in Chicago.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Supreme Court dismisses Obama eligibility appeal (2008-12-08 09:34)

Today, the Supreme Court knocked down an appeal challenging President-elect Barack Obama's eligibility to serve as president. This silly case was based on the unsubstantiated claim that Obama was a British subject at birth.

The groups backing the case though kept appealing bringing it all the way up to the Supreme Court.

[EMBED]

Current World News Court won't review Obama's eligibility to serve

Baltimore Sun - 1 hour ago

By Tim Jones | Tribune correspondent UPDATE: The Supreme Court has turned down an emergency appeal from a New Jersey man who says President-elect Barack Obama is ineligible to be president because he was a British subject at birth.

Court: No review of Obama's eligibility to serve The Associated Press

Supreme Court Declines to Hear Obama Nationality Case Washington Post

Internet drives Barack Obama birth-certificate battle Chicago Tribune

Obama citizenship challenge goes nowhere Boston Globe

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's Job Plan (2008-12-08 12:56)

Looking over Barack Obama's job creation plan , one might get the idea that mostly the information technology, green technology and civil engineering sectors will benefit. The president-elect has promised to build and repair roads and bridges; expand broadband coverage and digital processing; and transition more toward clean, renewable energy.

There will, though, be many industries "downstream" that will benefit from the massive public works program. Obviously when there is infrastructure in one area, for example, the small businesses in that area will get a boost from the new business. Workers will patronize the local eateries, coffee shops, grocery stores, etc. Suppliers of raw materials will get new business as well as the transportation companies that move things from one place to another. The money cycles through the economy.

One important aspect in building all the new infrastructure is to make it as environment and energy-friendly as possible from the start. One can repair roads in the ordinary way, or in a way that will decrease traffic congestion and maintenance costs, thus reducing energy consumption.

Properly planning such modernization puts good minds to work, minds that will be needed to tackle the challenges of the future.

Now if the government plans to pay for the whole thing by borrowing that could be counter-productive in the end. We are now in a credit crunch, nay, a period of peak credit . When the government borrows money it has to come from somewhere.

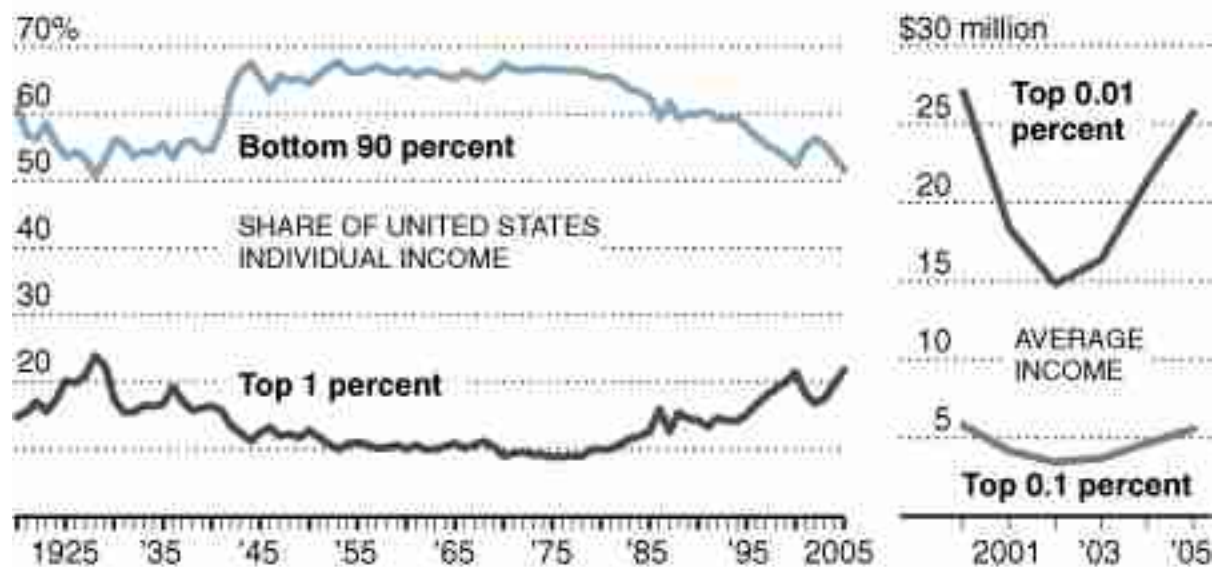

When Japan bailed out its banks, it was fortunate that Japanese citizens had saved the equivalent of tens of trillions of U.S. dollars in cash that they could loan to the government at extremely low interest rates. They basically sacrificed future dividends on a good chunk of their life savings to help out the governments. Now, Americans have a very low savings rate and we you balance it out against their debt, they actually have a negative savings rate.

So money borrowed by the U.S. government will to a very significant extent suck up some of the money that could be available to commercial credit markets. And of course the government, i.e. the taxpayer, has to eventually pay back the money with interest.

Therefore, the way to pay for the program is to increase taxes. Now, I don't mean increasing taxes for the poor or middle class. You can actually lower the taxes for these groups, as Obama promised to do, and still increase taxes overall significantly. This is due to the stark disparity in wealth and income that exists in America. According to the latest statistics, 10 % of the population owns 71 % of the wealth, and the top 1 % controlled 38 %. The income disparity is equally wide.

The Roaring 2000s

After a brief dip in the early 2000s because of a decline in the stock market, the share of the nation's income that goes to those at the top has begun to climb again, hitting a level not seen since the 1920s.

Sources: Thomas Piketty, Paris School of Economics, and Emmanuel Saez, University of California, Berkeley, from I.R.S. data

The New York Times

Of course, the federal government taxes the income and dividends of individuals. A lot of the wealth of the richest Americans sits in useless hedge funds and derivatives designed to simply increase the wealth of said individuals who endlessly hoard money.

One can tax these fat cats without in any way endangering their lifestyle. They will still be billionaires or high-end multi-millionaires.

The advantages of taxing rich folks include but are not limited to: 1) No need to pay the money back much less pay any interest rates, 2) Money languishing in complex, unregulated securities is recycled into the economy 3) Wealth disparity is lessened.

Wealth inequality is eased because when the government borrows money, it mainly borrows from rich folks and big financial banks and institutions. A good deal of the money also comes from pension funds, state governments and the like, but hardly any comes from ordinary people. However, in the end the payback is more evenly distributed among populace in general because of the present tax structure i.e., money flows from the poorer masses into those haywire securities of the super-rich.

Now since incomes taxes were reimposed in 1913, the tax rate on the richest Americans has generally been much higher due to the very inequality mentioned. Here is a chart showing the tax rates for the top bracket of taxpayers since 1913. Notice that for most of the time, that rate has been more than the current 30 percent. Other than at the very beginning when the tax rates were eased in, the top marginal rates have been lower than today only twice – before the Great Depression and before the recession of the early 1990s.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Rod Blagojevich arrested for trying to sell Obama senate seat (2008-12-09 08:40)

A strange story today involving President-elect Barack Obama's vacant senate seat.

Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich and his chief of staff John Harris were arrested on charges that they tried to sell Obama's senate seat. Reminiscent of the old Chicago politics that earned the city a reputation for corruption.

Feds take Gov. Blagojevich into custody

Chicago Tribune - 35 minutes ago

Gov. Rod Blagojevich and his chief of staff John Harris were arrested today by FBI agents on federal corruption charges. Gov. Rod Blagojevich and his chief of staff John Harris were arrested today by FBI agents on federal corruption charges.

Illinois Governor Arrested on Federal Charges Wall Street Journal

Illinois Gov. Blagojevich in custody on charges Reuters

✕ Illinois Governor Rod Blagojevich attends a press conference at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb, Illinois, in February 2008. The governor of Illinois was arrested Tuesday for conspiring to sell an appointment to president-elect Barack Obama's recently open US senate seat, prosecutors said.(AFP/File/Amanda Rivkin)

✖ Seen in file photos are Tammy Duckworth, a disabled Iraq war veteran and currently the Illinois veteran affairs director, U.S. Reps. Jesse Jackson Jr., of Chicago and Jan Schakowsky, of Evanston, Ill., Illinois Attorney General Lisa Madigan and Illinois Senate President Emil Jones. The five have been mentioned as potential candidate to fill the seat of President-elect Barack Obama who said Thursday, Nov. 13, 2008, he would resign from the Senate effective Sunday, Nov. 16. Under state law, Democratic Gov. Rod Blagojevich will name Obama's replacement he said he expects to make a decision by year's end, (AP Photo/Staff)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Obama distances himself from Blagojevich scandal (2008-12-09 20:52)

Barack Obama tried to distance himself from the fiasco in his home state where the governor was arrested today for attempting to "sell" Obama's open senate seat.

"I had no contact with the governor or his office, and so I was not aware of what was happening," Obama told reporters as he emerged from a meeting with former vice president

Al Gore yesterday. "It is a sad day for Illinois. Beyond that, I don't think it's appropriate to comment."

Nothing in the indictment of Gov. Rod Blagojevich implicates Obama in the alleged activity.

Indeed some of Obama's efforts to push ethics reforms indirectly led to the wire-tapping of Blagojevich's phones.

Illinois state lawmakers have called an emergency session to select a successor for Obama's senate seat.

Obama Tries to Stay Above the Hometown Fray

Washington Post, United States - 29 minutes ago

John McCain and the GOP this year – sought to tie him to Antoin "Tony" Rezko, a onetime friend and fundraiser who was convicted last year of fraud and ...

State lawmakers prepare to decide Obama replacement

Rockford Register Star, IL - 38 minutes ago

Political fundraiser Antoin "Tony" Rezko, who raised money for the campaigns of both Blagojevich and Obama, is awaiting sentencing after being convicted of ...

Obama's Intervention Indirectly Led to Case

New York Times, United States - 49 minutes ago

Mr. Rezko was among the first to contribute to Mr. Obama's earliest State Senate race, in 1995, and later became a major fund-raiser for his campaign for ...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Obama foes jump on new Chicago scandal (2008-12-10 09:18)

The anti-Obama crowd is at it again possibly stung by their failure to have the president-elect removed in the eligibility case.

Now they are trying to smear Obama due to his association with the indicted Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich. Although Obama has not been accused of any wrongdoing, his foes will naturally try to link him with Chicago's famed reputation for corruption. Obviously though, this is something that could hurt the Democratic Party, especially as they hold most of the power in Washington DC, and the adage goes, power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely. So they will have to try and get ahead of this to ease public perceptions.

Times Online Arrest Fuels Anti-Obama Crowd

Washington Post, United States - 1 hour ago

There's nothing like a little Guilt-by-Association Red Meat to bring the anti-Obama crowd back to the comment boards. Hundreds of posts have found their way ...

Obama's Intervention for Ethics Bill Indirectly Led to Case ... New York Times

Text of Obama's first newspaper interview as president-elect Los Angeles Times

Illinois governor scandal

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Marty (2008-12-10 17:32:00)

Being in the circles he's in, if he's going to get in trouble for any associations he may have, he's doomed. The same would go for any of us. Fortunately not everyone is as.. intelligently challenged.. and the ones with some of the accusations.

Barack Obama calls on gov. to resign, nominates Daschle (2008-12-11 09:49)

President-elect Barack Obama called again on Gov. Rod Blagojevich to resign following his indictment on corruption charges during a press conference Thursday in Chicago. Obama said that he never met with Blagojevich regarding his replacement and that his team was investigating whether any staff members had contact with the governor on this subject.

Obama also announced today that former Senator Tom Daschle will be his pick for secretary of Health and Human Services. Daschle was one of Obama's earliest high-profile supporters and is a leading figure in the movement toward universal health care and healthcare reform.

Obama is also expected to announce Nobel Prize-winning physicist Steven Chu as his Energy secretary and former New Jersey environmental protection commissioner Lisa Jackson as head of the Environmental Protection Agency.

[EMBED]

Video: Obama: Resign Blagojevich CBS Blagojevich's Promise to Mom: 'I'll Never Take Bribes'

ABC News - 2 hours ago

By RHONDA SCHWARTZ and KATE MCCARTHY Governor Rod Blagojevich promised his mother he would always be honest and "never take bribes," according to a 2006 video posted online by the Democratic National Committee.

Illinois First Lady Faces Scrutiny New York Times

USA Today Obama to Name Former Lawmaker as Health Secretary

Voice of America - 1 hour ago

By VOA News US President-elect Barack Obama will name former Senator Tom Daschle as his secretary of health and human services during a press conference Thursday in Chicago.

Obama taps Nobel physicist for energy secretary: reports AFP

Nobel Physicist Chosen To Be Energy Secretary Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama moves to dispell senate seat doubts (2008-12-12 09:11)

President-elect Barack Obama is moving quickly to reveal any possible staff contacts with Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich about his former senate seat.

"What I want to do," Obama said during a Washington news conference, "is gather all the facts about any staff contacts that I might — may have — that may have taken place between the transition office and the governor's office.

"But what I'm absolutely certain about is that our office had no involvement in any deal-making around my Senate seat. That I'm absolutely certain of."

With so many problems facing his transition team from the economy to the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, Obama needs to detach himself from this scandal as quickly as possible.

[EMBED]

Riz Khan - Blagojevich's turndown - Dec 11 - Part 1

WELT ONLINE Obama to Air Any Staff Talks About Senate Seat

New York Times - 1 hour ago

Gov. Rod R. Blagojevich went to his office in Chicago on Thursday to work on the state budget, while state lawmakers worked on ways to remove him from office.

Could Candidates in Blagojevich Case Face Charges? ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Kate Day (2008-12-12 18:08:00)

"Doubts" will be the operative word around Barack Obama for the next four years. Kevin Price of the Price of Business and (www.BizPlusBlog.com) points out that, although the media loves Obama, they love a good scandal more. That is how we will remember Obama.

(2008-12-12 21:47)

Jermaine Crawford from HBO's "The Wire"

H.O.P.E Inaugural Youth Ball (2008-12-12 23:31)

Jermaine Crawford from HBO's "The Wire" is organizing the H.O.P.E. Inaugural Youth Ball in Washington DC on Jan. 17 at Trinity College.

Proceeds from the ball will go to Nation Network for Youth (NN4y), an organization that helps homeless teens.

The National Network is committed to ensuring that opportunities for growth and development be available to youth everywhere. The youth we work with face greater odds due to abuse and neglect, homelessness, lack of resources, community prejudice, differing abilities and other life challenges. For that reason, we are working to create a community of agencies, people and resources to champion the needs of the youth of today and the leaders of tomorrow.

The group organizing the event also has hotel rooms in Gaithersburg, Maryland not far from DC as lodging is hard to come by at this time.

According to Jermaine, there will be some very "special" guests at the ball.

You need tickets for this event:

www.hopeinauguralball.com and email info@hopeinauguralball.com

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Democrats Go Down on the Auto Bailout (2008-12-13 09:15)

Not sure if this is about left or center. Generally the left promotes carbon caps and lower emissions, and most climate change deniers have been on the far right. Gov. Schwarzenegger in California has really gone against the current in his party on pushing a green agenda.

Now Obama has also scolded Detroit during the campaign for not retooling and building efficient, clean vehicles for the future. Maybe he should step in and insist that the Big Three develop a concrete plan to build cars that will sell in the future marketplace and meet reasonable environmental standards.

The traditional Democrats are no doubt scare of the union bosses but this is not really about left or center. The phenomenon is found among officials of all parties who make decisions based on how it impacts their future political ambitions.

About Job Cuts

Read the Article at HuffingtonPost

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Scott (2008-12-13 22:00:00)

It will be interesting to see if Obama can bring the two sides together to produce an auto bailout plan that the majority can live with.

Barack Obama Site

World hopes Obama brings change on climate change (2008-12-14 08:22)

The United States has been one of the "bad guys" on the world stage when it comes to dealing with climate change and greenhouse gas emissions. The country, which produces a good chunk of the world's carbon emissions, failed to sign on to the Kyoto Protocol almost undermining global efforts on tackling climate change.

However, with the administration of President George W. Bush on the way out, there is new hope that President-elect Barack Obama will bring a new direction in U.S. environmental policy.

Obama's new "green team" headed by Nobel Prize-winning physicist Steven Chu as secretary of energy and Carol M. Browner in the newly-created position of White House coordinator of energy and climate policy are more in line with Al Gore-like thinking. Same goes for Lisa P. Jackson, the new head of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The president-elect supports cutting emissions to 80 percent below 1990 levels by 2050, and favors an international cap-and-trade system.

X

Telegraph.co.uk

Next Climate Summit May Turn on Rich Nations' Approach to Poor Ones

Washington Post, United States - 10 hours ago

David Waskow, climate change program director for Oxfam America, said delegates hoping to finalize an agreement next December in Copenhagen recognize that ...

Disdain for Bush, hope for Obama on climate change AFP

ABC News

Gore Talks Climate Change With Obama and Biden

Washington Post, United States - Dec 10, 2008

President-elect Barack Obama met with former vice president Al Gore in Chicago on Tuesday to discuss climate change, declaring after the meeting, ...

Gore has Obama's ear on climate change San Francisco Chronicle

Obama says climate change a matter of national security

Reuters

WELT ONLINE

Title, but Unclear Power, for a New Climate Czar

New York Times, United States - Dec 12, 2008

Long an acolyte of Al Gore, she has called climate change "the greatest challenge ever faced" and echoed Mr. Obama's call for a cap-and-trade system to ...

Obama's Environment Team Takes Shape Living on the Earth

Washington Post

- Concern for Climate Change Defines Energy Dept. Nominee

Washington Post, United States - Dec 11, 2008

By Steven Mufson The man tapped to be the next secretary of energy, Nobel Prize-winning physicist Steven Chu, recently compared the danger of climate change ...

Editorial: Chu Will Change Direction istockAnalyst.com (press release)

Obama's Carbon Busters Wall Street Journal

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bad times leave Obama unscathed (2008-12-14 19:29)

While most Washington politicians from both major parties appear abhorred in public opinion polls , President-elect Barack Obama is as popular as ever.

The public is not linking Obama with the faltering economy and nearly 8 in 10 people surveyed are satisfied with his performance in the transition period.

Although most of those interviewed were doubtful that Obama could fulfill most of his campaign promises, they thought the president-elect was intelligent and had a positive attitude of him. Obama seems to stand out as someone people trust to look out for their general interests.

People also had a favorable view of Obama's Cabinet and staff picks. They especially liked his choice of Hillary Clinton as secretary of state, and believe that he is making a good effort toward bipartisanship in keeping on Robert M. Gates as secretary of defense.

Michelle Obama also enjoyed high favorable ratings as the incoming First Lady with 54 percent having a positive view of her. About 69 percent thought that Obama was a positive role model for women.

AFP FOX News Poll: Most Americans Positive About Obama's Cabinet

FOXNews - Dec 11, 2008

A recent FOX News poll finds that many Americans are pleased with President-elect Barack Obama's cabinet picks. Most Americans rate President-elect Barack ...

Obama Gets Strong Support in Poll Wall Street Journal

Obama transition going well, most in AP poll say The Associated Press

Obama enjoys strong public support as president-elect Los Angeles Times

WSJ/NBC News Poll: Michelle Obama on the Rise Wall Street Journal Blogs

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Seo Infotech (2008-12-14 23:06:00)

Obama is great.

Barack Obama

(2008-12-15 09:32)

President-elect Barack Obama and Vice President-elect Joe Biden are planning a pre-inaugural celebration with their families in Baltimore on Jan. 17.

Obama will start the day in Philadelphia and the event will focus on the inaugural theme of "Renewing America's Promise" - featuring cities with historic connections to that theme: Philadelphia, where the nation's founders signed the Declaration of Independence; Baltimore, "where the country's independence was defended,"; and Washington, the nation's capital.

1358

"As part of the most open and accessible inauguration in history, we hope to include as many Americans as possible who wish to participate but can't be in Washington," Emmett S. Beliveau, director of the inaugural committee, said in a statement. "These events will allow us to do that while honoring the rich history and tradition of previous inaugural journeys."

Telegraph.co.uk Obama, Biden to hold event in Baltimore before inauguration

Baltimore Sun - 1 hour ago

By Paul West | paul.west@baltsun.com WASHINGTON - President-elect Barack Obama, Vice President-elect Joe Biden and their families will hold a pre-inaugural event in Baltimore on Saturday, Jan. 17, as they travel to Washington by train for the ...

Obama, Biden Inauguration road show to hit Philadelphia ... Chicago Sun-Times

Obamas & Bidens to Arrive By Train to Kick-Off Inauguration Weekend ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Electors officially elect Barack Obama (2008-12-15 15:36)

Presidential electors gathering in state capitols across the country have formally elected Barack Obama with more than the required 270 electoral votes needed to win, according to a tally by The Associated Press. Obama takes office Jan. 20, becoming the nation's first black president.

Obama Formally Elected as Nation's 44th President

FOXNews - 51 minutes ago

Electors gather to formally elect Barack Obama as the country's 44th president, in a largely ceremonial procedure. AP RICHMOND, Va.

It's official: McCain gets Utah's five electoral votes Salt Lake Tribune

Virginia Electors Cast Votes for Barack Obama Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Internal review clears Obama in Blagojevich case (2008-12-15 15:44)

Barack Obama 's internal review cleared the president-elect and his team of any inappropriate contacts with Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich regarding Obama's vacated senate seat.

However, an internal review is unlikely to stop Obama's foes from attempting to link him with the scandal. The group Media Matters has been tracking the attempts in the media to taint Obama with the Blagojevich brush. Sean Hannity from Fox News has made a big deal about the number of times Obama's name is mentioned in the complaint against Blagojevich. However, this is perfectly understandable as the whole case revolves around Obama's old senate seat! [EMBED]

Obama's team OK's contacts with Gov. Blagojevich, but won't share ...

Christian Science Monitor - 1 hour ago

By David Cook | 12.15.08 President-elect Barack Obama's team has studied the transition staff's contacts with Illinois Governor Rod Blagojevich and found nothing improper.

Obama team: Review shows no inappropriate contact The Associated Press

Video: Ill. House Speaker Launches Impeachment Panel AssociatedPress
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama picks conservationist Salazar as Interior secretary (2008-12-16 09:21)

President-elect Barack Obama will choose Sen. Ken Salazar (D-Colo.) as his secretary of the Interior, Democratic sources said Monday.

Salazar is the first Democratic senator from the state of Colorado and he supported Obama vigorously during the campaign. He has also been a strong defender of the environment throughout his career.

He opposed new oil drilling in Colorado, however he was not the first choice of all environmental groups with many rallying instead for Rep. Raul M. Grijalva (D-Ariz.). Some environmentalists view Salazar as more of a "centrist."

However other environmental groups expressed satisfaction with the Salazar pick.

"Ken Salazar's solid record as a supporter of renewable energy suggests he is well prepared for one of the fundamental challenges facing the Department of Interior: the need for solid stewardship of federal lands while allowing those lands to be part of the climate solution by hosting massive new renewable energy developments," said Seth Kaplan, a vice president of the Conservation Law Foundation, in an e-mail message published by the New York Times.

Seattle Post Intelligencer Obama picks Salazar as Interior secretary

Los Angeles Times, CA - 8 hours ago

Two senior Democrats said Monday that Obama would name Salazar, a Latino, to the post, rounding out an energy and environmental policy team announced at a ...

CO-Senate: Salazar Departure Creates GOP Opportunity Washington Post

Ken Salazar—Barack Obama's interior secretary nominee Chicago Tribune

A Conservationist for the Interior Dept. New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Arne Duncan picked as education secretary (2008-12-16 09:34)

Democratic sources say that President-elect Barack Obama has chosen

Arne Duncan to serve as education secretary . Duncan currently runs the Chicago school district. Duncan has been credited with improving performance in Chicago's troubled school system and is known for some controversial techniques including paying students for good grades.

According to the Washington Post, Duncan "graduated from Harvard University, where he was co-captain of the basketball team, and he played professional basketball in Australia from 1987 to 1991. He returned to Chicago to direct the Ariel Education Initiative, which creates educational opportunities for youths on the South Side."

Obama made it clear during his campaign that he was determined to reform failing schools in America's urban areas and Duncan has the resume for this kind of task.

[EMBED]

The Age Obama Picks Chicago's Schools Chief For Cabinet

Washington Post, United States - 12 hours ago

Ken Salazar (D-Colo.) to serve as secretary of the interior later this week, all but finalizing his selections for major Cabinet posts. Obama plans to ...

Transition: Arne Duncan's day MSNBC

Chicago schools chief to be chosen as education secretary, sources say

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Chicago sleaze doesn't stick to Obama (2008-12-16 13:18)

When people think of Chicago they often conjure up visions of gangsters during the roaring 20s, people rising from the dead to vote in elections and political machines run by gambling kingpins.

Chicago also gained fame for its radicalism with links to groups ranging from the Weather Underground to the Nation of Islam.

During the campaign, Obama's opponents tried to link him with the sordid underbelly of the Windy City or with its radical elements, but without much success.

Chicago's political culture became linked with corruption back in the 1870s, when gambling tavern owner Michael Cassius McDonald became active in politics. It is said that McDonald first coined the phrase "There's a sucker born every minute."

However, the city is best known for its underground links through the personality of Al Capone, whose gangs shot up the city with machine guns during the Prohibition era.

Maybe partly because of Chicago, the state of Illinois has had more than its share of problems with corrupt governors. Otto Kerner (Blotto Otto; 1960-1968), Gov. Dan Walker (1972-1976) and Gov. George Ryan (1998-2002) preceded Gov. Rod Blagojevich.

Yet, the grime of Chicago's underworld has not been sticking to President-elect Obama whose teflon coating might make even cause Bill Clinton to envy. Both Clinton and Obama were charged with guilt by association, although in Clinton's case it was a more intimate type of association.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Time names Barack Obama "Person of the Year" (2008-12-17 09:13)

Time magazine announced that President-elect Barack Obama is their "Person of the Year" for 2008. Last year, Russia's Prime Minister Vladimir Putin won the award.

In other news, Obama selected former Gov. Tom Vilsack of Iowa as his agriculture secretary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama to name Cabinet members, take vacation (2008-12-19 08:11)

President-elect Barack Obama is set to name Rod Kirk as U.S. trade representative and Ray LaHood as transportation secretary at a press conference Friday in Chicago.

Obama will leave Saturday for a holiday vacation in Hawai'i where his sister Maya and her family live.

The president-elect may also announce other undisclosed choices today.

Rod Kirk is the mayor of Dallas, while LaHood is a Republican who served in the House of Representatives for 14 years. LaHood is the second Republican nominated for Obama's Cabinet.

Yesterday, Obama appointed Rep. Hilda Solis of California as labor secretary.

Recently, Obama has been very active in the press holding daily news conferences. Although he has said previously that there is only one president at a time, the media is now appears focused on his moves more than those of outgoing president, George W. Bush.

X

MLive.com Obama poised to name new Cabinet members

The Associated Press - 2 hours ago

CHICAGO (AP) - President-elect Barack Obama is nearly finished choosing his Cabinet as he prepares to leave Saturday on a holiday vacation in his native Hawaii.

From wire reports Baltimore Sun

In Transition Labor Secretary, US Trade Representative Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama praises auto bailout plan (2008-12-19 20:13)

President-elect Barack Obama praised President George W. Bush 's plan to bailout U.S. automobile companies and called on the carmakers to make needed changes.

Bush said his $17 billion package was necessary to prevent a collapse of the U.S. auto industry.

"Under ordinary economic circumstances, I would say this is the price that failed companies must pay," Bush said.

"But these are not ordinary circumstances. In the midst of a financial crisis and a recession, allowing the US auto industry to collapse is not a responsible course of action."

Obama agreed that the bailout was "necessary step."

"With the short-term assistance provided by this package, the auto companies must bring all their stakeholders together... to make the hard choices necessary to achieve long-term viability," Obama said.

During the campaign, Obama called on the U.S. auto industry to change their direction and work toward making cleaner, more fuel-efficient cars .

Obama urges carmakers to 'reform'

BBC News - 36 minutes ago

US President-elect Barack Obama has welcomed the multi-billion dollar aid package for US carmakers, but said the industry faces some "hard decisions".

Video: CEO Confident GM Can Meet Loan Conditions AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

Loans give GM, Chrysler 3 months Detroit Free Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Slave's daughter who voted for Obama dies at 110 (2008-12-20 09:05)

Amanda Roberts Jones, the slave's daughter who voted for Barack Obama, the first black- American President, has died two days after her 110th birthday.

"She lived awful long," Jones' granddaughter Brenda Baker was quoted as saying by the "Austin American-Statesman."

"It was a full life, and her faith in God helped her live a long life."

NDTV.com 110-year-old Bastrop woman dies 2 days after birthday

Houston Chronicle, United States - 9 hours ago

Amanda Roberts Jones of Cedar Creek, a community near Bastrop, had just received a new dress that she was looking forward to wearing on Sunday to a birthday ...

Slave's daughter who voted for Obama dead at age 110 Hindustan Times

Amanda Jones was Central Texas' oldest voter Austin American-Statesman

Slave's daughter Amanda Jones dies at 110 KFDA

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama ups job creation to 3 million after more bad news (2008-12-20 21:34)

President-elect Barack Obama said Saturday that he would increase his goal of new jobs to 3 million after more bad economic news was released.

Democratic officials told CNN that forecasts predict up to 4 million jobs will be lost over the next year and that the unemployment rate should rise to more than 9 percent.

Another sign of the ailing economy came from California where Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger declared a fiscal emergency with the state's revenues falling more drastically than anyone expected.

The big question again though is where all the money will come from. Will Obama raise taxes or increase the deficit?

X

CTV.ca Obama ups jobs goal to 3 million on bad economic news

CNN - 58 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) – President-elect Barack Obama has decided to increase his goal for creating new jobs after receiving economic forecasts that suggest the economy is in worse shape than had been predicted, two Democratic officials told CNN.

Obama Expands Economic Recovery Plan to Create 3 Million Jobs Bloomberg

Obama Expands Economic Goals as Outlook Dims Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Rihanna scheduled for Obama inauguration benefit (2008-12-21 09:45)

Grammy winning performer Rihanna will appear at the inauguration of President-elect Barack Obama for a benefit to feed millions of children.

Rihanna will perform at the Recording Industry Association of America's Presidential Inauguration Charity Ball to benefit Feeding America, America's largest hunger relief organization.

"Rihanna's always willing to help out – she's a good girl," a source told People magazine.

Vicki Escarra, president and CEO of Feeding America, says, "We could not be happier that Rihanna will be performing at the Inauguration charity ball to benefit Feeding America.”

Extra TV Rihanna Rocking DC for Obama's Inauguration

Extra TV - 42 minutes ago

Grammy winner Rihanna is scheduled to perform in the nation's capital during the inauguration of Barack Obama – and help feed millions of people in need ...

Rihanna Ready to Rock Obama Inaugural Ball People Magazine

Rihanna To Feed Her Career/Homeless People With Gala Actress Archives

Rihanna Will Rock Obama Inaugural Ball eparsa Magazine

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama arrives in Hawai'i for holidays (2008-12-21 19:51)

President-elect Barack Obama arrived Hawai'i for a 10-day holiday vacation.

Obama and his family landed in Oahu aboard a privately-chartered United Airlines 767 on Saturday for the Christmas and New Year holidays.

Sources say that Obama's family together with his sister Maya's family will hold a private funeral service for his grandmother, Madelyn Dunham, while they are in Hawaii. Dunham died on the eve of her grandson's historic election win after a bout with cancer.

The media reports that family friends of the Obamas, traveling separately, will join the family during their Hawaiian vacation. The Associated Press reports that the Obamas have rented a beach home in the quiet town of Kailua near Honolulu.

Obama boards plane for 12-day Hawaii vacation

People's Daily Online - 58 minutes ago

US President-elect Barack Obama gets out of his SUV before boarding a plane for a 12-day Hawaii vacation at O'Hare airport in Chicago, December 20, 2008.

Obamas rent beach home in low-key Hawaii town The Associated Press

Obama Arrives For Christmas In Hawaii MSNBC

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

fadum (2008-12-21 20:55:00)

Obama has a great mind, hope he will help latin american countries.

visit this site.

<http://www.fiec.espol.edu.ec>

Debate over Obama stimulus plan (2008-12-22 10:11)

There's been some comparison in the media of President-elect Barack Obama's stimulus plan and the Japanese efforts to address their own mortgage and bank meltdown in the 1990s, and also FDR's response during the Great Depression. Media Matters has a good summary of the discussion.

The fact that both sides are taking raising taxes out of the picture shows there really is no debate going on. Both sides defer to "supply-side" economics. Really you can not compare the situation to FDR's time because taxes on the rich were raised very sharply to lift the country out of the Great Depression.

Also, there really is not a real debate on either a stimulus plan or further corporate bailouts. We all know there will be more of both, probably a whole lot more. It's just a matter of how it all gets payed for. We have seen how in nearly every case, the government will break down in the end and come through with the money especially in the case of corporate dole-outs.

As I've mentioned before, one really can not compare the current situation to that faced by Japan, which had very large personal savings in reserve to pay for their deficit spending. Japanese citizens and businesses lent their government trillions at nearly zero interest rates to save failing Japanese banks and to jumpstart the economy.

In the U.S., they have a net negative savings rate. Much of the money will have to come from abroad, or they can try to print money out of thin air like Zimbabwe or the Weimar Republic.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's 'green dream team' (2008-12-22 15:21)

I'm glad that President-elect Barack Obama is standing firm on climate change. A lot of folks that are acting as though the current situation makes it harder to go green, but what better way to stimulate the economy than building the technology of the future.

Commenting on Obama's 'green dream team,' Kevin Knobloch, president of the Union of Concerned Scientists said: "If this team can't advance strong national policy on global warming, then no one can."

"This caliber of scientists in any administration would be a major headline. But in contrast to the eight years of the Bush administration, where political appointees ran roughshod over science at a terrible cost to the truth, they stand out even more."

Obama had pledged to spend $150 billion on green energy over 10 years, but that was before the financial crisis and his announcement of a much larger stimulus plan than originally envisioned.

WELT ONLINE Obama team primed to push climate change agenda

Reuters - 1 hour ago

By Deborah Zabarenko, Environment Correspondent WASHINGTON, Dec 22 (Reuters) - President-elect Barack Obama's new "green dream team" is committed to battling climate change and ready to push for big policy reforms, in stark contrast with the Bush ...

Obama weighs a supersized stimulus plan Christian Science Monitor

President-Elect Obama Tries to Build a Results-Oriented Administration U.S. News & World Report

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-12-23 18:38:00)

It's good to see that Obama wants to pursue energy reform, but will he have sufficient support for nuclear power?

(2008-12-22 20:28)

A big snag in the inauguration of President-elect Barack Obama is his selection of Minister Rick Warren to give the inaugural invocation.

GLBT groups

Boston Globe

Obama Takes Heat for Inaugural Speaker

FOXNews - 3 hours ago

By Brit Hume Democratic Congressman Barney Frank of Massachusetts is upset with President-elect Obama's selection of the prominent Evangelical Minister Rick Warren to give the inaugural invocation.

Rick Warren and Barack Obama's inaugural address USA Today

Rick Warren's biggest critics: other evangelicals The Associated Press

Obama in top shape, photos reveal (2008-12-23 14:16)

Paparazzi, both professionals and amateurs, are snapping photos of vacationing President-elect Barack Obama and his family, particularly from a public beach in front on the Obama's rented vacation home.

Leisure-Time for Leaders

A photographer on Hawaii's Kailua Beach snapped this photo of a shirtless President-elect Barack Obama Dec. 21, 2008. Obama, on vacation with his family, regularly clocks 90-minute workouts, as his chiseled abs and chest attest. (www.bauergriffinonline.com and abcnews.go.com)

Obama may be the fittest president ever with a vigorous daily workout that he rarely if ever misses.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-12-24 04:05:00)

getting ready for the biggest party in history?

www.bushbyebyeparty.com

ATF (2008-12-25 11:34:00)

Regarding Obama's decision to have Rick Warren for his inauguration. Regarding gay marriage Rick Warren doesn't seem to understand that we live in a secular country and that our founding fathers drafted the Constitution a certain way for very profound reasons. One of them is freedom for all. We have the full faith and credit clause, the equal protection clause, and most of all Loving v. Virginia which said that marriage is a fundamental right and that the state has to pass a very high bar in order to EVER curtail a fundamental right of any of its citizenry. He doesn't know this and he doesn't understand this because he is not well versed in the Constitution. Not many people are. Therefore, he should shut his mouth on this issue, unless and UNTIL he has studied the Constitution and all of the case law regarding the Constitution on this issue. Therefore I recommend that Pres elect Obama choose Desmond Tutu instead. And instead of showing evangelical republicans that he wants to include them, I think by choosing the Rev. Desmond Tutu he is showing the WORLD that America has turned a page in its foreign relations.

<http://olderadultslikeme.blogspot.com/>

Obama Holiday Messages (2008-12-25 11:47)

Both Barack and Michelle Obama released holiday greetings to the public and especially, in presidential tradition, to troops serving overseas.

Now more than ever, we must rededicate ourselves to the notion that we share a common destiny as Americans – that I am my brother's keeper, I am my sister's keeper. Now, we must all do our part to serve one another; to seek new ideas and new innovation; and to start a new chapter for our great country.

[EMBED]

Michelle Obama's message

This holiday season, the grassroots movement you helped build can make a big difference for those in need.

I hope you will join me in supporting your favorite charity or contributing to causes that are especially meaningful to me and my family.

While many of us will spend the holidays counting our blessings and sharing dinner with loved ones, millions of people around the country won't be so fortunate. Donating to your local food bank will help provide a holiday meal to people in your community who can't afford one.

Talking with the families of deployed troops was one of the most rewarding experiences I had during the campaign. Giving to Operation USO Care Package is a great way to send members of our military stationed around the world a reminder that someone back home is thinking of them.

This is a time to celebrate our blessings, the new year, and a new era for our country. But it's also a time to come together on behalf of those who need our help.

Do what you can to help today by locating your local food bank and giving your support.

Or send a care package to an American in uniform.

Thank you for all that you do and have a very happy holiday season,

Michelle

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-12-25 21:05:00)

If anyone is interested in an Obama poster please click here

vania (2008-12-26 10:31:00)

i m forom brasil i lives sao paulo sp congratulatio ns mr obama today i m jail mr chairman globo tv mr roberto irineu marinho and lili marinho adress globo tv rue doctor chucuri zaidan 46 morumbo at sao paulo email globointernacional@redeglobotv.com do you like help please send representative tv globo

Obama family enjoys warm Hawaiian Christmas (2008-12-26 08:20)

President-elect Barack Obama spent a quiet Christmas in warm Hawai'i far away from the bitter cold plaguing Chicago and Washington, DC.

Obama was taped earlier playing golf in short pants and a polo shirt. It may be that Oahu will be Obama's version of the family ranch or family estate used for vacations by a number of recent presidents.

Obama Celebrates Christmas With Family in Hawaii

Bloomberg - 2 hours ago

By Kim Chipman Dec. 25 (Bloomberg) – President-elect Barack Obama spent a quiet Christmas day opening gifts with family and friends at an oceanfront rental home in Hawaii and later visited a nearby Marine Corps base.

Obama Visits Marine Corps Base for Christmas ABC News

Obama settles into military role Reuters

Video: Barack Obama In Hawaii CBS

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/v/TLRcS8CYhcc>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Hollywood and Silicon Valley help fund inauguration (2008-12-26 19:58)

The array of balls and other events scheduled for the inauguration is not paid for with taxpayer money.

Private contributors shell out money in exchange for VIP tickets and special recognition at the historic event.

Here is a list of Hollywood stars and high-tech executives who have contributed to the presidential inauguration fund.

The maximum donation is $50,000.

Steven Spielberg and his wife, Kate – $50,000 each.

Halle Berry – $50,000

Jamie Foxx – $50,000

Sharon Stone– $50,000

Google CEO Eric Schmidt – $25,000

Google co-founder Larry Page – $25,000

Google vice president Marissa Mayer – $25,000

Microsoft CEO Steve Ballmer and wife Connie – $50,000 each.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson – $25,000

Five members of George Soros family contributed a total of $250,000. The list of fundraisers is detailed on the Presidential Inaugural Committee website. <http://pic2009.org/donors>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama workout, power outage (2008-12-27 17:32)

Ok, you know the Obama news is slow when the main headline is Obama's daily gym workout and the power outage on Oahu.

[EMBED] Video: Oahu Hit by Blackout, Power Coming Back AssociatedPress

X

Reuters Obama's Vacation: Power Returns to Oahu

Washington Post, United States - 6 hours ago

Shortly thereafter, street lights outside Obama's home went dark and it appeared that his home did not have power. On Friday night, Honolulu Mayor Ruffalo ...

Power cut left Obama, family in dark for 12 hours Reuters

Obama's Hawaii retreat lost power for 11 hours The Associated Press

Alert the Media: Obama Has Made a Break for It New York Times

Obama visits gym on morning after power outage The Associated Press

[EMBED] Obamas in Hawai'i

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Republican candidate release racist song (2008-12-28 18:02)

Chip Saltsman, a candidate for chair of the Republican Party (RNC), sent a CD with a version of the "Barack the Magic Negro" song to fellow RNC members.

The CD featuring comedian Paul Shanklin's version of the song was part of a group of "light-hearted political parodies" sent to other RNC members apparently as part of his campaign strategy.

Another sign of a political party in deep decline.

CTV.ca Racist "Barack the Magic Negro" song hurts GOP

Kansas City Star, MO - 5 hours ago

By Yael T. Abouhalkah, Kansas City Star Editorial Page columnist The national GOP loses again with a new controversy over the "Barack the Magic Negro" song. ...

GOP Blasts 'Magic Negro' CD Distributed by Top Republican Operative

FOXNews

GOP Receives Obama Parody to Mixed Reviews New York Times

Republicans play 'Magic Negro' card - bravo Examiner.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama treads lightly on Gaza fighting (2008-12-29 11:11)

President-elect Barack Obama is keeping out of the Gaza crisis not wanting to interfere with the Bush administration. However, Obama's comments seemed to support Israel's actions in Gaza.

If the crisis endures much longer, it may be yet another major problem when Obama takes office on Jan. 20.

Many Muslims around the world have high expectations for Obama hoping that he will bring significant change from past administrations who have tended to side very strongly with Israel.

guardian.co.uk Obama Defers to Bush, for Now, on Gaza Crisis

New York Times - 46 minutes ago

By STEVEN LEE MYERS and HELENE COOPER WASHINGTON - When President-elect Barack Obama went to Israel in July - to the very town, in fact, whose repeated shelling culminated in this weekend's new fighting in Gaza - he all but endorsed the punishing ...

Video: White House Blames Hamas for New Violence AssociatedPress
[EMBED]

ANALYSIS-Gaza offensive set to boost Israel's Livni Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Should Obama be thinking about world problems on his vacation? (2008-12-30 06:34)

Probably not much. Of course, if an emergency comes up when he has taken office, then he would need to come back on duty.

However vacation's are meant as diversions. To allow the mind and body to rest and recuperate. By taking one's minds off problems for a bit, one often is able to come to a better solution in the end. And people will be expecting a myriad of solutions to tough problems when Obama becomes president in a few weeks.

The president-elect spend the day Monday on the golf course where he was reminded of his bowling fiasco in Pennsylvania during the presidential campaign.

The Miami Herald Obama can't shake the bowling jokes

The Associated Press - 4 hours ago

KAILUA, Hawaii (AP) - President-elect Barack Obama thought he'd put the bowling jokes behind him. Not likely. On the golf course Monday, a woman waiting at the 18th green reminded Obama of his disastrous bowling during the presidential campaign.

Video: Obama Mania Hits Fever Pitch CBS

Barack Obama's golf score N/A; But the course crowd gives him a 10

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-12-30 19:58:00)

The fact that Obama is golfing and hanging out at his 9 million dollar vacation estate while people are losing their jobs and homeless for the holidays shows how out of touch he is. All through his campaign he talked about "those with golden parachutes" and how they need to "spread the wealth." He is creating his own golden parachute and it's called the "Tax Payer" His new nicknames are "Mr. President GQ" and "god of the Glistening Pecs"...I am sure our enemies are trembling in their boots.

Mike (2008-12-31 14:11:00)

Give the man a break. It needs to be a secure location. It's not his home. It's for vacation. He's going to need to be in a centered state of mind for all he's going to be facing soon. Right now the bill's on him. Once he's in D.C. We'll be footing the bill and I'm sure we'll get our money's worth.

Gov. Blagojevich names Burris for Obama seat (2008-12-30 13:19)

Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich has appointed former state Attorney General Roland Burris to fill President-elect Barack Obama's vacant U.S. Senate seat.

Burris is the third African American U.S. senator to serve from Illinois and the only black U.S. senator currently in office.

At the Chicago press conference, Blagojevich asked people not to associate Burris with the controversy over the governor's alleged corrupt dealings in choosing Obama's successor.

Washington Post RAW DATA: Roland W. Burris Biography

FOXNews - 1 hour ago

Former Illinois Attorney General Roland Burris, shown here, is reportedly Gov. Rod Blagojevich's pick to succeed Barack Obama in the Senate. ...

Reports: Blagojevich to Appoint Burris to Replace Obama Washington Post

Blagojevich to Name Burris to Obama's Senate Seat Bloomberg

GOP Blames Democrats For Burris Selection CBS News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama seeks public guidance on health care (2008-12-31 08:16)

President-elect Barack Obama's transition team will look for ideas in public health forums around the country. Former Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, Obama's choice for secretary of health and human services, will lead Obama's effort to reform the public health system.

Some 8500 meetings have been held since Dec. 15, and the Obama team will post information gleaned from these events on the transition website, change.gov.

MLive.com Obama team seeks public input on health care

The Associated Press - 5 hours ago

So President-elect Barack Obama's transition team has set up a new round of public sessions it hopes will translate into real changes this time. ...

Santa Cruz residents send Obama health care ideas San Jose Mercury News

Obama's Health Care Team Pumps Message CBS News

Little Town Beseeches Obama's Health Chief New York Times

Health and Human Services Secretary-designate Tom Daschle, right, listens during his meeting with seniors to discuss health care, Tuesday, Dec. 30, 2008, at the Congress Heights Wellness Center in Washington. (AP Photo/Pablo Martinez Monsivais)

Congress, Obama face difficult health care reform choices

Palladium-Item, IN - 3 hours ago

... NEWS SERVICE • December 31, 2008 WASHINGTON – Congress and the Obama administration have many options in the effort to slow health care spending. ...

Study analyzes major health-insurance policy options The Tennessean

Time to deliver on healthcare promises Dickinson Press

Federal Study Concludes Health Insurance Reform Could Create ... Workforce Management

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Renatta Maria (2008-12-31 10:40:00)

I think public health is priority input!

Here in Brazil does not have medicine for all and the old people die in the line!

The government speech that the is making improvements for something but nothing change.

I hope wen I be old I have money to pay for my health plan !

If we not have we will stay in the line waiting for a favor!

- Itis very sad and humiliating ...

We never know tomorrow!

I lost my father like that and he was a great artist!

-The world's laps.

Happy New Years '09

Renatta Maria.

3. 2009

3.1 January

Obama's set to leave Hawai'i for Capital hotel suite (2009-01-01 13:09)

President-elect Barack Obama and his family are set to fly to Washington DC late Thursday ending their vacation in the Aloha State.

Obama was seen signing autographs on New Year's Day after his workout routine at the Marine Corps Base gym in Kailua. The Obamas have been vacationing in Hawai'i for the last 12 days.

The family will stay at the Hay Adams Hotel, so that their girls can start school Monday at Washington's private Sidwell Friends School. The White House will not be available until after the inauguration on Jan. 20.

 US President-elect Barack Obama autographs a t-shirt after working out at the Semper Fit gym on Marine Corps Base Hawaii in Kailua, Hawaii on January 1, 2009. REUTERS/Hugh Gentry (UNITED STATES)

New York Daily News

Obama set to return to Chicago after Hawaii rest

The Associated Press - 39 minutes ago

KAILUA, Hawaii (AP) — President-elect Barack Obama is bidding his native Hawaii "aloha" after a 12-day vacation. Obama, wife Michelle and his two young ...

Storied Washington hotel will briefly be home for the Obama family Boston Globe

Washington hotel to be Obama family's temporary 'suite' home TopNews

Home Sweet Hotel Suite for Obamas in the Capital New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama ready for China space race (2009-01-01 19:03)

In order to meet the challenge of a robust Chinese space program, President-elect Barack Obama is expected to explore launching NASA payloads with military rockets.

Beijing is known to be working toward landing astronauts on the Moon and is expected to attempt a docking in space in 2010 in preparation for the mission. American defense analysts fear that China's new space abilities may threaten American military and other space assets.

The U.S. will have to rent Russian launch vehicles until NASA launches its new Orion rocket probably sometime in 2015, five years after the retirement of the present launch vehicle.

ABC News Obama Moves to Counter China in Space With Pentagon-NASA Link

Bloomberg - 1 hour ago

By Demian McLean Jan. 2 (Bloomberg) – President-elect Barack Obama will probably tear down long-standing barriers between the US's civilian and military space programs to speed up a mission to the moon amid the prospect of a new space race with China.

Video: NASA Gives Graphic Details of Columbia Deaths AssociatedPress

[EMBED] No way crew could survive Straits Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Inauguration may be very special (2009-01-02 18:11)

It may be an American presidential inauguration unlike any since the dawn of mass media. President-elect Barack Obama of course is the first African American to ascend to the highest office in the country.

However, there are also many other factors that could make this inauguration special. Few incoming presidents, maybe none, have been so loved overseas as Barack Obama. While Obama may face challenges unlike any since FDR, he also has as much goodwill in many corners as any other president.

Young people love Obama. Not just young voters, but little kids. I became acutely aware of this when my four-year-old nephew shouted "Obama" upon seeing the president-elect on the evening news. And there were many pre-voting age kids who got actively involved in supporting Obama during the campaign.

The president-elect has also been called "Hollywood's President," due to his strong support in the entertainment community. It will be interesting to see if Hollywood pulls out the stops for Obama during his inauguration.

News reports indicate that a record 60,000 people have volunteered to work at various inauguration events.

Dressregistry.com invites party goers to post the designer, color and length of their outfit chosen for the dozens of January 20 inauguration bashes in Washington, DC.(DressRegistry.com)

Jakarta Post Inauguration Feels Special to Many in Washington

New York Times - 49 minutes ago

By IAN URBINA WASHINGTON - Presidents come and go from this city. Hosting inaugurations is nothing new. But for residents here, over 92 percent of whom voted for President-elect Barack Obama, his inauguration this month is special.

Video: WH Laughs Off Obama Arrival CBS

[EMBED]

Chicago to take over at the White House guardian.co.uk

China Daily

Barack Obama Inauguration

Hartford Courant, United States - 1 hour ago

Here's what we know: Activities surrounding the inauguration will stretch over four days and will start with a welcome event for the public and end with a ...

Record-high number of people volunteer for Obama Inauguration Xinhua

Obamabilia For Sale New York Times

60K apply as Obama inauguration volunteers MarketWatch (press release)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama fired up and ready to go with diverse Cabinet (2009-01-03 08:22)

While some progressives have been whining, maybe justifiably in some cases, over some of President-elect Barack Obama's Cabinet and inauguration choices, one area where he gets few complaints is his diversity picks.

Obama promised the most diverse Cabinet and staff in history and he has largely delivered on that promise.

Although neither Cabinet or staff come close to representing the population of major minority groups, Obama has still reached farther than his predecessors. One difficulty of course is that the past history of under-representation makes it difficult to find equivalent candidates among minority groups. One way that Obama has worked around this is to look for experts rather than political allies to fill certain positions. For example, Stephen Chu is someone who most political junkies have never heard of, but he is a Nobel Prize-winning physicist with past interest in sustainable energy, and thus it's difficult to argue with his qualifications as secretary of energy.

Among Obama's top choices include two Republicans, five women, three Hispanics, three African Americans, two Asian Americans, and one Arab American. One openly LGBT person, Nancy Sutley, was appointed as head of the White House Council on Environmental Quality.

Many women were in fact surprised by the number and level of Obama's Cabinet picks including Hillary Clinton as secretary of State and Janet Napolitano as Homeland Security chief.

Latinos were originally discouraged when Bill Richardson was passed over for secretary of State landing secretary of Commerce instead. But with a total of three high-level Latino Cabinet picks and other staff choices, Obama has exceeded his predecessors both in quantity and quality.

Obama gears up to hit ground running with diverse cabinet pick

Thaindian.com, Thailand - Jan 1, 2009

The incoming president's cabinet picks are diverse. They include two Republicans, five women, three Hispanics, three African Americans, two Asian Americans ...

Maria Elena Salinas: Obama's Latino factor

Merced Sun-Star, CA - 6 hours ago

After all, Obama did promise to have one of the most diverse presidential Cabinets in history. It turns out that's one promise the president-elect is ...

CTV.ca

Obama's Diverse Cabinet Lacks Members From Business Community

Bloomberg - Dec 19, 2008

20 (Bloomberg) – President-elect Barack Obama's Cabinet is notable for its diversity, experience in government, and absence of people from the business ...

Obama's Cabinet: A Diverse Center-Left Team Assembled Quickly CQPolitics.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Mike (2009-01-03 20:26:00)

This is a good reminder of the preparation and vision that went into forming the cabinet, especially in appointing a diverse team. Well done!

Obama and timing of Gaza invasion (2009-01-04 17:10)

Watching the Israeli ground invasion of Gaza it's hard not to wonder whether the timing of this has anything to do with the incoming administration of President-elect Barack Obama .

Obama's reaction to invasion of this type is considered something of an unknown in Israel as compared to the "in the bag" reaction expected of outgoing President George W. Bush. Therefore, one has to wonder if Israel is not 'making hay while the sun shines,' i.e. before Obama takes office.

There are many progressives too who wonder how Obama will treat this part of the world with some suggesting that there will be little change from past administrations. However, Israel's doubt seems to indicate that not all the right signs are coming from Obama's side. Polls had shown that Israelis preferred both Hillary Clinton and John McCain over Obama during the presidential campaign.

Analysis: Israeli pride at a cost

BBC News - 47 minutes ago

By Jeremy Bowen The men and machines have moved into Gaza, and throughout the day the sounds of what they were doing rumbled back into Israel.

Video: Israeli Forces Split Gaza, Surround Biggest City AssociatedPress

[EMBED] FM: We're allowing more aid into Gaza Jerusalem Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama tax cut is offering to Republicans (2009-01-05 20:43)

President-elect Barack Obama's $300 billion tax cut looks like an effort to get House Republicans to buy his new economic stimulus plan.

The tax cuts will be part of an overall package estimated to cost $800 billion that will include government infrastructure projects to create new jobs.

Obama might also be preparing Republicans for an eventual proposal to hike taxes for the rich. Even California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, a Republican and self-proclaimed 'fiscal conservative' is proposing steep tax hikes because of the state's economic and fiscal woes. Without some new revenues, the federal government will be awash in red ink, and may have trouble actually raising some of the funds required.

BBC News Obama Pitches Stimulus Package to House Republicans

Washington Post - 1 hour ago

By Paul Kane, Lori Montgomery and Shailagh Murray President-elect Barack Obama arrived on Capitol Hill yesterday and immediately set to work reassuring skeptical Republicans about his massive economic stimulus package – part of a campaign that earned ...

Video: Obama: Economy 'bad and Getting Worse' AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama Pushes for Stimulus on Capitol Hill New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Justice picks show new direction (2009-01-06 08:32)

Barack Obama again showed that change is on the way with his choices for the Justice Department . The new selections show that Obama is intent on reversing what are seen as infringements on civil protections by the Bush administration.

Obama's picked Indiana University law professor Dawn Johnsen to head the Office of Legal Counsel, the same group that helped expand George W. Bush's national security powers.

Johnsen has hammered "Bush's corruption of our American ideals," and about Bush "that in fighting the war on terror, he is not bound by the laws Congress has enacted." Other Obama nominations are:

David Ogden, a top Justice Department official during the Clinton administration, as deputy attorney general, the No. 2 figure under Attorney General-designate Eric Holder.

Elena Kagan, the dean of the Harvard University Law School and a former Clinton White House aide, as solicitor general.

Tom Perrelli, counsel to Clinton Attorney General Janet Reno from 1997 to 1999, as the associate attorney general who oversees civil matters.

USA Today Obama Names 4 for Justice Jobs in Break From Bush Path

New York Times - 33 minutes ago

By ERIC LICHTBLAU WASHINGTON - President-elect Barack Obama reached back to the Clinton administration again Monday to fill four top Justice Department posts with lawyers whose records signal a sharp break from the legal policies of the last eight ...

Key Justice nominees rooted in academia USA Today

Fierce Bush Critic Picked for Justice Post Wall Street Journal

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Isn't the Only One Being Inaugurated on Jan. 20th (2009-01-06 08:58)

I think it is a great idea to inaugurate the people as stakeholders in the "new era of citizen responsibility and engagement."

While many observers have been watching Obama's every move since the historic election win, we cannot forget the message of change was primarily that we must be the change that we are seeking. Obama and others can only help us get there.

Of course, we need to hold the president-elect and other elected officials to their word. They need to be fully accountable, but we also need to be proactive and constructive. In addition to demanding that the government fix our communities, we need to do something on our own to help in this process like volunteering for civic work.

Altruism is contagious as most people like that warm fuzzy feeling that results from caring, but there also may be some survival impulses involved. This would be a higher instinct - knowing that the same "safety net" would be there for yourself or your loved ones if the need should arise.

About Obama's Inauguration

Read the Article at HuffingtonPost

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dr. Sanjay Gupta for Surgeon General (2009-01-06 13:58)

Sources say that President-elect Barack Obama has offered the job of Surgeon General to Dr. Sanjay Gupta, of CNN and CBS fame. If this pans out, it would be one of my favorite of Obama's nominations yet.

I've been a fan of Dr. Gupta for years mostly watching him on CNN where he appears as a capable journalist in addition to his profession as a neurosurgeon.

Gupta is now in the vetting process and has reportedly considered the financial impact of giving up his high-paying media jobs, but it is expected that he will accept the position in a few days. The sources said that Gupta had made his desire for the position known to the Obama transition team. Obama met with Gupta for two hours in November and also with Health and Human Services secretary Tom Daschle.

He is not a stranger to Washington having served as a Whitehouse fellow in the 1990s. Gupta is of Indian and Pakistani heritage.

Obama Wants Journalist for Surgeon General

Washington Post, United States - 1 hour ago

By Howard Kurtz President-elect Barack Obama has offered the job of surgeon general to Sanjay Gupta, the neurosurgeon and correspondent for CNN and CBS, ...

Other TV Stars for The Cabinet? Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama creates Performance Officer position (2009-01-07 09:36)

President-elect Barack Obama has created the new position of chief performance officer to oversee the national budget.

Obama has resigned himself to trillion dollar deficits over at least the next few years indicating a reluctance to raise taxes on higher tax brackets.

Sources said Obama has chosen Nancy Killefer, a director at McKinsey & Company and a former assistant secretary of the treasury in the Bill Clinton administration. Obama is expected to announce his choice Wednesday morning. [EMBED]

President-elect Barack Obama vowed Tuesday to bar lawmakers' pet projects from his massive economic stimulus plan and to bring unprecedented accountability to federal spending. (Jan. 6)

KGET 17 Obama Appoints Performance Officer

Washington Post, United States - 2 hours ago

By Michael D. Shear President-elect Barack Obama has selected a top management consultant to serve as the country's chief performance officer, ...

Obama names Killefer to performance job The Associated Press

Obama targets budget waste Boston Globe

Obama to tap new position, then meet with predecessors CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

David Dzidzikashvili (2009-01-09 17:49:00)

I hope by creating new government posts we are not creating additional layer of bureaucracy on top of existing large bureaucracy, but at the same time there is a need to monitor performance and have a good eye on performance.

Barack Obama wants new economic direction (2009-01-08 12:19)

President-elect Barack Obama rallied support for his new economic stimulus plan suggesting that the costly program and its associated debt is necessary to stave off even deeper woes for the economy.

"It is time to set a new course for this economy, and that change must begin now," he said at an address on the economy at George Mason University, near Washington.

Obama's plan that is projected to cost between $800 billion and $1 trillion comes on more bad employment news showing the 2008 was the worse year for job losses since 1945.

"For every day we wait or point fingers or drag our feet, more Americans will lose their jobs," Obama said. "More families will lose their savings. More dreams will be deferred and denied."

"I don't believe it's too late to change course, but it will be if we don't take dramatic action as soon as possible."

Reuters

Congress, Obama focus on economy

Report

Jan 06, 2009

X

FOXNews Obama calls for new economic course

USA Today - 1 hour ago

1382

By Charles Dharapak, AP By Douglas Stanglin, USA TODAY WASHINGTON - President-elect Barack Obama sought to rally support for a new economic stimulus package by acknowledging that his plan will be expensive and painful, but warning that inaction could ...

Lawmakers and Financial Experts Question Obama's Tax Cuts Washington Post

Obama to Warn of Costs of Inaction on the Economy New York Times

Boston Globe US December Job Cuts Quadruple From Year Ago, Challenger Says

Bloomberg - Jan 7, 2009

For all of 2008, employers announced 1.22 million job cuts, the most in five years. The economy is caught in a self-perpetuating cycle of rising job losses ...

Some bad omens for key jobs report CNN

National business news briefs: Lots of job cuts Kansas City Star

Financial service hit hard by Dec. job cuts Boston Globe

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama names Tim Kaine as DNC chair (2009-01-08 15:32)

Barack Obama named Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine as the new Democratic National Committee chair to replace Howard Dean.

Kaine was an early and strong supporter of Obama during the primary and general election.

"We're in a strong position to rebuild a Democratic Party committed to these principles because of the outstanding work of its current chairman, Howard Dean," said Obama of the person many think paved the way for Obama's network and movement.

"For nearly four years, Howard has served our party and our nation as a visionary and effective leader. He launched a 50-state strategy that made Democrats competitive in places they had not been in years, working with my chief of staff, Rahm Emanuel, to give Democrats a majority in the House for the first time in over a decade."

Of Kaine, Obama said: "Tim and I share a philosophy. It's a pragmatic, progressive philosophy that was at the heart of my campaign and will be at the heart of this administration. It's a philosophy that measures the strength of an idea not by whether it's Republican or Democrat, but whether it can actually solve a problem and make a difference in people's lives. Tim knows that breaking free of the old orthodoxies and reaching across party lines isn't just a way to build a Democratic Party that's more open and inclusive; it's a way to achieve progress for all Americans. "

[EMBED]

Boston Globe Obama Names Kaine DNC Chairman

Washington Post - 1 hour ago

PRESIDENT-ELECT BARACK OBAMA: (joined in progress) ... we would build a movement for change. With the support of ordinary men and women who gave whatever time and money they could spare, we did just that.

Obama taps Kaine as new face of Dems Boston Globe

Obama appears with new DNC chief The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama to meet Mexico's Felipe Calderon (2009-01-08 21:54)

Illinois House Impeaches Blagojevich (2009-01-09 12:03)

The Illinois House of Representatives voted 114-1 on Friday to impeach Gov. Rod Blagojevich for attempting to sell President-elect Barack Obama 's vacated U.S. Senate seat.

Obama had called for Blagojevich to resign after details of the scandal were exposed. The governor refused though and eventually appointed former state attorney general Roland Burris to Obama's seat.

ABC News Illinois House Votes to Impeach Blagojevich

ABC News - 1 hour ago

By CHRIS BURY and KATE BARRETT The Illinois House of Representatives voted 114-1 on Friday to impeach Gov. Rod Blagojevich on corruption charges that include allegedly trying to sell the US Senate seat vacated by President-elect Barack Obama.

Video: Key Panel Recommends Impeaching Blagojevich AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Illinois House Impeaches Governor New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

State your change (2009-01-09 14:58)

Brandon Deroche has alerted me to an ongoing campaign on Causecast.com called "State your Change."

They are asking "celebrities, bands, activists, facebook users, etc" to express in video format the change they would like to see in the world in response to Barack Obama's call during the presidential campaign. The deadline to upload your video is Jan. 18 and if they like it they will take it to Washington for the inauguration.

Here's there promotional video:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Inauguration will have best security ever (2009-01-09 20:51)

President-elect Barack Obama 's inauguration may draw record crowds, and unprecedented security measures are expected.

Obama's train ride from Philadelphia to Baltimore and then on to Washington will present some of the biggest headaches for the president-elect's security staff. U.S. counterterrorism officials say that there has been no intelligence indicating any specific, credible threat.

Still everything from fighter jets and helicopters to electronic jamming devices and body armor will be employed to keep the president and the inauguration crowds safe.

Obama is expected to speak behind a protective glass shield and to ride in a specially-armored limousine.

Secret Service agents have already begun surveillance at the parade route, which will be cordoned off with snipers and observation equipment stationed on rooftops and balconies during the event.

President-elect's train trip poses miles of security issues

CNN - 1 hour ago

By Jeanne Meserve and Mike M. Ahlers WASHINGTON (CNN) – President-elect Barack Obama's January 17 train trip from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to Washington is intended to make the inauguration the most open and accessible in history.

Hospitals Prepare For Inauguration MSNBC

Obama to become president amid tightest security ever

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama: 90 percent of stimulus jobs from private sector (2009-01-10 10:13)

In his weekly address, President-elect Barack Obama sought to deflect criticism that his economic stimulus plan would over-inflate the public sector .

Obama said that 90 percent of the jobs created or saved by his economic package would come from the private sector.

"The jobs we create will be in businesses large and small across a wide range of industries," Mr. Obama said. "And they'll be the kind of jobs that don't just put people to work in the short term, but position our economy to lead the world in the long-term."

The Obama plan aims at creating 3.7 million new jobs – a figure that has grown from the one million jobs promised during the campaign.

Obama Says Stimulus Will Redound to Private Sector

Washington Post - 1 hour ago

By Michael A. Fletcher President-elect Barack Obama, seeking to quiet concerns that his economic stimulus package would lead to an unsustainable expansion of the public workforce, said today that 90 percent of the 3 to 4 million jobs created or saved ...

 Video: Obama Pieces Together Economic Plan AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama team boosts jobs estimate to 3.7 million USA Today

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-01-11 05:26:00)

This is an emergency-plan, a first aid. But unless the cause of the problem, the rule of a few people in great corporations (greed) is solved, the problems in economy will once again return.

The idea of a "free market" run by a few is in my eyes a disaster.

Saeed Khan Abbasi (2009-01-11 12:41:00)

Obama's plan can be a realistic remedy for the presen ailing of the US economy. Here you American and world community should know that I have presented a SEMFO Economic Plan to combat such situation. Let me see if USA or other global leaders/stakeholders avail my SEMFO Plan (www.saeedabasi.blogspot.com). I assure you and all international community that the present worst situation can be confronted but IF YOU IMPLEMENT MY SEMFO PLAN.

SAEED KHAN ABBASI (2009-01-12 00:28:00)

Mr.Obama's plan can be a realistic remedy for the present ailing US economy. Here you American and world community should know that I have presented a SEMFO Economic Plan to combat such situation. Let me see if USA or other global leaders/stakeholders avail my SEMFO Plan (www.saeedabasi.blogspot.com). I assure you and all international community that the present worst situation can be confronted but IF YOU IMPLEMENT MY SEMFO PLAN.In the same time I support the Obama-Biden economic plan.

Obamas' dog choice imminent (2009-01-11 18:18)

Ok, the suspense is nearly over.

President-elect Barack Obama said Sunday that the family has narrowed the search for the new puppy down to two breeds – a Portuguese Water Dog or a Labradoodle.

A Labradoodle is a mix between a Labrador Retriever and a Poodle. Both the Labrador Retriever and Portuguese Water Dog were favored at one time among seafarers and fishermen.

Times Online Obama: Dog to be Labradoodle or Portuguese Water Dog

Newsday - 31 minutes ago

By Mark Silva and Newsday.com | Tribune 'The Swamp' blog President-elect Barack Obama said Sunday the soon-to-be First Family's long search for a pooch is nearly over, with two breeds in a dogfight to move into the White House, the "Portugese Water ...

Breaking Obama news: Selection of First Dog is imminent Christian Science Monitor

Search for 'first pooch' narrows to two choices: Obama AFP

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-01-12 16:23:00)

I think he should seriously consider an airdale terrior.

They are very loyal and friendly as well as superbly courageous.

They're not afraid of anything and would protect those two precious little girls with its very life.

Anonymous (2009-01-13 16:02:00)

why not a shelter pup or dog,he wants change.then rescue an animal from the pound.it will be just as loyal.

creativezazz (2009-01-15 21:35:00)

Should Obama get a labradoodle? We did. First-generation labradoodles (mom lab, dad poodle) like ours do shed some. This is a popular dog. I doubt he could get one at a shelter. Want to see puppy pics?

See my blog about our labradoodle <http://creativezazz.com/2009/01/labradoodle/>

Obama and Dems may dust it up (2009-01-12 09:42)

Despite having a strong Democratic majority in Congress, President-elect Barack Obama may have far from a smooth time getting his agenda passed.

Many might remember what happened to former president Bill Clinton who when first elected to office was in a similar situation as Obama. Clinton had to head-butt frequently with the Democrat-controlled Congress. The inefficacy probably contributed to the Democrats losing control of the legislature just two years later.

One sticking point that has arisen over Obama's stimulus plan concerns the large tax breaks included in the package. Many Democrats think that infrastructure spending would be a better idea than tax breaks. There is a strong possibility that tax breaks will be stored away by Americans looking at hard times. That's not a bad thing really, since Americans do not need to save more, but it will not "stimulate" the economy i.e. increase spending.

The problem is that the vast majority of Americans have too little savings or negative savings, while the super-rich are hoarding money in dysfunctional derivative accounts. While the government should not meltdown the derivative market, they need a "soft landing" approach to recycle the capital in these funds.

Telegraph.co.uk Obama bumps up against egos in Congress

Los Angeles Times, CA - 14 hours ago

BACK THEN: During the campaign, Barack Obama's team was tightly run and exercised complete control. His advisors are learning that approach doesn't work in ...

Video: Will Obama's Inaugural Address Become Memorable? AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Simulcast of President Barack Obama's Inauguration San Francisco Chronicle

What the H? President-elect Barack Obama's middle name shortened ...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Bush declares emergency to help fund inauguration (2009-01-13 15:57)

President George W. Bush declared an emergency in the District of Columbia on Tuesday allowing the nation's capital to draw from federal coffers for Barack Obama's inauguration.

Bush ordered federal aid to supplement the $15 million in federal funds already appropriated for inauguration events.

White House spokesman Scott Stanzel said District of Columbia Mayor Adrian M. Fenty requested the emergency declaration on Jan. 7 because the expected inauguration crowds exceed the city's ability to protect the public.

Extra money will come from the Federal Emergency and Management Agency budget.

X

Washington Times Bush makes more money available for Inauguration

The Associated Press - 1 hour ago

WASHINGTON (AP) - President George W. Bush on Tuesday declared an emergency in the District of Columbia that will let the nation's capital tap deeper into federal coffers for Barack Obama's inauguration.

White House declares inauguration a DC emergency Reuters

DC to get inauguration 'emergency' aid Washington Times

X

Washington Post

X

Tickets to Obama Inauguration Create Stir on Capitol Hill

FOXNews - 19 hours ago

People deluged Capitol Hill with calls for inauguration tickets almost as soon as Mr. Obama won the election. Some offices set up a lottery to draw for ...

Inaugural tickets elusive for some Tallahassee.com

Inauguration tickets given to lucky few Denver Post

Obama's inaugural lunch a salute to Lincoln. Five dollar foot-long? Christian Science Monitor

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Mike (2009-01-13 16:30:00)

Thanks for the post, Paul. It's going to be quite a party! Let's hope it goes smoothly.

Coolio or Erkel? (2009-01-14 09:50)

Marvel Comics is featuring President-elect Barack Obama on this weeks Amazin Spider-Man issue raising again the question of whether Obama will be the first nerd in the White House.

A recent blog in DailyKos suggests that Obama may be more into science fiction than originally thought. It has already been known for sometime that he collected comic books, favoring Spider-Man, watched Star Trek, and occassionally appeared in public resembling the TV character Erkel from Family Matters.

Erkel

Obama

Most of the time though, Obama appears fit and fashionable. Some suspect that Michelle Obama keeps her husband from fully expressing his geeky side, for his own sake.

CTV.ca

Zeb Wells - Writing the Spider-Man/Obama Meeting

Newsarama, NJ - 23 hours ago

And now Marvel Comics is responding to Obama's Spider-Man fandom by including him in a five-page back-up story in this week's Amazing Spider-Man #583, ...

Spiderman saves Obama inauguration, in comic fashion Detroit Free Press

Obama guest stars in Amazing Spider-Man Greensboro News Record

Obama, Spider-Man Comic Released Central Florida News 13|

The Fourth Down - Kalamazoo Gazette - MLive.com

E! Online

Local comic shop features Spider-Man issue starring Barack Obama

Annapolis Capital, MD - Jan 11, 2009

Regardless of the story line, Mr. Anderson said the mere existence of a Spider-Man/Obama comic is "pretty cool." He's ordered a couple hundred copies and ...

Spidey-Obama Comic Flying Off Shelves mediabistro.com

Spider-Man Comic Book Creating All the Buzz Washington Post

Obama and Spiderman Baltimore Sun

Obama as a Vulcan from the Star Trek genre.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

SignalofChangedotcom (2009-01-14 18:13:00)

The Signal of Change video is now on YouTube! Copy and paste this link into your browser:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XWaa5w6vr8c &fmt=18

The video is also viewable at signalofchange.com

Please forward it to as many people as possible!

SignalofChangedotcom (2009-01-14 18:15:00)

Attention all Obama supporters!

"The Signal of Change" video is now on YouTube!

Copy and paste this link into your browser:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XWaa5w6vr8c &fmt=18

The video is also viewable at signalofchange.com

Please forward it to as many people as possible!

Barack Obama forced to defend Treasury pick (2009-01-14 19:04)

The US Senate delayed confirmation hearings for President-elect Barack Obama 's choice for Treasury Secretary after it was disclosed he failed to pay self-employment taxes.

Timothy Geithner failed to pay taxes for wages earned while working for the International Monetary Fund from 2001 to 2004. Obama said that the mistake was embarrassing but is one that is commonly made for people working for international institutions.

Geithner is a strong advocate of rapid bailout action for Wall St.

guardian.co.uk Move along, folks. Nothing here but a tax truant Obama wants to ...

Los Angeles Times, CA - 2 hours ago

Anyway, what we were blogging was the news that the Senate nomination hearing for Barack Obama's Treasury secretary-designate Timothy Geithner has been ...

Video: Obama Defends Treasury Choice

AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama sees Senate backing Geithner for Treasury Reuters

PR push for Geithner; Obama breaks bread at George Will's house USA Today

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Tim Russ as Barack Obama (2009-01-15 11:10)

If you had to pick a fairly well-known actor to play President-elect Barack Obama, the best choice might be Tim Russ, who made his name as the Vulcan named Tuvok on the Star Trek Voyager series.

Photos from: <http://allotherpersons.wordpress.com/2008/06/30/separated-at-birth/>
In fact, there is a running joke that Obama is actually Tim Russ in disguise!
[EMBED]

Tim Russ Rocks the Vote

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dinero (2009-01-15 18:45:00)

I hope Obama doesn't become embroiled in sleaze stories with his associates from Chicago.
I feel some on the right will be out to catch him with sleaze stories.

Friction between Obama and Democrats building (2009-01-16 10:30)

Yes, that is Democrats not Republicans .

Think of the last two Democratic presidents - Jimmy Carter and Bill Clinton - and then remember the titanic battles they had with Democratic majorities in Congress!

Many Democrats are not happy with President-elect Barack Obama 's emphasis on tax cuts in his economic stimulus plan, and they want specifics on how he will spend the $350 billion left in the financial bailout package.

After some initial reluctance, Obama agreed to commit up to $100 billion of the stimulus money to homeowners, but nine Democratic senators yesterday still voted against him.

Obama also had to compromise on an original ceiling of $775 billion for the stimulus package settling for a figure so far at $825 billion. There are some analysts who feel the eventual total will exceed $1 trillion and not a few Democrats have been pushing in this direction.

Democrats have also negotiated a lower number for tax cuts that now stands at $275 billion from an original $300+ billion.

House Majority Whip James Clyburn has rallied a group to fight for earmarks, which the Obama team said would not be part of the stimulus package.

"There will be no earmarks in the stimulus. Nada. Zero. Zilch," said a spokesman for Senate leader Harry Reid.

✕

China Daily Meet Obama's Loyal Opposition

Wall Street Journal - 12 hours ago

By KIMBERLEY A. STRASSEL "I do not work for Barack Obama." Mitch McConnell, Senate minority leader? No. Ben Bernanke, Fed chief?

Obama's $825B stimulus plan includes spending, tax cuts USA Today

Democrats roll out $825-billion in tax cuts, spending Newsday

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

"the Dude" (2009-01-16 14:57:00)

http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20090116/ap_on_re_as/as_china_obama_half_brother

(2009-01-16 15:05)

Speaking in hard-hit Ohio, President-elect Barack Obama said quick action was needed to fix the economy in the near and long term.

Obama said his economic stimulus plan would create good-paying jobs – about 90 percent in the "private sector." He said that his "first job" is "to put people back to work."

Public sector jobs are actually a very quick and efficient way to put people back to work right away. With private sector contracts there is a long bidding process a lot of the money tends to go toward executive salaries and perks like corporate jet travel. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lyndon Johnson popularly used public works programs to employ the jobless.

CBS News Obama: 'Dramatic action' needed now to fix economy

The Associated Press - 1 hour ago

BEDFORD HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) - President-elect Barack Obama made a pitch for his massive economic stimulus plan at a Midwestern factory that makes wind turbine parts, saying Friday his plan would make smart investments in the country's future and create ...

Video: Obama: 'Dramatic Action' Needed to Fix Economy AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama says his 'first job' is to 'put people back to work' USA Today

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Express heading for DC (2009-01-17 11:55)

President-elect Barack Obama started from Philadelphia in the morning heading to Washington DC on an historic train ride mirroring the last leg of Abraham Lincoln's inaugural journey to the nation's capital.

Obama stopped in Wilmington, Delaware and Baltimore, Maryland before boarding the chartered train to DC with Vice President-elect Joe Biden and both of their wives and families. The Obamas will stay in Blair House, the official presidential guest house, until the inauguration.

A number of balls and galas are scheduled to take place in the capital prior to the inauguration, which is expected to attract around 2 million people.

BBC News Obama in Delaware

New York Times - 1 hour ago

Following is the prepared text of Barack Obama's remarks in Wilmington, Del., as provided by the Presidential Inaugural Committee.

 Video: Obama's Whistle-stop Tour Makes First Stop AssociatedPress
[EMBED]

Obama calls for 'new declaration of independence' USA Today

Seattle Post Intelligencer All Aboard the Obama Express!

Buzz Log, CA - 34 minutes ago

by Mike Krumboltz Barack Obama will soon have the toughest job on the planet. But at least he's traveling in style for his first day at the office. ...

Obama joins list of presidents arriving by train St. Augustine Record

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-01-17 18:22:00)
he is an amazing man! www.bushyourself.com

Despite general gloom, people optimistic about Obama (2009-01-18 14:46)

The sinking economy and complex international security problems are not shaking people's faith in President-elect Barack Obama .

A New York Times/CBS News Poll showed that 79 percent of people were optimistic about the next four years under Obama, although polls also show that about two-thirds of respondents think that the economic recession will last for two years or longer.

It may be that Obama's own optimism is fueling the public's confidence in him. His calm demeanor and frequent charming smile help project a positive image that inspires people's faith in his ability to handle the current crisis.

Of course, the president-elect is still in the traditional "honeymoon" period, and the current reservoir of goodwill could drain as the recession and other problems test the people's patience.

Obama himself has been trying to lower expectations every time he speaks by repeating that it took years to create the current problems, and it could take years to solve them.

Voice of America Polls show broad optimism about Obama in US

The Plain Dealer - cleveland.com, OH - 11 hours ago

President-elect Barack Obama is riding a powerful wave of optimism into the White House, with Americans confident he can turn the economy around but ...

Poll Finds Faith in Obama, Mixed With Patience New York Times

Local residents optimistic about Obama administration Kingsport Times News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sarah A (2009-01-19 09:30:00)

More Obama optimism for you and your readers

<http://www.findingdulcinea.com/channel/politics/Presidential-Inauguration.html>

with stories on the lincoln-obama connection and other inauguration-related features. Thanks for your thoughtful blog posts.

Barack Obama celebrates Martin Luther King Day (2009-01-19 08:54)

President-elect Barack Obama will celebrate Martin Luther King Day by volunteering in civic projects.

Obama's campaign has called on supporters to serve as volunteers on this holiday before the inauguration.

Obama will appear at an event discussing a new Web site, USAservice.org, that helps Americans organize or join community service programs.

He will then host separate dinners to honor Republican Senator John McCain, Vice President-elect Joe Biden and former Secretary of State Colin Powell.

The wives of the Obama and Vice President-elect Joe Biden - Michelle and Jill - will host a free inaugural concert for young people to honor military families. Obama has constantly stressed to his supporters that they cannot depend on change to come from government alone. For true to change to occur, it must also come from the grassroots level, for example, by ordinary people volunteering to improve their communities.

Obama on most minds as NJ marks King Day

Newsday - 1 hour ago

TRENTON, NJ (AP) _ With the nation's first black president set to take office Tuesday, Barack Obama was front and center at celebrations marking the Martin Luther King Jr.

Obama Celebrates Martin Luther King Voice of America

Most blacks say MLK's vision fulfilled, poll finds CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Christopher (2009-01-19 10:01:00)

What an amazing journey from then to now... just finished reading a look back on MLK celebrating his birthday this past Friday..<http://tinyurl.com/7x84sp>... just amazing.

Anonymous (2009-01-19 10:16:00)

I did not vote for you, but will support you as our new president. You have been a wonderful example to the youth of America. You have two beautiful daughters. You are supposed to be setting an example for America and your children. We follow by example. Since you are in such a place to set a huge example to the youth, then you need to think seriously about your smoking habit. This would be a prime time to stop smoking and let America know that you feel strongly about good health. You could inspire many to do the same!

Ruby J. Moors

Anonymous (2009-01-19 14:15:00)

Our Warm Wishes To The New President.

The hot air blowers can be temporarily installed safely on the electric polls to warm the Lincoln Memorial Center area for millions of people and save them from catching pnemonia.

Anonymous (2009-01-20 08:38:00)

what did we get this country into this time, I know bush was bad, but wow really? Obama?

Anonymous (2009-01-20 08:54:00)

http://www.etsy.com/view_listing.php?listing_id=18089894

Wanna support Obama? This is a unique and wonderful way to do it

Anonymous (2009-01-20 12:18:00)

Heres a mashup i made with Obama and a speech about race relations i hope you enjoy and will share with your readers!

<http://www.sendspace.com/file/em1mzp>

alain.cadillac (2009-01-20 16:56:00)

<http://vuesdactu.canalblog.com/>

an ebook of a french artist ; me alain cadillac for my hope in pdt Obama !

I have been also a social worker for 20 years and journalist and have worked wiith Foucault, Guattari (ecology) & Deleuze, and have study and worked with the philosopher JP Faye (former pdt of european research university) Paris Fr (ministère de la recherche)

Big up for Mme & M Barack Hussein OBAMA and their daughters

Barack Obama calls for era of responsibility (2009-01-19 18:39)

President-elect Barack Obama will call on Americans to usher in a new period of responsibility during his inauguration tomorrow.

"Given the crisis that we're in and the hardships that so many people are going through, we can't allow any idle hands," Obama said during an event today. "Everybody's got to be involved. Everybody's going to have to pitch in, and I think the American people are ready for that."

"I am making a commitment to you as the next president, that we are going to make government work," he told volunteers at Coolidge High. "But I can't do it by myself. Michelle can't do it by herself. Government can only do so much....If we're waiting for someone else to do something, it never gets done."

The historic inauguration of the first African American president will be covered and attended like no other. Many leaders of the civil rights movement will be present and can be expected to comment on mainstream media.

ABC News Obama to Call for a New Era of Responsibility

Wall Street Journal - 32 minutes ago

1396

By LAURA MECKLER and JONATHAN WEISMAN WASHINGTON – Americans poured into the nation's capital to celebrate the inauguration of the first black president with parades and parties.

 Video: From Emancipation to Inauguration AssociatedPress

[EMBED] The Real Story Of The Lincoln Bible CBS News

Video: From Emancipation to Inauguration AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

pharaon (2009-01-20 08:58:00)
<http://www.obama-inauguration-video.com>

vania (2009-01-20 10:35:00)
congratulations i m from brasil i lives americana i think this govern better bush today i m home in my city jail because mr chairman globo tv mr roberto irineu marinho he put jail adress globo tv rue doctor chucri zaidan 46 morumbi sao paulo sp do you likehelp

Philip I (2009-01-21 16:24:00)
Obama's middle name will rescue America.

The Intellectual Redneck (2009-01-24 08:16:00)
Where is the liberal outrage when Obama kills civilians?
President Bush was criticized for attacks against Al Qaeda that sometimes killed civilians. Even candidate Barack Obama was critical. Will liberals now start calling Barack Obama a murderer? I suspect they will just look the other way.

Barack Obama inaugurated 44th President of the United States (2009-01-20 12:12)

President-elect took the oath of office today becoming the 44th President of the United States. He had a bit of slip during the oath that was administered by Chief Supreme Court Justice John G. Roberts Jr., but otherwise the transition of power went smoothly.

Reuters

Obama begins historic day

Report

Jan 20, 2009

U.S. President George W. Bush greets U.S. President-elect Barack Obama (L) on the North Portico of the White House in Washington, January 20, 2009. First lady Laura Bush is second from left, and Michelle Obama is at right. REUTERS/Larry Downing

WELT ONLINE

Obama Is Sworn In as the 44th President

New York Times, United States - 5 hours ago

President Barack Obama is sworn in as the 44th President of the United States during a ceremony at the Capitol by Chief Justice John Roberts. ...

Video: Raw Video: Obama Goes to Church AssociatedPress

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/v/W2Uxs1TCV-E>

Obama Pledges to Restore US Prosperity, Global Prominence FOXNews

In Prelude to Inauguration, Obama Attends Church Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

bar paris (2009-01-20 12:55:00)

Big day for america, I hope Obama will change the world !

Free Palestian From Nazzi Israeli Terror (2009-01-20 13:40:00)

My name is khalid and im an american palestinian. When barack obama become president elect i was in tears for the change we made...so happy and excited that the man i welcomed in my home night after night on television was going to be our next president, and above all i was happy that a man whose ancestors were violated in more ways than one was going to be our next president....I WAS THRILLED THAT I WAS GOING TO BE A PART OF HISTORY IN THE MAKING.....I believed every word he said, and in my opinion i believed he was the man who not only was going to change washington, but also restore our respect worldwide and change the bias and deadly alliances against humanity some of the prior administrations like the bush administration had created.....When the zionist terrorist regime of israel started its murder spree on the concentration camp of gaza in december, i soon found out that barack obama was no different than george bush when it comes to palestinians...full of hatred...I started to question why barack obama had not said anything about the genocide in gaza, and that's when i started to uncover the truth behind his silence...The reality of the gaza genocide was the bush administration's parting farewell gesture and final stab in the heart to the palestinians as he handed over a corrupt washington to barack obama who is just as corrupt and biased as he is in regards to the palestinians...barack obama's silence triggered me to do some homework on him and that's when the harsh reality started to unfold...In july barack obama toured israel and supported an israeli attack on palestinians...In a news conference about a week ago, obama responded to a question about gaza and expressed his support of the zionist terrorists and their attack on the concentration camp we know as gaza...Im going to quote obama word for word "if somebody was sending rockets into my house where my two daughters sleep at night, im gonna do everything in my power to stop that and i would expect israelis to do the same thing".....Notice the bias in his remarks, he never acknowledges the fact that half of the murdered in gaza were infants, children and their mothers and entire families as well who are being murdered, all who are innocent civilians guilty of only not being able to defend themselves...The question i have for barack obama is whom invade whom...whom stole land from whom...and why don't palestinians have the right to fight for their freedom and stolen land from illegal occupiers,PALESTINIANS HAVE THE RIGHT TO BE FREE BY DEFAULT AND NOT WHEN AND WHERE CHOSEN BY ZIONISTS...are you suggesting that if canada invaded our country of the United States of America that we should do nothing and live by their dictatorship,and if not,then how do you explain your double standers when it comes to the illegal occupation of palestine by zionist nazi terrorist israel...I would expect that kind of bias and continued one sided support of israel and our deadly allince from others,however i find it dispicable and disgusting that a man whos ancesters were violated and treaten unfairly and subjected to slavery and poverty by force be a suppoter of the barbaric murder of mankind....SHAME ON YOU BARACK OBAMA....SHAME ON YOU FOR THE WINK-WINK AND THE GREEN LIGHT TO ISRAEL TO CONDUCT MASS MURDER ON THE CONCENTRATION CAMP OF GAZA....SHAME ON YOU,A BLACK MAN WHOS RACE IS STILL SUBJECTED TO CRUELTY AND RACISM....SHAME ON YOU FOR YOUR DEADLY ALLINCE AGAINST HUMANITY....SHAME ON YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT OF A TERRORIST REGIME THAT HAS CONTINUESLY VIOLATED INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAWS AS LAID DOWN IN THE GENEVA CONVENTIONS...SHAME ON YOU...SHAME ON YOU...SHAME ON YOU...SHAME ON YOU FOR BEING SILENCED BY ZIONIST TERRORISTS.....

Loan Modification (2009-01-20 21:21:00)

I challenge the new administration to do something on the global financial crisis as well as all ignited war to end.

Inaugural parade to start at 2:30 pm EST (2009-01-20 12:19)

Large crowds of people are preparing to watch President Barack Obama's inaugural parade from Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House.

Tonight at the inaugural ball, Beyonce will serenade Barack and Michelle during the first dance.

WELT ONLINE

Obama Inaugural Parade - Video

Right Pundits, CA - 55 minutes ago

By Maggie M. Thorton The inaugural parade begins at 2:30 EST this afternoon, Tuesday, January 20th, 2009, beginning at the US Capitol building and ...

Video: Raw Video: Obama Goes to Church AssociatedPress

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/v/W2Uxs1TCV-E>

A glimpse at Obama's day Detroit Free Press

Massive crowd to greet Obama MSNBC

100 black horses and 10000 marchers to salute Pres. Barack Obama

Los Angeles Times, CA - 4 hours ago

One of the most interesting aspects of the presidential inaugural parade for Barack Obama is the inclusion of about 10000 marchers from all 50 states ...

City girl will be in Obama's inaugural parade News Dispatch

Local riders share excitement for today's parade Pilot News

Culver Academies riders represent state in parade News Sentinel

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

323 East (2009-01-20 16:15:00)

We're broadcasting live from 323 East RIGHT NOW to celebrate the inauguration with our "Inauguration Celebration" Show Opening. For this show, over 15 artists created original artwork inspired by Barack Obama - over 30 pieces.

We'll also have DJ Sicari spinning vinyl beginning at 7pm.

Visit <http://www.323east.com/liveshow.php> to see us live and to view and purchase the artwork.

Video: Obamas at Neighborhood Ball (2009-01-20 20:21)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle at the Neighborhood Ball, the first of ten balls they will attend tonight. The two danced the first dance to a serenade of Etta James' "At Last" by Beyonce. It is expected that the Obamas will continue to celebrate until after 2:30 pm EST.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Reflecting after yesterday's inauguration (2009-01-20 21:34)

For many of us, yesterday's events are the culmination of two years of working at the grassroots level to get Barack Obama elected starting back before he officially entered the race in Feb. 2007.

The initial announcement was made via a simple video message uploaded to a sparse campaign website. Many supporters who had worked on the draft Obama effort wondered how a presidential level candidate could start off with such a simple web presence.

Of course, eventually Obama rolled out a web machine that would propel him far ahead of the competition in online prowess. The former Illinois senator came to depend on his online support to offset the establishment backing of chief primary opponent Hillary Clinton.

I can clearly remember how many people I know, who really wanted to see change, would say that America was still not ready to elect an African American into the White House. A few acquaintances, very thoughtful and informed in these matters, thought the country was still decades, or 50 years or more from reaching that point.

However, many of my generation, and I'm about a year and a half older than Barack, who tinker in politics were aware of changes that have occurred in the mentality of many Americans, especially younger ones. Obama himself seems to have been well aware of these changes himself.

These changes have been going on for a long time, but most politicians rarely bother to target young people as part of the main thrust of their campaign. Every candidate has some youth outreach, but this is usually merely an aside to the primary focus of reaching likely voters, who tend to be older.

Obama though realized that he had to concentrate on younger and more progressive voters. And he knew that the internet was a great place to find such voters. The internet is an integrated area much like Obama's original home state of Hawai'i, or like the armed forces. Integrated environments breed familiarity and reduce "otherness." His own upbringing and his technical savvy made him aware of these opportunities to change the electoral map. Now it wasn't an easy road. During the summer of 2007, for example, Obama plummeted in the polls against Clinton, with the latter beginning to look like the "inevitable" candidate. The primary battle, in particular, was long and rigorous. The plan though eventually brought victory.

Now, with Obama taking the reins as the 44th president, expectations and the stakes are high. He may have a tough time coming through with some of his promises in the current environment. Some have wondered whether some of his cabinet picks will work energetically enough to push through his agenda, when they have expressed differing views in the past.

What most of us who have been around from the start have learned, however, is that Obama cannot not do this all by himself. Change comes from the people. Obama, at best, can act as an instrument of the people. As Obama said himself, we are the change that we seek.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-01-21 10:56:00)

This man is a fraud. As his student, I have personally known him to be ashamed of his Muslim ancestry. He is weak and ruled by his manly wife. I am ashamed to think that I was ever in his class. He despises Muslims mainly because his Muslim father dumped his Christian mother, and as he has seen the opulent lifestyle of Muslims growing up in Indonesia, he is bitter that his own life was so fragmented and grasping. In Pakistan too he has seen how the rich Pakistanis live, and has been severely jealous as to why he was denied that luxury. Hence you see his wife espousing fashion and his $9 million extravagance for a week's Hawaii vacation, on American taxpayer money. His agenda is that of his wife - black America. His wife is a very bitter and vengeful woman. Who wouldn't be, growing up in South Side of Chicago, which is same as Harlem of NY? His wife and her family have never seen a penny of luxury. They - Michelle, Craig and Barack - got where they were because of affirmative action, and Obama knows this very well. You have not seen their origins. Go to Hyde Park in Chicago and see, you will know a ghetto when you see one. Chicago is a hotbed of criminals-turned-politicians, and for a black man to get anywhere in that climate he needs to have had a lot of black power - and petty money-grubbing rich white power - behind him, which means shaking hands with all kinds of crooks. Plus, he has too many favors to return to the people who handed him the presidency. Those people have heavily vested interests. I am afraid to think of how Obama - Mr AND Mrs, and Mrs' entire afro family - are going to bring this great nation down in the gutter with them. No one can rise so fast without a personal agenda - and a powerful sugar daddy hellbent on his/her own agenda. Politics means plenty of compromises. Obama has sold his soul. Just you wait and watch.

MacD (2009-01-21 11:43:00)

What exactly ARE the WH "staff" positions that were sworn in today by Biden? What are the job descriptions? How did those folks get those jobs? Was it an open application process or are they all campaign insiders now being rewarded with top jobs?

FASHION REALIZATION (2009-01-21 12:55:00)

Paul

Well said!

I agree that, as Mahatma Gandhi said: "You must be the change you want to see in the world".

We ARE The Change, so let's get to it!

Obama moves on military, foreign policy (2009-01-21 15:44)

President Barack Obama is meeting with Pentagon and State Department officials to begin changing policies in the area of military and foreign affairs.

Obama wants to discuss with the top military chiefs his plan for withdrawing troops from Iraq in 16 months. Currently, Iraq and the U.S. have an agreement to leave by the end of 2011. The president also ordered all Guantanamo prosecutions halted and called for plans to shut down the facility within a year.

Obama is scheduled to meet with White House National Security Advisor James L. Jones, Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates, Adm. Michael G. Mullen, the Joint Chiefs of Staff chair, and Gen. David H. Petraeus, U.S. military chief in the Middle East. Gen. Raymond T. Odierno, U.S. commander in Iraq, will participate by video teleconference.

Also today, the United States Senate confirmed Hillary Clinton as secretary of state by a 94-2 vote.

FOXNews Obama meeting with military, diplomatic officials

WLOS, NC - 1 hour ago

A senior military official says the meeting with the Joint Chiefs will come within a week. The chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Adm. Mike Mullen, ...

Video: World Ready to Work With Obama AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama poised to put imprint on Iraq, Afghan wars The Associated Press

Obama calls meeting to reshape Pentagon strategy Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

At Last: Barack and Michelle at Neighborhood Ball (2009-01-21 19:41)

For your enjoyment:

[EMBED]

Barack And Michelle Obama's First Dance at the Neighborhood Ball serenaded by Beyonce singing the Etta James classic "At Last."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Hillary Clinton takes reins at State Department (2009-01-22 09:39)

New Secretary of State Hillary Clinton took charge at the State Department after confirmation yesterday.

Clinton greeted employees at the State Department on Thursday and is scheduled to meet with President Barack Obama, Vice President Joe Biden and National Security Adviser Jim Jones at the State Department Thursday afternoon.

"I believe with all of my heart that this is a new era for America," Clinton told her colleagues. "President Obama set the tone with his inaugural address.... Robust diplomacy and effective development are the best long term tools for securing America's future," said Clinton to an enthusiastic crowd of about 1000 diplomats and employees. Clinton is America's 67th secretary of state.

Voice of America New Secretary of State Hillary Clinton takes charges at State ...

New York Daily News - 42 minutes ago

AP Incoming Secretary of State greets Department of State employees as she arrives Thursday for her first day on the job. WASHINGTON - Secretary of State Hillary Clinton arrived at her new office in the State Department Thursday morning, ...

Video: Senate Confirms Clinton As Secretary of State AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

Cheers, Crowds Greet Clinton at State Department Voice of America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2009-01-22 09:39)

New Secretary of State Hillary Clinton took charge at the State Department after cibfernabtuib

Voice of America

New Secretary of State Hillary Clinton takes charges at State ...

New York Daily News - 42 minutes ago

AP Incoming Secretary of State greets Department of State employees as she arrives Thursday for her first day on the job. WASHINGTON - Secretary of State Hillary Clinton arrived at her new office in the State Department Thursday morning, ...

Video: Senate Confirms Clinton As Secretary of State AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

Cheers, Crowds Greet Clinton at State Department Voice of America

Obama retakes oath (2009-01-22 09:51)

[EMBED]

Out of an "abundance of caution," President Barack Obama decided to retake the oath of office after a bungle that occurred during the inauguration. Two other presidents - Calvin Coolidge and Chester A. Arthur - have retaken the oath because of unusual circumstances the first time around.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama to be first president to use Blackberry, email (2009-01-22 14:35)

President Barack Obama does not have to give up his Blackberry email device after all.

"The President has a BlackBerry through a compromise that allows him to stay in touch with senior staff and a small group of personal friends in a way that use will be limited," White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said on Thursday. Obama's staff had thought that the email device was not secure enough and would subject the president to extra scrutiny. All presidential emails are public record and neither Bill Clinton or George W. Bush used email for official business.

The Blackberry, made by Research In Motion Ltd, is more portable than a laptop and allows the user to receive and send email messages.

guardian.co.uk Obama keeps BlackBerry e-mail device, after all

Reuters - 54 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - President Barack Obama, who worried after winning office that he would have to part with his BlackBerry because of security concerns, will get to keep the addictive email device after all.

Spokesman says Obama is keeping his BlackBerry The Associated Press

Obama can keep BlackBerry Boston Globe

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Erio (2009-01-22 20:06:00)

Finally, an easy way to answer the question "Did you ever think you'd live to see a Black President?"

<http://www.cafepress.com/ineedthis>

Fashion, Travel, Music... (2009-01-22 23:14:00)

I love Obama

I love Whitley Kros (whitleykros.com)

I love Cat Power (album jukebox)

I love Bob Dylan (everything)

I love India (the children)

I love America (the hope) share what you love.

Obama girls setting fashion trends (2009-01-23 10:28)

Michelle, Malia and Sasha Obama are lighting up the fashion world after their inaugural appearances.

The First Lady wore dresses made by Isabel Toledo and Jason Wu, while the kids sported J. Crews designs.

"Michelle Obama is a new fashion icon. She is accessible and stylish. She is 'everywoman,'" Stephanie Solomon, Bloomingdale's vice president for fashion direction told Foxnews.com. "She has fashion flair and the ability to wear an outfit so that her personality shines through. Clothes do not wear her, she wears the clothes. And her choice of new and up-and-coming American designers is a real boost to the entire American fashion industry."

Sasha and Malia Obama in their J. Crew coats on Inauguration Day (AP)

"Malia and Sasha's style will definitely influence tween girls," said youth fashion expert Denise Restauri, CEO and founder of AllyKatz.com in a CBS News interview. "They're already starting to talk about it. They're talking about coats they wore to the inauguration. They're talking about what they wore to the concert. Girls will start wearing what they are wearing, because they are the new celebrities."

Washington Post

Michelle, Malia and Sasha Obama Ignite a Fashion Frenzy

FOXNews - 3 hours ago

AP First Lady Michelle, Malia and Sasha Obama have ignited a fashion frenzy. President Obama, maybe not so much. Isabel Toledo is working around the clock ...

Video: Letter From Daddy Obama CBS

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/v/8NEAMm95qC4>

Sasha And Malia: Trendsetters In Making CBS News

Bush Twins Read Letter To Obama Girls (VIDEO) Huffington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Pakistan air strikes underscore continuation of Bush policy (2009-01-23 16:45)

President Barack Obama launched his first air strikes into Pakistan indicating that he will continue the Bush policy of unilateral military action against the spoken will of the Pakistani government.

This is the first action since Obama took office on Tuesday that is likely to attract some opposition from progressive groups that supported him strongly during the campaign. Vanity Fair has this to say:

Obama can't be expected to pander to liberals for the next four years. But the decision to double down in Afghanistan carries considerable risk. Like the economy, it is a huge problem. But even the economy can be expected to bounce back sometime in the next few years. If Afghanistan turns into Obama's Iraq, he may miss the support of the anti-war left, which, it's worth remembering, helped propel him past Hillary Clinton not so very long ago.

Los Angeles Times Strikes in Pakistan Underscore Obama's Options

New York Times, United States - 1 hour ago

Even as the CIA continues its strikes just inside Pakistan's border with Afghanistan, Mr. Obama and his top national security aides are likely to review in ...

Suspected US missile attacks kill 18 in Pakistan Los Angeles Times

Suspected US Missile Strikes Kill at Least 20 in Pakistan Washington Post

Deadly missiles strike Pakistan BBC News

WELT ONLINE ANALYSIS: Obama, Pakistan and Afghanistan —Najmuddin A Shaikh

Daily Times, Pakistan - Jan 22, 2009

The "hard earned peace" that Obama is seeking in Afghanistan (and Pakistan, since for some time now the American security establishment and many who are now ...

Video: Obama, Clinton At State Dept. CBS

[EMBED] Afghan, Pakistani Officials Welcome Broader Strategy From US ... Voice of America

Obama names Mideast, South Asia envoys Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama gives more details on stimulus plan (2009-01-24 09:13)

President Barack Obama gave more details on his economic stimulus plan that will cost at least $820 billion. Obama plans to cut taxes by a minimum of $275 billion and spend at least $545 billion on new projects and to help states with their budget problems.

Some specific programs include doubling green energy capacity in three years and expansion of the Child Tax Credit.

Republicans have expressed some concern about the amount of deficit spending saying that they do not want to pass on too much debt to future generations.

Of course, many of us remember such warnings about "future generations" before, but now find out that we do not have to wait for our great grandchildren to come along. The debt has caught up with the borrowing generation!

And new debt might have more immediate effects as compared to the previous decades of borrowing. As an illustration, think of a fresh new company that comes along with a clean slate. Early on, the company can obtain financing rather easily without any immediate repercussion.

However, if the company accumulates more and more red ink, each new loan has more immediate effect. The tolerance level and confidence of creditors and investors diminishes and pretty soon the company will not be able to attract new capital.

Sify Obama Fleshes Out Further Details of Stimulus Plan

Washington Post - 2 hours ago

By Paul Kane, Michael D. Shear and Anne E. Kornblut President Obama ramped up his personal lobbying campaign for an economic recovery package that would cost at least $820 billion, holding his first bipartisan gathering of congressional leaders at the ...

Video: Obama Asks Lawmakers to Back Stimulus Bill AssociatedPress
[EMBED]

Obama, Republicans seek common ground on economy Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama acting quickly, confidently (2009-01-24 17:57)

If anyone thought the Obama administration might get off to a slow start due to the youth and relative inexperience of the president, they thought wrong.

In a little more than 100 hours since taking office, President Barack Obama has saturated Washington with new executive orders and introduced legislation.

Many thought that the cerebral Obama, who often had trouble with rapid-fire questioning during candidate debates, might act much more methodically once in office. But quite to the contrary the administration has moved very decisively and confidently on a wide range of issues.

Of course, Obama has many experienced folk on his team with many having served during the Clinton administration, so really it is just about Obama giving the go signal in many cases.

Hillary Clinton, for example, has made quite a splash at the State Department where there is reportedly a lot of enthusiasm among diplomats and staff eager for a new direction in foreign policy.

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama on Saturday laid out more pieces of an economic plan he says would add 3,000 miles of electrical lines, increase security at 90 ports and double the United States' renewable energy capacity within three years. (Jan. 24) How Obama set the tone for a new US revolution

guardian.co.uk - 54 minutes ago

Within days of his inauguration, Barack Obama had established a unique presidential style, displaying the charm of Reagan and the ruthlessness of Roosevelt as he introduced a blizzard of new legislation.

Reader's view: Obama brings hope for economy to heal, war to end Duluth News Tribune

X

FOXNews Obama's first, confident steps

Financial Times - 43 minutes ago

President Barack Obama has made a good, confident start. He quickly signed orders closing Guantánamo Bay, ending the Central Intelligence Agency's use of secret prisons, and requiring interrogators to abide by the relatively "non-coercive" methods laid ...

France floats EU plan on Guantanamo - report Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Maria (2009-01-25 17:13:00)

Interesting blog and coverage of the campaign.

Obama and Afghanistan (2009-01-25 11:41)

A number of commentaries have been published recently exploring President Barack Obama's strategy in Afghanistan

. During the election, Obama promised to withdraw troops, except a non-combat residual force, from Iraq, but increase the U.S. presence in Afghanistan. He saw the mountainous country as the central front against terrorism and vowed to tackle al-Qaeda, which operates both in Afghanistan and Pakistan. It is less clear whether Obama is intent on stamping out the Taliban or is open to negotiations with that fundamentalist group.

Most of the opinion pieces question whether a "surge" would work in Afghanistan or whether the U.S. might be heading into another Vietnam-like quagmire.

The steady growth and expansion of the Taliban in recent years is well-documented. They now control much of the rural countryside in the eastern and southern parts of the country, and they are closing in on the capital Kabul. It is mainly in the northern areas, where the old "Northern Alliance" was based, and Kabul that U.S. and NATO forces can find any friends in the country.

Taliban forces are holed up in rugged mountain strongholds that are extremely difficult to operate in. Even small areas in this region can only be secured with large numbers of forces, and consequently many supply and communication routes are vulnerable to attackers.

NATO forces also appear to be losing the battle for the hearts and minds of the people. The Taliban, at least, appears to have little trouble finding new recruits even though they have adopted suicide tactics similar to those used by al-Qaeda.

Obama reportedly plans to increase troop strength in Afghanistan by about 30,000 with a lot of the concentration in the Taliban heartland of Kandahar. He also plans to use more private security companies to guard bases and transportation routes. The Kandahar bases is under rapid expansion to host an extra 10,000 U.S. troops.

Pakistan is often mentioned in the same breath as Afghanistan whenever the war is discussed by the new administration officials. Obama has hinted that he will place more pressure on Islamabad to exterminate insurgents in their midsts, and that he will take unilateral action in certain instances.

✕

Sky News Obama's War Fearing Another Quagmire in Afghanistan

New York Times, United States - 16 hours ago

By HELENE COOPER WASHINGTON — Can President Obama succeed in that long-lamented “graveyard of empires” — a place that has crushed foreign occupiers for more ...

President Obama revs up Afghan fight; backseats Iraq at Clinton debut New York Daily News

Obama's Vietnam? Washington Times

Obstacles are many for US in Afghanistan Kansas City Star

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Will Republicans back Obama stimulus plan? (2009-01-25 17:42)

House Republican leader John Boehner said today that there is little GOP support for President Barack Obama's economic stimulus plan .

Boehner said the current package has too much wasteful and “slow-moving” spending that will not be effective in creating jobs.

“I think a lot of Republicans will vote no, because they see this as a lot of wasteful Washington spending, padding the bureaucracy and doing nothing to help create jobs and preserve jobs,” Boehner said on NBC Sunday.

Obama's economic team though continued to warn that delayed action could have serious consequences including double digit unemployment.

Democratic Sen. Chuck Schumer of New York was optimistic that Republicans would eventually support the Obama package. “I think you're going to find a large number of Republicans voting for this package. There has been a lot of input,” Schumer said on “Fox News Sunday.”

✕

Washington Post Will Obama's economic plan stimulate bipartisan support?

CNN - 2 hours ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) – President Barack Obama, who arguably won a large chunk of political capital in the 2008 election, is now looking to cash in as he urges Congress to pass a massive economic stimulus package.

 Video: Boehner: Little GOP Support for Stimulus Package AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Biden, Summers Sound Economic Warnings, Push Stimulus Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bobby (2009-01-26 00:45:00)

If Boehner nixes the stimulus package, he'll go down like Gingrich and get booted out of office. He represents a low to middle income district in rust-belt Ohio cities and depressed rural areas. With widespread unemployment in his district, he won't be back in Congress if he deepens the recession to satisfy wealthy supporters. He can't recognize the new political reality of this recession and is out of touch with his constituency. You can take that to the bank, provided you can find one that's solvent.

J (2009-01-26 08:52:00)

They should, President Obama knows what hes talking about. He has surrounded himself with the best, and even some of his fiercest critics, he's getting all the information from the right people. So we at <http://obamamania-yeswecan.blogspot.com/> only hope they do the right thing and let President Obama refresh America.

Barack Obama acts on environmental policy (2009-01-26 09:36)

President Barack Obama is taking steps to implement the new environmental policy he promised during this campaign.

He started by ordering the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to allow states to set their own automobile emission standards – a move blocked by former president George W. Bush. California is among the states that has been looking to set its own fuel-efficiency rules. At least 12 other states are also interested in making the same move. Obama also directed the Department of Transportation to set new federal fuel-efficiency standards by March, and is ordering all federal agencies to conserve more energy.

BBC News Obama takes steps to reverse Bush climate policies

Reuters - 26 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - US President Barack Obama told the Environmental Protection Agency on Monday to reconsider California's request to regulate greenhouse gas emissions from cars, reversing the climate policies of former President George W. Bush.

Obama to allow states to set auto emissions rules USA Today

Obama pushing stronger fuel-efficiency standard The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: Obama on energy efficiency (2009-01-26 14:08)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama talking about the hard medicine needed to prepare the U.S. auto industry for the future, reduce dependency of foreign oil and preserve the planet's environment.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Era of Not Getting It: The Marie Antoinettes of the Meltdown (2009-01-26 16:59)

They should spend as much money on grassroots assistance as they are in bailing out Wall Street firms and banks. There are a lot of potential problems that can rise up when you throw so much money at these financial institutions before their internal problems are well-understood. The term "black hole" is commonly used and is appropriate. Until they fix whatever caused trillions of dollars to vanish from the market in several weeks, they need to proceed with caution.

The market is not and has never been capable of regulating itself. The system is designed to favor those who already have money and influence, and thoughtful people have long recognized that regulation and a tiered tax system were needed to prevent masses of people from becoming impoverished.

Our modern Wall Street aristocracy has been exposed, and the peasantry i.e., the middle class and the poor need to rise to the occasion or indeed, "let them eat cake!"

Read the Article at HuffingtonPost

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Fashion, Travel, Music... (2009-01-26 21:38:00)

I love Obama.

I also love Whitley Kros (whitleykros.com)

Cat Power (she's The Greatest)
Bob Dylan (is a genius)
Beck (listen to his music on the whitley kros website)
Intelligensia Coffee (Silverlake anyone?)
Here's to 2009!

Barack Obama ready for Iran talks (2009-01-27 12:55)

President Barack Obama said he is willing to begin talks with Iran – a view echoed by Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. Obama said that if Iran were willing to "unclench its fist" it would find an "extended hand" from the United States.

Obama's Middle East envoy, former Senator George Mitchell, is now touring the region.

[EMBED]

Voice of America Obama says ready to talk to Iran

Reuters - 30 minutes ago

By Firouz Sedarat and Lin Noueihed DUBAI (Reuters) - President Barack Obama said America was prepared to extend a hand of peace to Iran if it "unclenched its fist" and that the time was ripe for Israel and the Palestinians to resume peace negotiations.

Obama Signals New Tone in Relations With Islamic World New York Times

Egypt, Hamas welcome US Middle East envoy Christian Science Monitor

Clinton says Iran has chance to show willing to engage Reuters

Clinton: Iranians must choose whether to cooperate The Associated Press

Clinton: Engagement in Iran's hands MSNBC

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-01-29 12:07:00)
good indicative.
MOHIT GANGWAR

Bipartisanship difficult on economic issues (2009-01-27 18:43)

Progressives and conservatives can often get together in times of crisis especially when it involves issues of national security.

On economic issues though – things like taxes, deficits and spending – it has always been much harder to get them to agree with each other. Indeed, often consensus is difficult on economic matters even among members of the same party.

So it may be that the Obama administration will have to ramrod the president's economic stimulus plan through the House of Representatives with mostly Democratic votes. There may still be some time to get more Republican support before the Senate votes on the package.

If only for political reasons, members of both party know that something needs to be done quickly as thousands of jobs are lost everyday. Moving forward alone though can be risky for the Democrats. If the stimulus plan is seen as failing, then the Republicans can use that failure as political ammunition come election time.

BBC News Obama seeks Republican support for stimulus plans

Reuters - 42 minutes ago

By Thomas Ferraro and Caren Bohan WASHINGTON, Jan 27 (Reuters) - Democratic President Barack Obama struggled on Tuesday to placate Republicans in Congress who insist his $825 billion plan for reviving the troubled US economy should include bigger tax ...

Video: Obama, GOP Leaders Meet on Stimulus AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

Obama Visits Capitol to Press Republicans on Stimulus Plan New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama reaches out on Al-Arabiya TV (2009-01-27 19:49)

President Barack Obama 's television interview on Al-Arabiya was a bold move and a big break from what Americans have gotten used to over the last eight years.

In a little over a week, Obama has made some sea changes in certain policy areas even if in some cases this just amounts to getting the country back to "normal."

Even many Obama critics were delighted by the president's willingness to accept such a risky interview, which could have produced some awkward moments. Also surprising was Obama's willingness to discuss the tough Israeli-Palestinian problem were tensions are still high after the recent ceasefire in Gaza. The lull in fighting was interrupted today as Israeli aircraft retaliated after one of their soldiers was killed by a bomb while on patrol. The attacks come just as U.S. envoy George Mitchell began his Middle East tour.

CTV.ca Obama sends clear signal via Arab TV

Financial Times - 51 minutes ago

By Roula Khalaf in London and Edward Luce in Washington Barack Obama has given his first television interview as US president to a Saudi-backed channel, reinforcing his message to the Muslim and Arab worlds that "Americans are not your enemy".

Video: Obama's First Formal Interview on Al-Arabiya TV AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama launches effort to 'communicate' in Mideast Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

ObamaMania YesWeCan (2009-01-27 23:27:00)

What a great interview, we have the full thing on our blog, very powerful stuff and very frank.

whirlwindof2010 (2009-01-28 22:14:00)

THE FIVE NERGO PRESIDENTS BY J.A ROGERS! BEFORE OBAMA- HIS MENTOR ABRAHAM LINCOLN!

EMAIL ME

AT

WWW.THEWHIRLWINDOF2010@YAHOO.COM

FOR COPIES

mylife (2009-01-30 11:24:00)

Really an interesting interview and that on Al-Arabia. Crazy.

House Republicans ask for more tax cuts (2009-01-28 10:03)

House Republicans are offering a counter-proposal to President Barack Obama's economic stimulus plan , but it looks likely that it will pass with a Democratic vote today. The Republicans are still looking for more tax cuts rather than new government spending.

However, tax cuts now might encourage recession-wary Americans to save rather than spend given the regular flow of gloomy economic news. Apparently that's what happened with the last stimulus plan, and even banking companies have squirreled away money from the big financial bailout instead of making it available for new lending.

The Miami Herald House Republicans Push Counter-Proposal on Stimulus

FOXNews - 1 hour ago

An economic stimulus bill pushed by Republicans in the House would shift focus entirely from spending to tax relief. Far from rolling over, House Republican leaders are trying to win concessions from President Obama over the massive economic stimulus ...

Video: House Expected to Vote Wed. on Stimulus Package AssociatedPress

[EMBED] South Florida Republicans resist Obama's stimulus plan The Miami Herald

ITV.com Gloom Deepens Among Executives, Economists at Davos

Bloomberg - 2 hours ago

28 (Bloomberg) – Gloom is deepening among business leaders and economists, casting a pall over this year's World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland. ...

 Video: Davos'09: global crisis in mind RussiaToday
[EMBED]

Gloom enshrouds Davos crisis summit AFP

DAVOS: Doom and gloom at World Economic Forum Bild.de

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama's first bill, setback (2009-01-29 15:04)

President Barack Obama signed into law his first bill a day after a disappointing House vote on his economic stimulus plan.

The stimulus plan passed but in an inauspicious portent for bipartisanship, Obama failed to attract Republican support.

Republicans may be playing politics here as they know there is a good chance that the economy will still be in recession by election time in 2010. By rejecting the stimulus plan, they can use the economy as a weapon against Democrats in trying to win back Congress.

On a positive note for the Obama administration today, the president signed an equal pay law for women. The Lilly Ledbetter Act focuses on gender equity for pay in the workplace.

The Miami Herald Barack and Michelle Obama lead celebration of new equal pay law

Christian Science Monitor - 35 minutes ago

By Dave Cook | 01.29.09 Since her highly photographed appearances at various inaugural balls, the first lady has spent much of her time out of public view helping her two daughters adjust to their new surroundings.

 Video: Obama Signs First Bill CBS

Obama Signs First Piece of Legislation Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Is the First Lady pregnant? (2009-01-30 08:44)

Ok, this is coming from the gossip columns, specifically Los Angeles' celebrity blogger, Perez Hilton. A similar rumor was started back in November of last year.

The Obamas have said they do not intend to have anymore children other than Malia and Sasha.

Telegraph.co.uk

Michelle Obama 'pregnant': report

Hindustan Times, India - 5 hours ago

PTI US First Lady Michelle Obama is believed to be pregnant and expecting her third child, a media report in Britain said on Friday. ...

Michelle Obama Might be Pregnant TheInsider.com

Michelle Obama Reportedly Pregnant with Third Child Softpedia

Perez Hilton: Is Michelle Obama pregnant? Telegraph.co.uk

In other Michelle news, the First Lady will have a wax figure placed in Madame Tussands museum in Washington. Papers in the United Kingdom are calling Michelle, the American version of Princess Diana, who had both a flair for fashion and a heart for helping the less fortunate.

CBS News

Michelle Obama Gets A Wax Figure – and Spot in Madame Tussauds

ABC News - 14 hours ago

Mrs. Obama's figure – currently in clay head form – is set to debut in the Washington, DC museum in March. Efforts were well under way for President Obama's ...

Michelle Obama Gets the Wax Museum Treatment U.S. News & World Report

Michelle Obama Wax Figure: Madame Tussauds Right Celebrity

Michelle Obama: Statuesque First Lady to Become Actual Statue E! Online

Times Online Michelle Obama: America's Lady Diana?

Times Online, UK - Jan 24, 2009

"There is no comparison between Michelle Obama and Princess Diana. Princess Diana was very classy and elegant - Michelle Obama is not. ...

UK media terms Michelle Obama America's Lady Diana NDTV.com

Michelle Jackie Carla Jackie Michelle Diana Jackie Jackie Carla Diana Wired News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama hopes to sign SCHIP next week (2009-01-30 14:01)

President Barack Obama could sign a bill that provides government-sponsored health care to roughly 4 million uninsured children as soon as next week. The Senate approved the bill 66-32 yesterday.

"As the worsening economy causes families to lose their jobs and health insurance, it is vital that we redouble our efforts to ensure that every child in America has access to affordable health care," Obama said in a statement.

"That is why I am pleased that the Senate has joined the House in passing bipartisan legislation to provide health insurance to children whose families have been hurt most by this downturn." Obama called the vote "a down payment on my commitment to ensure that every American has access to quality, affordable health care."

The bill approves an additional $32.8 billion over the next 5 years for the State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP). The House plans to vote on the measure next week.

Washington Post Obama hails passage of children's health insurance

The Associated Press - 48 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House says President Barack Obama could sign a bill providing government-sponsored health care to roughly 4 million uninsured ...

Obama lauds bipartisan kids' health insurance plan CNN

Obama cheers Congress over children's health bill AFP

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jeff (2009-01-30 17:11:00)

I for one am hopeful that Obama will bring new possibilities as far as federal funding for stem cell research is concerned. Countless people all over the U.S. suffer from chronic and hereditary diseases which could be eradicated through treatment with stem cells. Further, people with organ failures may eventually be able to "grow their own". Certainly a wonderful possibility which I hope Obama will help be made into reality much sooner.

mark (2009-02-04 16:55:00)

Great Bill Obama Bravo!

Middle-class families are getting poorer and legal immigrants are... well legal immigrants with children and I applaude the expansion.

Mark Golding

Children of Iraq Association

LONDON

Obama promises lower mortgage costs (2009-01-31 09:26)

President Barack Obama on Saturday promised to lower mortgage costs as part of his economic stimulus plan.

"We'll help lower mortgage costs and extend loans to small businesses so they can create jobs. We'll ensure that CEOs are not draining funds that should be advancing our recovery," Obama said.

"Rarely in history has our country faced economic problems as devastating as this crisis. Now is the time for those of us in Washington to live up to our responsibilities."

Most economists view the resetting of subprime mortgages as the catalyst for the current economic crisis. There will be resets of similar scope for adjustable rate mortgages this year and in 2011, something often ignored by those predicting a relatively quick economic recovery.

[EMBED]

1/31/09: Your Weekly Address from White House on Vimeo.

CTV.ca Obama promises lower mortgage costs, new loans

The Associated Press - 1 hour ago

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Barack Obama on Saturday promised to lower mortgage costs, offer job-creating loans for small businesses, get credit flowing and rein in free-spending executives as he readies a new road map for spending billions from the ...

Video: Obama Sets Cool, Casual White House Tone AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama pledges mortgage help with new plan Deutsche Welle

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama authorizes $20.3 million aid package for Gaza (2009-01-31 17:46)

The White House announced Friday that it will send US $20.3 million in humanitarian aid to the Gaza Strip .

"The Obama administration today announced an emergency contribution of more than 20 million dollars to relief efforts in Gaza as part of the Emergency Refugee and Migration Assistance Fund," Obama press secretary Robert Gibbs said. United Nations agencies and the International Committee of the Red Cross working in Gaza will receive the money according to the State Department.

PRESS TV Obama authorizes $20.3 mln in aid to Gaza

Xinhua, China - Jan 30, 2009

... will make an emergency contribution of 20.3 million US dollars for humanitarian assistance in the Gaza Strip, the White House announced on Friday. ...

US sending $20 million to Gaza MarketWatch (press release)

US announces USD 20.3 mn in humanitarian aid to Palestinians Press Trust of India

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-02-02 05:45:00)

This is urgently needed for all those civilians who have suffered so much during this conflict.

Anonymous (2010-02-05 09:28:17)

China and Russia put the blame on some screwed up experiments of US for the earthquake that happened in Haiti.

Chinese and Russian Military scientists, these reports say, are concurring with Canadian researcher, and former Asia-Pacific Bureau Chief of Forbes Magazine, Benjamin Fulford, who in a very disturbing video released from his Japanese offices to the American public, details how the United States attacked China by the firing of a 90 Million Volt Shockwave from the Americans High Frequency Active Auroral Research Program (HAARP) facilities in Alaska

If we can recollect a previous news when US blamed Russia for the earthquake in Georgio. What do you guys think? Is it really possible to create an earthquake by humans?

I came across this [url=<http://universalages.com/hot-news/what-happened-in-haiti-is-it-related-to-haarp/>]article about Haiti Earthquake[/url] in some blog it seems very interesting, but conspiracy theories have always been there.

Anonymous (2010-03-13 21:12:02)

Good day all, I just registered on this great community forum and desired to say howdy! Have a fantastic day!

Anonymous (2010-04-08 12:34:40)

whats up everyone

just registered and put on my todo list

hopefully this is just what im looking for looks like i have a lot to read.

Anonymous (2010-04-10 11:06:08)

hiya

great forum lots of lovely people just what i need

hopefully this is just what im looking for looks like i have a lot to read.

3.2 February

Obama to host bipartisan Super Bowl party (2009-02-01 08:41)

President Barack Obama is hosting a bipartisan Super Bowl party at the White House on Sunday night.

Obama invited 15 legislators: 11 Democrats, four Republicans and three women.

The president said that he was rooting for the Pittsburgh Steelers mentioning the strong support he received from the team during his campaign.

The invited lawmakers are: Sens. Bob Casey, D-Pa.; Dick Durbin, D-Ill.; Amy Klobuchar, D-Minn.; and Arlen Specter, R-Pa.; and Reps. Elijah Cummings, D-Md.; Artur Davis, D-Ala.; Rosa DeLauro, D-Conn.; Charlie Dent, R-Pa.; Mike Doyle, D-Pa.; Trent Franks, R-Ariz.; Raul Grijalva, D-Ariz.; Paul Hodes, D-N.H.; Patrick Murphy, D-Pa.; Fred Upton, R-Mich.; and Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton, D-D.C.

SkySports President Obama's Super Bowl party has a political purpose

New York Daily News, NY - 9 hours ago

It's about real parties, like the Super Bowl bash he's throwing Sunday night at the White House. But Obama's not just looking for a little relief from the ...

 Video: Obama Says He's Rooting for the Steelers AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Hosted by Obama, Super Bowl party goes bipartisan The Associated Press

Obama to Host Democrats, Republicans at White House Super Bowl Party FOXNews

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama to allow "torture flights?" (2009-02-02 12:04)

The media is reporting that President Barack Obama is allowing the so-called " torture flights " in which suspects are flown to countries that practice torture.

These flights known as "renditions" caused an uproar after it was revealed that the CIA had conducted some 1,200 flights to secret prisons in Poland and Romania.

However, the Obama administration has said that it is reviewing the rendition policy to see if the practice can be accomplished without subjecting people to torture.

One administration official was quoted by the Los Angeles Times as saying: "The legal advisers working on this looked at rendition. It is controversial in some circles and kicked up a big storm in Europe. But if done within certain parameters, it is an acceptable practice."

Telegraph.co.uk Obama set to allow Bush-era 'torture flights'

Times of India, India - 58 minutes ago

According to a detailed reading of the executive orders signed by Obama on January 22, renditions have not been outlawed, with the new administration ...

Renditions still allowed under new Obama directive Dallas Morning News

Obama maintains foreign renditions Detroit Free Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

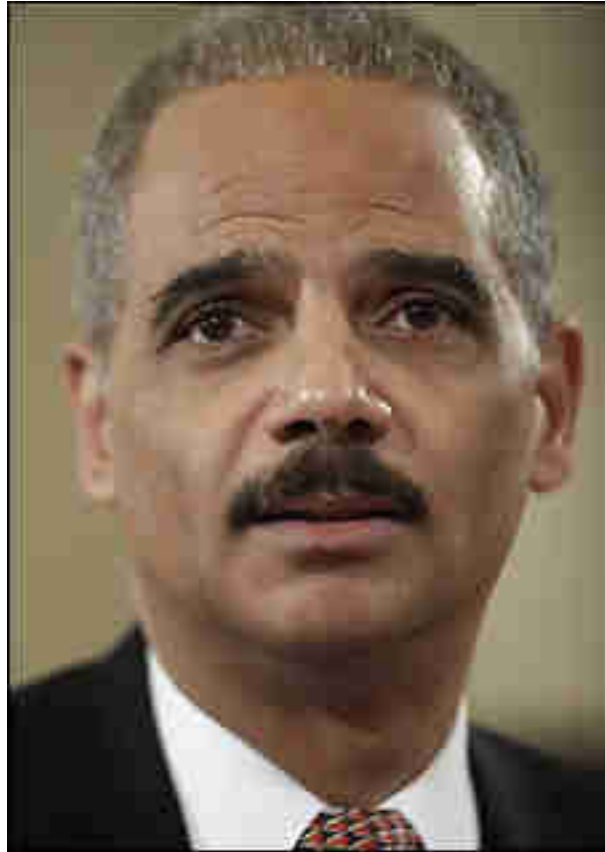

Anonymous (2009-02-02 21:15:00)

www.whatobamasays.com It may surprise you exactly how close we are to failing as a nation.

Eric H. Holder confirmed as Attorney General (2009-02-02 21:20)

President Barack Obama's pick for attorney general, Eric H. Holder Jr., was confirmed by the Senate by a 75 to 21 vote.

Holder becomes the nation's first African American attorney general. He was confirmed by more yes votes than the last four attorneys generals.

The confirmation of Eric H. Holder Jr. opens a new chapter for the embattled Justice Department.
(Evan Vucci - AP)

Times Online Holder Confirmed As the First Black Attorney General

Washington Post - 4 hours ago

By Carrie Johnson The Senate confirmed Eric H. Holder Jr. as the nation's first African American attorney general by a vote of 75 to 21 yesterday, opening a new chapter for a Justice Department that had suffered under allegations of improper political ...

Video: Senate Votes to Confirm Holder As AG AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Queens prosecutor Eric Holder becomes first African-American ... New York Daily News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama to hit airwaves for economic stimulus (2009-02-03 08:29)

The Obama administration is planning a media blitz as senators debate over changes to his economic stimulus package.

Obama will saturate U.S. television with ads urging Congress to approve the $885 billion plan.

Democrats want more funding for transportation infrastructure especially mass transit. Republicans are asking for a large range of cuts in "wasteful" spending.

The tug-of-war goes on as reports continue to flow out demonstrating the depth of the economic troubles both in the U.S. and abroad.

However, Obama's "Buy American" clause drew concern abroad including amongst the country's allies. "Beggars thy neighbour policies will never give a good result," IMF chief Dominique Strauss-Kahn said in a speech in Tokyo.

Many economic analysts note that the depths of the Great Depression are widely believed to have been caused partly by a worldwide trade war sparked by U.S. protectionist legislation.

[EMBED]

Sydney Morning Herald Obama plans media blitz on stimulus plan

USA Today - 1 hour ago

By Ron Edmonds, AP WASHINGTON (AP) - President Obama planned Tuesday to blanket US television with the message that Congress must approve hundreds of billions of dollars to fight off economic collapse.

 Video: Obama to Nominate Gregg for Cabinet

[EMBED]

AssociatedPress

Obama Picks Another Republican U.S. News & World Report

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Daschle, Killefer withdraw nominations (2009-02-03 19:18)

President Barack Obama had a tough day Tuesday after two of his nominees withdrew because of tax problems.

Sen. Tom Daschle withdrew his nomination for health and human services secretary and Nancy Killefer removed herself from consideration as deputy chief performance officer.

Timothy Geithner also had tax issues but was eventually confirmed as treasury secretary.

One might surmise that the Obama vetting team did not check tax records, or relied on statements given by the nominees.

FOXNews Obama Admits Embarrassing Day for Administration

ABC News - 3 hours ago

By LAUREN SHER President Obama acknowledged that it has been an embarrassing day for his administration, taking responsibility for three of his high-level nominees' withdrawing their names because of tax troubles.

Video: White House: Obama Confident in Vetting Process AssociatedPress
[EMBED]

Comment by Cliff Kincaid President, America's Survival, Inc

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama caps Wall St. salaries for bailout (2009-02-04 11:07)

President Barack Obama made a great move today calling for a salary cap on executive pay for companies drawing from the bailout fund.

The "common sense" cap is $500,000 for companies that accept substantial amounts of bailout money.

"We all need to take responsibility," said Obama.

"And this includes executives at major financial firms who turned to the American people, hat in hand, when they were in trouble, even as they paid themselves their customary lavish bonuses.

"We're asking these firms to take responsibility, to recognise the nature of this crisis and their role in it." Last year, Wall Street executives received $18.4bn in bonuses, and some companies like Citigroup continued to spend on extravagant executive perks despite drawing from the government corporate dole, i.e., taxpayer money.

FOXNews Obama Calls for 'Common Sense' on Executive Pay

New York Times - 1 hour ago

President Obama and Treasury Secretary Timothy F. Geithner at the White House, where they spoke about executive compensation. By EDMUND L. ANDREWS and VIKAS BAJAJ WASHINGTON - President Obama on Wednesday announced a salary cap of $500,000 for top ...

Obama unveils executive pay cap BBC News

US places limit on executive pay for bailout recipients International Herald Tribune

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Helene (2009-02-04 13:16:00)

While I believe less is more when it comes to government intervention, on this issue I wholeheartedly agree that income and perks should be limited for those who participate in the bailout until the money has been repaid.

For example: If you loan me money to assist me in paying my mortgage because I've fallen on hard times (e.g. unemployment) and I turn around take a trip to Paris and buy a new porche, you're right to be outraged and upset. Worse still, if someone else compels you to loan me the money (the government) and I turn around and take that trip and make that purchase you're likely to be even more upset because you had no direct, immediate say in the loan.

Yes, you elect the officials who sign off on these decisions, but once they make decisions like this that you don't agree with you're stuck until their terms are up.

When the government decides to loan MY tax dollars to institutions which I have no direct interest in, I demand that reasonable restrictions be attached to their acceptance of my hard earned money.

Buddha (2009-02-04 14:36:00)

I am trying to refinance my mortgage.

I have a 6 % 30 years fix now.

I have a credit score of 700, perfect income history, 5 time more equity than debt, perfect candidate.

I can't get a loan below 5 % apr.

WHY?

Because the greedy bankers don't give a shit about me or you the economy or the country.

All they care about is their profits and huge salaries, everything else expandable.

What is Obama doing for you?

NO THING!!!

Anonymous (2009-02-06 21:09:00)

1 trillion dollar word deficite. not looking for a bailout.Justlooking for bail in you know J O B. LISTEN, I HAVE WORKED ALL MY LIFE MANUAL CONSTRUCTION LABOR. NO HOUSE NO HELP NO ONE BUT ME AND MY HEALTH AND PAYCHECK. SOON TO BE SCREWED EVEN MORE KNOW I AM PAYING FOR THE STIMULUS.THANKS, KEEP UP WITH THE GOVERNMENT GREED. I KNOW ITS ALL THE WORKING PEOPLES FAULT.

Anonymous (2009-02-06 21:12:00)

BROKEBACK MEN FOR HIRE. THANK YOU STIMULUS.CONTACT US AT I LEFT MY WALLET ON BROCKASS MOUNTAIN.COM.

Anonymous (2009-02-06 21:38:00)

Dude, the stimulus plan will create construction jobs by direct government spending!

Video: Obama caps bailout execs salaries (2009-02-04 16:19)

Here's video of President Barack Obama capping bailout executive salaries.

[EMBED]

In other news, the president signed into law the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP) providing health insurance for the nation's uninsured children.

"I refuse to accept that millions of our children fail to reach their full potential because we fail to meet their basic needs. In a decent society, there are certain obligations that are not subject to tradeoffs or negotiations, and health care for our children is one of those obligations," Obama said.

"For millions of children who fall into that gap, CHIP has provided care when they're sick and preventive services to help them stay well. This legislation will allow us to continue and build on these successes."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-02-06 20:36:00)

Pretty much, we and all we have ever known is over! our country has always been run by GREED. THIS GREED IN ITS FULLEST FORM. AND TO THINK I ACTUALLY CRIED WHEN ARE NEW PRES.WAS EXCEPTED.I AM FOR THE FUTURES BEST. i am just so fed up with all this talk.look, lets just agree that our countrys economy is over thanks, white america. As an american I am ashamed of all the bigits that I continue to see and all their fake ways.

Anonymous (2009-02-06 20:43:00)

hi,bailout. bye bills! oh sorry I mean buy the stimulus. bye house,bye wife,by life.

Jobless claims rise as Senate haggles over stimulus (2009-02-05 08:56)

Jobless claims reached a 26-year high according to a new report on the labor market.

Initial weekly jobless claims increased by 35,000 to 626,000 the highest level since October 1982, the Labor Department said today. Total unemployment benefit collectors jumped to a record 4.788 million a week earlier. A media forecast by Bloomberg News had predicted jobless claims would fall to 580,000 from 588,000. The overall unemployment rate in January was 7.5 percent, the highest in 16 years.

Yesterday, President Barack Obama said the nation faced an economic "catastrophe" if an economic stimulus plan was not passed quickly. "A failure to act, and act now, will turn crisis into a catastrophe and guarantee a longer recession, a less robust recovery, and a more uncertain future," Obama said.

Reuters US Initial Unemployment Claims Jump to 26-Year High

Bloomberg - 1 hour ago

By Courtney Schlisserman and Timothy R. Homan Feb. 5 (Bloomberg) – The number of Americans filing first- time claims for jobless benefits unexpectedly jumped last week to a 26-year high, signaling a deepening deterioration in the labor market.

New Jobless Claims Surge to 626000 Washington Post

INSTANT VIEW: Jobless claims jump to 26-yr high Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Live Video: Obama at House Dems Retreat (2009-02-05 18:31)

Catch President Barack Obama speaking live at the House Democrats retreat in Williamsburg, Virgina. From CNN.com Live.

<http://www.cnn.com/video/flashLive/live.html?stream=stream4 &ieref=lb100>

[EMBED]

President Obama speaks at House Democrats' retreat

Watch Now: Live on CNN.com »

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama puts pressure on for stimulus package (2009-02-06 10:00)

Amid further news of high unemployment, President Barack Obama is turning up the steam on opposition to his economic stimulus bill.

"So then you get the argument, 'well, this is not a stimulus bill, this is a spending bill.' What do you think a stimulus is? That's the whole point," Obama said in response to Sen. John McCain's comment that the Obama plan was a "spending bill."

Obama said that tax cuts are not the solution to everything and that spending is an effective way to create jobs. Massive job loss will only deepen the economic woes as families cut back on spending.

[EMBED]

Obama: Voters "sent us here to bring change."

WELT ONLINE White House Calls to Speed the Stimulus Bill Amid Job Losses

Wall Street Journal Blogs, NY - 51 minutes ago

President Barack Obama has intensified his push for lawmakers to quickly wrap up a fiscal stimulus package. At the House Democrats' retreat in Williamsburg, ...

US Jobless Rate Probably Jumped to 16-Year High Bloomberg

As jobs numbers get worse, Obama turns up heat Boston Globe

Before the bell: Futures remain positive despite weaker-than ... BloggingStocks

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Senate passes tentative stimulus bill (2009-02-06 19:00)

U.S. senators reached agreement on a tentative economic stimulus package with a price tag of $780 billion.

Democrats relented on the bill which at one point was costing $900 bn.

A number of senate Republicans, though, including Sen. John McCain are opposed to the deal. "This is not bipartisan," said McCain. "If this legislation is passed, it'll be a very bad day for America." However, Democrats think that they have enough votes to get the bill passed.

FOXNews Senators Reach Tentative Deal on $805B Economic Stimulus Bill

FOXNews - 1 hour ago

1426

Republican Sens. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Susan Collins of Maine have signed onto the bill, giving Democrats enough votes to move it forward. Senators, led by Minority Leader Mitch McConnell and Majority Leader Harry Reid, have been wrangling ...

 Video: Democrats Say Stimulus Plan Progressing AssociatedPress
[EMBED]

 Comment by Adam S. Posen Dep. Dir., Peterson Institute for Int'l Economics

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Betsy for Obama (2009-02-06 23:50:00)

Finally some change this country needs!! Keep on Barackin in the Free World Mr. President! I had to buy 3 of these shirts, one for me, my daughter and my husband :)

http://cgi.ebay.com/Barack-Obama-t-shirt-Keep-on-Barackin-in-the-Free-World_W0QQitemZ220356827122QQcmdZViewItemQQptZ-LH_DefaultDomain_0?hash=item220356827122 & _trksid=p3286.c0.m14 & _trkparms=72 %3A1205 %7C66 %3A2 %7C65 %3A12 %7C39 %3A1 %7C240 %3A1318 %7C301 %3A1 %7C293 %3A1 %7C294 %3A50

Obama stimulus package back up to $820 bn (2009-02-07 09:37)

Senators negotiating the Obama economic stimulus plan have raised the price from $780 billion last night to $820 billion this morning.

Hundreds of amendments to the deal were voted on during last night's marathon session.

The plan is still strongly opposed by Republicans but three GOP senators have crossed over giving Obama just enough votes to get the legislation passed.

Tax cuts will now total about $250 billion down from the original proposed $275 billion. Senate Democrats agreed to cut $100 billion in spending from their original plan.

Leading spending programs include infrastructure projects ($116 billion), education funding ($88 billion) and green energy development ($40 billion).

USA Today Senate forges deal on $820 billion stimulus

Christian Science Monitor - 1 hour ago

Key elements of the plan: a tax cut of up to $1000 for working couples and a tax credit of $15000 for home purchases. Senate negotiators struck a $820 billion deal on Friday that eases the path for a massive economic recovery program.

 Video: Obama Talks Up Stimulus in Weekly Address AssociatedPress
[EMBED]

 Comment by Adam S. Posen Dep. Dir., Peterson Institute for Int'l Economics

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-02-08 13:09:00)

Survival foreign

I saw stars of David on shirts listed

In a concentration camp

I saw women being raped by heroes cowards

No reason

I saw the dictator soiling their pants in fear of hell that did

I saw boys become paraplegic, after feeding the mouth of the dragon

And a white man with the brain in the hood of a car

Hit by a shot that nobody knows where it came from

I saw the towers fall in the middle of the center

And everyone entering despair

I saw the tyrant hanged be impregnated with eyes of pride

And the terrorist hiding in the courtyard of the foreign

After not seen anything, everything was dark

But now, little by little I am recovering the vision

I see soldiers coming home

And a black man waving in the crowd

He brings in the face a smooth look

And carries a book in the hands

Sandro Kretus

Obama "Hope" poster creator arrested in Boston (2009-02-07 18:19)

Shepard Fairey, the person who created the famed Barack Obama poster was arrested in Boston today on graffiti charges.

Fairey made headlines this week when The Associated Press claimed the Obama "Hope" poster infringed on a copyrighted AP photograph. Fairey has acknowledged that his image was based on an April 2006 Associated Press photograph of Obama. Fairey has been arrested many times for drawing on buildings and other private property without permission.

x

Times Online Shepard Fairey, success

Boston Globe - 41 minutes ago

In some ways, it is not surprising. When people find success, other people get angry. They label those who are riding high "fakers" and "poseurs" and "pretenders" and other dismissive things.

Creator of iconic Obama portrait arrested Reuters

Artist of famed Obama poster arrested in Boston The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama hitting the road for stimulus bill (2009-02-09 09:20)

President Barack Obama is on the road pitching his economic stimulus package trying push a compromise with senate Republicans.

While the bill is likely to pass anyway tomorrow, Obama wants as many Republican votes as possible to present a semblance of bipartisan agreement. The House version of the bill passed with no Republican votes.

Obama and his media staff is trying to drum up public support for his plan putting pressure on the GOP to work with the administration.

In another sign of hard economic times, Nissan, Japan's third largest auto maker, said it was cutting 20,000 jobs worldwide.

Obama Team Counts on Public Polling to Push Economic Plan Through ...

FOXNews - 44 minutes ago

White House senior adviser David Axelrod tells FOX News the public is with the president as he tries to convince Congress to pass an economic package that is the largest single spending program since the New Deal.

Video: Obama Hits The Road CBS

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama gives first prime-time press conference tonight (2009-02-09 17:23)

At 8 pm ET tonight, President Barack Obama will hold his first prime-time press conference since taking office last month.

The press conference is part of a media effort, resembling tactics used during an election campaign, to attract public support for his economic stimulus package. The House bill received no Republican votes and just a few Senate Republicans are supporting the Senate version.

Obama spoke at a town hall-style meeting in a region of Indiana hit hard by the economic downturn.

On Tuesday, Obama will visit Fort Myers, Fla., an area suffering from the mortgage meltdown.

WELT ONLINE Obama Takes Economic Case to the Nation, in Prime-Time Press ...

FOXNews - 1 hour ago

President Obama will hold a press conference on the economic recovery plan at 8 pm ET Monday. President Obama, who spent the day stumping in an Indiana town ...

Video: Obama Calls for Swift Action on Economy AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

White House Cheat Sheet: Sending an (Economic) Message Washington Post

Obama Stumps for Stimulus in a City Hit Hard by Downturn New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2009-02-09 19:45)

FOXNews

Obama: Americans in 'winter of our hardship'

Los Angeles Times - 48 minutes ago

President Obama addresses the nation on the ongoing economic crisis, today at the White House. From the Associated Press WASHINGTON – President Barack Obama said today the crisis gripping the United States is the "winter of our hardship" as he pounded ...

Obama pitches economic plan to American people Reuters

Obama: This isn't your 'run-of-the-mill recession' CNN International

Obama: Not a "run-of-the-mill recession" (2009-02-10 09:38)

President Barack Obama last night described the economic malaise as "not your ordinary, run-of-the-mill recession." They might be a bit of an understatement. The economists that accurately predicted the recession sometimes with remarkable detail and timing see a very rocky road ahead. Analysts like Nouriel Roubini, Max Keiser, Nassim Taleb, Peter Schiff and others all see the same signs of gloom.

Debt and leveraging is still the main underlying problem. Because of the credit crunch this is easing up among consumers and businesses, but government is making up for this somewhat by borrowing trillions of dollars. It's difficult to predict how large the federal deficit will be before the year is out.

The job market is the worse its been since the Great Depression. Not only half a million job cuts a month but record numbers of companies initiating a hiring freeze to cut costs.

The housing meltdown is still a major problem. People continue to lose their homes depressing prices. Roubini thinks prices must fall by about 40 percent before bottoming out.

Despite an injection of $350 billion into the credit markets over the winter, the credit market is still frozen. No one really knows for sure how much it will take to deleverage. Nouriel Roubini thinks it will take $3.5 trillion over what has been appropriated thus far.

Companies are cutting back as much as 20 percent in new spending.

Washington Post Obama: Not a 'Run of the Mill' Recession

ABC News - 19 hours ago

... which he called "not your ordinary, run-of-the-mill recession." President Barack Obama answers a question during his first prime time televised news ...

 Video: Obama brutally changes his tone france24english

[EMBED] Obama: 'Only Government' Can Break Cycle of Job Loss, Economic ... FOXNews

Obama Says Economic Crisis Comes First Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Senate approves stimulus bill (2009-02-10 15:03)

The Senate today approved a $838 billion economic stimulus bill with three Republicans aboard for a 61-37 vote. Now the House and Senate negotiators will try to work out a compromise package.

ABC News Senate Approves Stimulus Plan

New York Times - 4 hours ago

Senator Susan Collins of Maine, one of three Republican senators who voted for the economic stimulus bill, after its passage in the senate on Tuesday in Washington.

 Video: Raw Video: Senate Approves Stimulus Bill AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

 Comment by Allan J. Lichtman Professor of History, American University

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

1461Days (2009-02-10 16:23:00)

The Senate Approved the Stimulus and the Treasury announced a $1.5 Trillion approach to the banking and financial industry problems. Join us at 1461 Days and share your thoughts and views on today's events.

ObamaMania YesWeCan (2009-02-10 21:53:00)

obamamania videos has better president obama videos hooray

1,461 Days (2009-02-11 05:17:00)

now House and Senate reps have to work out the compromise quickly as President Obama still expects this bill on his desk by Monday. I am more concerned by the Treasury moves announced yesterday.

Obama calls for quick action to deal with economic "perfect storm" (2009-02-11 09:18)

President Barack Obama urged lawmakers to quickly approve a compromise bill in both the House and Senate to avoid further escalation of the economic crisis .

Obama described the economy's situation as the "perfect storm of financial problems."

Yesterday, Wall Street seemed to disapprove of Tim Geithner's plans for spending the remaining $350 billion of financial bailout money. The Dow was down by more than 300 points, but actually it's impossible to say for sure what caused the decline given the amount of bad news that keeps pouring out.

Washington Post Obama warns of 'perfect storm of financial problems'

USA Today - 2 hours ago

Negotiators from the Obama administration and Congress resume negotiations today to resolve the differences between the economic stimulus plans approved by the House and Senate.

 Video: US Senate passes rescue plan RussiaToday

[EMBED] US Congress negotiators to meet on stimulus deal Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-02-13 07:02:00)

I understand what financial issues affecting U.S.

I would like to draw your attention to one of Bush mistakes, that was breaking financial relations with many countries and specially my home country; Sudan.

40 million will wish to use your banking systems and technology - consequently Sudanese money will be routed via U.S.

You can disregard my point, but then remember it is an equivalent equation to both of us and if you did not look at, I will say
Congratulation China YOU WON AND WE WILL BE AT YOUR REQUEST.

rgds

Congress, White House agree on stimulus deal (2009-02-11 14:56)

Congress and the White House agreed on an $790 billion economic stimulus bill this evening. About one-third of the package comes in the form of tax cuts.

Republicans are mostly opposed to the legislation.

Here is President Obama 's reaction to the comprosie deal:

"I want to thank the Democrats and Republicans in Congress who came together around a hard-fought compromise that will save or create more than 3.5 million jobs and get our economy back on track.

"Just today, the CEO of Caterpillar said that if this American Recovery and Reinvestment Plan is passed, his company would be able to rehire some of the employees they've been forced to lay off. It's also a plan that will provide immediate tax relief to families and businesses, while investing in priorities like health care, education, energy, and infrastructure that will grow our economy once more.

"I'm grateful to the House Democrats for starting this process, and for members in the House and Senate for moving it along with the urgency that this moment demands."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama celebrates Lincoln's bicentennial (2009-02-12 09:35)

President Barack Obama celebrated Abraham Lincoln's 200th birthday appearing at the reopening last night of the Ford's Theater, the location where Lincoln was assassinated. The president also spoke before the Abraham Lincoln Association at the Crowne Plaza Hotel in Springfield.

Obama has often used Lincoln as a model for his own presidency.

[EMBED]

A new exhibit at Washington's National Portrait Gallery celebrates Abraham Lincoln's 200th birthday. As Thalia Assuras reports, the exhibit shows an unexpected side of Lincoln.

USA Today Obama draws from Abraham Lincoln

Dailyrecord.com, NJ - 7 hours ago

"He sees Lincoln as a model," said Fred Kaplan, author of "Lincoln: The Biography Of A Writer." "Obama echoes Lincoln." Also, as the nation's first black ...

Video: First of Four New Pennies Unveiled AssociatedPress

[EMBED]

2009 Lincoln Prize Winner Reflects on Lincoln and Obama OUPblog

Academics debate Obama, Lincoln similarities Utica Observer Dispatch

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama calls housing crisis urgent (2009-02-13 10:46)

President Barack Obama on Friday said it was crucial to deal with the housing sector crisis . He is expected to soon reveal a plan to tackle the continuing problem of mortgage foreclosures.

"We are going to have to once again live within our means," Obama told the Business Council.

"We need to confront the crisis in the housing sector that has been one of the sources of our economic challenges," he said. Congress are preparing to pass a $789 billion stimulus bill to help restart the U.S. economy, which has been hit by low consumer and business spending. The plan is expected to create or save up to 4 million jobs.

FOXNews Winners and losers in the final stimulus bill

CNN - 38 minutes ago

High-speed and inner-city rail: Went from $300 million in House bill to $2.25 billion in Senate to $8 billion in final version. There also is a $6.9 billion provision for public transit.

Video: Stimulus deal reached by Congress

[EMBED]

Obama: Crucial to confront US housing crisis Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Will Republicans cooperate with Barack Obama? (2009-02-13 16:57)

The House of Representatives passed the economic stimulus bill today but no Republicans crossed over to support President Barack Obama's plan.

Indeed, seven Democrats voted against the party's leader's package to create new jobs and stimulate the economy.

Also today, Obama's new pick as commerce secretary, Judd Gregg, withdrew his nomination.

The Senate is voting on the bill now, but Obama is expected only to garner a few Republican votes.

Bipartisan cooperation may be more difficult than the president expected.

One always has to look at the political situation when analyzing what is going on in Washington. Obama might have a hard time finding Republican friends prior to the 2010 congressional elections. The idea goes is that they will try to draw clear lines between Republicans and the president. Of course, if things do not go well in 2010 for the GOP, then they might be more willing to cooperate with the administration.

US Senate Begins Voting on Obama's $787 Billion Stimulus Plan

Bloomberg - 1 hour ago

By Brian Faler Feb. 13 (Bloomberg) – The Senate began voting on President Barack Obama's $787 billion economic stimulus plan hours after the House, with no Republican votes, passed the package designed to help revive the US economy.

House passes $787B stimulus CNNMoney.com

Stimulus Aims to Pump Life Into US Economy Voice of America

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama scores first victory of presidency (2009-02-14 12:46)

President Barack Obama signed his first major legislation today – 24 days after his inauguration – after Congress approved his economic stimulus plan.

The final bill fell a tad short under the amount Obama requested, but fundamentally the president got what he wanted.

A new website – recovery.gov – will allow the public to peruse disclosure on where the stimulus money is spent, and to offer comments and suggestions.

guardian.co.uk Obama Scores Early Victory of Historic Proportions

Washington Post - 1 hour ago

By Michael D. Shear and Alec MacGillis CHICAGO, Feb. 13 – Twenty-four days into his presidency, Barack Obama recorded last night a legislative achievement of the sort that few of his predecessors achieved at any point in their tenure.

Video: Obama: Stimulus Passage Is a 'Major Milestone AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Congress Approves Protectionist Measure That Could Spark Trade War FOXNews

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-01-23 06:53:39)

Hello everyone! Who knows where to upload the film Avatar?

I even bought the film Avatar for a SMS to <http://rsskino.ru/kinofilm/avatar.html> , the link was, but download fails, the system will boot quite strange cocoa something.

Men, advise where to normal as quickly download film avatar?

Obama team says stimulus is bipartisan (2009-02-15 20:00)

White House spokespersons Bob Gibbs and David Axelrod said that the economic stimulus bill is inspired by thinking from both parties even if it gained only supported by three Republicans, all from the Senate.

Republicans, led by Sen. John McCain, continued to fume over the package and denied that Obama made sincere efforts to negotiate with them.

Obama is expected to sign the bill into law on Tuesday in Denver.

Speaking on the auto bailout, Axelrod said there would need to be "significant restructuring" if automakers are going to continue to receive public funds.

"And that's going to involve concessions on the part of everyone, not just the autoworkers, but shareholders, creditors and, of course, the executives who run the company," Axelrod said. "And that's what we're going to have to see."

Times Online Obama Aides Claim Bipartisan Success

Washington Post - 10 hours ago

By Michael D. Shear CHICAGO, Feb. 15 – Senior advisers to President Obama on Sunday defended passage of the stimulus bill in Congress as a bipartisan effort despite the fact that it received only three Republican votes in the Senate and none in the ...

 Video: Republicans Still Criticizing Stimulus Bill AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama targets housing after stimulus victory AFP

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Auto task force rather than czar (2009-02-16 16:00)

The White House said Monday that an auto czar is out with a Presidential Task Force on Autos taking its place. General Motors Corp. and Chrysler will be heading back to Washington with new plans on how they will restructure their companies.

"Well, the approach that the administration has settled on I think provides a vast amount of expertise that crosses a number of governmental agencies and departments, and brings in the vast amount of experience that the administration has to deal with the auto restructuring – any auto restructuring issues," press secretary Bob Gibbs told reporters aboard Air Force One. "So I think that the model that's been set up with Secretary Geithner and Dr. Summers is one that will help coordinate throughout the federal government the responses that include energy, transportation, as well as the economic team."

Treasury secretary Tim Geithner will oversee the $17.4 billion in loans for GM and Chrysler.

President Barack Obama has held firm on his insistence that those auto makers receiving bailout money must have plans to restructure their factories to produce clean, fuel-efficient cars for the future.

ABC News White House confirms auto task force

DetNews.com - 1 hour ago

WASHINGTON – The White House confirmed Monday it is naming a Presidential Task Force on Autos, rather than an auto czar to oversee the restructuring of General Motors Corp.

 Video: Obama Cuts Plans for 'Car Czar'

AssociatedPress

GM And Chrysler Head Back To DC With New Plans NPR

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama stimulus benefits for average American (2009-02-17 08:00)

President Barack Obama will sign the economic stimulus bill into law today.
Here are some of the benefits going directly to ordinary people:

About $116 billion for those who make less than $75,000 a year who have taxes withheld. Individuals will get $400; couples, $800.

About $15 less deduction from paychecks starting in July this year, and $7.50 a week next year.

2009 earnings from $200,000 to $500,000 will get about a $4,800 income tax break in 2010. For incomes of $75,000 to $100,000, the 2010 tax savings will be $500. This benefit seems a bit more geared toward lower-tiered wealthy individuals.

Income of $10,000 from $19,000 will be the new requirement for the full $1,000 a child income tax credit.

A $2,500 income tax credit for tuition and related expenses for 2009 and 2010.

The Earned Income Tax Credit provides a $5,000 benefit to low-income families and will be worth $5,600 for 2010 taxes.

Washington Post The Early Word: The Bill Becomes Law

New York Times - 36 minutes ago

By Michael Falcone After a hard-fought battle on Capitol Hill last week, President Barack Obama plans to sign the stimulus bill today.

 Video: What the Stimulus Bill May Do for You AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Obama Promoting Agenda In Key Battleground States U.S. News & World Report

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-02-17 20:45:00)

Sung to the tune of Janice Joplin's: O Lord won't you buy me a Mercedes Benz)

OBama, won't you pay off my mortgage for me?

My payments have risen; they want to take my home.

I lied about my income, but they still made me the loan.

So OBama won't you pay off my mortgage for me?

OBama, won't you buy me a HD TV ?

The airwaves are digital, now static's all I see.

I can't miss the next thing you offer us for free,

So Obama, won't you buy me a HD TV ?

OBama, won't you buy me a hybrid SUV?

My car is a junker. Its rusting out on me.

We all know autos must be green and gasoline free,

OBama, won't you buy me a hybrid SUV?

Everybody!

OBama, won't you pay off my mortgage for me?

My payments have risen; they want to take my home.
I lied about my income, but they still made me the loan.
So OBama won't you pay off my mortgage for me?

Jon (2009-02-17 21:01:00)

I'm sure Obama is legitimately doing what is required of him based on the current situation. If that's the case, one has to wonder whether he'll be forced to do the exact same thing two years from now and send more troops to Iraq following a withdrawal. For more check out <http://www.TalkObama.info>

Obama Mama (2009-02-17 22:52:00)

Obama All The Way
<http://obama2009.com>

joy28 (2009-02-18 19:49:00)

Though others may consider the stimulus bill not to be a good plan, what matters is how the president handles the situation. The economic recovery may take for a while but at least he had his plans already laid down.

Obama reveals new $75 billion mortgage plan (2009-02-18 13:21)

President Barack Obama unveiled today his plan to stem housing foreclosures, a problem that helped spark the current economic crisis.

In Mesa, Arizona, Obama said the government would commit $75 billion to a package that would help homeowners refinance their home and provide extra credit backing to the government's Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac mortgage companies.

"This plan will not save every home, but it will give millions of families resigned to financial ruin a chance to rebuild," Obama said. "It will prevent the worst consequences of this crisis from wreaking even greater havoc on the economy. And by bringing down the foreclosure rate, it will help to shore up housing prices for everyone."

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama unveiled his $75 billion mortgage relief plan, a series of measures the president says will keep 9 million people from losing their homes. (Feb. 18)

Boston Globe Obama Unveils $75 Billion Plan to Fight Home Foreclosures

New York Times - 30 minutes ago

Speaking in Mesa, Ariz., President Obama said that the housing bailout would "prevent the worst consequences of this crisis from wreaking even greater havoc on the economy.

Republicans, analysts question Obama's foreclosure plan CNN International

Government Doubles Available Aid to Fannie and Freddie Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jon (2009-02-18 23:44:00)

I'm sure Obama is legitimately doing what is required of him based on the current situation. If that's the case, one has to wonder whether he'll be forced to do the exact same thing two years from now and send more troops to Iraq following a withdrawal. For more check out <http://www.TalkObama.info> humancafe (2009-02-21 10:52:00)

This should be announced as a long term solution to our nation's banking problem.

To solve the present banking panic, especially by those who call for bank nationalization (what reduced bank shares to penny stocks), and to stem the sudden loss of trust in our financial institutions; would it not be best to utilize a tool the government has, what is called the US Treasury's Exchange Stabilization Fund, to commence a program of bank stock stabilization by buying shares into the public coffers (with intention of selling them at a future date), and thus bring back stability to the damaged market place? What is most at risk today is trust in our banking system, a trust without which it cannot exist. This fix will cost less than current proposals, and give banking the room to right itself from this mortgage debacle.

Obama to make first foreign trip to Canada (2009-02-18 18:39)

President Barack Obama will make his first foreign trip to Canada as his foreign policy team fans out in all directions. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton visited Japan as her first foreign stop having a formal meeting with the Empress and a meeting with Japan's Foreign Minister. Clinton encouraged Japan to spend more on economic stimulus. Japan's economy contracted sharply in the latest government reports.

Traditionally new American presidents make their first foreign trip to Canada although George W. Bush choose to visit Mexico first instead. Obama will make a short visit to Ottawa on Thursday.

Clinton landed in Indonesia today and will also visit South Korea and China. Her choice of Asia as her first foreign jaunt is also telling as the traditional practice for the secretary of state is to visit Europe first.

BBC News The Obama team hits the road in fresh directions

Seattle Times, United States - Feb 17, 2009

PRESIDENT Obama's first official foreign travel is to Canada, a longtime friend, ally and primary trading partner. The choice is not going unnoticed. ...

Video: Clinton Touts Stimulus Abroad

CBS

[EMBED] White House to Host Japanese PM Aso Next Week FOXNews

President Obama to Host Japanese Premier Aso ABC News

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Corina Liliana Blidea (2009-02-19 10:02:00)

good luck and do all the best, kisses for all family

Journalist, Corina Liliana Blidea

(2009-02-19 08:49)

President Barack Obama was greeted by Canada's Governor General Michaëlle Jean upon arriving in Ottawa for his first foreign visit.

Obama will meet separately with Prime Minister Stephen Harper and opposition leader Michael Ignatieff. Among the items on the agenda are trade, the environment and the war in Afghanistan.

Canada is hoping Obama will remain committed to NAFTA and the WTO. Also, they are worried that about environmental opposition to the type of "dirty" oil exported from Canada that produces a larger carbon footprint.

Obama will also discuss Canada's plan to pull out its troops from Afghanistan by 2011.

X

Thu Feb 19, 11:03 AM ET

President Barack Obama is escorted by Canada's Governor General Michaëlle Jean upon his arrival in Ottawa, Canada, Thursday, Feb. 19, 2009.

(AP Photo/Charles Dharapak) Obama Arrives in Canada for First International Trip

Washington Post - 44 minutes ago

By Michael D. Shear OTTAWA, Feb. 19 – President Obama touched down Thursday morning in this snowy Canadian capital – his first foray outside the United States as president – and headed for discussion of trade and the environment with Prime Minister ...

Afghanistan, trade on table as Obama visits Canada CNN International

Comment by Pat Gallagher Director of Environmental Law, Sierra Club

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama raises Nafta issue in Canada (2009-02-19 16:08)

President Barack Obama raised the touchy issue of the North American Free Trade Agreement (Nafta) during his visit to Canada today.

"My hope is as our advisers and staffs and economic teams work this through that there's a way of doing this that is not disruptive to the extraordinarily important trade relationship that exists between the two countries," he said.

Canada has been worried about Obama stance on free trade and also the call for a "Buy American" provision on the economic stimulus package. The US president watered down the buy American clause in the final bill, and has stated that he is careful to avoid a possible trade war.

X

Seattle Post Intelligencer Obama raises Nafta renegotiation during first official visit to Canada guardian.co.uk - 1 hour ago

Barack Obama and Stephen Harper take questions from the media during a news conference in Ottawa. Photograph: Larry Downing/Reuters Potential strains in relations between the US and Canada were exposed today when Barack Obama, on his first foreign trip ...

Barack the Tourist Christian Science Monitor

 Comment by Pat Gallagher Director of Environmental Law, Sierra Club

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama pledges to cut deficit in half by 2013 (2009-02-21 14:29)

Despite the large sums needed for bailouts, President Barack Obama still plans to slash the budget deficit in half by 2013.

Obama plans to cut military spending by withdrawing troops from Iraq, and to raise money by increasing taxes on the wealthy.

During the campaign, Obama promised to roll back the tax cuts made by George W. Bush.

On Monday, Obama will convene a fiscal summit with experts to formulate a strategy to address the trillion dollar deficit.

However, the president will not cut back in all areas and still intends to make changes that he pledged during the campaign.

"The president believes there are essentially three areas that have to move forward even as we pare back elsewhere — health care, energy and education," said senior Obama adviser David Axelrod. "These are the bulwark of a strong economy moving forward."

[EMBED]

During his weekly address, President Obama outlined what the stimulus package and his home foreclosure plan can do to help turn around the nation's economy. President Obama plans to address a joint session of Congress Tuesday night.

AFP Obama Pledges to Seek Deficit Cuts

New York Times, United States - 10 hours ago

By SHERYL GAY STOLBERG WASHINGTON — President Obama pledged on Saturday to look for ways to "cut the trillion-dollar deficit we inherited," and said he was ...

Obama to Unveil an Ambitious Budget Plan Washington Post

Obama wants to cut US deficit in half by 2013 Reuters

Obama urges control of 'exploding' deficits AFP

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New focus on health care (2009-02-22 07:38)

After struggling in the early days of his campaign with an economic crisis he did not anticipate during the early part of his campaign, President Barack Obama will focus on health care this week.

A report by the Center for American Progress Action estimates that 4 million Americans have lost their health insurance since the start of the recession. A further estimated 14,000 lose their insurance every day.

Obama's health care plan seeks to control prescription drug prices, switch to electronic medical record-keeping and improve medical treatment and efficiency. The administration is currently looking for a health secretary after Tom Daschle withdrew his nomination due to tax problems.

Report: 4 million Americans lost health insurance since recession ...

Bizjournals.com - 2 hours ago

An estimated 4 million Americans have lost their health insurance since the recession began, and as many as 14000 people could be losing their health coverage every day, according to a report by liberal think tank Center for American Progress' Action ...

Stimulus bails out states, puts off health care reform Atlanta Journal Constitution

Obama has big challenge in overhauling health care The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

AraMellow (2009-02-23 01:16:00)

Dear Mr. Obama;

I would like to invite your family to watch my iTV show, where I discuss the selection of a dog for the first family.

Best regards

Aramellow (The Lomen Beagle)

Clinton ends jaunt in China (2009-02-22 16:27)

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton was interviewed on Chinese TV and called on China to continue financing U.S. debt to prevent further sliding of the world economy.

China has the world's largest foreign reserve account at around US $1.7 trillion.

Clinton attended a service at the Haidian Christian Church in Beijing on Sunday, and met with a group of a group of 22 women's-rights advocates. China is the last stop on Clinton's Asia tour, her first foreign jaunt as secretary of state.

guardian.co.uk Clinton urges China to sustain US economic support

Los Angeles Times, CA - 3 hours ago

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton chats with a Chinese church official as she leaves the Haidian Christian Church in Beijing. We're all in this together, ...

Video: Clinton Interviewed on Chinese TV AssociatedPress

[EMBED] Reports: On first state visit, Clinton highlights US-China ... MarketWatch

Clinton Urges China to Keep Buying US Debt Voice of America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

PG-GEETHAI (2009-02-23 09:09:00)

nice blog man,support a.r rahman?

<http://www.pgtricks.blogspot.com>

Comment: Should Obama mind the stock market (2009-02-23 14:47)

The Dow Jones sunk to its lowest point since 1997 shedding 250 points today. So should President Barack Obama react in some way to the recent market slides?

In my view, no, for the following reasons:

1. A lot of the daily fluctuation in the markets comes from day and swing traders. You cannot base your policy on the whims of these folk whose actions do not necessarily reflect any economic reality.
2. Obama needs to let the market bottom out. Trying to prop up the market is an impossible black hole operation. Only one word needs to be said to explain why the market has not reached bottomed out yet – derivatives. The White House should let the markets work out things naturally without trying to play to the market.

[EMBED]

President Obama told the nation's governors who were attending his first formal White House dinner, that all governors, despite party affiliation, need to work with Washington to help repair the economy.

FOXNews Stress test could lead to some bank nationalization

MarketWatch - 51 minutes ago

By Ronald D. Orol, MarketWatch WASHINGTON (MarketWatch) – As part of the latest efforts by regulators to stem the financial crisis, US regulators are preparing another round of capital injections to financial institutions that fail to pass a new ...

Banks Rally, But Stocks Still Down Forbes

Regulators Stand Firmly Behind Banking System CNNMoney.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama likely to select Gov. Locke as commerce secretary (2009-02-23 17:45)

President Barack Obama is likely to pick former Washington Gov. Gary Locke to be his commerce secretary, CNN reported Monday.

Locke, 57, became the first Chinese-American to be elected as governor of a state in 1996, and he was re-elected in 2000.

Obama's first two choices for commerce secretary both withdrew their nominations. New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson was the first choice before he resigned due to a corruption investigation. The president then selected New Hampshire Sen. Judd Gregg, a Republican, who also eventually withdrew citing policy differences with Obama and pressure from within his party.

X

BBC News Obama likely to tap Locke for commerce, sources say

CNN - 1 hour ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) – President Barack Obama's pick for commerce secretary is likely to be former Washington Gov. Gary Locke, two administration sources told CNN Monday.

Officials: Obama Likely to Tap Former Washington Gov. Locke for ... FOXNews

'Likely' US Commerce chief named BBC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

the Last Inspector (2009-02-24 10:37:00)

There are some important national security and anti-corporate corruption reasons Locke should be looked at carefully before being given this critical post:

<http://eastmans.web.aplus.net/pblog/index.php>

His families' close China heritage and his supporting the management of the corporation currently most akin to Enron while he was Governor of Washington state is problematic--most notably for our national security.

China is an extremely fickle trading partner to the U.S. who plans militarily against us behind the scenes and has spies in place in this country.

We need a Commerce secretary who is not blinded by his perhaps overly benign and personally skewed view of the true intentions and plans of the Chinese government.

Obama set to address Congress tonight (2009-02-24 09:16)

President Barack Obama will give first address to Congress tonight.

The president is expected to give a "sober assessment" focusing on the economy and other key issues like health care.

Tonight's speech is not considered a "state of the union" address as Obama has not been in office long enough yet to give such an official assessment.

Many analysts believe Obama must get the people to feel that he is doing the right thing and to support him despite the gloom in the economy.

A bad economy does not necessarily harm the chief executive. Franklin D. Roosevelt, for example, was reelected twice during the Great Depression and served a total of four terms.

Even in those days when media was less sophisticated and people were less educated, they still were able to discern that Roosevelt was not to blame for the structural problems that caused the financial and economic collapse. Even though the markets bottomed out during his first term, the people still believed in his efforts to mend the economy and catch those falling through the wide gaps in the job market.

ABC News President's Address to Congress Billed as 'Sober Assessment'

ABC News - 1 hour ago

By JAKE TAPPER and MARK MOONEY President Obama will give the nation a "sober assessment" about the status of the country's economy tonight as he assures Americans that there are "better days ahead," according to White House spokesman Robert Gibbs.

Video: Economy to Dominate Obama Speech

[EMBED]

Borger: Q & A session showed Obama engaging opponents CNN International

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Erin (2009-02-24 13:52:00)

Tomorrow, 2/25 at 12:30, Brookings and Politico are kicking off a series of live web chats. We'll have Brookings expert Bill Galston and Politico Senior Editor Fred Barbash on hand to answer questions about President Obama's first address to a joint session of congress. The stakes are high leading up to this speech, and tomorrow's chat will assess what President Obama has to say.

We thought you might be interested in participating in the chat. If so, please feel free to send in some questions in advance.

Or, you can register for the chat here:

http://www.brookings.edu/events/2009/0225_obama_speech_chat.aspx

We'd love to see you there!

Barack Obama's first address to Congress (2009-02-24 20:42)

President Barack Obama gave his first speech before Congress tonight, which was followed by a Republican rebuttal from Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal.

Obama set a high bar for his presidency recommitting himself to his campaign promises despite the deep recession and the sky-rocketing deficit.

Pledging to forge ahead on issues like clean energy and health care, Obama also said that he was still intent on deeply slashing the deficit before the end of his first term.

The president also spoke on security issues reiterating his campaign promise to end the Iraq War while at the same time focusing on al-Qaeda and the Taliban in Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Bobby Jindal, who has been put forth as a possible Republican presidential candidate in 2012, had a fairly sharp response this early in the game, criticizing the Democrats for excessive spending and encouraging dependence on government.

Some of the media polling suggests that Obama's speech was generally well received. Obama sought to inspire hope and optimism in the face of a serious economic crisis.

FOXNews Obama Assures Nation: 'We Will Rebuild'

New York Times - 42 minutes ago

By JEFF ZELENY WASHINGTON - President Obama urged the nation on Tuesday to see the economic crisis as reason to raise its ambitions, calling for expensive new efforts to address energy, health care and education programs even as he warned that more ...

Obama still has an ambitious agenda Los Angeles Times

Obama Says Country Will Rebuild, Recover in Wake of Recession FOXNews

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Produk Jogja (2009-02-25 05:57:00)

wow

President Obama

Lucky02 (2009-02-25 19:02:00)

This website has some interesting thoughts about this... check it out

<http://economyopinions.blogspot.com/>

Anonymous (2009-02-26 09:59:00)

Hi Obama,

In the name of re-building the Nation, Please do consider the humans who are in the Non-Immigrant Status and Green Card suffering from restrictions.

Alternate Idea would be keep the Non-Immigrant People and Green Card but restrict them sending the $ $ $ $ $ to the other countries and allow them to spend in the USA.

H1-B person and H1-B "Master's Degree Holder in USA" are being treated the same except the 20000 separate quota.

"Pain in getting the degress gone in vein". Please think becuse of this many master's degree students are not getting chance to implement there development in USA. They all are being shifted to other countries.

People who are specialized in the field are treated in the same way who are not specialized in the particular field. Please have the new quota (let say "Z1-B") with less restrictions in rules rather than "H1-B MASTERS" which treats them same as the "Non Specialized Normal H1-B" which will bring the US Economy back from Turmoil.

Michelle Obama: Portuguese water dog for girls (2009-02-25 18:48)

First Lady Michelle Obama said that the family is looking for a Portuguese water dog as a pet for her daughters Sasha and Malia, People Magazine reported.

Sen. Edward Kennedy may have influenced the Obama's decision as he owns two water dogs.

In January, Kennedy said that he was "proud to endorse the Portuguese water dog as the next First Dog of the United States".

"They have a can-do and hopeful spirit. They are smart. They are resilient. They are determined. They are optimistic. And they are tireless," he said.

"Sounds like a perfect fit for the Obama Family and the Obama administration."

The Portuguese water dog is said to be hypoallergenic and thus is suitable for Malia, 10, who suffers from asthma.

This Nov. 27, 2006 file photo shows Portuguese water dog "Splash," U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy's dog, as he approaches Nicholas Davis, 9, of Boston, right, while Kennedy reads to children at the Knight Children's Center in Boston. Kennedy's wife Victoria Reggie Kennedy, background, looks on. First lady Michelle Obama has told People magazine the family is considering getting a Portugese water dog, possibly in April. (AP Photo/Chitose Suzuki, File)

guardian.co.uk Obama girls 'to have a water dog'

BBC News - 2 hours ago

US First Lady Michelle Obama wants to find a rescued Portuguese water dog as a pet for her daughters, People magazine has reported.

Michelle Obama says White House "feels so good" Reuters

Michelle Obama opts for $395 Tracy Reese dress on People magazine ... New York Daily News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-02-26 09:36:00)

This amount can be helping one month Medical Insurance.

Obama unveils $3.6 trillion budget, $1.75 trillion deficit (2009-02-26 09:34)

Republicans will certainly pounce on the latest news from the Obama administration revealing a proposed $3.6 trillion budget for 2010.

Obama's plan includes up to $750 billion in additional bailout money for banks, and a $1.75 trillion deficit. A "reserve fund" of $634 billion will be used to help pay for the president's universal health care plan.

To pay for the proposed budget increase, Obama plans a series of tax rate increases including one on the top bracket individuals making more than $200,000 a year. Families making more than $250,000 a year will also have their deductions reduced.

Capital gains tax rates for people in the top tax bracket would increase to 20 percent, up from 15 percent.

Some $353 billion over 10 years will be raised through "revenue changes and loophole closures" for business entities. Obama also plans to raise $645 billion through a pollution tax using a cap-and-trade system that allows less-polluting companies to sell carbon credits to those who produce more pollution.

 BBC News

Obama Budget Sees $1.75 Trillion Deficit

New York Times - 56 minutes ago

President Obama, with Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr. and Treasury Secretary Timothy F. Geithner, spoke about the budget on Thursday at the Eisenhower Executive Office Building in Washington.

Obama Unveils $3.6 Trillion Budget, Sets Aside Billions for Health ... FOXNews

Obama submits budget blueprint CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jonny (2009-02-26 16:38:00)

For those that missed the President's address yesterday, he offered up a whole lot of promises: rebuilding the economy, reforming health care, addressing education, solving the world's energy crisis. Just about the only thing he didn't promise was the moon, which I suspect he's saving for his state of the union address. For more check out <http://www.TalkObama.info>

Obama sets troop withdrawal target (2009-02-27 11:11)

President Barack Obama , speaking to troops at the Camp Lejeune marine base, set a time line for pulling out of Iraq in 18 months.

Obama said that a force of between 35,000 to 50,000 would remain in Iraq, however, to train Iraqi troops and conduct limited military operations. The latter number is rather large, representing about a third of the current U.S. military presence in Iraq, and is likely to draw criticism from more liberal members of his own party, and even some anti-war Republicans.

Obama said that the plan was a signal to Iraq's leadership to begin taking responsibility for their own country.

"We cannot sustain indefinitely a commitment that has put a strain on our military, and will cost the American people nearly a trillion dollars," he said.

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama has drawn the finish line in Iraq. The president says US combat in Iraq will end by Aug. 31, 2010. (Feb. 27)

Obama sets Iraq deadline, unveils new strategy

Reuters - 1 hour ago

By Ross Colvin and Jeff Mason CAMP LEJEUNE, NC, Feb 27 (Reuters) - President Barack Obama said on Friday he would pull US combat troops out of Iraq in 18 months as he unveiled a new strategy that stressed diplomacy and engagement with foes like Iran ...

Iraq withdrawal plan in factors and figures Los Angeles Times

Democrats voice concerns on Obama's Iraq drawdown plan CNN International

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Battle lines forming over Obama budget (2009-02-27 19:59)

As news came out that the recession in the fourth quarter of last year was deeper than previously thought, Democrats and Republicans prepared to battle over President Barack Obama's budget.

Despite the apparent "tax and spend" nature of the Obama plan, many Democrats embrace the administration's frank honest approach as compared to the "fudgeting" so frequent in recent times. Washington has perfected the technique of massaging stats to hide the structural problems in the economy.

On the other side of the aisle, Republicans are digging their trenches for a major battle hoping that some conservative Democrats will defect to their side. Top Republicans have been using words like "socialism" and "socialist" to describe Obama's plan to spend the country's way out of a deep recession or even an economic depression. However, few could argue that the country has not faced this type of troubled economy since the Great Depression of last century. Also, the truth is that taxes are very near historical lows at the present especially for the wealthiest Americans. The last time the top bracket earners paid rates lower than today's was just before the market crash of 1929.

[EMBED]

IN THE FIELD: US President Barack Obama's proposed budget, unveiled on Thursday, anticipates an economic contraction of 1.2 % in 2009, though his projections were more optimistic than those of the Congressional Budget Office.

guardian.co.uk

Cautiously, Democratic lawmakers embrace Obama's budget

San Jose Mercury News - 52 minutes ago

By Carl Hulse and David M. Herszenhorn WASHINGTON - For years, congressional Democrats tried to avoid anything that would let Republicans slap the tax-and-spend label on them.

Comment by Frances Beinecke President, Natural Resources Defense Council

Republicans set course in Congress budget battle Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Intellectual Redneck (2009-02-28 05:29:00)

Taxing the rich at 100 % won't pay for Obama's budget. The Wall Street Journal has reported that taxing the rich at 100 % won't pay for Obama's budget. Barack Obama promised not to raise taxes on anyone making under $250,000 per year. Where is he going to get the money? The numbers indicate Obama will need to take 100 % of the income of everyone making over $75,000.

Comment: Going to battle (2009-02-28 09:12)

As the debate over the Obama budget moves forward, the big battle that many of us have waited for may come to pass.

For some two decades now, the mantra that taxes are the root of all evil and that we must continually shrink "government" has dominated the scene. Not only Republicans but a good number of Democrats supported the view, and apparently so did those who bothered to vote.

During that time we have seen how the vast bulk of people in America have seen their wealth steadily transferred to the richest 5 percent and particularly the richest 1 percent of the population.

While many average Americans often complain about taxes, the truth is that taxes now are very low but not so much for the middle class. For the wealthy they are near historical lows.

The strategy of lowering taxes to "grow" the economy has been tried before.

Starting in 1922, the top bracket rate was lowered from 76 % to 56 % and it gradually continued lower reaching a bottom of 24 % in 1929, the year of the great stock market crash. The lowest bracket earners at the time payed only 0.34 % income taxes at that time.

As the Great Depression rolled in, the government began trying to spend its way out of troubles, but was not successful until World War II necessitated a vast amount of spending to fund the troops. At the height of the war, the top tax rate hit 94 %.

Since then it has been at least 70 %, and usually higher, until Ronald Reagan began lowering the rate significantly. The bracket system has also changed significantly allowing the super-rich to be taxed at the same rate as the barely rich. Ordinary citizens have been encouraged to spend their savings and to borrow heavily in order to propel the economy forward. Businesses have been urged to act in the same way. However, the super wealthy have saved big time usually squirreling the money away in the rigged derivatives game that protects them from loss.

So it comes as no surprise that the rich have been taking an increasingly larger piece of the economic pie.

Now long ago, people found out that capitalism doesn't work well when left unregulated. Power tends to accumulate; money follows money. The rich get richer and the poor get poorer.

That's why they enacted anti-trust laws way back then, because monopolies allow the richest to destroy competition. What becomes apparent is that history has in many ways repeated itself. The lure of big bucks, the idolization of corporate magnates, etc. lulled people into a state of suggestion and repeated utterances of the same old mantras.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-03-01 21:29:00)

This history is interesting. I have heard the argument that Obama's plan could hurt the non-profit organizations because the rich won't have as much money to contribute. I am curious to know what population most non-profit organizations help. Although I do think that non-profits are a great way to help people out, I have to wonder if we are not helping those same people out more by allowing their hard earned dollars to reach a little farther. You can give a man a fish and he eats for a day, but if you teach him to fish he eats for a lifetime!

Anonymous (2009-03-03 05:40:00)

Sometimes, I wonder why I bother fighting so hard for the little guy. Whats the point if they are too stupid to listen? Say that reminds me.

Amazing. The worst economic and cultural crisis of all time will go down in history horribly misunderstood. What a pathetic bunch of ignorant fools we have become. Consumer junkie credit card morons. Perfect little victims.

Don't believe one optimistic word from any public figure about the economy or humanity in general. They are part of the problem. Its like a game of Monopoly. In America, the richest 1 %, now hold ALMOST 1/2 OF ALL UNITED STATES WEALTH. Unlike 'lesser' estimates, this includes all stocks, bonds, cash, offshore accounts, and material assets held by America's richest 1 %. Even that filthy pig Oprah Winfrey acknowledged that it was near 50 % in 2006. Naturally, she put her own 'humanitarian' spin on it. Calling attention to her own 'good will'. WHAT A DISGUSTING SELF-CENTERED SELF-PROMOTING HYPOCRITE SLOB. THE RICHEST ONE PERCENT HAVE LITERALLY MADE WORLD PROSPERITY ABSOLUTELY IMPOSSIBLE. Don't fall for any of their 'good will' 'humanitarian' CRAP. ITS A SHAM. THESE PEOPLE ARE CAUSING THE SAME PROBLEMS THEY PRETEND TO CARE ABOUT. THE EQUATION THEY STAND FOR ABSOLUTELY CAN NOT WORK. Ask any professor of economics. Money does not grow on trees. The government can't just print up more on a whim. There are serious consequences for doing so. Regardless, there is always a relative limit to the wealth within ANY economy of ANY size. So when too much wealth accumulates at the top, the currency loses value, the middle class slip further into debt, and the lower class further into poverty. A similar rule applies worldwide. The world's richest 1 % now own over 40 % of ALL WORLD WEALTH. This is EVEN AFTER you account for all of this 'good will' 'humanitarian' BS from celebrities and executives. ITS A SHAM. As they get richer and richer, less wealth is left circulating beneath them. This is the single greatest underlying cause for the current US recession. The middle class can no longer afford to pay all the bills or sustain their share of the economy. Their wealth has been gradually transferred to the richest 1 %. One way or another, we suffer because of their incredible greed. We are talking about TRILLIONS of dollars which have been transferred FROM US TO THEM. All over a period of about 27 years. That's Reaganomics for you. The wealth does not 'trickle down' as we were told it would. It just accumulates at the top. Shrinking the middle class and expanding the lower class. Causing a domino effect of socio-economic problems. But the rich will never stop. They just keep getting richer. Leaving even less of the pie for the other 99 % of us to share. At the same time, they throw back a few tax deductible crumbs and call themselves 'humanitarians'. Cashing in on the PR and getting even richer the following year. IT CAN'T WORK THIS WAY. Their bogus efforts to make the world a better place can not possibly succeed. Any 'humanitarian' progress made in one area will be lost in another. EVERY SINGLE TIME. IT ABSOLUTELY CAN NOT WORK THIS WAY. This is going to end very much like a giant game of Monopoly. The current US recession will drag on for years and lead into the worst US depression of all time. The richest 1 % will live like royalty while the rest of us fight over jobs, food, and gasoline. So don't fall for any of this 'good will' 'humanitarian' BS from Hollywood, Pro Sports, and Wall Street PIGS. ITS A SHAM. Remember: They are filthy rich EVEN AFTER their tax deductible contributions. They get richer as we speak. They absolutely will not stop. Greedy pigs. Now, we are headed for the worst economic and cultural crisis of all time. Crime, poverty, and suicide will skyrocket. SEND A "THANK YOU" NOTE TO YOUR FAVORITE MILLIONAIRE. ITS THEIR FAULT. I'm not discounting other factors like China, sub-prime, or gas prices. But all of those factors combined still pale in comparison to that HUGE transfer of wealth from poor to rich. Anyway, those other factors are related and further aggravated because of GREED. If it weren't for the OBSCENE distribution of bottom line wealth within our country, there never would have been such a market for sub-prime to begin with. IF IT WEREN'T FOR THE OBSCENE, UNREASONABLE, ILLOGICAL, AND IMMORAL DISTRIBUTION OF UNITED STATES WEALTH, THERE WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN SUCH A MARKET FOR SUB-PRIME AND THERE WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN A COLLAPSE IN THE HOUSING MARKET. Sub-prime did not cause the problem. It only accelerated the outcome. Make no mistake. The housing market would have been in decline by now with or without sub-prime. Which by the way, was another trick whipped up by greedy bankers and executives. IT MADE THEM RICHER. Along with many investors, developers, and public figures. Including three of the most greedy, disgusting, hypocrite pigs that have ever lived. The credit industry has been ENDORSED for years by Oprah Winfrey, Ellen DeGeneres, and Dr Phil. In fact, they specifically endorsed Countrywide by name. IT MADE THEM RICHER. In order to fully appreciate this, you must realize what a rotten trick Countrywide had up their sleeve to begin with. How it was ENDORSED by OPRAH WINFREY, ELLEN DEGENERES, AND DR PHIL. How incredibly irresponsible they were. How they deceived and betrayed their own loyal fans. How they were PAID FOR IT. How they contributed to the artificial rise and accelerated fall of the US housing market. Not only by concentrating so much wealth. Not only by flaunting their own extravagant lifestyles. Not only by promoting this unrealistic concept of 'bigger, better, faster, upscale' EVERYTHING. But also by endorsing sub-prime. How many middle class dreams were shattered because of their GREED. Don't believe what you've heard from them or any other filthy rich public figure. THEY ARE LIARS. It wasn't just about irresponsible lending, borrowing, local banker bonuses, or weak oversight. That was going on BEFORE sub-prime. It was actually much more cruel and calculated. Orchestrated from the top down. 'Predatory lending' is just that. Their plan was to give easy credit to millions while the housing market was still high, inflate the market even higher in the process, reap two or three years of payments from unsuspecting middle class buyers, allow them to accumulate little or no equity, lie in wait as those homes increased in value, then jack up their rates making it near impossible for those middle class buyers to make the payments on time. At which time, those middle class buyers would be evicted, their dreams shattered, and their homes forfeited. Which by then, until mid '07', would be even higher in value and re-sold for a higher price. The plan was to be executed primarily while the market was strong. Leaving all those previous buyers with NOTHING to show for all those payments made. This incredibly cruel and calculated plan was orchestrated in part by Countrywide. THE SAME COUNTRYWIDE ENDORSED BY OPRAH WINFREY, ELLEN DEGENERES, AND DR PHIL. IT MADE THEM RICHER. It also made many of their loyal fans homeless. What a rotten, disgusting trio of hypocrite pigs. What a rotten, disgusting, immoral way to turn a quick buck. To make as many people as possible love you. Then tell those people to run out and buy a product or service because you say so. Because you were PAID to endorse it. Without the slightest regard for the downside or anything but your own bottom line. That's why they did it. GREED. Now, there are similar ties between every major industry, every Fortune 500 company, and nearly every public figure. IT MAKES THEM RICHER. It also drives up the cost for nearly every product and service on the market. So don't fall for their 'good will' 'humanitarian' BS. ITS A SHAM. NOTHING BUT A CALCULATED, TAX DEDUCTIBLE, MARKETING PLAN TO RAISE THE VALUE OF THEIR OWN IMAGE. If you fall for it, then you're a fool. If you see any real difference between the moral character of a celebrity, politician, attorney, lobbyist, or executive, then you're a fool. No offense fellow citizens. But we have been misled by nearly every living public figure. We still are. Even now, they claim to be 'hurting' right along with the rest of us. As if gas prices actually effect the lifestyle of a millionaire. ITS A LIE. IN 2007, THE RICHEST 1 PERCENT INCREASED THEIR AVERAGE BOTTOM LINE WEALTH AGAIN. On average, they are now worth well over $4,000,000 each. Thats an all time high. As a group, they are now worth well over $17,000,000,000,000. THATS WELL OVER SEVENTEEN TRILLION DOLLARS. Another all time high. Which by the way, is much more than the entire middle and lower classes combined. Also more than enough to pay off our national debt, fund the Iraq war for a decade, repair our infrastructure, and bail out the US housing market. Still think that our biggest problem is China? Think again. Its the one percent club. That means every big name celebrity, athlete, executive, entrepreneur, developer, banker, and lottery winner. Along with many attorneys, doctors, and politicians. If they are rich, then they are part of the problem. Their incredible wealth was not 'created', 'generated', grown in their back yard, or printed up on their command. It was transfered FROM US TO THEM. Directly and indirectly. Its become near impossible to spend a dollar without making some greedy pig even richer. Don't be fooled by the fall of the stock market, industry losses, lower profit margins, bank failures, or the occasional loss of a millionaire's fortune. Overall, they just keep getting richer. They do so with little or no regard for their own industries or the economy as a whole. They are obsessed primarily with a desire to accumulate more personal wealth. They absolutely will not stop. Still, they have the nerve to pretend as if they care about ordinary people. ITS A LIE. NOTHING BUT CALCULATED PR CRAP. WAKE UP PEOPLE. THEIR PRIMARY GOAL IS TO WIN THE GAME. The one percent club will always say or do whatever it takes to get as rich as possible. Without the slightest regard for anything or anyone but themselves. Reaganomics. Their idea. Loans from China. Their idea. NAFTA. Their idea. CAFTA. Their idea. Outsourcing. Their idea. Downsizing. Their idea. Sub-prime. Their idea. High energy prices. Their idea. Oil 'futures'. Their idea. The commercial lobbyist. Their idea. The multi-million dollar lawsuit. Their idea. The multi-million dollar endorsement deal. Their idea. $400 cell phones. Their idea. $200 cell phone bills. Their idea. $200 basketball shoes. Their idea. $30 late fees. Their idea. $30 NSF fees. Their idea. $20 DVDs. Their idea. $50 event tickets. Their idea. $30 books. Their idea. $400 PC operating systems. Their idea. $60 video games. Their idea. Obscene health care charges. Their idea. Subliminal advertising. Their idea. Brainwash plots on TV. Their idea. Vioxx, and Celebrex. Their idea. Excessive medical testing. Their idea. The MASSIVE campaign to turn every American into a brainwashed, credit card, pharmaceutical, medical testing, love-sick, celebrity junkie. Their idea. IT WAS ALL THEIR IDEA. IT MAKES THEM RICHER. All of the above drive up the cost of living, shrink the middle class, concentrate the world's wealth and resources, create a domino effect of socio-economic problems, and wreak havoc on society. All of which have been CREATED AND ENDORSED by celebrities, athletes, executives, investors, developers, entrepreneurs, attorneys, and politicians. IT MAKES THEM RICHER. So don't fall for any of their 'good will' 'humanitarian' BS. ITS A SHAM. NOTHING BUT TAX DEDUCTIBLE PR CRAP. In many cases, the 'charitable' contribution is almost entirely offset. Not to mention the opportunity to plug their name, image, product, and 'good will' all at once. Which is usually done just before or after the release of their latest commercial project. IT MAKES THEM RICHER. These greedy pigs even have the nerve to throw a fit and spin up a misleading defense with regard to 'federal tax revenue'. ITS A SHAM. THEY SCREWED UP THE EQUATION TO BEGIN WITH. If the middle and lower classes had a greater share of the economic pie, they could easily cover a greater share of the federal tax revenue. They are held down in many ways because of greed. Wages remain stagnant for the vast majority because the executives, investors, developers, celebrities, athletes, attorneys, politicians, and entrepreneurs, are paid millions. They over-sell, over-charge, under-pay, outsource, lobby, re-locate, cut jobs, and cut benefits to increase or preserve their own obscene personal bottom line. They do so even at the expense of their own industries. Even after you account for the fall of the market and lower industry profit margins, the richest 1 percent still keep getting richer on average. Simply because their wealth is drawn from the majority in many ways. Not necessarily at the same rate, but still in their favor. They continue to reap more than they spend down or 'give back'. They have done so for many years. As more United States wealth rises to the top, the middle and lower classes inevitably suffer. This reduces the potential tax revenue drawn from those brackets. At the same time, it wreaks havoc on middle and lower class communities and increases the need for financial aid. Not to mention the spike in crime because of it. There is a domino effect to consider. Caused primarily by a constant transfer of wealth from poor to rich. IT CAN'T WORK THIS WAY. But our leaders refuse to acknowledge this. Instead they come up with one trick after another to milk the system, feed the rich, and screw the majority. These decisions are heavily influenced by the 1 % club. Every year, billions of federal tax dollars are diverted behind the scenes back to the rich and their respective industries. Loans from China have been necessary to compensate in part, for the red ink and the multi-trillion dollar transfer of wealth from poor to rich. At the same time, the feds have been pushing more financial burden onto the states who push them lower onto the cities. Again, the hardship is felt more by the majority and less by the 1 % club. The rich prefer to live in exclusive areas or upper class communities. They get the best of everything. Reliable city services, new schools, freshly paved roads, new lighting, sidewalks, drainage, upscale parks, ect. The middle and lower class communities get little or nothing without a raise in basic service charges or a local tax increase. Which, they usually can't afford. So the red ink flows followed by service cuts and lay-offs. All because of the OBSCENE distribution of bottom line wealth in this country. Anyway, when you account for all federal, state, local taxes, and fees, the middle class actually pay about the same rate as the rich. The devil is in the details. So when people forgive the rich for their incredible greed and then praise them for paying a greater share of the FEDERAL income taxes, its like nails on a chalk board. I can not accept any theory that our economy would suffer in any way with a more reasonable distribution of bottom line wealth. Afterall, it was more reasonable 30 years ago. Before Reaganomics came along. Before GREED became such an epidemic. Before we had an army of over-paid executives, investors, celebrities, athletes, attorneys, doctors, entrepreneurs, developers, lobbyists, and sold-out politicians to kiss their greedy asses. As a nation, we were in much better shape. Strong middle class, free and clear assets, home equity, savings, widespread prosperity, stable job market, lower deficit, ect. Our economy as a whole was much more stable and prosperous for the majority. WITHOUT LOANS FROM CHINA. Now, we have a more obscene distribution of bottom line wealth, and resources than ever before. We have a sold-out government, crumbling infrastructure, energy crisis, home foreclosure epidemic, credit crunch, weak job market, weak middle class, weak US dollar, 13 figure national debt, and 12 figure annual shortfall. The cost of living is higher than ever before. Most people can't even afford basic health care. ALL BECAUSE OF GREED. I really don't blame the upper class in general. At least not as a group and not without exception. No economy could ever function without some reasonable scale of income and wealth. But it can't be allowed to run wild like a mad dog. ALBERT EINSTEIN TRIED TO MAKE PEOPLE UNDERSTAND. UNBRIDLED CAPITALISM ABSOLUTELY CAN NOT WORK. TOP HEAVY ECONOMIES CAN NOT BE SUSTAINED. THEY ALWAYS COLLAPSE. Bottom line: The richest 1 percent will soon tank the largest economy in the world. It will be catastrophic. Like nothing we've ever seen before. The American dream will be shattered. and thats just the beginning. Greed will eventually tank every major economy in the world. Causing millions more to struggle, fight, starve, suffer, and die. Oprah, Angelina, Brad, Bono, and Bill are not part of the solution. They are part of the problem. THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS A MULTI-MILLIONAIRE HUMANITARIAN. EXTREME WEALTH MAKES WORLD PROSPERITY ABSOLUTELY IMPOSSIBLE. WITHOUT WORLD PROSPERITY, THERE WILL NEVER BE WORLD PEACE OR ANYTHING EVEN CLOSE. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL. Of course, the rich will throw a fit and call me a madman. Of course, they will jump to small minded conclusions about 'jealousy', 'envy', or 'socialism'. Of course, their ignorant fans will do the same. You have to expect that. But I speak the truth. If you don't believe me, then copy this entry and run it by any professor of economics or socio-economics. Then tell a friend. Call the local radio station. Re-post this entry or put it in your own words. Be one of the first to predict the worst economic and cultural crisis of all time and explain its underlying cause. WE ARE IN BIG TROUBLE.

So what can we do about it? Well, not much. Unfortunately, we are stuck on a runaway train. The problem has gone unchecked for too many years. The US/global depression is comming thanks to the 1 % club. It would take a massive effort by the vast majority to prevent it. Along with a voluntary sacrifice by the rich. THATS NOT GOING TO HAPPEN. But if you believe in miracles, then spend your money as wisely as possible. Especially in middle and lower class communities. Check the Fortune 500 list and limit your support of high profit/low labor industries (Hollywood, pro sports, energy, credit, pharmaceutical, cable, satellite, internet advertising, video, and music, cell phone, high fashion, jewelry, ect.). Cancel all but one credit card for emergencies only. Call the provider and demand a lower rate. Be persistent. You may get it. If you need a cell phone, then do your homework and find the best deal on a local pre-pay. If you want home internet access, then use the least expensive provider, and share accounts whenever possible. If you need to search, then use the less popular search engines. They usually produce the same results anyway. Don't click on any internet ad. If you need the product or service, then look up the phone number or address and contact that business directly. Don't pay to see any blockbuster movie. Instead, wait a few months and rent the DVD from a local store or buy it USED. Then loan it to a friend or family member. If you prefer the outing, then choose a film produced by the lesser known studeos with lower paid actors. If you want to see a big name game or event, then watch it in a local bar, club, or at home on network TV. Don't buy any high end official merchandise and don't support the high end sponsors. If its endorsed by a big name celebrity, then don't buy it. If you can afford a new car, then make an exception for GM, Ford, and Dodge. If they don't increase their market share soon, then a lot more people are going to get screwed out of their pensions and/or benefits. Of course, you must know by now to avoid those big trucks and SUVs unless you truly need one for its utility. Don't be ashamed to buy a foreign car if you prefer it. Afterall, those with the most fuel efficient vehicles consume a lot less foreign oil. Which accounts for a pretty big chunk of our trade deficit. Anyway, the global economy is worth supporting to some extent. Its the obscene profit margins, trade deficits, and BS from OPEC that get us into trouble. Otherwise, the global economy would be a good thing for everyone. Just keep in mind that the big 3 are struggling and they do produce a few smaller reliable cars. Don't frequent any high end department store or any business in a newly developed center or upper class community. By doing so, you make developers richer and draw support away from industrial areas and away from the middle and lower class communities. Instead, support the local retailer and the less popular shopping centers. Especially in lower or middle class communities. If you can afford to buy a home, then do so. But go smaller and less expensive. Don't get yourself in too deep and don't buy into the newly developed condos or gated communities. Instead, find a modest home in a building or neighborhood at least 20 years old. If you live in one of the poorer states, then try to support its economy first and foremost. Be on the lookout for commercial brainwash plots on TV. They are written into nearly every scene of nearly every show. Most cater to network sponsors and parent companies. Especially commercial health care. In particular, high profit pharmaceuticals and excessive medical testing. DON'T FALL FOR IT. Get off the couch and take care of your body the way nature intended. There is no substitute. If you must see a doctor, then DEMAND that he/she give you more than 5 minutes of their undivided attention. Otherwise, dispute their unreasonable charges. Be prepared with written questions about your condition and get them answered one at a time. If they refuse, then dispute their unreasonable charges. If they prescribe excessive medical testing and find nothing new or significant, then dispute their unreasonable charges. If they prescribe a pharmaceutical, then ask for a generic. Better yet, consider a change in lifestyle or simple tolerance. If they still recommend the name brand pharmaceutical, then ask about any financial ties or conflict of interest. If they get offended, then dispute their unreasonable charges and consider a new doctor. If you must drug away your sniffles, aches, and pains, then at least do your homework. Be aware of the possible side-effects ahead of time. Don't be surprised to find yourself back a week or two later feeling worse. In which case, you should dispute their unreasonable charges. If you are diagnosed with another medical condition, then ask your doctor what he/she has done to rule out those possible side-effects. Otherwise, dispute their unreasonable charges. Don't let any greedy doctor treat you like a number, make you wait an hour, or rush you out of their office. Otherwise, dispute their unreasonable charges. Don't fall for this CRAP that doctors have no choice but to over-book their time or over-charge their patients because of high overhead. ITS A LIE. YOUR DOCTOR IS MOST LIKELY A MULTI-MILLIONAIRE. So don't fall for their CRAP. Demand their undivided attention and respect. Afterall, they took an oath. Do all of the above regardless of your coverage. Don't force your employer to cover the obscene and often fraudulent charges of a corrupt health care industry. By doing so, you make the problem worse. Keep your guard up when watching ANY talk show. These people are not your friends. They are not your advocates. They are paid actors hired to get your attention and your money. Some of them are also executive producers (Oprah Winfrey, Ellen Degeneres, and Dr Phil.). Nearly every word, smile, and stupid joke is rehearsed ahead of time. Including those which take place during what appear to be 'technical oversights' (Today Show). Its all fake. Its all calculated. Nearly every segment is about marketing some over-priced product or service. They will use any excuse to plug a gadget, fashion item, travel destination, drug, movie, TV show, book, magazine, song, website, ect. Almost all of it over-priced. Almost all of it resulting in higher profits for their sponsors, partners, and parent companies. DON'T FALL FOR IT. Big business is fine on occasion depending on their ethics, profit margins, and profit sharing. Do your homework. If you want to support any legitimate charity, then do so directly. Never support any celebrity foundation. They spend most of their funding on PR campaigns, exotic travel, and high end accommodations for themselves. Thats right. Filthy rich public figures have been jet-setting the world in the name of 'humanity' for years. Riding in personal jets, staying in super-exclusive resorts, and living it up in exotic locations around the world the likes of which most people could never afford even if their lives depended on it. They bring along agents, advisors, publicists, hair, make-up, wardrobe, lighting, and photo crews who are also in it for themselves. They are paid six or seven figures for their part to schedule, manage, document, showcase, praise, and publicize the 'good will' of said public figures and their respective industries. Every possible expense is passed off as 'incidental' or 'necessary' and billed right back to some 'foundation' named after said public figure and/or respective industry. Every possible tax deduction is claimed. Which are incredibly vague and diverse thanks to our sold-out government. Deals are cut with major networks who agree to praise the 'good will' or 'humanitarian' effort of said public figures and plug their latest commercial project around the same time. Others from around the world pick up the story and save these industries billions in advertising every year. Resulting in higher profits and paychecks for the 1 % club. When its all said and done more wealth is transferred from poor to rich. NOT the other way around. So don't support any charity named after a living celebrity. Don't be fooled by any affiliation or inspired by any short term short sighted progress report. Instead, go to Charitywatch.org and look up a top rated charity to support your favorite cause. Its all there. For example: 'Habitat For Humanity' is a top rated charity. They operate with a low overhead, volunteer workforce, and donated materials. They have built homes for the less fortunate in nearly every city nationwide. Including New Orleans. They do so as we speak. No similar effort can match their progress hour for hour or dollar for dollar. So there is no legitimate reason to support a slower, less efficient effort represented by a filthy rich Hollywood actor who flies in on a personal jet, takes most of the credit, and makes a deal with a major network for plugs just days before the premier of his latest film or DVD release. By doing so, you support not only the effort, but also the filthy rich actor. Concentrating more wealth and dumbing down our society further in the process. Instead, support 'Habitat For Humanity'. Its not perfect. It is affiliated with some big business. However, it is MUCH more efficient, effective, and less corrupt than 'Make It Right'. The difference is profound. In general, support the little guy as much as possible and the big guy as little as possible. Keep your own greed in check. Don't play the lottery and don't invest only for profit. If you do come into a fortune, then give away the bulk of it to others who have far less. Find the courage and do it. STAY OUT OF THE 1 % CLUB. Encourage others to do the same. Their standard is obscene, unjust, illogical, and immoral. There is no excuse for it. Do your part to reverse the transfer of wealth away from the rich and back to the middle and lower classes. Otherwise, there will be no economic recovery EVER. Unfortunately, there is no perfect answer. Jobs will be lost either way. Families will go cold and hungry either way. Innocent children will starve and die either way. But we need to support the largest group of workers with the most reasonable profit margins. We need to stand for a more reasonable distribution of income, bottom line wealth, and resources. We also need to support LEGITIMATE charities (Check that list at Charitywatch.org). This is our only chance to limit the severity or duration of the coming US/global depression. In the meantime, don't listen to Bernanke, Paulson, Bartiromo, Orman, Dobbs, Kramer, Pickens, Larson, O'Reiley, Limbaugh, Bruce, Inghram, or any other public figure with regard to the economy. They are all plenty smart but I swear to you that they will lie right through their rotten teeth. IT MAKES THEM RICHER. These people work for big business. The 'experts' they cite also work for big business. They are motivated primarily by their desire to accumulate more wealth. THEY WILL LIE RIGHT THROUGH THEIR ROTTEN TEETH. So don't fall for their tricks. Instead, look at the big picture. The economic problems we face have been mounting for well over 20 years. All of them caused or aggravated by a constant transfer of wealth from poor to rich. Soon, it will cause the first ever GLOBAL DEPRESSION. Its not brain surgery. For the mostpart, Its simple math. Like I said, you are welcome to copy this entry and run it by any professor of economics or socio-economics. Ask them specifically about the link between distribution of wealth and economic stability. If thats not good enough, then look up what Albert Einstein had to say about greed, excess, extreme wealth, and its horrible consequences. I speak the truth. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL.

Its already underway. A massive campaign to divert our attention. Trump, Buffet, O'Reiley, Dobbs, Winfrey, Pickens, Larson, Norris, Branson, Bohannon, Limbaugh, Coulter, Clinton, Bloomberg, and several other well known filthy rich public figures have been running their mouths about the economy. Finally admitting a hint of severity after almost 2 years of denial. They even have the nerve to FINALLY acknowledge the possibility of a US/global depression. Still, they refuse to acknowledge the single greatest underlying cause. GREED. Instead, they focus on policies, procedures, and circumstances that were born FROM the underlying cause. GREED. They ramble on about 'sub-prime', 'toxic debt', 'junk bonds', and 'risky investments'. As if somehow all of this could have been avoided if those transactions had never taken place to begin with. What a joke. Those factors don't represent the underlying cause of this global economic crisis. They represent the effect of a shrinking middle class and massive consumer debt. CAUSED BY GREED. A MASSIVE TRANSFER OF WEALTH FROM POOR TO RICH. Otherwise, there wouldn't have been such a market for sub-prime to begin with. The debt wouldn't have been 'toxic'. The bonds wouldn't have been 'junk'. The investments wouldn't have been so 'risky'. By focusing on such factors, they attempt to divert our attention, limit our hindsight, disregard the OBSCENE concentration of wealth and capital, that shrinking middle class, the high cost of living, and the particular form of evil responsible for almost all of it. GREED. Dancing their way around the big picture. DON'T FALL FOR IT. Remember: Our national debt was way up BEFORE sub-prime. Consumer debt was way up BEFORE sub-prime. The cost of living was up BEFORE sub-prime. Wall Street profits were obscene BEFORE sub-prime. The middle class were loosing free and clear assets BEFORE sub-prime. Our infrastructure was in bad shape BEFORE sub-prime. Loans from China were taken out BEFORE sub-prime. The dollar was loosing value BEFORE sub-prime. So don't let these cowardly, hypocritical, filthy rich public figures divert your attention or limit your range of thought. THE CURRENT ECONOMIC CRISIS WAS NOT CAUSED BY A SINGLE POLICY, PROCEDURE, OR ADMINISTRATION. IT WAS CAUSED PRIMARILY BY A MASSIVE TRANSFER OF WEALTH FROM POOR TO RICH. THIS ALSO REPRESENTS A MASSIVE CONCENTRATION OF CAPITAL WORLDWIDE. OTHERWISE, THERE WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN SUCH A MARKET FOR SUB-PRIME AND THERE WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN A GLOBAL CREDIT CRUNCH. MONEY DOES NOT GROW ON TREES AND IT DOES NOT JUST FLOAT AWAY. IT ONLY TRANSFERS FROM ONE PARTY TO ANOTHER. ALBERT EINSTEIN

TRIED TO MAKE PEOPLE UNDERSTAND. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL.

A word for those who respond with the usual 'I know more than you. I spell better than you. I talk like an economist. Look how smart, knowledgable, and articulate I am' crap. Let me say this in advance. I don't claim to be an expert in this field. But I did go on record with these predictions long before any public figure uttered the word 'recession'. I've done so 'on the air' and 'online'. Millions of you already know my voice. My first call was in September of '05'. I tried to explain that we will never have world peace without world prosperity and that we will never have world prosperity without a 'fair and reasonable pay-scale'. I also tried to explain the link between 'extreme wealth' and 'extreme poverty'. My call was immediately followed by attacks from so called 'patriots' who felt that my cause must have been to promote 'socialism' or 'bring down America'. Not warn her citizens. You may also remember me from chat rooms criticizing the 1 % club and Hollywood humanitarians in particular. If you search long enough, you will find my early postings online from '05' and '06'. At first, they were written specifically to fit within a few hundred characters. Including the first draft of this rant. It started with one short paragraph predicting a 'total collapse of the US economy'. Others included phrases like 'game of Monopoly', 'recession is inevitable', 'global recession', 'greed kills', and 'the worst economic and cultural crisis of all time'. Some of which were eventually included here. From day 1, I have tried to explain the link between extreme wealth, poverty, and economic instability. My internet account was eventually cancelled for posting 'spam' in response to articles about the economy. In December of '06', I predicted market instability by spring of the following year. I did so 'on the air'. In January of '07', I called another morning talk show and spoke with a guest host who was filling in for a well known public figure. Again, I specifically predicted growing market instability, the current US recession, and the subsequent US/global depression. Which by the way, will be the worst of all time by far. In February of '07', Allen Greenspan acknowledged a 'one in three' chance of a US recession. I immediately called another talk radio show and guaranteed AGAIN that it was imminent. I criticized Greenspan and tried to explain that it was not about 'odds' but instead a very simple equation with regard to distribution of income and wealth. I also gave credit to Albert Einstein who went on record with similar views in 1949. As far as I know, he was the first to do so. By late spring of '07', the market was rattled and the economic 'stimulus' in the works. Which turned out to be around $160,000,000,000. THATS ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY BILLION DOLLARS. Well over 1 % of our GDP. Deemed appropriate at the time by our leaders. In fact, Bush went on record with a claim that it was based on a mathematical formula and proven strategy. They said it would work. I immediately predicted that it would have little or no effect. By summer of '07' the stock market was more unstable. The housing market in decline. Again, I predicted that it would get MUCH worse. In September of '07', I predicted that our government would have no choice but to acknowledge a US recession by October of '08'. I also assured the audience that our economy would "go down in a ball of flames" because of greed and that no recovery would EVER take place without a more reasonable distribution of wealth and resources. I have made these predictions 'on air' and 'online' literally hundreds of times. The first call was in September of '05'. Made to a well known public figure with a large audience. The first blog post a month or so later. Prior to that, I had never even seen one. In fact, my very first post to a blog was written specifically to warn my fellow citizens about the coming US/global depression. Which I was already convinced at the time would be SEVERE within a decade. That was in October of '05'. At the time, there were literally only a few of us worldwide posting any such prediction online. I'm talking maybe a dozen searchable links. This particular rant began with one short paragraph in '06'. Like the others, it was originally intended to fit within a few hundred characters. At the time, I was unaware of any blogs which allowed for longer entries to be posted anonymously. This paragraph was first written in early-mid '08'. Its been updated several times. There has also been a running debate on iVillage.com which began in October of '07' (don't click on their ads). In February or March of '08', I referred specifically to the bank failures of the Great Depression and predicted that it was about to happen again. At the time, I was one of only a few worldwide to go on record with any such prediction. This was still several weeks to months before Greenspan, Paulson, Bartiromo, Orman, Kramer, O'Reiley, Larson, Bohannon, Dobbs, Celeste or any other well known public figure had acknowledged even a hint of severity. It was also several weeks before Fanny May and Freddie Mac made the news. I also predicted in March that our markets would end the year much lower than they began. Which was still contrary to what we were being told by any public figure. I was allowed to post but when my predictions came true, the site operators went back all the way to October of '07' and deleted nearly every one of my previous entries (they missed a few.). Their motive was obvious. They wanted to 'erase' my credibility. iVillage.com is directly affiliated with NBC, GE, Universal Studeos, Countrywide, CityBank, Capital One, Oprah Winfrey, Angelina Jolie, Brad Pitt, Ellen Degeneres, Dr Phil, and others who I persecute by name. All of which depend on the constant dumbing down of society. All of whom are partially responsible for the current economic crisis. None of which or whom have the GUTS to acknowledge the single greatest underlying cause. GREED. In fact, those who epitomize it (all of the above) want my big mouth SHUT. For 3 solid years, I have been ripping on the 1 % club for their incredible greed and hypocrisy.

From day 1, my call has been for a more reasonable distribution of income, wealth, and resources. My warning that without it, we would face the worst economic and cultural crisis of all time. Since then, I've gone on record against people like Greenspan, Bernanke, Paulson, Laffer, O'Reiley, Bartiromo, Orman, Kramer, Larson, and Dobbs. So far, my predictions have been accurate. The public figures DEAD WRONG. Afterall, not one of them acknowledged even a hint of severity in '05', '06', or '07'. When they FINALLY did this year, they all said something to the effect of "None of us saw this coming.". LIARS. There were a few of us typing our fingers to the bone trying to warn people. There were a few of us calling talk radio shows almost daily trying to warn people. I was one of them. Again, I don't claim to be an expert in this field. But I do understand simple equations, basic economics, and cultural trends. I also realize that mainstream views are DEAD WRONG and based on LIES told by filthy rich public figures who will say whatever it takes to serve their own interests. GREED. Afterall, what kind of incredible MORON could even glance at the numbers and somehow think the equation could work? What kind of incredible MORON could possibly hope to sustain an economy based on a constant transfer of wealth from poor to rich? What the hell did they expect to happen when the middle class finally ran low on money to spend on over-priced crap like everything that I mentioned in that first long paragraph? What the hell were they thinking of? I'll tell you what. RICHES. FILTHY STINKING RICHES. Thats what. Now, they are spinning themselves dizzy trying to divert our attention. Mark my words: They will never acknowledge the downside of their own incredible greed. They will all come up with one campaign or strategy after another to blame the other guy, the other administration, the other politician, the other party, the other policy, the other industry, the other country, ect. Whatever it takes to dumb down our society. They will NEVER have the GUTS to acknowledge the single greatest underlying cause for this global economic crisis. GREED. Its not their knowledge I question. Its their character. GREED. Like I said. This is not brain surgery. For the mostpart, its simple math. When you concentrate the world's wealth, you also concentrate its capital, and shrink the middle class along with the potential market for every major industry. Homes go unsold. Bills go unpaid. Jobs are lost. Banks fail. More products go unsold. More jobs are lost. More banks fail. and so on. and so on. and so on. It happened 80 years ago. It will happen again. This time on a catastrophic global scale. Throughout the cycle, the rich will panic and tighten their grip. Concentrating the world's wealth and resources even further, getting richer in the process, and ensuring the collapse of every major economy worldwide. Think it can't happen? Think again. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL. Another thing. I don't want credit for any of this. Otherwise, I would have given my full name a long time ago. I havn't. IT DOESN'T MATTER. I'm not selling a book and I'm not looking for any notoriety. At least not yet. I do have a plan to go public when my parents die. In fact, I have BIG plans for my inheritance. Every single penny of it. In the meantime, I don't want them to know about it. I also don't want them punished for my big mouth. Which is why I've gone out of my way to remain anonymous for 3 solid years. When I do go public, it won't be for profit and it won't be for popularity. It will be for a legitimate cause and NOTHING ELSE. In fact, I hope to be just one of many. A face in the crowd. In the meantime, I don't care who gets to say "I told you so." IT DOESN'T MATTER. As far as I'm concerned, you can put this entire rant in your own words and take credit for all of it. I don't care. Just spread the word. Otherwise, the greatest injustice of all time will go down in history unchecked. By the way. The bailout won't work. IT WON'T WORK. The plan fails to address the fundamental problem. The middle class don't need more credit. They need a reasonable share of the economic pie. They also need a lower cost of living and a chance to catch their breath. They need a break from all of the psychological marketing tricks and mass market BS. Most of all, they need to wake up, see the truth, and take a stand. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL.

10.01.08

To my surprise, two public figures have found the courage to acknowledge this problem to some degree. On 11.07.07 former presidential candidate Ron Paul mentioned the massive transfer of wealth from poor to rich. He also hinted at the possibility of economic collapse. He did so on 'Face the Nation'. He was blacklisted almost immediately for doing so. On 9.28.08 former secretary of labor Robert Reich referred to the obscene levels of income inequality as part of a "recipe for disaster". He mentioned the richest one percent in particular. He did so on 'Late Night With Conan O'Brien'. As far as I know, Albert Einstein was the first to explain the link between extreme wealth and economic instability. He did so in 1949. He explained how the first Great Depression was actually caused by a massive transfer of wealth from poor to rich. He predicted that it would happen again. He also predicted much greater levels of economic instability proportional to much greater levels of income and wealth inequality. He was right. Amazing. The prosperity of an entire world is about to be compromised. Almost entirely because of greed. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL.

Another word about the Great Depression. It really was a perfect storm. First, there was unprecedented economic growth. There was a massive building spree. There was a growing sense of optimism. There was a growing obsession for celebrities. The average American became a pathetic, brainwashed, consumer junkie, moron. All of this represented a MASSIVE transfer of wealth from poor to rich. Executives, entrepreneurs, celebrities, and share holders. When the middle class finally ran low on money to spend UP, DOWN, and ACROSS, the rich did what they felt necessary to maintain their disgusting profit margins and ill-gotten obscene levels of wealth as long as possible. They cut jobs. The small business owners did what they felt necessary to survive. They cut jobs. The losses were felt primarily by the little guy. This created a domino effect. The middle class shrunk and the lower class expanded. With less wealth in active circulation, banks failed by the hundreds. More jobs were lost. Unemployment reached 25 % in 1933. The worst year of the Great Depression. The recovery involved a World War and higher taxes on the rich. With so many men in the service, so many women on the production line, and those higher taxes to help pay for it, the lions share of United States wealth was gradually transferred back to the middle class. This redistribution of wealth continued until the late seventies. At the time, the richest 1 % reaped about 10 % of all private income and held about 20 % of all United States wealth. Far less than previous levels. The middle class had home equity, free and clear assets, and money in the bank. The tide began to change. Jimmy Carter was blamed for a recession that was caused by a number of global circumstances including greed. Then a short sighted pig by the name of Arthur Laffer came along. He convinced Ronald Reagan to grant massive tax breaks to the rich and their respective industries. His half-baked theory was that by doing so, unprecedented levels of economic growth could be achieved. He was right. Unfortunately, he failed to see or acknowledge the big picture. That 'economic growth' and 'actual prosperity' are two different things. Jobs don't 'create' wealth. They only transfer it from one party to another. The devil is in the details. Reaganomics, gave the rich and their respective industries the incentive to 'expand' and 'create jobs'. But those products and services were over-priced and then sold or billed right back to the people. Often, without their knowledge, understanding, or consent. Certainly without a clue about how the economy REALLY works. All of this resulted in higher profits for those at the top and stagnant wages for everyone else. So with Reaganomics, the transfer of wealth from poor to rich was kicked back into high gear. Here we are 27 years later. Another perfect storm. The big one. Not only have we become a nation of consumer junkie credit card morons. But we have also become fat, stupid, and programmed to live by drug and doctor. We spend most of our spare time on the couch getting brainwashed by public figures. Even worse, those public figures have re-defined any logical standard we ever had for 'good will'. Mother Teresa is dead. America's favorite 'humanitarian' is now a filthy rich multi-media pig who reaped a billion dollar fortune from the middle class by making damn sure they stay on that couch long enough to watch her show and read her magazine. Transforming them into pathetic, naive, love-sick fools who turn around and buy any product or service endorsed by their idol. The same goes for Ellen Degeneres and her respective audience. In fact, every filthy rich well known public figure and every major industry have followed suit with a similar marketing strategy. Dumbing down our society and cashing in on bogus promises to make the world a better place. Amazing. EVERY big business, EVERY big celebrity, EVERY billionaire, and damn near every multi-millionaire on the planet have all taken up 'philanthropy' or 'good will'. Those with the most money, also have the most power, and influence by far. They own or influence every government, manage every major industry, and the lion's share of life sustaining resources. They literally rule our world. Still, every major problem of modern society gets worse by the day. The world's wealth is more concentrated than ever before. Her life sustaining resources are in high demand, more expensive than ever, and squandered by the rich on extravagant living. Meanwhile, families loose their homes, retirees loose their pensions, heroes loose their lives, crime is up, and red ink flows in nearly every community. The global economy is in a state of crisis. The prosperity of an entire world is about to be compromised. Still, those with the most power, money, influence, and 'good will'. promise to make it all better. If only we continue to support them and buy any product or service with their name on it. IT IS A SHAM. GOOD WILL HAS BECOME BIG BUSINESS.

The point about our government printing up more money was that it can't be done "on a whim" and that there are serious consequences for doing so (weak dollar, higher gas prices, inflation). I never said that it can't be or hasn't been done at all. Afterall, those loans from China weren't infused in the form of Chinese currency. They were infused in the form of our own. Not given to the middle or lower classes but instead to the banks in the form of credit. Its done nothing but perpetuate the problem. It never has been and never will be the answer. Sorry if I wasn't explicit enough the first time. The original draft of this particular rant was written over 2 years ago and intended to fit within 300 characters. I've been updating it weekly for the last year or so. Responding to a constant line of BS from the media and inserting those updates where they seem most appropriate. Anyway, I'm no English major. So if any of you want to re-organize or re-word this post, feel free to do so. Whatever it takes to make people understand.

11/05/08

A new president will be taking office soon. Backed up by a heavily democratic congress who have all campaigned on a promise to raise taxes on the rich. Unfortunately, this will be too little too late. Nowhere near enough to compensate for the incredible corruption of both major parties. Nowhere near enough to pay for the bailout. Nowhere near enough to stop that runaway train. There will be no change for the better. Obama's financial advisers are pigs. Warren Buffet is a pig. Oprah Winfrey is a pig. Obama himself is a multi-millionaire politician married to a multi-millionaire attorney. He has already run the most expensive political campaign in history. Some of it squandered on a $400 lobster feast for his wife. Financed for the mostpart by ordinary people who can't even afford a $400 lobster feast. It happened on Obama's watch. Probably more than once. He even had the nerve to ask those ordinary people to help pay off the campaign debt of another filthy rich multi-millionaire politician PIG (Hilary Clinton). I will admit that Barack Obama seems to have more character than most of his colleagues. Certainly more than Clinton, Gore, McCain, Palin, Bush, Cheney, Romney, Schwarzenager, Palosi, Kerry, Guliani, Kennedy, Bloomberg, or Edwards. He was probably a very good down to earth man at one time. The same goes for Joe Biden. Not anymore. Afterall, John McCain was also a very good down to earth man at one time. A true American hero. NOT ANYMORE. Now, he is a filthy rich politician pig married to a filthy rich big business pig. SOLD OUT. Mark my words: Obama and Biden will do the same. Whatever moral character they may have left, will be lost or heavily compromised while in office. Like the others, their administration will be riddled with scandals of greed and corruption. Like the others, they will succumb to the greatest epidemic ever faced by modern man. By far, the most intoxicating element of modern society. Greed. Simply the desire to get as rich as possible. It has the potential to blacken any heart. Break the will of any human being. Influse any government. Corrupt any society. Those who succumb to it are lost forever. You can not get through to these people. You can not make them understand. No matter how bad it gets for the little guy. No matter how many families loose their homes. No matter how many people go cold and hungry. No matter how many innocent children starve and die. No matter how much blood is shed. NO MATTER WHAT HAPPENS. The rich will ALWAYS blame the other guy. They will ALWAYS say or do whatever it takes to secure their own extreme personal wealth. When they 'give back', its only because they expect more in return. They will NEVER compromise their own bottom line. They will NEVER jeopardize their position in the 1 % club. They will NEVER stand for a more reasonable distribution of wealth and resources. They will NEVER acknowledge greed as a form of evil. They will NEVER acknowledge the potential it has to ruin EVERYTHING. They will NEVER admit the simple truth. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL. Ford, GM, and Dodge are begging the current admistration for some type of 'bridge loan' in order to avoid bankruptcy. The unions are begging for it. The people are divided. All because of a LIE. Again, we have been mislead. I'm not disputing their need. Its legit. I'm disputing the underlying cause. Competition my ass. China my ass. Japan my ass. Those factors are real but not fatal. They are also concequential. Not primary. Again, its GREED and CORRUPTION. Not only that of the auto executives and celebrities who demand millions to endorse the product but also within the health care industry. Thats right. Health care. The average doctor is a millionaire several times over. The average health care executive many times over. Both on average, are members of the 1 % club. AGAIN, ITS THEIR FAULT. If it weren't for the OBSCENE health care charges, brainwash plots, and artificially inflated market, then the financial burden placed on Ford, GM, and Dodge wouldn't be anywhere near as high. They could easily match the labor of Honda, Toyota, and Hyndai who's workers are younger on average and not so demanding when it comes to 'health care'. In this case, the little guy is partly to blame for their incredible ignorance. They smoke, drink, get fat, fall for the most OBVIOUS health care scams, live by drug and doctor, kiss greedy doctor ass, drive up the cost of their own health care, demand full coverage, and then strike if they don't get it. Retired US auto workers on average are now causing their former employers to incur several hundred thousand dollars PER RETIREE in health care expenses over the span of their retirement. Those in the current workforce are partly to blame as well. Not for greed. Their wages are reasonable. But their health care demands are well in excess. If they would simply open their eyes, acknowledge the incredible greed and corruption within the health care industry, get off the couch, get off the pharmaceuticals, and take care of their own bodies, then their own cost of living would be lower, their health would be better, the market for their product would be higher, and the financial burden placed on Ford, GM, and Dodge would be MUCH lower. I'm not discounting other factors like gas prices, competition, and the US product line. But greed and ignorance wreak havok like no other elements of our society. They cause or allow the cost of living to rise and the middle class to shrink along with the potential market for every major industry. In this case, they also raise the financial burden placed on US auto makers. Mark my words: One or two US automakers will go bankrupt. They will do so regardless of any 'bridge loan'. Other well known foreign auto makers will follow. The entire manufacturing industry will become a shell of its former self. Millions of retirees will be cut off entirely. ALL BECAUSE OF GREED, CORRUPTION, AND IGNORANCE. The ripple effect is profound. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL.

12/16/08

The feds have reduced their interest rate to an all time low. IT WON'T WORK. The same goes for any potential bailout for the US auto industry or any other. IT WON'T WORK. IT ABSOLUTELY POSITIVELY WILL NOT WORK. I would bet my life on it a hundred times over. Again, our own leaders refuse to acknowledge the single greatest drag on our economy. The single greatest underlying cause for the global economic crisis. GREED. They all refuse to acknowledge the downside. That idiot pig Arthur Laffer refuses to acknowledge it. Greenspan, Bernanke, and Paulson refuse to acknowledge it. Bush, Clinton, Kerry, Gore, Obama, and Kennedy refuse to acknowledge it. Lars Larson, Tammy Bruce, Lou Dobbs, Mike Gallagher, Suze Orman, Bill O'Reiley, Maria Bartiromo, Jim Kramer, Rush Limbaugh, and Jim Bohannon refuse to acknowledge it. Bill Gates, Warren Buffet, Oprah Winfrey, Richard Branson, and T-Boone Pickens refuse to acknowledge it. The same goes for all of their filthy-rich billionaire friends. All of the above are hypocrite pigs who don't have the guts to admit the simple truth. This is not brain surgery. For the mostpart, its simple math. WE ARE IN THIS MESS BECAUSE OF GREED. The world's richest one percent are now so incredibly rich that there simply isn't enough wealth circulating beneath them to sustain the global economy. Its on the brink of collapse. IT WILL COLLAPSE. We are now entering what will go down in history as the worst economic and cultural crisis of all time by far. You think its bad now? YOU AIN'T SEEN NOTHING YET. NOTHING. Trillions more in wealth/capital will be concentrated (Not lost. Concentrated.). Many more banks large and small will fail. Tens of millions will loose their savings (Transferred from poor to rich.). Even FDIC accounts will be forfeited (Yes they will. Yes they will. Yes they will.). Every major industry will become a shell of its former self. Unemployment will reach unprecedented levels. Millions of retirees will be cut off entirely. The lower class will become dominant. The financial aid system will fail miserably. The vast majority of those in need will have no access. Crime, poverty, and suicide will skyrocket. There will be riots and random acts of violence at banks, hospitals, and government buildings. The next generation will be left to fight in the crumbling streets over a shattered American dream. The rest of the world will have it even worse. So don't blame innocent people from other countries you idiots. Blame the rich. Blame the government. Blame the health care industry. Then blame yourselves for being so stupid for so many years. We have allowed a particular form of evil to grow out of control, intoxicate our society, consume our government, wreak havok on our own economy and culture, RUIN any chance we ever had at world prosperity, and jeopardize the very foundation of modern society. At the same time, we have allowed those who epitomize it to get away with calling themselves 'heroes' or 'humanitarians'. Putting a happy face on greed and dumbing down our society further in the process. THAT MEANS YOU. So wake up fellow citizens. Grow a spine. Don't fall for all of this 'good will' 'humanitarian' BS from the rich. IT IS A SHAM. NOTHING BUT TAX DEDUCTIBLE PR CRAP. Instead, look at the bottom line. IT'S F#@ & # % $ OBSCENE. NOW GET IT THROUGH YOUR THICK SKULLS YOU IDIOTS. WE ARE IN THIS MESS BECAUSE OF GREED. AMERICA'S RICHEST ONE PERCENT NOW OWN ALMOST 1/2 OF ALL UNITED STATES WEALTH. THE WORLD'S RICHEST ONE PERCENT NOW OWN OVER 40 % OF ALL WORLD WEALTH. THATS WAY TOO MUCH. THESE PEOPLE ARE NOT HEROES. THEY ARE NOT HUMANITARIANS. THEY ARE DISGUSTING HYPOCRITE SLOBS. IT DOES NOT MATTER HOW MUCH THEY GIVE BACK. THEY STILL KEEP WAY TOO MUCH. IT CAN'T WORK THIS WAY. IT ABSOLUTELY POSITIVELY CAN NOT WORK THIS WAY. IT NEVER HAS AND IT NEVER WILL. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL.

1 % CLUB PIGS: I've said it many times and I will say it many more. Greed is not the desire to break the law or intentionally oppress another human being. Greed is simply the desire to take more than your reasonable share of wealth or any limited resource. By doing so, you reduce the value of currency and raise the cost of living worldwide. You shrink the middle class and the potential market for every major industry. You expand the lower class and the need for financial aid. You cause a domino-effect of socio-economic problems. You literally cause innocent people to suffer and die. YOU MAKE WORLD PROSPERITY MATHEMATICALLY AND PHYSICALLY IMPOSSIBLE. It does not matter how much you 'give back'. It matters how much you KEEP. This is why I will go to my grave with nothing but bleeding and burning hatred for all of you. Thats right. I hate you and I'm not afraid to admit it. Afterall, its OK to hate a rapist. Its OK to hate a terrorist. I do. But I also hate wolves in sheep's clothing. THAT MEANS YOU. In fact, I consider the equation you stand for to be the greatest injustice of all time. It makes my f $ #@ & $ # blood boil. Jealousy my ass. Low self-esteem my ass. Self-pity my ass. Anyone who still thinks that after reading all of this is a F & #@ % $ # MORON. You disgusting hypocrite pigs. I've noticed the little shots you've been taking at me, a few others, and the cause we stand for. The psychological stunts. Thats right Will Smith, Angelina Jolie, Brad Pitt, Today Show pigs, Regis and Kelly, Ellen DeGeneres, Dr Phil, Oprah Winfrey, Lars Larson, Bill O'Reiley, Lou Dobbs, Ann Coulter, Tammy Bruce, Laura Ingraham. I've noticed the crafty elusive statements you've been making about greed and subtle insults directed at those very few of us who stand against it. I also know that you're well aware of this campaign and that you're trying to shut it down. You've even gone out of your way to specifically attack 'anonymous' bloggers in general. As if we are somehow less credible without a registered account. I'm not the slightest bit intimidated by any of it. YOUR TRICKS WILL NEVER WORK ON ME. Mark my words: No matter what you say or do, I will spend the rest of my life persecuting all of you for the disgusting, obscene, unjust, illogical, and immoral equation you stand for. I won't break any laws. I won't harm one hair on your rotten heads. Its not that I don't wish you were gone. I do. But I would never jeopardize such an important cause with a criminal act. NEVER. My only realistic goal is to make as many people as possible understand. Including future generations. I hope they look back on these words and spit on your graves. Afterall, they won't achieve any degree of world peace or prosperity until after they acknowledge GREED as a form of EVIL. Not until they acknowledge it with a number or some type of material standard. In the unlikely event they ever do, I hope they FINALLY come up with a system that works for the vast majority. One with a reasonable pay scale and caps on personal wealth. Otherwise, their system will fail over and over again. Just like the one you stand for. It can't work this way. It never has and it never will. NEVER. NO WAY IN HELL. So mark my words: I will not make excuses for a single one of you. I don't care how smart you think you are. I don't care how talented you think you are. I don't care how pretty you think you are. I don't care what you think you've done to earn up to fifty thousand times the pay of a firefighter, soldier, farmer, teacher, cop, truck driver, or garbageman. You're not worth it. I don't even care if your personal fortune fell out of the sky. If you're rich, I hate you. I don't care how much you 'give back'. I care how much you keep. Therefore, I will do everything within my power and within the law to expose your incredible greed and hypocrisy. If you want to break my will, then you're going to have to break my neck first. and if you pull a stunt like that, then a lot of people will know what happened to me and why. I've planned in detail for it. Most of you have no idea. Regardless, you pigs will not go down in history as 'heroes' or 'humanitarians'. Not if I can help it. We're in this mess primarily because of you. Its going to get MUCH worse primarily because of you. Thats what I believe and thats the message I intend to spread for the rest of my life. DEAL WITH IT.

1.21.09

A few more words about our new president and how certain public figures are using him to divert our attention, dumb down our society, shut my big mouth, and discredit the cause I stand for. I said it during the presidential campaign, I said it again in November, and I will say it again now. Our new president has more character than most of his colleagues. Much more. In fact, he puts Bush, Cheney, Rice, Clinton, Gore, Palosi, Reagan, Carter, Romney, Schwarzenegger, Bloomberg, and Kennedy to shame. He also puts nearly every living public figure to shame. Including those who claim to support him. By politician, public figure, and 1 % club standards, he is an angel. That being said, he is still a politician. Still a public figure. Still a member of the one percent club. Just a man. Like any other, he is a product not only of genetics but also of his environment. Like any other, he is intoxicated by certain elements of modern society. Including three of the worst. Fame, fortune, and power. All three have the potential to corrupt the mind, the heart, and the will of any human being. I can name only one who resisted the influence of all three. Mother Teresa died in 1998. The amazing standard she set died with her. Since then, an army of public figures and false heroes have sold out the very concept of 'good will'. Capitalizing on bogus promises to make the world a better place. The vast majority, on day one. The rest, along the way. Obama will do the same. Its just pathetic human nature. Put any man or woman on a stage or throne and something about them is different. Make any man or woman rich and something about them is different. I said it in November and I will say it again. Barack Obama was probably a very good down to earth man at one time. That was before the corrupt influence of fame, fortune, and power. Now, something about him is different. The same goes for Michelle Obama. They have already begun to sell out. Not only as necessary during the campaign because of our ignorant society and the fact that we won't elect ANYONE unless they look a certain way, dress a certain way, talk a certain way, kiss our babies, cut our taxes, tell us what we want to hear no matter how unrealistic, believe in God, follow a certain religion, support a certain industry, and show up on our favorite talk show with a fake smile, stupid jokes, and lame dance moves. That was bad enough. A sell-out necessary to get elected by a pathetic, ignorant, naive, short sighted, half-wit, couch potatoe, love-sick, celebrity junkie society. But also for profit before, during, and after the election. I already mentioned the $400 lunchtime lobster feast. Paid for mostly by ordinary people who were willing to cut into their modest bottom lines in order to help get their hero elected. SHE ATE IT. That was bad enough. Another sign of the times. As expected, its already getting worse. I have no problem with the armor plated presidential limo, the extra security, the inauguration, or the speech. I have no problem with the concept of a public celebration. But I do have a problem with the $35,000 ring, the $150,000 dress, the exotic crystal, the exotic food, the corporate plugs, NBC, MTV, BET, Beyonce, LL Cool J, Miley Cyrus, and every other filthy rich big business/big money/big celebrity hypocrite pig who had the nerve to fly in on their personal jets, stand there lavished in gold, and jewels, and fur, and $10,000 suits and pretend as if they and Obama share a desire to make the country and our world a better, more stable, more peaceful, and more 'just' place for all its people. Once again, promoting their own interests, dumbing down our society, and dancing their way around the single greatest underlying cause for the global economic crisis. GREED. The single greatest threat to modern society. GREED. Filthy, rotten, disgusting, self-centered, self-serving, black-hearted, hypocritical GREED. By doing so, they divert our attention AGAIN at a crucial time when we need more than ever to finally acknowledge GREED as a form of EVIL. At a time when we need more than ever to understand how it burns through moral character, spreads like wildfire, jumps from one industry to another, one person to another, and wreaks havoc on society worldwide. IT ABSOLUTELY POSITIVELY BEYOND ANY SHADOW OF A DOUBT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL. All of this happened on Obama's watch. I understand that he didn't plan most of the details. But he did know about many. He stood by and watched that event sell out to the highest bidder. He also bought the ring. He didn't even have a word to say about the double standards or many ethical contradictions. Afterall, he got elected. It was no longer necessary to kiss so much big business, big money, big celebrity, 1 % club ass. SELL-OUT. Now, that army of filthy-rich, self-centered, self-serving, self-promoting, hypocrite pigs are using Obama's hopeful words against those very few of us who know better. They even have the nerve to belittle and villainize people like me simply because we don't float around with happy uplifting thoughts and a smile on our face. They pretend as if our message can't possibly be legitimate if its expressed with anger, contempt, hatred, or fear. As if a 'positive' attitude is any match for that domino-effect of socio-economic problems caused almost entirely by GREED. I understand that Obama could never go on record with views anything like mine. He has no choice but to be tolerant of other filthy-rich and powerful public figures. I can even forgive the affiliation to some extent. I also believe that he truly does want some degree of government reform, ethics, accountability, peace, prosperity, stability, opportunity, and economic justice for all people. Like I said, by politician standards he is an angel. Which is probably the nicest thing I will ever say or even think about a rich and powerful public figure. I find it near impossible to hate the man. He is literally the only rich and powerful public figure on this planet that I don't hate. I also understand why he gave the uplifting speech. I really don't blame him for a single word of it. But I will not pretend as if a smile or 'positive' attitude is any match for that particular form of evil consuming our world. I will not choose 'hope' over 'fear' just because it feels nice. Of course, I want things to get better. Of course, I will try in vain to help make things better. Of course, I want something legitimate to celebrate. Something that we could all be a part of. Of course, I desperately want Obama to succeed. Of course, I desperately want all of my predictions to be proven wrong. I just don't see it happening. With or without Obama, we are still stuck on that runaway train. Its not going to be any better. Its not going to be alright. Not for the vast majority. Its going to get much worse and stay that way for a very long time. I fully expect to die knowing that I devoted myself to a cause which was lost from day one. Greed will always triumph over good will. The people will never take any real stand against it. The vast majority are pathetic, ignorant, naive, short sighted, brainwashed, pharmaceutical, medical-testing, couch potatoe, credit card, love-sick, celebrity junkie, powderpuffs. Perfect little victims. I hate to say that about my fellow citizens but its the truth. Afterall, they didn't see this coming. I tried to warn them and they still didn't see it. Others tried to warn them and they didn't see it. Albert Einstein tried to warn them SIXTY FIVE YEARS AGO. They didn't listen. They didn't see it. They did NOTHING to stop this or even slow it down. Even now, when the problem is so much more obvious. Even now, when the futures of their children are at stake. Still, they do NOTHING. Sometimes, I wonder if they are even worth fighting for. What the hell is the point? They will never listen. They will never wake up. They will never do simple math. They will never take a stand. There will never be economic justice. There will never be a more reasonable distribution of wealth and resources. Therefore, there will never be any degree of world peace or prosperity. Its only going to get worse. A LOT WORSE. GREED KILLS. IT WILL BE OUR DOWNFALL.

Gallup: Obama approval rate is rising (2009-02-28 13:04)

President Barack Obama's approval rating jumped up to 67 % from 59 % on Tuesday and 63 % last week according to the latest Gallup poll taken from Tuesday to Thursday.

Gallup suggests that the president's address to Congress was responsible for the rise noting a sharp comeback among Republicans from 27 % approval to 42 %.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

3.3 March

Obama raises hopes for climate change agreement (2009-03-01 12:40)

Signals from the Obama administration are raising hopes for a climate change pact to replace the Kyoto Protocol. President Barack Obama is reversing the course of the Bush administration and is eager to tackle the issue.

"The No. 1 thing will be for everyone to see that the U.S. is on an urgent and transformational path to a low carbon economy — that would have a galvanizing effect," John Ashton, the British foreign secretary's special representative for climate change, told the New York Times.

"In Kyoto we made a lot of promises to each other, but we hadn't done the domestic politics, and that is why Kyoto — though a valuable step forward — has ultimately been so fragile."

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama says the recovery plan will, in part, focus on clean renewable energy and fund research into breakthroughs in energy and save our planet from climate change. (Feb. 24)

 stv.tv

Obama's Backing Raises Hopes for Climate Pact

New York Times - 17 hours ago

But within weeks of taking office, President Obama has radically shifted the global equation, placing the United States at the forefront of the ...

Obama's signals on climate raising hopes for new treaty Austin American-Statesman

Obama raises hopes on climate treaty MarketWatch (press release)

India Impressed By Obama's Stand on Climate Change But Demands ... Red, Green, and Blue

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

What's Hot (2009-03-02 04:11:00)

Show your support for President Barack Obama by purchasing merchandise from Obama Shops. Obama T Shirts, buttons, novelties, cards, bumper stickers, apparel and more!

<http://www.cafepress.com/obamashops>

U.S. offers $900 million to help Gaza (2009-03-02 09:23)

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton announced Monday that the United States has offered more than $900 million in aid to the Palestinian people, although it does not want that money to reach Hamas.

"Only by acting now can we turn this crisis into an opportunity that moves us closer to our shared goals," Clinton said at a Gaza donors conference at the Red Sea resort city of Sharm el-Sheikh.

"By providing humanitarian assistance to Gaza, we also aim to foster conditions in which a Palestinian state can be fully realized."

The Palestinian Authority though said that reconstruction in Gaza would not be possible with the current Israeli embargo in place, and called on Israel to allow goods to flow into the area.

French leader Nicolas Sarkozy also called for a peace conference this summer in Europe with the goal of achieving peace by the end of 2009.

 ABC News

US offers $900 million to Palestinians

CNN International - 38 minutes ago

(CNN) – The United States has offered more than $900 million to help the Palestinian people, particularly those in Gaza, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton announced Monday.

Video: Gaza donors meet in Egypt france24english

[EMBED]

Donors pledge $3bn to rebuild Gaza Aljazeera.net

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama, Biden visit DOT as 'shovels hit the ground' (2009-03-03 13:46)

President Barack Obama and Vice President Joe Biden visited the DOT as infrastructure work begins as part of the new economic stimulus package.

"The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act will enable our nation to rebuild, retool and revitalize the vast network of roads, tunnels, bridges, rail systems, airports and waterways that we have long depended on to keep the economy moving and growing," transportation secretary Ray LaHood said.

"Our transportation infrastructure is critically important to our nation's economic health. We need to protect, preserve and invest in it to make sure it can meet the demands we all place on it now and in the future."

The stimulus bill is designed primarily to create new jobs in the face of a massive downturn in the employment picture. Infrastructure projects have been a proven job creator in the past, and Obama had promised to renew American's aging roads, bridges and other public works even before the financial crisis struck last year.

[EMBED]

 AFP

Obama, Biden Visit DOT

Washington Post - 4 hours ago

Welcome, President Obama, Vice President Biden. Thank you for coming to the Department of Transportation to mark this historic occasion.

Obama: 'We are seeing shovels hit the ground' USA Today

Emblems to Stamp Projects Funded by the Stimulus Package ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama restores process in protecting endangered species (2009-03-03 16:24)

President Barack Obama today signed a presidential memorandum to restore the scientific process in endangered species matters.

A regulation by George W. Bush just before leaving office threatened the established practice treating endangered species.

Obama said that there was a "false choice" between growing the economy and preserving the environment. "The work of scientists and experts in my administration, including here at the Interior Department, will be respected," Obama said. "With smart, sustainable policies, we can grow our economy today and preserve the environment."

Voice of America

Obama Reverses Bush Rule on Protection of Endangered Species

Washington Post - 4 hours ago

Barack Obama has signed a presidential memorandum to restore the scientific process in endangered species decisions. Obama says the process was undermined ...

Video: Obama Puts Bush Species Ruling on Hold AssociatedPress [EMBED]

'We can grow our economy and preserve the environment,' Obama says ... New York Times

Full text of President Obama's memo on endangered species Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama approval remains high (2009-03-04 08:57)

A new Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll continues to affirm that despite the sinking economy, President Barack Obama retains high popularity marks.

A record 70 % are very dissatisfied with the economy, and half of all adults are unhappy with their own financial situation.

Yet apparently, people still believe Obama is doing his best in tackling the crisis.

Likely they are comparing Obama's headlong approach to the inaction of the previous administration in its waning days. If Obama continues to be the action guy that he has been so far, I would not be surprised if he continues to get high ratings. And most people realize that the depth and breadth of the economic situation is such that no one would be able to solve it quickly.

Washington Post

Poll: Obama 'more popular than ever'

USA Today - 4 hours ago

Among the major news that's expected to come out today: More details about the Obama administration's $75 billion housing rescue plan.

Obama budget director urges patience with recovery The Associated Press

Obama Officials Defend Budget Washington Post

 BBC News

Obama at 60 % Approval in Poll; Rightbloggers Declare Fraud

Village Voice - 4 hours ago

Of course he was not happy with the methodology of the November 4 Obama poll, either. "The 'poll shows gap between popularity of president and his policies ...

Obama Gets Strong Support in Poll FOXNews

Most in state give Obama high ratings San Francisco Chronicle

Poll: Obama's rating at all-time high MSNBC

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

White House releases money for distressed homeowners (2009-03-04 16:30)

The Obama administration Wednesday began providing relief to distressed homeowners as part of its $275 billion housing stimulus plan .

Approximately is allotted to the $75 billion mortgage modification plan, which requires borrowers to show hardship before receiving funds.

Homeowners with mortgages on about 8.3 million properties were in distress at the end of 2008 and more trouble is on the way, First American CoreLogic said.

The housing market continues to flounder as prices sag and buyers in most areas are scarce. There are still many homeowners with adjustable rate mortgages that will reset sometime in the future resulting in significantly higher mortgage payments.

 ABC News

US launches $75 bln mortgage plan to aid homeowners

Reuters - 1 hour ago

By David Lawder and Lynn Adler WASHINGTON/NEW YORK, March 4 (Reuters) - The Obama administration on Wednesday launched a $75 billion foreclosure relief plan, as new data showed one in five US homeowners with mortgages owe more than their house is worth ...

Answers to questions about Obama's foreclosure relief plan Kansas City Star

Will Obama's housing plan help me? Salt Lake Tribune

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama holding health care summit (2009-03-05 09:06)

President Barack Obama is hosting a health care summit at the White House to discuss his new plan. Obama has not yet released specific details of the plan as he apparently wants to review opinions in Congress first on the best way to move forward. Media is reporting that the president will push very hard for a universal health care plan by the end of this year – an ambitious target date considering past failures in this area.

"The cost of health care now causes a bankruptcy in America every 30 seconds. By the end of the year, it could cause 1.5 million Americans to lose their homes," Obama said according to a released excerpt of his opening remarks at the summit.

"If we want to create jobs and rebuild our economy, then we must address the crushing cost of health care this year, in this administration. Making investments in reform now, investments that will dramatically lower costs, won't add to our budget deficits in the long term – rather, it is one of the best ways to reduce them," another excerpt said.

 Voice of America

Obama summit eyes cure for US health care woes

CNN - 55 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) – The Obama administration is hosting a summit Thursday designed to cure a frustrated patient battling a persistent ailment: the United States and its rising health care costs.

Video: Obama Health Care Summit CBS [EMBED]

Obama begins health reform drive with W.House forum Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Les Reves de Lucie (2009-03-08 09:58:00)

Mister The President of The United States,

Health for everybody is a very important point in a country where most of the people can't have any access to a good health cover. So I want to congratulate you for instauring social cover for every americans. Mister Obama, you represent a great and good change for America.

Houses passes mortgage relief plan (2009-03-05 17:43)

The House of Representatives approved a new bill that would allow bankruptcy judges to reduce homeowners' mortgage debt as a last resort to avoid foreclosure. The bill passed 234-191 on Thursday. Bankers fought against the so-called "cramdown" bill despite amendments that restrict it to existing primary residence mortgages, and not future loans.

The Senate is expected to consider the House bill soon. Michael Calhoun, president of the Center for Responsible Lending, praised the House version of the bill.

"Hundreds of thousands of families have lost their homes unnecessarily and tens of millions of neighboring families have watched the value of their homes plummet. We urge the Senate to act quickly to approve this bill and put it on President Obama's desk for his signature," Calhoun said.

X The Associated Press

House approves mortgage bankruptcy overhaul

Reuters - 1 hour ago

By Kevin Drawbaugh WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Bankruptcy judges could cut the mortgage debt of homeowners in bankruptcy court as a last resort to avert foreclosure, under a bill approved by a 234-191 vote on Thursday in the US House of Representatives.

House Passes Mortgage Bankruptcy Bill FOXNews

House Roll Call: How they voted on a bankruptcy home loan bill Los Angeles Times

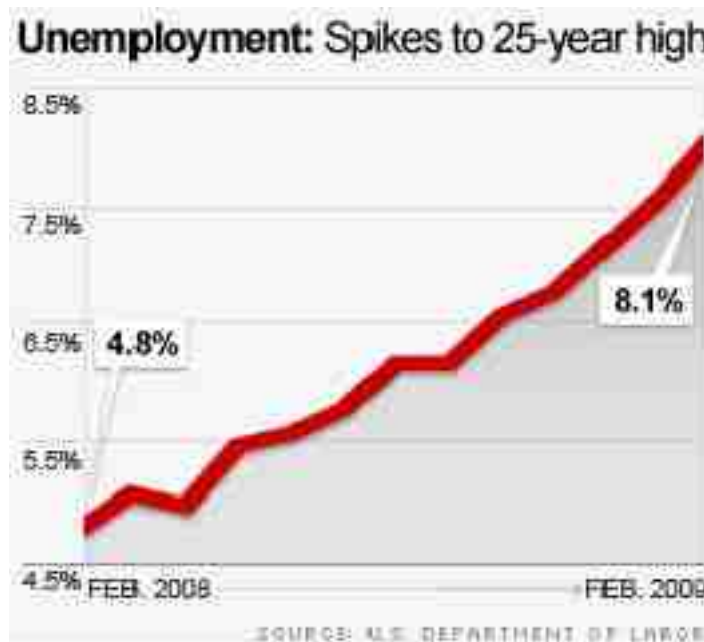

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Jobless rate continues climb (2009-03-06 09:28)

More bad news on the depth of the economic downturn.

Unemployment has reached a 25-year high. Employers cut 651,000 jobs in February bringing the six month total to 3.3 million job losses.

And the word is out that the nation's major banks are, for all intents and purposes, insolvent and will not pass the government's "stress test."

The similarities between the current situation and that in the early 1930s is uncanny, and it may not be long before the "D" word will come to replace "recession" in describing the current crisis.

X ABC News

Payrolls sink 651000, jobless rate soars to 8.1 %

MarketWatch - 31 minutes ago

By Greg Robb, MarketWatch WASHINGTON (MarketWatch) – The weakness in US labor markets has gathered extraordinary momentum, wiping away millions of jobs over the past four months alone, the Labor Department reported Friday.

US loses another 651000 jobs Bizjournals.com

US ECON: February Payrolls Fall 651000; Unemployment At 8.1 % Forbes

 Boston Globe

Happening now: Obama discusses economy again

USA Today - 36 minutes ago

President Obama is on stage in Columbus, speaking to police academy graduates. He's using the occasion to talk again about the ailing economy and to point to the police recruits' jobs that have been saved by funding from the $787 billion stimulus ...

Obama to speak to Ohio police recruits The Associated Press

Obama touts effects of economic stimulus package in Ohio guardian.co.uk

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Howard Dean considred for surgeon general (2009-03-06 20:24)

CNN is reporting that Dr. Howard Dean is under consideration to replace Dr. Sanjay Gupta as President Barack Obama's nominee for surgeon general.

Gupta withdrew Thursday saying he wants to focus more on his family and career as a surgeon.

Dean, a former presidential candidate, ended a four-year term as head of the Democratic Party this year. His accomplishments include helping the Democrats recapture both Congress and the White House.

The surgeon general head U.S. Public Health Service and is the top federal government spokesperson on matters of public health.

E! Online

Dean under consideration for surgeon general: report

Reuters - 3 hours ago

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Howard Dean, a practicing physician before entering politics, was under consideration by the Obama administration for the post of US surgeon general, CNN reported Friday.

CNN's Dr. Sanjay Gupta withdraws as surgeon general candidate Chicago Tribune

Transcript: Gupta talks to King about surgeon general decision CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama heading for Turkey (2009-03-07 13:04)

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton announced today that President Barack Obama will visit Turkey next month. Clinton made the announcement at an Ankara press conference in Ankara, where she is on an official visit. The White House said that Obama has not decided on whether to give the speech from a Muslim capital that he promised in his first 100 days.

In addition to Turkey, other possible sites for the speech include Morocco, Egypt and Indonesia. "Planning for the Turkey visit is just beginning. It will be an important opportunity to visit a NATO ally and discuss shared challenges," a senior administration official said. "It will also provide an opportunity to continue the president's dialogue with the Muslim world, a dialogue he started immediately and intends to maintain throughout his presidency."

During his campaign, Obama pledged to mend relations with the Muslim world that he said were damaged during the Bush administration. The president's first television interview after taking office was with the Arab television network Al-Arabiya.

 Boston Globe

Obama to Visit Turkey Next Month

Washington Post - 3 hours ago

By Anne E. Kornblut Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton announced today that President Obama will visit Turkey next month – but administration ...

Obama to visit Turkey, key on Iraq, Afghanistan The Associated Press

President Obama to Visit Turkey Within Weeks Voice of America

Obama Plans to Visit NATO Ally Turkey, Clinton Says Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Karzai praises Obama on engaging Taliban (2009-03-07 21:23)

Afghanistan's President Hamid Karzai on Sunday hailed President Barack Obama's call for engaging the Taliban.

"It is very good news that the American president, his Excellency Obama, has backed talks with those Taliban that he termed as moderate," Karzai said at an International Women's Day event in Kabul.

"This is the Afghan government's long stand. We wanted this and we support and stand with them to bring peace and stability to this land. Only those who have left their homes and are fighting their country because they are forced to, or are scared (of being arrested) or for other reasons, they are welcome (to join talks)."

Many analysts feel that a purely military solution in Afghanistan is no longer tenable as the Taliban has been growing in strength across most of the country.

[EMBED]

Hamid Karzai, the Afghan president, has requested that national elections, which were due to take place in August, be brought forward to April so as to be in line with the constitution. Inside Story asks: Is Karzai respecting the constitutional deadline, as his supporters claim, or is he attempting to gain an unfair advantage, as his opponents suggest? (Al-Jazeera)

 Washington Post

Karzai hails US call for engaging Taliban

PRESS TV - 43 minutes ago

Afghanistan's president has welcomed the new US administration's readiness to engage 'moderate elements' of the Taliban in peace talks.

Karzai welcomes Obama call to reach out to Taliban The Associated Press

Afghan leader Karzai backs Obama's call on Taliban Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama lifting stem cell research ban (2009-03-08 20:40)

President Barack Obama is reversing George W. Bush's ban on stem cell research but leaving it to Congress to decide on whether the legislative ban on federal financing for human embryo experiments should also be overturned. The ban, known as the Dickey-Wicker amendment, was legislated in 1996, and has been renewed yearly since then. Religious groups have opposed the research likening it to abortion since it uses discarded human embryos. Supporters say that the ban has hindered scientific research that could help treat many diseases and injuries.

 CTV.ca

Obama Is Leaving Some Stem Cell Issues to Congress

New York Times - 11 hours ago

The latest on President Obama, the new administration and other news from Washington and around the nation. Join the discussion. The officials, who provided ...

Video: Religious groups criticise US stem cell reversal - 09 Mar 09 Al Jazeera [EMBED]

Obama Aims to Shield Science From Politics Memo to Accompany Stem ... Washington Post

Obama Ending Bush's Stem Cell Research Ban CBS News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Report: Obama to tap Van Jones as Green Jobs Czar (2009-03-09 14:28)

A number of media reports suggest that Van Jones has been tapped as President Obama's Green Jobs Czar.

Van Jones is a great pick for this job. He is the founding president of Green For All and a senior fellow with the Center for American Progress. He is also the author of The Green Collar Economy. He has been a leading advocate for the creation of new "green" jobs.

In his book, Jones says: "If you're going to green our cities, you should green first those communities where the buildings are the leakiest, where the poor people live in drafty old buildings. You should put solar panels up there first. You should put the community gardens where people can least afford food.”

 YES! Magazine

Van Jones: Beyond the Politics of Confrontation

YES! Magazine - 47 minutes ago

Then Barack Obama—seeing the potential of this pro-democracy movement, this concern for green energy, the incredible work Al Gore had done, ...

Van Jones tapped as Green Czar Mother Nature Network

Czar Bazaar: Van Jones to Run Green Jobs? Wall Street Journal Blogs

Jackson native to be a member of Obama’s administration Jackson Sun

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama calls for action on education system, teachers (2009-03-10 12:10)

During the campaign, President Barack Obama promised to reform the education system .

Speaking at the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Tuesday, Obama talked about moving beyond partisan bickering to overhaul the system.

”For decades, Washington has been trapped in the same stale debates that have paralyzed progress and perpetuated our educational decline. Too many supporters of my party have resisted the idea of rewarding excellence in teaching with extra pay, even though it can make a difference in the classroom. Too many in the Republican Party have opposed new investments in early education, despite compelling evidence of its importance.”

Obama said that Americans need an effective education system to compete in the world economy. He stressed the responsibility of teachers in improving education standards.

”Let me be clear: If a teacher is given a chance but still does not improve, there is no excuse for that person to continue teaching,” Obama said. ”I reject a system that rewards failure and protects a person from its consequences.”

 FOXNews

Obama Pitches Strategy to Improve Teaching Corps, Overhaul US ...

Washington Post - 3 hours ago

President Obama says the US must improve education to stay competitive in the world economy. Obama spoke about education Tuesday at the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

Video: Obama: US Must Improve Schools to Compete The Associated Press [EMBED]

Obama wants to overhaul education system from 'cradle to career' CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-12-12 18:27:22)
yoo.. attractive post

Congress approves $410 billion spending bill (2009-03-10 17:21)

The U.S. Congress on Tuesday sent $410 billion bill to President Barack Obama against Republican objections over the price tag for this quarter's government funding.

"It takes care of these government agencies that have been, over the Bush years, so underfunded," said Democratic Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid.

Many Republicans resisted the bill because it raised spending by 8 percent above fiscal 2008 levels.

The bill also begins lifting restrictions on travel and trade to Cuba – something promised by Obama during the campaign season.

 FOXNews

Congress sends last 2009 spending bill to Obama

Reuters - 40 minutes ago

By Jeremy Pelofsky WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The Democratic-controlled US Congress on Tuesday approved a $410 billion bill to fund most of the government through September 30, sending it to President Barack Obama despite Republican objections to the price ...

Senate Passes Huge Spending Bill for Obama FOXNews

Congress Gives Final Approval to $410 Billion Spending Package Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama has goals for Group of 20 summit (2009-03-11 10:29)

President Barack Obama is expected to provide leadership at the Group of 20 summit in London on April 2.

The global economy is in the doldrums and many analysts fear that nations working independently of each other will not be able to solve what is a crisis of the international economy.

Obama said he had two main goals for the summit – to assure "concerted action around the globe to jump-start the economy," and to "make sure we are moving forward on a regulatory reform agenda" to prevent future financial meltdowns.

European nations, however, have rejected Obama's calls to stimulate their economies with increased spending.

American consumers are not likely, and probably are unable to bail out the world economy. It's not only a matter of them being unable to get the financing for really high-charged spending; they simply do not have the kind of spending power even under ideal conditions to meet the current demand. A lot of the money needed for recovery is actually tied up in the derivatives market.

 BBC News

Q & A: Obama hopes to show leadership at G20

Reuters - 26 minutes ago

(Reuters) - President Barack Obama will dive into international economics next month when he attends a summit in London of the Group of 20 major developed and emerging economies.

Obama urges allies to act together to jump-start global economy Los Angeles Times

Obama Says 'Concerted' G-20 Action Needed on Economy Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama, Hillary Clinton honor women's right advocates (2009-03-11 20:39)

First Lady Michelle Obama and Secretary of State Hillary Clinton honored women from around the world to celebrate International Women's Day.

The two presented Women of Courage Awards at the State Department to celebrate women who have fought for women's rights in their countries. Honorees came from Afghanistan, Guatemala, Iraq, Malaysia, Niger, Russia and Uzbekistan.

Obama said the recipients taught the world three lessons: "One, as women we must stand up for ourselves. The second, as women we must stand up for each other. And finally as women we must stand up for justice for all."

Award recipient Dato' Ambiga Sreenevasan praised Clinton for being a role model for women: "Your immortal words that human rights are women's rights and women's rights resonate with all of us here."

 ABC News

Michelle Obama, Hillary Clinton team up to honor women

CNN International - 41 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) - The power of women hit the State Department on Wednesday when first lady Michelle Obama joined Secretary of State Hillary Clinton to celebrate champions of women's rights around the world.

At the State Department, Sisterhood Washington Post

Secretary Clinton, First Lady Honor International Women's Rights ... ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-03-11 22:31:00)

I am happy the women are out there making a statement but I am concerned with the economy in WY. I cant find a blog that pertains to the oilfield business in Wyoming so I am posting this message here in hopes that the democrats will take notice. Our oilfield business has crashed. Everyone is out of work!!!! I realized back east has taken a hit but my concern is within my own state. 6 months ago, right before the election we were making money. The minimum wage to work on a drilling rig is 25.00/hr now we have nothing. Families are going broke and we need to start drilling again. We drill for natural gas out here. The big companies are enviromentally safe and we protect our environment for future generations so why are we shutting down??? We need to get back to the way things were and DRILL!! My goodness we need to drill for natural gas and oil on our own lands!!! President obama, starting DRILLING!! we need help out here in Wyoming. Please help us!!

Obama's climate plan might face Democratic opposition (2009-03-12 09:28)

President Barack Obama 's climate change plan might run into some trouble according to some Senate Democratic budget leaders.

Republicans are the only ones opposing the plan as some conservative Democrats are also worried that industrial states will be hard hit by Obama's cap-and-trade proposal.

The administration is considering horse-trading with the conservatives or so-called "Blue Dog Democrats" during budget negotiations in order to get the climate plan through as part of an overall deal.

 Voice of America

Some Dems doubt Obama climate plan will pass

Houston Chronicle - 13 hours ago

By JENNIFER A. DLOUHY WASHINGTON — Key Senate Democrats on Wednesday cast doubt on whether Congress would approve President Barack Obama's plan to control ...

Cap and Horse Trade: Obama's Uphill Battle for Climate Bill Wall Street Journal Blogs

Senate budget leaders warn against using spending bill to move ... New York Times

Budget Process Likely to Be Bitter and Sweet CQPolitics.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama reaches out to military families at Ft. Bragg (2009-03-12 16:54)

First lady Michelle Obama visited military families at the Fort Bragg army base in North Carolina today.

In her first major advocacy mission, Mrs. Obama called on Americans to reach out to military families.

"Our soldiers and their families have done their duty — and they do it without complaint," Mrs. Obama said. "And we as a grateful nation must do ours — do everything in our power to honor them by supporting them."

Mrs. Obama has said she wants to focus on military families as first lady.

Mrs. Obama also gave her first network television interview since the inauguration at Fort Bragg with ABC's "Good Morning America."

 ABC News

Michelle Obama Shines Her Spotlight on Military Families

Washington Post - 3 hours ago

And on her first solo out-of-town trip as first lady, Michelle Obama went to Fort Bragg Military base in North Carolina, where she was greeted by cheers ...

Michelle Obama tours, mingles at NC Army base The Associated Press

Michelle Obama focuses on military families Boston Globe

Michelle Obama Visits With Soldiers And Their Families CBS News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama to tackle earmarks (2009-03-13 08:04)

President Barack Obama on Wednesday morning called on Congress to pass reforms that would restrict earmarks and increase transparency of the process.

Obama does not intend to eliminate earmarks, and he did not make campaign promises to fight the practice. Indeed, Obama himself was the recipient of a number of earmarks during his time as Illinois senator. However, Sen. John McCain, his Republican opponent during the election, made a big deal of earmarks, which he opposes.

"Done right, earmarks give legislators the opportunity to direct federal money to worthy projects that benefit people in their district, and that's why I have opposed their outright elimination," Obama said.

The current spending bill is loaded with earmarks, which Obama has indicated were excessive.

"I am signing an imperfect omnibus bill because it is necessary for the ongoing functions of government," Obama said. "But I also view this as a departure point for more far-reaching change."

Voice of America

Obama Announces Plan for Earmark Reform

FOXBusiness - 2 hours ago

President Obama announced his plan to reform earmarks, the pet projects inserted into bills by legislators in an effort to get bills passed and satisfy ...

He'll Quit Tomorrow Washington Post

Republicans won't blindly follow Obama Las Vegas Sun

Obama signs earmark-laden spending bill San Francisco Chronicle

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama drops "enemy combatants" term (2009-03-14 08:31)

The Obama administration said Friday that Guantanamo detainees will no longer be listed as "enemy combatants." The president is also dropping the Bush administration claim that the commander in chief has the right to detain suspects without trial.

However, the White House is retaining the practice of holding Guantanamo's detainees indefinitely.

Lawyers fighting against the government's detention policies, though, said that things remain practically the same despite the changes.

Reactions to the announcement differed sharply. Military Families United saw the change as a "drastic dismantling of the war on terror." The American Civil Liberties Union called it "deeply troubling" because it retained an "overly broad interpretation" of who can be held as a war prisoner. (LA Times)

 Voice of America

Obama administration dropping 'enemy combatant' term

MiamiHerald.com - 5 hours ago

Seeking to distance itself from the Bush administration, the Justice Department is omitting 'enemy combatant' from its filing that defines detention of prisoners at Guantánamo.

No more 'enemy combatants' at Guantanamo Bay Los Angeles Times

US Won't Label Terror Suspects as 'Combatants' New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

wc#3 (2009-03-14 12:04:00)

Rush Limbaugh predicted he wouldn't be able to close Gitmo. There's no place to put these guys, unless Nancy Pelosi has a room at her mansion...

Taxpayer money going toward AIG bonuses (2009-03-15 15:22)

Bankers complained about mortgage relief for homeowners, but now we learn that AIG, which received $170 billion in federal bailout money intended on paying $165 million in bonuses and compensation to its officers.

Under government pressure, AIG said it would cut bonuses by at least 30 percent, but many in Washington are calling for legal action.

In a letter Sunday to Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner, U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold called on the Obama administration to explore "legal options" to stop the payments.

"I write to ask why any bonuses would be legally required, given the company's abysmal performance," says Feingold, D-Wisconsin. Rep. Barney Frank, D-Massachusetts, told Fox News that bailout recipients should follow stricter compensation rules, called on Congress to see if the payouts are "legally recoverable."

"We can't just violate legal obligations, I understand that," Frank said. "But I do want to find out at what point these legal obligations were incurred. Who said, and at what point, 'We're going to give these bonuses no matter what?' And I do think it's inappropriate for those people to stay in power at that company."

FOXNews

Widespread Backlash Over AIG Bonuses

ABC News - 44 minutes ago

By JOHN HENDREN The Obama administration had one word today for insurance giant AIG's plans to award senior executives hundreds of millions of dollars in bonuses and retention pay: "outrageous."

AIG's insistence on bonuses raises ire in Washington CNN

Administration, Lawmakers Turn Up Heat on AIG Over Bonuses Voice of America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Steve (2009-03-15 19:19:00)

So apparently everyone's surprised? It's as if AIG asked "who can we make fools of?", and our Congress jumped up and raised their hands and said "pick me, pick me". Doesn't anyone think that a lot of this AIG debacle could have been avoided if anyone in Congress had thought to ask some questions, to do some homework, to lay down some stipulations? But no, as long as they're throwing money - ANYWHERE - Congress thinks they're doing their job.

Pro (2009-03-16 01:28:00)

AIG = Allowing Irreversible Greed.

AIG = All in Greed.

AIG = Arn't I Greedy.

AIG = A $ #holes, in general.

This is sick. Why in the world are we helping these companies that keep sending millions to people who do not know how to run a company? They cry yet get paid millions on the "average joes" taxes. Furthermore, I fear this is just the tip of the iceberg. Look what Enterprise rent-a-car did to get bailout funds:

<http://www.butasforme.com/2009/02/25/alert-enterprise-rent-a-car-may-have-fired-employees-as-fake-evidence-when-lobbying-for-bailout-money/>

Not to make excuses for these people, but the bailouts are making crooks out of everyone that touches the money.

Anonymous (2009-03-16 08:51:00)

The bonus payout excesses at AIG are just the tip of the iceberg of what is happening with the other Wall Street bailouts including Bank of America. Working productive Americans are bailing out the same crooks that destroyed our economy along with 45 % of the wealth in the world and now the American taxpayers and our children will be forced to live a far lower standard of living with reduced prosperity and opportunities due to this but only we pay the price.

Washington has bailed out the banks, Wall Street & their Washington special interests and much of the cost is added to the national debt to be paid by this and future generations while real estate and investments continue to fall. Find out what a growing repudiate the debt movement could mean for treasuries, the dollar, gold and the stock market and how this is a better alternative than Washington's plans to monetize the debt in future years and tax and destroy our remaining wealth by depreciating the dollar.

The Campaign to Cancel the Washington National Debt By 12/21/2012 Constitutional Amendment is starting now in the U.S.
See: <http://www.facebook.com/group.php?gid=67594690498> &ref=ts

Obama reverses Bush food safety policy (2009-03-15 17:46)

President Barack Obama said yesterday he is forming a Food Safety Working Group to "upgrade our food safety laws for the 21st century," and he appointed former New York City health chief Margaret A. Hamburg as Food and Drug Administration commissioner.

"There are certain things only a government can do," Obama said. "And one of those things is ensuring that the foods we eat, and the medicines we take, are safe and do not cause us harm."

The Obama administration fully banned the butchering of disabled cattle reversing a move by the Bush administration that allowed exceptions to the rule.

"The closing of the loophole improves the welfare of animals and strengthens the safety of our nation's food supply," the Humane Society said in a statement.

Obama said in his taped address that many of the nation's food-safety laws "have not been updated since they were written in the time of Teddy Roosevelt," and that the Bush administration underfunded and understaffed the FDA, which is responsible for handling food safety.

Referring to his own children, Obama said: "No parent should have to worry that their child is going to get sick from their lunch, just as no family should have to worry that the medicines they are buying will cause them harm,."

 ABC News

Obama Targets Food Safety

Washington Post - 22 hours ago

President Obama meets with Brazilian President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva in the Oval Office, and interpreters work behind them. Lula told reporters last week that he hoped to see the United States work to ease what he says have often been hostile ...

Video: Obama Announces FDA Pick in Address The Associated Press [EMBED]

Obama Vows to Overhaul Food Safety ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama orders Treasury to block A.I.G. bonuses (2009-03-16 09:58)

President Barack Obama on Monday said he ordered the Treasury Department to try to block A.I.G., a corporation that has received substantial bailout money, from giving large bonuses to its staff.

"In the last six months, A.I.G. has received substantial sums from the U.S. Treasury," Mr. Obama said. He ordered Treasury Secretary Timothy F. Geithner "to use that leverage and pursue every single legal avenue to block these bonuses and make the American taxpayers whole."

Speaking in the White House East Room Obama said A.I.G.'s financial woes were due to recklessness and greed."

"Under these circumstances, it's hard to understand how derivative traders at A.I.G. warranted any bonuses at all, much less $165 million in extra pay," Obama said. "How do they justify this outrage to the taxpayers who are keeping the company afloat?"

 ABC News

Obama Orders Treasury Chief to Try to Block AIG Bonuses

New York Times - 30 minutes ago

By HELENE COOPER WASHINGTON - President Obama vowed to try to stop the faltering insurance giant American International Group from paying out hundreds of millions of dollars in bonuses to executives, as the administration scrambled to avert a populist ...

Obama: AIG can't justify 'outrage' of exec bonuses The Associated Press

Obama expresses outrage over AIG bonus payments Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Clinton warned on Pakistan aid if justice not reinstated (2009-03-16 14:22)

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton warned Pakistan's leadership over the weekend that aid could be if Islamabad does not defused a crisis over a top judge, U.S. officials said Monday.

Pakistan's government announced on Monday it would reinstate Iftikhar Chaudhry as chief justice.

Clinton told reporters that reinstating Chaudhry was an important move toward reconciliation in Pakistan.

 ABC News

Clinton warned Pakistan of aid cut if no deal

Reuters - 47 minutes ago

By Sue Pleming WASHINGTON, March 16 (Reuters) - US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton told Pakistan's president and opposition leader over the weekend US aid could be at risk unless they defused a crisis over a top judge, US officials said on Monday.

AP Analysis: Zardari pays to end Pakistan crisis The Associated Press

Big win for Pakistan protesters Christian Science Monitor

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama goes on offensive for budget (2009-03-16 19:02)

President Barack Obama is gearing up his media campaign and supporters for the budget battle in Congress. Millions of emails have been sent to supporters urging them to call their Congressional representatives. Obama is using the same campaign techniques that won during the election to help push his agenda through Congress. The president is heading to California where he will appear at town hall meetings and make a guest appearance on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno."

 Boston Globe

Obama using campaign tools to promote agenda

Chicago Tribune - 38 minutes ago

By Peter Nicholas and Janet Hook | Washington Bureau WASHINGTON - President Barack Obama's millions of campaign supporters are receiving e-mails urging them to call members of Congress.

Sonoran Bank VP Frank Coumides meets with President Obama at White ... Bizjournals.com

Day 56: Obama Takes Aim At AIG CBS News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama notes Irish roots (2009-03-17 12:19)

President Barack Obama noted that he discovered his distant Irish roots only while campaigning to become president. He made the remarks while greeting Irish Ambassador Michael Collins at the Oval Office today.

"My mother's family can be traced back to Ireland," President Obama said, "and it turns out that our first Irish ancestor came from the same county that Taoiseach once represented. So we may be cousins. We haven't sorted that through yet. But even if blood we're not related by culture and affinity ... by friendship we are certainly related." "Although I think it's wonderful that you visited the Oval Office and Washington, what you're really missing out is the South Side Irish Parade in Chicago, which I think is one of the great events," Obama said.

The president also mentioned the recent violence in Northern Ireland and called for peace to prevail.

 CBC.ca

President Obama: Irish Prime Minister Brian Cowen and He "May Be ...

ABC News - 3 hours ago

President Obama welcomed Irish Ambassador Michael Collins to the Oval Office today with some interesting news. "My mother's family can be traced back to ...

Why Does Obama Have the Luck o' the Irish? DiversityInc.com (subscription)

Barack Obama's Northern Ireland envoy about to be named Telegraph.co.uk

Barack Obama's Irish Ancestry Oneindia

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-03-18 04:01:00)

"The weight of this crisis will not determine the destiny of this nation. The answers to our problems don't lie beyond our reach. They exist in our laboratories and universities; in our fields and our factories; in the imaginations of our entrepreneurs and the pride of the hardest-working people on Earth. Those qualities that have made America the greatest force of progress and prosperity in human history we still possess in ample measure. What is required now is for this country to pull together, confront boldly the challenges we face, and take responsibility for our future once more.

<http://www.barackobama.totalh.com/current-work/74-obama-qwe-will-rebuild-we-will-recover-we-will-emerge-stronger-than-beforeq.html>

Obama firing up grassroots over budget (2009-03-18 07:58)

President Barack Obama is mobilizing his grassroots supporters to rally behind his new budget proposal as it is debated in Congress.

Obama's election organization has changed its name from Obama for America to Organizing for America and is counting on its large base of supporters to help the president advance his agenda.

An email has been sent out to the huge Obama database of volunteers and supporters urging them to participate in a neighborhood canvas.

"There will be some trial and error," said David Plouffe, former Obama campaign manager who is now helping direct the Organizing for America project.

"It is not a political campaign, where the ultimate goal is one 'yes' vote on Election Day," he added, "but simply the conversation — making sure these important debates do not happen solely on cable TV among Washington politicians, but are occurring on doorsteps and diners." The president's budget is widely opposed by Republicans and even some members of his own party have expressed reservations over the price tag. The flareup over A.I.G. bonuses makes the situation very tricky for the Obama team. They need to convince the public that the White House has their interests in mind, more so than those of the corporate elite.

 WA today

On the White House Can Obama's Grass-Roots Supporters Fire Up the ...

New York Times - 3 hours ago

By JEFF ZELENY The latest on President Obama, the new administration and other news from Washington and around the nation. Join the discussion.

Obama calls on Americans to support budget The Associated Press

Tactic May Break Obama's Bipartisan Pledge, GOP Says Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's commerce pick faces hearing (2009-03-18 08:20)

President Obama's choice for commerce secretary faces confirmation hearings today before the committee before the Senate Commerce Committee.

Former Washington state Governor Gary Locke said he would back tough enforcement of US trade laws if confirmed. "More than free trade, though, I believe in fair trade. That means we must enforce our trade agreements and place a high value on environmental, labor and safety standards," Locke said in prepared remarks for his confirmation hearing.

"We must look over the horizon and prepare for the new economy that will emerge when the recession passes. Simply put, we must rebuild, retool and reinvent our national strategies for sustained economic expansion."

Locke is Obama's third choice for U.S. commerce chief after New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson and New Hampshire Senator Judd Gregg both withdrew their nominations.

Locke served two terms as governor from 1997 to 2005 and has since worked for a Seattle law firm on international trade issues. Locke is of Chinese American descent.

 Reuters

Obama commerce pick vows strict trade enforcement

Reuters - 54 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Former Washington state Governor Gary Locke said on Wednesday he would insist on tough enforcement of US trade laws if confirmed by the Senate to lead the US Commerce Department.

Blog: Reporter Scott MacFarlane, Covering Locke Confirmation Hearings KIROtv.com

Locke faces Commerce confirmation hearing KNDO/KNDU

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama signs UN gay rights agreement (2009-03-18 16:44)

The White House is reversing the Bush administration's policy by signing the UN declaration calling for decriminalization of homosexuality, the State Department announced today.

"The United States is an outspoken defender of human rights and critic of human rights abuses around the world," State Department spokesman Robert Wood told reporters.

"As such, we join with other supporters of this statement, and we will continue to remind countries of the importance of respecting the human rights of all people in all appropriate international fora."

 SheWired

In turnaround, US signs UN gay rights document

Reuters - 4 hours ago

By Sue Pleming WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The United States, in a reversal of Bush administration policy, has decided to sign on to a UN declaration that calls for the decriminalization of homosexuality, the State Department said on Wednesday.

US endorses UN gay rights text The Associated Press

Obama: Decriminalize Homosexuality Worldwide ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama: First sitting president to appear on Tonight Show (2009-03-19 09:34)

Barack Obama will become the first sitting president to appear on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" on Thursday night.

Obama is in California for two days to promote his budget proposal to Congress. Obama will discuss the economic situation on The Tonight Show, which averages five million viewers a night.

The president also appeared on ESPN where he said he was backing the North Carolina Tarheels in the upcoming NCAA basketball tournament.

Times Online

Obama to appear on 'Tonight Show'

CNN - 1 hour ago

LOS ANGELES, California (CNN) – Guests on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" usually appear to promote a movie, TV show, book or album, but President Obama will visit the NBC show Thursday to make the case for his financial rescue plans.

Video: Obama on Leno: What Are Risks, Rewards? The Associated Press [EMBED]

Obama Goes to Town Hall, 'Jay Leno' to Spread Economic Agenda ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama: First sitting president to appear on Tonight Show (2009-03-19 09:34)

Barack Obama will become the first sitting president to appear on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" on Thursday night.

Obama is in California for two days to promote his budget proposal to Congress. Obama will discuss the economic situation on The Tonight Show, which averages five million viewers a night.

The president also appeared on ESPN where he said he was backing the North Carolina Tarheels in the upcoming NCAA basketball tournament.

Times Online

Obama to appear on 'Tonight Show'

CNN - 1 hour ago

LOS ANGELES, California (CNN) – Guests on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno" usually appear to promote a movie, TV show, book or album, but President Obama will visit the NBC show Thursday to make the case for his financial rescue plans.

Video: Obama on Leno: What Are Risks, Rewards? The Associated Press [EMBED]

Obama Goes to Town Hall, 'Jay Leno' to Spread Economic Agenda ABC News

Obamas to plant organic White House garden (2009-03-19 16:51)

The first family is preparing to plant a garden on the White House lawn with groundbreaking set for Friday on the South Lawn.

Michelle Obama will be joined by students from Bancroft Elementary in Washington who will help plant and maintain the 1,100 sq. foot garden.

The fully-organic garden will include 55 kinds of vegetables; a variety of berries, herbs and two beehives for honey. White House chefs will use the produce for the first family and for other official events.

The Obama garden will be the first since Eleanor Roosevelt planted a victory garden that helped inspire millions of Americans to take up home gardening.

Berkeleyan Online

Obamas to Plant Garden on White House Lawn

Washington Post - 1 hour ago

By Jane Black For more than a decade, food activists have rallied, cajoled, even pleaded for a garden on the White House lawn. Now they're finally going to get it.

Obamas Prepare to Plant White House Vegetable Garden New York Times

White House to break ground on 'kitchen garden' The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

GrammyM (2009-03-19 19:01:00)

I live in Elwood, Illinois and we have a place here in our town called the "Children's Garden Project." It, too, is planted & maintained by children from the Elwood Community School. (Of course with the help of the Children's Garden project committee.) It has grown into a wonderful place to spend time during the summer. It has a "pizza garden," an ABC flower garden, a "yellow brick road" as well as area's for children to play in. When it is time to harvest the various vegetables, the children come to take home & enjoy the "fruits" of their labors. It is a beautiful & greatly enjoyed part of Elwood, Illinois

Obama sends Persian New Year message (2009-03-20 14:24)

President Barack Obama sent a Persian New Year's message Friday offering a new start in relations between the two countries.

Breaking sharply from Bush administration policy, Obama released a video with Farsi language subtitles to coincide with the major Iranian festival of Nowruz, a 12-day holiday that marks the arrival of spring and the beginning of the new year on the Persian calendar.

One of Obama's campaign promises was to talk with the country's foes unlike the previous administration.

But Iranian leaders have been not been as eager. Supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei has criticized Obama, saying he would continue the policies of former President George W. Bush.

Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad has said Iran that he welcomes negotiations with the United states but only if Washington changes its attitude toward Tehran.

 guardian.co.uk

Iran brushes aside new Obama video message

The Associated Press - 43 minutes ago

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) - The Iranian government brushed aside a Persian New Year's message Friday from President Barack Obama offering to resolve years of hostility, saying it wants concrete change from Washington before it's ready to enter a dialogue.

Video: Obama offers new start with Iran France 24 [EMBED]

US has new steps planned on Iran: White House AFP

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

First Lady breaks ground for garden with schoolchildren (2009-03-20 14:35)

First Lady Michelle Obama broke ground for the new White House vegetable and fruit garden in the South Lawn.

Twenty-six elementary schoolchildren helped Mrs. Obama with the initial work and will come back in a couple of weeks to plant seedlings. In June, the children will come to harvest the garden and will help the White House chefs cook and eat a meal made from the produce.

[EMBED]

 Telegraph.co.uk

Michelle Obama Breaks Ground on White House Garden

Washington Post - 33 minutes ago

By Jane Black With the help of local elementary school students, Michelle Obama broke ground for a White House garden and initiated a public campaign to help Americans better understand where their food comes from.

At the White House: Working the soil for a new vegetable garden USA Today

Ground is broken for White House 'kitchen garden' The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on Obama and Iran (2009-03-20 15:39)

Here's more on President Barack Obama's video message for the Persian New Year including parts of the video.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama pitches budget during weekly address (2009-03-21 15:02)

In his weekly address, President Barack Obama pitched his budget proposal that he calls his economic blueprint for the future.

Obama said his priorities were energy, education and health care, and solving the budget deficit.

"I will be discussing each of these principles next week, as Congress takes up the important work of debating this budget. I realize there are those who say these plans are too ambitious to enact," said Obama. "To that I say that the challenges we face are too large to ignore. I didn't come here to pass on our problems to the next President or the next generation - I came here to solve them."

"The American people sent us here to get things done, and at this moment of great challenge, they are watching and waiting for us to lead. Let's show them that we are equal to the task before us, and let's pass a budget that puts this nation on the road to lasting prosperity." [EMBED]

RAW DATA: President Obama's Weekly Address

FOXNews - 6 hours ago

In his weekly address, President Obama announced that in the coming week, he will highlight the core principles of his budget, including reform of the energy, education and health care sectors.

Obama Makes Pitch for Budget Priorities Washington Post

Obama to Push Programs in Budget New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

atreides (2009-03-23 09:40:00)

Good morning Mr president,

I have a question. On bad times on economy is performing badly why a bank (JP Morgan) seeking for bailout have plans to buy 2 new private jets? That what people angry and frustrated. We all suffering the same pain but some are flying on luxury and fancy private jet. Is a commom sense if you don't have money to spend you don't buy. I don't find any another to keep in touch with you. I understand the security sorround you as the president and also as a citizen. I hope you have a wonderfull day.

Anonymous (2009-03-23 18:50:00)

skip to main | skip to sidebar

There's many areas to save money

Monday, March 23, 2009

Try this for cut backs or to your penny pitcher list

CHANGE THE PRISON AND JAILS SYSTEMS AND THAT WILL SAVE US SOME MONEY.

Develop a semi-military program, trained them to help fight for our country, develop self esteem, work ethics, more education, hygiene awareness and verbal communication programs. Sweep the schools-streets-corners of these old-young trifling criminals, disrespectful, deaf loud music playing, deformed penguin walking, violent, drug selling infested, unemployed miss-fits.

Ship them to Iraq or Quake or any foreign country. Enlist them into a military rehab program or some type of a structured environment. Re-educated on esteem, trained to fight for there/our country. Have requirements such as reforming and informing. Do not have a time limit as the military forces. Sense they're so gun happy, put them on the front line of hire. Let them earn a righteous and honest wage and skills as well as reforming from drugs. Have a very strict policy. There no discharging, must be strict with anti drugs tolerance, even if it requires use of medication to suppress the desire and a strict dress code enforcement Pants must be warm up on your hips or there will be a fine of $50 to $100.00 dollars. Consequences if drugs are found in their system. There's no means of discharge for wrongfully acts of any kind. But there will be additional time added. If there system is clean for 1 year, times will be taken off and no offence. 5 years should be the maxium to reform and in the process they have to learn a skill and take random drugs test to stay out of the ram of others under the influence. When they return home they have a probation officer and a random Urine test and a card to show of his participation in the rehab and who to call if after the 3rd situation of being in the wrong place of people, so he can be returned. If found selling drugs, or with someone else with drugs or drugs in their system and hanging around on the corners. Police officers should be informed of this person, participation in the rehab system, this person should be detained until the probation officer has been inform. All the officers aware of the strike 3 program of stiffer and longer and hard manual labor. In the south and they did not want to return.

The jails are just a resorts for these people that's why they hurt, kill or steal to go back to the sure 3 course meals air/heat, clean bedding, clothes, TV/cable and games, they can not take being responsible they have been spoiled. Posted by jstsimmer at 5:39 PM 0 comments

Subscribe to: Posts (Atom) Followers

Blog Archive

2009 (1)

March (1)

Try this for cut backs or to your penny pitcher li...

About Me

jstsimmer

View my complete profile

Anonymous (2009-03-23 18:52:00)

skip to main | skip to sidebar

There's many areas to save money

Monday, March 23, 2009

Try this for cut backs or to your penny pitcher list

CHANGE THE PRISON AND JAILS SYSTEMS AND THAT WILL SAVE US SOME MONEY.

Develop a semi-military program, trained them to help fight for our country, develop self esteem, work ethics, more education, hygiene awareness and verbal communication programs. Sweep the schools-streets-corners of these old-young trifling criminals, disrespectful, deaf loud music playing, deformed penguin walking, violent, drug selling infested, unemployed miss-fits.

Ship them to Iraq or Quake or any foreign country. Enlist them into a military rehab program or some type of a structured environment. Re-educated on esteem, trained to fight for there/our country. Have requirements such as reforming and informing. Do not have a time limit as the military forces. Sense they're so gun happy, put them on the front line of hire. Let them earn a righteous and honest wage and skills as well as reforming from drugs. Have a very strict policy. There no discharging, must be strict with anti drugs tolerance, even if it requires use of medication to suppress the desire and a strict dress code enforcement Pants must be warm up on your hips or there will be a fine of $50 to $100.00 dollars.

Consequences if drugs are found in their system. There's no means of discharge for wrongfully acts of any kind. But there will be additional time added. If there system is clean for 1 year, times will be taken off and no offence. 5 years should be the maxium to reform and in the process they have to learn a skill and take random drugs test to stay out of the ram of others under the influence. When they return home they have a probation officer and a random Urine test and a card to show of his participation in the rehab and who to call if after the 3rd situation of being in the wrong place of people, so he can be returned. If found selling drugs, or with someone else with drugs or drugs in their system and hanging around on the corners. Police officers should be informed of this person, participation in the rehab system, this person should be detained until the probation officer has been inform. All the officers aware of the strike 3 program of stiffer and longer and hard manual labor. In the south and they did not want to return.

The jails are just a resorts for these people that's why they hurt, kill or steal to go back to the sure 3 course meals air/heat, clean bedding, clothes, TV/cable and games, they can not take being responsible they have been spoiled. Try this for cut backs or to your penny pitcher li...

Obama stands by Geithner (2009-03-22 10:03)

President Barack Obama continued to defend Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner on Saturday. Obama said he would not accept a Geithner resignation amidst a storm of criticism on the handling of the financial crisis. The news of the A.I.G. bonuses may have been the last straw against Geithner, who also suffers from image problems due to tax problems revealed during his confirmation hearing. However, Geithner is expected to discuss his plan to mend the banking system in testimony before a congressional committee on Thursday,

 China Daily

Obama says would not accept Geithner resignation

Washington Post - 3 hours ago

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - President Barack Obama on Saturday stepped up his weeklong defense of much-criticized Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner, saying he would not accept his resignation even if it was tendered.

Video: Should Geithner Go? CBS [EMBED]

Shelby Says Geithner May Not 'Last Long' as US Treasury Chief Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama, Geithner reveal bank rescue plan (2009-03-23 08:00)

Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner unveiled the Obama administration's plan to fix the banking crisis estimating it could cost up to $1 trillion in public and private funds.

Geithner's plan depends much on private investors, including hedge funds and private-equity firms, to purchase $500 billion to $1 trillion of toxic assets with government incentives such as low interest loans and risk-profit sharing.

"The point of the program is to save the taxpayers money by attracting private capital," a senior administration official said. About $350 billion still remains from the old financial bailout money passed during the Bush administration. The Public-Private Investment Program will use between $75 billion- $100 billion of Treasury funds to leverage $500 billion and potentially expand to $1 trillion of private assets aided with financing from the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Some analysts though believe it will take much more money just to stabilize the banking system. Nouriel Roubini, for example, thinks it will take $3.5 trillion more to deleverage and unfreeze the credit markets.

 ABC News

Obama's $1 Trillion Plan to End Bank Crisis

ABC News - 1 hour ago

By MATTHEW JAFFE and JAKE TAPPER Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner announced today a much-anticipated plan that could cost up to $1 trillion in public and private funds which the president hopes will play a key role in ending the nation's banking ...

US Treasury to buy up to $1 trillion of banks' toxic assets Bizjournals.com

Treasury Unveils Details of Plan to Relieve Banks of Toxic Assets Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama gives second primetime news conference tonight 8:01 PM ET (2009-03-24 12:21)

President Barack Obama will hold his second primetime news conference since taking office tonight at 8:01 pm ET. Obama's last primetime press conference was on Feb. 9.

Recent polls indicate that the A.I.G. bonus controversy has not hurt Obama personally but has generated a lot of public anger over both Wall St. and Washington.

MiamiHerald.com

First thoughts: Meeting the press, again

msnbc.com - 6 hours ago

Meeting the press, again: The last – and only other – time President Obama conducted a primetime news conference was on Feb. 9, the very day he traveled ...

Obama to Hold Prime Time Press Conference News10.net

Obama To Hold Second Press Conference Tuesday AHN

Obama Takes His Message To Primetime CBS News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Is Obama hogging the airwaves? (2009-03-24 20:27)

The president appeared again tonight on primetime and there are a few articles out there suggesting that Obama may be saturating the broadcast media.

Just recently the commander-in-chief has appeared on ESPN, The Tonight Show aside from appearing on the prime time slot tonight. Not only the broadcast media is involved though as either Obama or his wife or kids are turning up on magazine covers and all over the internet.

Another president who used the media extensively was Franklin Delano Roosevelt who held "fireside chats" over the radio during the Great Depression and World War II. During times of distress, the people tend to look to the leadership and that means the president in the United States.

The difference between now and then is Americans are now a lot less patient. FDR delivered 31 fireside chats between 1933 and 1944, which was considered a lot at the time.

Obama has already appeared on primetime twice in just over two months in office. In a world of instant media that includes text messages and email updates, people may not be able to wait for months during such distressing times without hearing directly from the big kahuna.

Of course, some complain that the nature of some of Obama's appearances is not presidential enough. The appearance with Jay Leno for example. They used to say the same thing about Bill Clinton playing the saxophone. It's a different generation though and Obama has shown he has the touch of reaching the younger people.

Embedded video from CNN Video

On the White House Obama Selling His Economic Plan on the Airwaves ...

New York Times - 12 hours ago

By PETER BAKER Had enough yet? Tune into CNN and you may find President Obama's latest public town hall meeting. Flip to NBC and you might come across the president yukking it up with Jay Leno.

Condi Rice follows Obama on the Leno show USA Today

President Obama is new 'King of all Media,' with Leno, ESPN, GQ New York Daily News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama-Sarkozy clash at G20? (2009-03-25 12:45)

There's some news going around the blogosphere about a possible feud between U.S. President Barack Obama and French President Nicholas Sarkozy. Obama wrote a letter to former French president Jacques Chirac in response to an earlier letter sent to him by Chirac in mid-March.

Chirac and Obama will meet at the G20 summit and the U.S. president has released an editorial to international newspapers suggesting the need to stimulate the economy. France is known to be less than enthusiastic about a stimulus plan, and more concerned about regulating the financial markets.

Video: Obama vs Sarkozy: plans for G20 France 24 [EMBED]

Obama writes letter to Chirac - blogosphere goes crazy Christian Science Monitor

Foreign Policy: why is Obama writing to Jacques Chirac? Examiner.com

Does Barack Obama know who the President of France is? Telegraph.co.uk

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Live: Obama online town hall meeting (CNN) (2009-03-26 09:25)

Check out CNN's live coverage of the Obama online town-hall meeting.

http://www.cnn.com/video/flashLive/live.html?stream=stream1 &iref=lb100

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

NY race is seen as Obama test (2009-03-27 12:52)

President Barack Obama 's influence will be tested on Tuesday during the special election to fill the House seat vacated by Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, who in turn had replaced Secretary of State Hillary Clinton.

Democratic candidate Scott Murphy, who supports Obama's agenda, is facing Republican Assembly Leader Jim Tedisco, who opposes it.

Vice President Joe Biden is helping Murphy with a radio ad were he says: "That's why this special election you'll be holding next Tuesday, March 31, is so important to me. I'm supporting Scott Murphy for Congress, and so is President Obama." Although it might seem that Obama just took office, the race is already for the 2010 congressional elections when Democrats and Republicans will battle for control of Congress. The Republicans are hoping to repeat what happened to Bill Clinton when his party lost both the House and Senate after just two years in office.

Democrats are hoping to cool off divisive tensions in their own party to avoid a repeat of what happened during Clinton's first term.

ABC News

Obama Faces Upstate NY Test Tuesday

ABC News - 1 hour ago

BY TEDDY DAVIS and FERDOUS AL-FARUQUE Tuesday's special election in upstate New York to fill the House seat vacated by Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, DN.

NY Special Election Is Too Close to Call Washington Post

A Democratic Lead in NY-20? Atlantic Online

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama to unveil auto plan Monday (2009-03-29 14:46)

President Barack Obama is expected on Monday to reveal plans to restructure the nation's auto industry . "We think we can have a successful U.S. auto industry. But it's got to be one that's realistically designed to weather this storm and to emerge at the other end much more lean, mean and competitive than it currently is," President Obama said in a taped interview broadcast today on CBS' "Face the Nation.”

General Motors and Chrysler have submitted plans to make their companies more viable, but Obama said more is needed.

Obama said that the companies still have more to do and that success is “going to mean a set of sacrifices from all parties involved, management, labor, shareholders, creditors, suppliers, dealers.”

 ABC News

Obama Auto Plan Expected Tomorrow

ABC News - 1 hour ago

By ALICE GOMSTYN The Obama administration is set to unveil new measures Monday to restructure the nation's devastated auto industry.

Obama wants more reform from GM, Chrysler Christian Science Monitor

Obama Faces Tough Issues on First Overseas Trip as US President Voice of America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama heads to G20 with challenges ahead (2009-03-30 18:13)

President Barack Obama heads to the G20 summit in Europe hoping to hammer out a plan to deal with the global economic crisis.

Obama is immensely popular abroad, but his ideas on reviving the world's economies has met resistance among other world leaders. Key European allies, for example, have balked at his call for them to stimulate their economies with increased spending.

The president's popularity and media mastery might help in prodding other members into consensus on a coordinated global effort on the recession.

 Times Online

On Europe Trip, Obama Will Test Power of Popularity

Washington Post - 6 hours ago

By Dan Balz Can President Obama lead the world? That may overstate the ambitions Obama will take with him to Europe Tuesday for a week-long series of ...

Obama Heads Back to Europe, Challenges in Tow New York Times

Obama Learns If European Popularity Can Pay Dividends Bloomberg

Obama heads overseas to tackle world economy USA Today

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2009-03-31 08:00)

President Barack Obama is pushing a new U.S. strategy at the Afghanistan Conference in the Hague, Netherlands today.

Obama wants a shift toward rebuilding and stabilizing the country with less emphasis on ramping up troop strength and military action.

"All too often in the past seven years, our efforts have been undermanned, underresourced and underfunded," Clinton said. "While there is great temptation to retreat inward in these difficult economic times, it is precisely at such moments that we must redouble our efforts."

The one-day, 73-country conference marks a turning point in the U.S. policy on Afghanistan, as Obama shifts the focus to economic reconstruction, eases pressure on Europe to send more troops, and steps up efforts to stamp out terrorist havens in neighboring Pakistan.

Since taking office in January, Obama has ordered 17,000 more U.S. troops to Afghanistan to fight the resurgent Taliban, the radical Islamist movement ousted by the U.S. in 2001 after the Sept. 11 attacks. As part of a strategic review announced last week, Obama also said he will send 4,000 more trainers to Afghanistan to build up the local army.

European leaders, hectored by the Bush administration for failing to dispatch enough frontline troops to the war zone, expressed relief that the U.S. will shoulder the extra military burdens.

New U.S. Approach

The new U.S. approach is not to badger European governments to send forces they don't have, a senior U.S. official told reporters in Brussels yesterday. Instead, as shown by today's "big tent" conference, the point is to encourage allies to do what they can.

While financial aid to rebuild Afghanistan's economy and build up its 79,000-strong army figures high on the priority list, today's conference isn't meant to solicit extra donations on top of more than $21 billion pledged at a Paris conference last June.

Still, some new aid was on offer. China offered $75 million over five years and Spain said it will consider pledging 120 million euros ($160 million) for 2010-12. The European Commission, donor of $2.1 billion to Afghanistan since 2002, said it will provide another 60 million euros for rural development and to help stage Afghan elections on Aug. 20. The U.S. offered $40 million for the elections, further defraying costs estimated by the United Nations at $220 million.

As the deepest economic slump since World War II strains government budgets, Clinton also said much of the money plowed into Afghanistan has been misspent on programs that don't work.

 Boston Globe

Obama strategy focus of Afghan talks

BBC News - 12 hours ago

By David Loyn Delegates from 70 nations are gathering in The Hague to discuss reconstruction in Afghanistan, against the new backdrop of the major Obama ...

Video: Hague - Afghanistan: new US strategy France 24

[EMBED]

US to Pledge $40 Million for Afghanistan Elections New York Times

Clinton Urges Aid for Afghanistan, Warns on Threats Bloomberg

Protests upstage G20 summit (2009-03-31 19:01)

Protests turned angry at the G20 summit taking attention away from the press conference by Prime Minister Gordon Brown and President Barack Obama .

A mob rushed the Royal Bank of Scotland, and thousands of other angry demonstrators pushed against police barricades outside the Bank of England, the U.K.'s equivalent of the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank. Some protesters were visibly injured.

About 2,500 uniformed officers are providing security in the area and

The Times newspaper described the city as "Fortress London."

To make matters worse for Obama, French President Nicolas Sarkozy said he may not sign on to any agreement that does not include major reform of the world financial system.

 BBC News

G20 protesters storm RBS branch as Brown-Obama meeting upstaged

Times Online - 16 minutes ago

Anti-capitalist protesters stormed a branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland today as police struggled to keep a lid on increasingly violent G20 demonstrations in the City of London.

Video: G20: Obama, Brown call for united front France 24 [EMBED]

Thousands Protest in London Ahead of G20 Summit Voice of America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

3.4 April

Live: Obama meets Queen (2009-04-01 08:56)

Live CNN coverage of President Barack Obama's meeting with Queen Elizabeth II.

<http://www.cnn.com/video/flashLive/live.html?stream=stream1>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

House approves $3.5 trillion budget (2009-04-02 19:03)

The House of Representatives approved President Barack Obama's $3.6 trillion federal budget on Thursday with Republican yes votes.

The Senate is also looking like it will pass a partisan and similar $3.5 trillion budget without any Republican support.

"The American people want us to find our common ground where we can, but they did not send us here to split the difference," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said. "They want real change, and we have come here to make a difference." The budgets will allow the expiration of Bush-era tax cuts for wealthier Americans but continue those benefiting the middle class.

 FOXNews

US House approves $3.45 trillion budget

Reuters - 55 minutes ago

By Jeremy Pelofsky and Richard Cowan WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The US House of Representatives on Thursday passed a federal budget that embraces President Barack Obama's initiatives on healthcare, energy and education but leaves the government deeply in ...

House Approves Budget With No Republican Support New York Times

House Republicans roll out alternative budget CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama calls for world free of nukes (2009-04-03 09:50)

President Barack Obama on Friday called for a world without atomic weapons as he traveled in France.

Obama held talks with French President Nicolas Sarkozy in eastern France before a NATO summit hosted by France and Germany.

"Even with the Cold War now over, the spread of nuclear weapons, or the theft of nuclear material, could lead to the extermination of any city on the planet," Obama told crowd at the French city of Strasbourg.

On Sunday, he said: "This weekend in Prague I will lay out an agenda to seek the goal of a world without nuclear weapons."

 BBC News

Obama seeks world free of nuclear arms

Reuters - 1 hour ago

... France (Reuters) - US President Barack Obama called on Friday for a world without atomic weapons and urged allies to stand firm against Iran's nuclear ...

Video: Russia would like to be engaged, but not married with NATO RT [EMBED]

Obama Reaches Out to Europeans, Plans Push for Nuclear Disarmament Voice of America

Obama Holds Town Hall in Strasbourg, France Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama reaches out to Muslim world in Turkey (2009-04-06 19:58)

President Barack Obama, with Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan of Turkey, spoke to the Turkish Parliament in Ankara on Monday.

Obama reached out to the Muslim world telling the audience that the U.S. was not at war with Islam and wanted a relationship that went beyond simply battling terrorists.

Many analysts think that Obama wants to use Turkey's secular government as a model in his relationship with Islamic nations.

 ABC News

Obama Says US Is Not at War With Islam

New York Times - 24 minutes ago

President Obama, with Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan of Turkey, spoke to the Turkish Parliament in Ankara on Monday. By HELENE COOPER ANKARA, ...

Video: Turkey is a US door into Muslim world RT [EMBED]

LI Muslims praise Obama's speech, but want action Newsday

In Turkey, Obama says US is not at war with Islam Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

guler can (2009-04-08 06:02:00)

Hello,

There is a poll in www.rifqee.com about Mr. Obama's visit to Turkey. Please write your opinion about it.

Regards,

Obama may compromise on carbon trading (2009-04-08 17:46)

The White House is ready to battle global warming – a change from the previous administration – but he may be willing to compromise in some cases.

Some businesses may be able to get emission allowances free bypassing the carbon trading system.

The Obama administration is also looking to fight climate change by cooling air according to science adviser John Holdren.

Known as geoengineering, the idea involves shooting pollution particles into the upper atmosphere to reflect the sun's rays.

Using such an experimental measure is only being thought of as a last resort, Holdren said.

"It's got to be looked at. We don't have the luxury ... of ruling any approach off the table."

 Telegraph.co.uk

Obama Is Open to Compromise on Climate Agenda

Wall Street Journal - 2 hours ago

By IAN TALLEY WASHINGTON – The White House is open to compromise on certain key elements of its climate-change agenda, including whether businesses could get some emissions allowances free, administration officials said Wednesday.

Obama looking at cooling air to fight warming The Associated Press

Obama to Meet With Economic Team on Stress Tests, Recovery Plan Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

CBS/NY Times: Obama more popular than ever (2009-04-09 13:01)

With a very tough economy, many had thought that President Barack Obama would have a shortened "honeymoon" in office, but polls seem to indicate continued high public approval.

Despite the reality of how difficult it will be for Obama to get his more important campaign promises passed by Congress does not seem to dampen the enthusiasm for the former "change candidate."

The latest CBS News/New York Times opinion poll gives Obama a 66 percent approval rating from the public, the highest of his presidency.

X

FOXNews

Behind The Numbers: Obama's Approval Rating

CBS News - 5 hours ago

The latest CBS News/New York Times poll showed President Obama receiving a 66 percent approval rating from the public, his highest since taking office in January.

How Obama can start closing the growing partisan chasm New York Daily News

Posted on April 9th, 2009 by Daniel Larison American Conservative Magazine

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

myclob (2009-04-11 06:24:00)

Would you like to contribute to my new Obama blog?

<http://r2aadwo.blogspot.com/>

It's called "Reasons to Agree & Disagree With Obama" I want people to help me brainstorm logical arguments, books, movies, and songs that can be said to strengthen or weaken the arguments made by President Obama.

Obama sees "glimmers of hope" in economy (2009-04-11 12:34)

President Barack Obama was optimistic about the economy on Friday seeing "glimmers of hope" in recent economic news.

In a press conference, Obama mentioned a sharp increase in small business loans and progress in the housing market including historically low mortgage rates and increased refinancing.

1500

The president though was cautious about predicting the future and said the economy was still "under severe stress."

Obama sees signs of economic progress

Reuters - 3 hours ago

By Matt Spetalnick WASHINGTON (Reuters) - President Barack Obama said on Friday the recession-hit US economy was showing "glimmers of hope" despite remaining under strain and promised further steps in coming weeks to tackle the financial crisis.

Video: Obama: Economy Showing 'Glimmers of Hope' The Associated Press [EMBED]

Comment by Dan Stein Pres., Federation for American Immigration Reform

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obamas find new dog for Malia and Sasha (2009-04-12 19:04)

White House photograph by Pete Sousa

The Obama family finally completed their search for a new dog choosing 6-month-old Bo, a Portuguese water dog they adopted from Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts and his wife, Victoria.

The girls have named the dog Bo because they have cousins with a cat named Bo and Mrs. Obama's father was nicknamed Diddley, after the musician Bo Diddley.

"We couldn't be happier to see the joy that Bo is bringing to Malia and Sasha," the Kennedys said in a statement. "We love our Portuguese water dogs and know that the girls, and their parents, will love theirs, too."

Times Online

One Obama Search Ends With a Puppy Named Bo

New York Times - 31 minutes ago

By HELENE COOPER WASHINGTON - For the first time since settling into the White House, the Obama family attended church services in Washington on Sunday, but their closely watched search for a spiritual home was overshadowed by news that a longer quest ...

Portuguese water dog 'Bo' joins first family USA Today

Obamas' new White House pet excites US news hounds guardian.co.uk

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-04-12 20:18:00)

Alright! Congratulations!

A lapdog for the lapdog of the bourgeoisie!

Castro praises Obama for easing restrictions (2009-04-14 17:49)

Former Cuban leader Fidel Castro on Tuesday praised the President Barack Obama for lifting U.S. restrictions on travel and sending money to Cuba.

"The measure of easing the restrictions on trips is positive although minimal. Many others are needed," Castro wrote on a Cuban government website.

"We do not have the slightest desire to harm Obama," Castro said. "He doesn't have responsibility for what occurred and I'm sure he won't commit the atrocities of (former President George W.) Bush."

X

guardian.co.uk

Castro says Obama steps positive

Reuters - 1 hour ago

By Jeff Franks HAVANA (Reuters) - Former Cuban leader Fidel Castro on Tuesday praised the Obama administration for lifting US restrictions on family travel to Cuba, but said more changes were needed in US policy towards the island.

Cuba travel changes split old, new exiles MiamiHerald.com

Open for business guardian.co.uk

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obamas release federal income tax returns (2009-04-15 15:14)

The Obamas reported income of $2.7 million, according to copies of the 2008 federal tax return released today. Most of the income came from President Obama's $2.5 million on book royalties.

The first couple paid $855,323 in federal taxes, while making $172,050 in charitable contributions to 37 different charities. Obama's presidential salary is $400,000 a year. The hefty income though was a big drop from last year's $4.2 million when Obama's books sales were at their peak.

 FOXNews

Obamas' Earnings, Helped by Royalties, Stayed High in '08

New York Times - 44 minutes ago

By CHARLIE SAVAGE WASHINGTON - President Obama and his wife released their 2008 federal tax return on Wednesday, showing that they paid $855323 in federal income taxes on a combined household income of $2656902.

Obamas release 2008 tax return Los Angeles Times

Obama addresses economy, tax plan CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama unveils high-speed rail plan (2009-04-16 09:08)

Nice to hear President Barack Obama pushing high-speed rail today.

Obama revealed a plan for a new national network of high-speed passenger rail lines to help solve the country's transportation and environmental problems.

The plan mentions 10 potential high-speed rail lines including California, the Pacific Northwest, the Midwest, the Southeast, the Gulf Coast, Pennsylvania, Florida, New York and New England.

"My high-speed rail proposal will lead to innovations that change the way we travel in America. We must start developing clean, energy-efficient transportation that will define our regions for centuries to come," Obama said speaking at the White House.

Some of the corridors would host trains with speeds of up to 150 mph.

Japan and Western Europe are noted for successful implementation of high-speed rail.

 MiamiHerald.com

Obama says US high-speed rail "overdue"

Reuters - 53 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - President Barack Obama outlined his plan for developing "long overdue" high-speed rail on Thursday that would rival air travel, create jobs and help curb the US transportation system's appetite for oil.

Obama unveils high-speed rail plan CNN

Obama Pushes Vision for High-Speed Rail Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama meets with Calderon in Mexico City (2009-04-16 16:34)

[EMBED]

Video: Obama meets with Calderon in Mexico UPI President Barack Obama met with Mexican President Felipe Calderon today in Mexico City.

The two leaders talked about cracking down on drug violence near the border, immigration and other matters.

 Times Online

Obama to Push to Ratify Treaty on Gun Trafficking

New York Times - 10 hours ago

By SHERYL GAY STOLBERG MEXICO CITY — President Obama, seeking to send a strong signal that he is committed to stopping the rising tide of cross-border drug ...

Mexico drug clash kills 16 ahead of Obama trip Reuters

Obama: US, Mexico will face border violence together USA Today

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Cuba ready to talk with Obama (2009-04-17 07:45)

Raúl Castro today said the was ready 'to discuss everything' with the U.S.

Some analysts feel that Latin American leaders at the 5th Summit of the Americas will ask President Barack Obama to lift the embargo on Cuba.

"We've told the North American government, in private and in public, that we are prepared, wherever they want, to discuss everything – human rights, freedom of the press, political prisoners – everything, everything, everything that they want to discuss," Castro said Thursday at a summit in Venezuela.

President Obama removed restrictions on Cuban Americans ability to visit relatives in Cuba and to send money to the country. Travel restrictions for Americans of non-Cuban descent remain in place.

The U.S. government has enforced an embargo on Cuban beginning three years after Fidel Castro came to power in 1959. Many experts on the region and a growing segment of the Cuban American population feel America's Cuba policy has accomplished little and has become detached from its original goals.

 Voice of America

Raúl Castro: Cuba ready 'to discuss everything' with US

CNN - 54 minutes ago

(CNN) – The Cuban government, long the object of a US economic blockade, is prepared to meet with the Obama administration, Cuba's leader said.

Video: Bloggers focus on 5th Summit of the Americas France 24 [EMBED]

Americas summit: Readers' views BBC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anger over CIA torture memos (2009-04-17 08:09)

Many groups and former victims have expressed dismay at the Obama administration's decision not to prosecute CIA operatives who used interrogation methods on detainees, including American citizens, that are in clear violation of the Geneva Convention.

However, Washington officials who authorized such methods will not be protected from prosecution although it would likely be Congress and not the White House that carry out such actions.

Secret CIA memos released Thursday told of interrogation techniques that included waterboarding, splashing detainees with water and exposing them to the cold, placing insects in their small, dark cells, allowing interrogators to punch and slap detainees, and threatening detainee families.

Times Online

Disappointment with US not prosecuting CIA

The Associated Press - 19 minutes ago

CAIRO (AP) - Human rights groups and former detainees in US custody expressed disappointment Friday with the decision by President Barack Obama not to prosecute CIA operatives who used interrogation practices described by many as torture.

Video: USA: Release of CIA interrogation memos France 24 [EMBED]

[EMBED]

CIA 'amnesty' dismays campaigners BBC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama shakes hands with Hugo Chavez (2009-04-17 18:00)

Hehe, great shot of President Barack Obama shaking hands with Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez at the Summit of the Americas.

(HO/AFP/Getty Images)

Pictures of the handshake were quickly distributed by Venezuelan media

According to Chavez, Obama initiated the handshake. The Venezuelan president said that he told Obama that he wanted to reset relations with America.

"With this same hand I greeted Bush eight years ago. I want to be your friend," Chavez reportedly said.

 Times Online

Obama, Chavez shake hands at summit

msnbc.com - 21 minutes ago

Photos released by the Venezuelan government show the two smiling and Obama touching Chavez on the shoulder. The Venezuelan presidency says Obama initiated ...

White House: No meeting set between Obama, Chavez The Associated Press

Obama, Chavez shake hands at summit-Venezuela govt Reuters UK

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama sees positive signs from Cuba, Venezuela (2009-04-19 16:05)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama said he saw positive signs from Cuba and Venezuela during his trip to the Summit of the Americas.

Hugo Chavez shook hands with Obama and gave him a book, on exploitation of Latin America, as a gift. Chavez also approached Secretary of State Hillary Clinton saying that the would restore diplomatic relations with the U.S. after withdrawing his country's ambassador during the Bush administration.

Obama said he hoped the conference in Trinidad and Tobago would lead to further improvement in relations with Cuba and like-minded nations in the hemisphere. The president dismissed Republican claims that Obama's friendly encounters with Chavez somehow made the United States less safe.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama open to torture memos proble (2009-04-21 16:34)

In a welcome development, President Barack Obama on Tuesday said lawyers who authorized illegal interrogation of terror suspects may be prosecuted.

Obama had suggested last week that the nation might need to move on in reference to the CIA interrogation methods, but on Tuesday he said it was up to the attorney general to determine whether or not prosecution is warranted.

"I think there are a host of very complicated issues involved here," Obama said. "As a general deal, I think that we should be looking forward and not backwards. I do worry about this getting so politicized that we cannot function effectively, and it hampers our ability to carry out national security operations."

 guardian.co.uk

Obama open to torture memos probe, prosecution

The Associated Press - 14 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (AP) - Widening an explosive debate on torture, President Barack Obama on Tuesday opened the possibility of prosecution for Bush-era lawyers who authorized brutal interrogation of terror suspects and suggested Congress might order a full ...

Comment by Brad Olson, Ph.D. Research Professor, Northwestern University

Obama doesn't rule out charges over interrogations Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Herveen (2009-04-22 20:16:00)

Wow..awesome

<http://herveendoank.blogspot.com>

Anonymous (2009-04-25 00:14:00)

Voice your opinions - let yourself be heard!!!!

<http://obamasplanforeconomyandamerica.blogspot.com>

Clinton makes surprise visit to Iraq (2009-04-25 08:13)

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton is making a surprise visit to Iraq today after a recent upsurge in violence in the war-torn country.

Clinton characterized the bombings as signs of desperation among those who reject democratic change in Iraq.

"I think in Iraq there will always be political conflicts, there will always be, as in any society, sides drawn between different factions, but I really believe Iraq as a whole is on the right track," Clinton said.

"I wanted to come today to repeat the commitment President Obama and I and the American people have to Iraq and to assure you that as we make this transition the United States will stand with the people of Iraq."

The Obama administration plans to withdraw most troops out of Iraq over the next few years.

ABC News

Clinton reassures Iraq in surprise stop in Baghdad

Los Angeles Times - 37 minutes ago

The secretary of State's comments are upbeat despite recent violence. She tells Iraqis the US is 'very committed' even though troops will be withdrawn.

Video: Raw Video: Sec. of State Clinton Arrives in Iraq The Associated Press [EMBED]

Clinton Says Iraq on 'Right Track,' Vows US Support Bloomberg

Reuters - The Associated Press - Washington Post - Voice of America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

FOX nixes Obama press conference (2009-04-27 17:55)

FOX network will not air President Barack Obama's news conference on Wednesday, the company announced today.

While FOX is generally thought to have a conservative bias, it is not unusual for networks to decline presidential requests for press coverage. FOX denied former President George W. Bush on a number of occasions for example. However, given the situation with a deep recession and the recent declaration of a national public emergency, one would think the president deserves some air time.

The network will air the drama Lie to Me instead.

Seattle Post Intelligencer

FOX won't air Obama's press conference

Christian Science Monitor - 1 hour ago

By Jimmy Orr | 04.27.09 President Obama's got yet another prime time press conference scheduled - this one for Wednesday night - and the FOX network is saying enough's enough.

Fox drops Obama, but is that a big deal? Entertainment Weekly

Fox sticking with schedule instead of Obama The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-04-28 09:20:00)

Yes, we can: <http://klaustoon.wordpress.com/2009/04/28/oh-ba-ma/>

Don Sabatini (2009-04-30 03:21:00)

Nice blog.

Moremony services (2009-05-06 22:08:00)

Nice blog Moremony services is a leading company for Affiliate marketing ,Seo services,Website development and Internet marketing. Our online marketing experience of more than 7 years has eventually equipped our teams with a very important ability of managing change and updating our marketing tools to match the consumer behavior. Moremony Services is one of the top internet marketers globally and are #1 online marketing company in India. We are an Indian internet marketing company that promises you economic advantages.

Obama orders review of NYC overflight (2009-04-28 21:27)

President Barack Obama on Tuesday said he would investigate a Dept. of Defense photo shoot of images of Air Force One flying near the Statue of Liberty.

The low-flying jet aircraft frightened many New Yorkers who thought they're city was in the midst of a 9-11-like attack.

"It will not happen again," Obama said of the incident. The president ordered his deputy chief of staff, Jim Messina, to "conduct a review into how the decision was made to conduct the flight to understand why the decision was made and to ensure that it never happens again."

Louis Caldera, the director of the White House Military Office, took responsibility for the flight, which cost $328,835.

 CTV.ca

Obama Orders Review of Jet Flyover

New York Times - 2 hours ago

WASHINGTON - President Obama on Tuesday ordered an internal review of the high-flying photo shoot over New York City, saying it was an inappropriate use of taxpayer dollars to capture images of Air Force One flying near the Statue of Liberty.

Video: Notebook: Photo-Op Faux Pas CBS [EMBED]

Obama Orders Review of New York Flight as Cost Put at $328835 Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama starts day by walking Bo (2009-04-30 14:16)

Her daughters promised to walk the new dog, but it is Michelle Obama who starts her day by taking Bo for a morning stroll.

"I love my Bo," the First Lady said Thursday although the spunky Portuguese Water Dog puppy forces her to get up earlier in the morning than usual.

"I got up at 5:15 a.m. in the morning to walk my puppy," Michelle said. "That's how my day starts. Even though the kids are supposed to do a lot of the work, I'm still up at 5:15 a.m. taking my dog out. So for everyone who has a child asking for a puppy - you have to want the dog. As I do. I love my Bo."

 New York Times

First Lady: Bo is "Most Famous Member" of the Obama Family

ABC News - 30 minutes ago

First Lady Michelle Obama said today that her daughters are thriving in Washington and her days start with a pre-dawn walk with the "most famous member" of the Obama family, new puppy, Bo.

First Lady Michelle Obama adores puppy Bo, and it's a good thing ... New York Daily News

Michelle Obama's Latest Fashion Statement: Shiny Sneakers U.S. News & World Report

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

3.5 May

Obama announces Souter retirement from Supreme Court (2009-05-01 13:32)

President Barack Obama interrupted the daily White House Press Briefing to announce the retirement of Supreme Court Justice David Souter.

This will give Obama his first opportunity to appoint a Supreme Court justice although he will not likely change the ideological makeup of the court as Souter and Obama's pick are likely to share similar views.

Pres. Obama on Souter Retirement

[EMBED]

 Times Online

Souter Says He Will Leave Supreme Court in June

New York Times - 34 minutes ago

By DAVID STOUT WASHINGTON - Justice David H. Souter formally told the White House on Friday that he will retire from the Supreme Court at the end of the current term in June, a development that stirred intense interest about who his replacement will be ...

Video: Pres. Obama on Souter Retirement C-SPAN

Justice Souter to Retire From Court Wall Street Journal

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-05-03 06:42:00)

Check this out :

<http://mavpersonal.blogspot.com/>

Senators offer Obama advice on justice pick (2009-05-03 12:54)

Senators weighed in Sunday on President Barack Obama's choice to replace retiring Supreme Court Justice David Souter.

"I don't like to see an ideologue of either the right or the left. I don't think we're going to have one," Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy said on CNN's "State of the Union."

Republican Senator Richard Shelby on the same show also hoped Obama would make a pragmatic choice that did not lean too far to the left.

"If he will appoint a pragmatist, someone who is not an ideologue, that someone is not just going to light all the light bulbs in America on the left, I think that would be good for the country," Shelby said.

Orrin Hatch and Arlen Specter voiced similar viewpoints on ABC and CBS respectively.

 FOXNews

Senators Urge Obama to Look Outside the Box, Beyond the Bench for ...

FOXNews - 28 minutes ago

With Supreme Court Justice David Souter retiring this summer, Democrats in particular say the vacancy is an opportunity for President Obama to diversify the ...

Obama May Seek Out Centrist to Replace Souter on Supreme Court Bloomberg

Hatch: Is Obama using 'code' for activist judge? The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obamas celebrate Cinco de Mayo a day early (2009-05-04 18:15)

[EMBED]

The Obamas celebrated Cinco de Mayo a day early at the White House on Monday.

Cinco de Mayo, or "the Fifth of May," celebrates the victory of the Mexican army over French forces on May 5, 1862 and is widely celebrated by Mexican Americans. The holiday, in fact, is more important among Mexicans in the United States than in Mexico itself, and has come to be celebrated by many people of non-Mexican background.

 AFP

At Cinco de Mayo Event, Prayers from First Lady for Swine Flu ...

Washington Post - 5 hours ago

The remarks came during a day-early celebration of Cinco de Mayo. "Feliz Cuatro de Mayo," Obama teasingly told the students. "Why? Because what's tomorrow ...

Obama marks Mexico's Cinco de Mayo holiday AFP

Obama to attend Cinco de Mayo event on May 4 The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Eugenio Costa (2009-05-11 03:59:00)

Bologna, Thursday, 26 February 2009

I believe that this world needs more deeds and fewer words. In 1964 in Milan I saw my father save the lives of two children, at great risk to his own life. The instant before he acted was not filled with doubt or reasoning, but was focused on the end: save the children. If he had not acted in that moment, the lives of those two children would have been lost. The difference is in the act.

The Dalai Lama, on the occasion of his visit to Rome in December of 2007, uttered strong words that unfortunately were not widely heeded: "Deeds," he said, "in this world there are too many words and not enough deeds." The power of ideas is manifested in acts; without these there is nothing to hold on to.

You possess a magnetic force, and it is that which we need to give vitality and energy to new projects; to be free to breathe life into the hope for a better future.

The work that I am sending you represents that which many say, but no one translates into action: three fundamental principles for a better future, so that all may have life through the efforts of everyone. It embodies these messages in a positive way:

Writing, even in water, does not disappear;

The dove, as a symbol of peace, although it has a light frame, is greater than ever;

The sun is more alive, because the environment is cleaner.

The power of ideas to improve this world is rising, and you are surely its greatest proponent.

My contribution is minimal, but heartfelt, and it has been made possible by various people who, like me, share my dream.

Best Regards

Eugenio Costa

Italy-

Alisa Facchini

California USA

<http://www.eugscommunications.com>

Alisa Facchini (2009-05-11 04:02:00)

Dear Sirs/Mesdames,

I wish to clarify that the work entitled NO VIOLENCE by Eugenio Costa left Italy addressed to me, Alisa Facchini, inside a tube specifically formed and decorated for it. It should have been mounted on a frame before being sent to President Obama. Due to personal problems I undervalued the importance of the work. I felt unable to complete my task, and I arranged for the canvas to be shipped in the same manner in which it was sent to me.

I was concerned that there was no way to be sure that the mounted canvas would arrive at the White House, and that President Obama might not receive the work NO VIOLENCE by Eugenio Costa, and I had it transported directly to the White House without being mounted, and without informing Mr. Costa. Not having further notice of the package, Mr. Costa sought through various channels, your office being one of them, to locate the canvas.

After a trace conducted with the help of FedEx agents, I learned that the canvas was retrieved by an agent of the White House, and is likely undergoing the usual security controls.

I would like to emphasize that my actions were not intended to prevent the work NO VIOLENCE from reaching President Obama or to present the artist Eugenio Costa in a bad light, but to ease my fears that the canvas would eventually be abandoned in a warehouse.

Please accept my sincere apologies for any inconvenience this has caused you.

Thank you for your understanding,

Alisa Facchini

alisafacchini@yahoo.com

Obama releases budget plan details (2009-05-07 15:42)

The White House today revealed its $3.4 trillion federal budget for the coming fiscal year that includes cuts or elimination of 121 programs for a total savings of $17 billion. "We can no longer afford to spend as if deficits don't matter and waste is not our problem," Obama said in a statement released by the White House. "We can no longer afford to leave the hard choices for the next budget, the next administration – or the next generation,"

"In Washington, I guess that's considered trivial," he said. "But these savings, large and small, add up." He said the cuts would save nearly $17 billion in 2010 alone, adding, "Even by Washington standards, that should be considered real money." Republicans are opposing Obama's massive budget saying that it will increase the debt problem, but the administration claims that government spending is needed to compensate for lower consumption by consumers and businesses.

Obama Releases Details of $3.4 Trillion Budget Plan

Washington Post - 2 hours ago

President Obama announces his budget plan, which is to trim 121 government programs by $17B, as a first step with the ultimate goal to cut the deficit in half by the end of his first term.

Video: Obama proposes $17 billion in budget cuts UPI

[EMBED]

Republicans rip Obama for insufficient budget cuts CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama admin projects $1.84 trillion deficit (2009-05-11 09:52)

The Obama administration expects the annual budget deficit to hit $1.84 trillion in 2009, the Office of Management and Budget reported Monday.

The record deficit is slightly larger than the $1.75-trillion deficit the White Houses 2009 projection when the president entered office in February.

However, the White House said it was committed to cutting expenses and projected a deficit for 2012 at $557 billion.

"The deficits in these years, now projected to be 12.9 % and 8.5 % of GDP, respectively, are driven in large part by the economic crisis inherited by this administration," the Office of Management and Budget reported today.

"Treasury now estimates that overall federal revenue will be less than was projected in February by between $30 billion and $50 billion in each of this year and next. We also have more information about the severity of the financial crisis facing the nation, and this is reflected in new, higher estimates for the cost of financial stabilization efforts undertaken."

guardian.co.uk

White House predicts budget deficit to grow to $1.84 trillion this ...

Los Angeles Times - 1 hour ago

The record figure surpasses the $1.75 trillion projected earlier in the year. Obama administration points to the nation's financial crisis in explaining updated numbers.

Video: Obama Proposes $2 Trillion in Healthcare Savings The Associated Press

[EMBED]

<

Obama wants estate tax hike, corp loophole cuts Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama meets with experts on health care (2009-05-11 19:33)

President Barack Obama is continuing his discussions with health care leaders saying that "the country is geared up" for health care reform.

The group focused yesterday on saving health care costs. Today they will be discussing best practices currently in use that can be applied to the system as a whole. He cited specific companies that have had success in reforming their health care systems.

Obama also talked about preventative measures as a method of reducing costs.

"We're doing some stuff on health care because I think the country is geared up, businesses are geared up, families are geared up to go ahead and start solving some of our extraordinary health care system problems," Obama told reporters.

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama says creative employers have found ways to both lower their health care costs while also improving the lives of their workers. (May 12)

 Telegraph.co.uk

Obama on health care: "The country is geared up"

USA Today - 1 hour ago

"You may be seeing a theme," Obama told reporters after speaking with business leaders about health care costs. "We're doing some stuff on health care because I think the country is geared up, businesses are geared up, families are geared up to go ...

Healthcare: $2 Trillion Saved, But Not Penny Lost? Atlantic Online

HHS Secretary Hails Partnership With Health Care Industry ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Imee (2009-05-13 05:02:00)

I'm glad that Obama met with leading health care experts—I think it's one of the most effective ways to show that he is taking the issue seriously and with passion. I hope the health care reform becomes successful.

Obama to reveal Supreme Court pick soon (2009-05-12 18:05)

President Barack Obama will soon announce his choice for Supreme Court justice according to senators who met with him Wednesday.

Obama is replacing Justice David Souter who is planning to retire.

The president met with Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev.; Minority Leader Mitch McConnell; Sen. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, the top Republican on Judiciary; and Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy. According to the senators, Obama did not mention any names in connection with his choice.

 Boston Globe

Senators: Obama soon to reveal pick for high court

The Associated Press - 39 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Barack Obama plans to announce his Supreme Court choice soon but isn't saying who is being seriously considered, senators who met with him said Wednesday.

GOP wants 60 days before Supreme Court nominee hearings USA Today

On the White House A Premium on Secrecy in Vetting of Court Pick New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

White House wants oversight of derivatives market (2009-05-13 16:22)

The Obama administration is asking Congress for power to regulate the shadowy derivatives market that many feel contributed to the collapse of financial institutions. Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner sent a letter Wednesday to members of Congress saying that he wants to create a centralized electronic system to monitor trading on the derivatives market.

He also called for tougher capital and reporting requirements.

"All (over-the-counter) derivatives dealers and all other firms whose activities in those markets create large exposures to counterparties should be subject to a robust regime of prudential supervision and regulation," Geithner wrote in his letter. "Key elements of that robust regulatory regime must include conservative capital requirements, business conduct standards, reporting requirements and conservative requirements relating to initial margins on counterparty credit exposures."

ABC News

Obama Takes On Shadow Banking System

Forbes - 47 minutes ago

To remedy the situation, administration officials want to establish a central clearinghouse for derivatives trading, and they want Congress to bulk up the ...

Geithner Urges Electronic OTC Derivatives Trading Bloomberg

US regulators propose regulating OTC derivatives Reuters

Treasury asks for control of derivatives market The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama should also roll back Reagan tax cuts (2009-05-14 07:41)

Most religions recognize excessive hoarding as a sin. Accumulating food, money, land or other resources to the detriment of the community and society has been widely condemned since ancient times.

A policy of tax cuts and laws advantageous to the rich that started in the Reagan years has allowed the wealthy to become wealthier, while the poor have become poorer. Whatever "trickle down" has happened, has been of very limited scope.

The massive enrichment of the wealthy resulted in "problems" in investing the money in such a way that the rich could still become even more richer.

This is where the derivatives and hedge funds come in. These economically-unhealthy funds were created something close to a no-lose situation for the super-wealthy. They allowed the rich to create massive hoards of cash preventing capital from recycling into the economy.

Here are some figures showing both the first bracket tax rate for lowest income earners, and the top bracket for the richest Americans, since 1964.

Applicable

Year Income

brackets First bracket Top

bracket Source

1964 - 16 % 77 % IRS

1965-1967 - 14 % 70 % IRS

1968 - 14 % 75.25 % IRS

1969 - 14 % 77 % IRS

1970 - 14 % 71.75 % IRS

1971-1981 15 brackets 14 % 70 % IRS

1982-1986 12 brackets 12 % 50 % IRS

1987 5 brackets 11 % 33 % IRS

1988-1990 3 brackets 15 % 28 % IRS

1991-1992 3 brackets 15 % 31 % IRS

1993-2000 5 brackets 15 % 39.6 % IRS

2001 5 brackets 15 % 39.1 % IRS

2002 6 brackets 10 % 38.6 % IRS

2003-2009 6 brackets 10 % 35 % Tax Foundation

Notice in 1982 the tax rate on the richest income earners, which had ranged from 77 % to 70 % in previous years, drops by about 29 percent in 1982 due to the Reagan tax cut in 1981.

In comparison, the rate for the poorest folk required to pay income tax dropped by only about 14 percent.

From that point onward, the rate on the highest bracket continues to decline down to 35 percent. Also the number of tax brackets declines from 15 in 1982 to only 6 in 2009.

If we compare the average tax rates from those years before 1982 in the above figures, there is a more than 50 percent drop for the wealthiest taxpayers compared to only 29 percent for the poorest ones.

Such favoritism for the rich is key to the current economic debacle. The fact is that minus recycling all this hoarded capital we will probably only see things continue to deteriorate despite the blips one might witness in the stock market.

So rolling back the Bush tax cuts probably will not be enough. There will only be a marginal increase in revenues. We need to start rolling back all the tax cuts and favors legislated for the super rich since the Reagan years in order to start dealing with the multi-trillion dollar deficits. Otherwise we will not have to wait until our "grandchildren's time" to see more repercussions resulting from decades of hoarding by the richest of the rich.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Stockcalamity_logic (2009-05-14 14:35:00)

Well, Reaganomics were in a different economic era as now. I feel we are moving towards what economics call a "Laffer Curve" where tax cuts beyond a point will significantly affect government revenues. Does this make sense?

Do Reply.

Human rights groups blast Obama on military trials (2009-05-15 13:40)

Human rights groups criticized President Barack Obama for his allowing military commissions to continue trying terrorism suspects.

Obama spoke out against the practice during the presidential campaign, but the administration says that new rules will prevent abuses found in the former practice, and will give officials the option of a civilian or military trial.

"Statements obtained using interrogation methods that constitute cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment will no longer be admitted as evidence at a trial," said Pentagon spokesperson Bryan Whitman. "It's disappointing that Obama is seeking to revive rather than end this failed experiment. There's no detainee at Guantánamo who cannot be tried and shouldn't be tried in the regular federal courts system," Jonathan Hafetz of the American Civil Liberties Union told The Times.

"Even with the proposed modifications, this will not cure the commissions or provide them with legitimacy. This is perpetuating the Bush administration's misguided detention policy."

 ABC News

Human Rights Groups Blast Obama Guantanamo Decision

Voice of America - 53 minutes ago

By Al Pessin President Obama's decision to continue using military commissions to try terrorism detainees now held at Guantanamo Bay has surprised and angered human rights activists.

Video: White House: Military Tribunals Have Place  The Associated Press

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Barack Obama revives military courts to try Guantánamo terror suspects Times Online

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Attract Prosperity (2009-05-16 07:02:00)

2 shockers in about as many days. First the refusal to release the terror photos and now this.

Extreme individuals need to be brought to justice by any means necessary. The freedom which is afforded to all law-abiding citizens is a product of doing what might not be popular but what is right for the U.S. and its interests. If the ACLU attorneys always had their way we would live in anarchy. A nation of people with their own individually-decreed laws.

Congrats Mr. President. You went 2 for 2 this week :)

Ryan

theindoswiss (2009-05-16 08:53:00)

hi,

check out

www.indoswiss.co.cc respectively www.indoswiss.cjb.net!

Obama receives honorary degree ahead of Notre Dame address (2009-05-17 11:32)

President Barack Obama received an honorary degree at Notre Dame Sunday ahead of a commencement speech later in the day.

Obama's appearance at Notre Dame was greeted with protests by Catholic pro-life groups.

The protests are mainly outside of the university's gates, but protest leaders said about 20 people are inside and will demonstrate during Obama's commencement address.

 BBC News

Obama Receives Honorary Degree at Notre Dame, as Protests Build

FOXNews - 1 hour ago

Notre Dame demonstrators showed up in their largest numbers yet as President Obama arrived in South Bend, Ind. A Notre Dame police officer, left, instructs anti-abortion protesters to leave the campus during an anti-abortion protest Saturday in South ...

Obama heads to Notre Dame USA Today

Protesters await Obama's appearance at Notre Dame Chicago Sun-Times

BBC News - ABC News - Seattle Post Intelligencer - New York Times

[EMBED]

First lady Michelle Obama speaks to UC Merced graduates during commencement.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama, Netanyahu to meet in White House (2009-05-17 18:40)

Israeli Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu making his first visit to the United States during the Barack Obama's presidency meets with Obama in the White House today.

Obama and Netanyahu have wide differences on how to resolve the crisis between Israel and the Palestinians creating the widest gap between Washington and Jerusalem since Netanyahu's last term during the Clinton administration.

The U.S. president is expected to intensify focus on a two-state solution after those efforts were mostly submerged during George W. Bush's tenure.

 Straits Times

Obama to Focus on Two-State Solution

Washington Post - 3 hours ago

By Scott Wilson President Obama begins a weeks-long focus on Middle East diplomacy today as he meets for the first time with Israeli Prime Minister Binyamin ...

Video: USA: Benyamin Netanyahu meets with Barack Obama  France 24

[EMBED]

Israeli Press Skeptical of Obama-Netanyahu Negotiations FOXNews

US-Israel ties at risk when Netanyahu meets Obama United Press International

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama announces fuel efficiency plan (2009-05-19 08:53)

President Barack Obama announced today new standards for fuel efficiency aimed at the year 2016. Two environmental organizations praised Obama's move to cut emissions and increase fuel efficiency. The Alliance to Save Energy called the policy that will raise the fleet standard to 35.5 miles per gallon of gas for model year 2016 "an historic step forward and a win-win-win for consumers, the environment and U.S. energy security."

"The new CAFE standards and emissions policies continue and speed up the forward drive to a green energy future that has been promised by this administration," alliance President Kateri Callahan said in a news release.

The Union of Concerned Scientists also praised Obama saying that his cuts would eliminate greenhouse gas emissions by 230 million metric tons of carbon dioxide in 2020, equivalent to removing 34 million of today's cars and light trucks from the road that year.

"When candidate Obama went to Detroit, he told the automakers what they needed to hear - they had been making bad choices, and as president, he would steer a new course and revitalize the industry by bringing more fuel efficient vehicles to market," Michelle Robinson, director of UCS's Clean Vehicles Program, said in a news release. "Now President Obama is delivering on his promise to strengthen the auto industry, while reducing vehicle pollution and our dependence on oil."

The new cars will cost more to pay for upfront but will give the consumer savings at the gas pump.

Los Angeles Times

Two groups praise Obama's fuel changes

United Press International - 1 hour ago

Under the new corporate average fuel economy standards Obama announced, the fleet standard will be 35.5 miles per gallon of gas for model year 2016. ...

Video: Obama raises the bar on auto emissions  WWLP.com

[EMBED]

Consumer Federation of America: Obama Fuel Economy Standard Will ... YubaNet

Obama Announces New Fuel Economy Standards FOXNews

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Outsourcing corporations in arms over Obama tax plan (2009-05-19 20:24)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama's new tax plan is drawing fire from corporations who operate overseas.

Obama's new plan will cut tax exemptions of corporations operating overseas – companies that also must pay taxes in the countries where they are located.

The plan seems aimed at discouraging businesses from shipping their manufacturing, call center and other operations overseas where costs are cheaper.

High-tech companies – many having supported Obama during his campaign – have been outsourcing increasingly abroad and are particularly distressed by the proposal.

 The Associated Press

Who Will Pay for President Obama's Tax Increases?

Spero News - May 19, 2009

[6] Not surprisingly, President Obama's proposed taxincrease will affect some regions more severely than others. Affluent residents in major metropolitan ...

Politics of tax policy Indianapolis Star

Obama admin takes on challenges Troy Messenger

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Live: Obama commencement address at Naval Academy (2009-05-22 07:31)

You may be able to watch President Barack Obama giving the commencement address at the U.S. Naval Academy by clicking the link below:

<http://www.cnn.com/video/flashLive/live.html?stream=stream2&iref=lb100>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama nominates first African American to head NASA (2009-05-23 18:10)

President Barack Obama yesterday nominated Retired Maj. Gen. Charles F. Bolden Jr. as the new head of NASA.

Bolden, a former Marine aviator and space shuttle astronaut, will become the first African American to run the space agency if approved by the Senate.

Bolden also worked as CEO of a defense and aerospace consulting firm.

Among Obama's space goals include winding down the space shuttle program; sending a space crew to the Moon by 2020; and deployment of a climate change research and monitoring system in space

 MiamiHerald.com

Obama Picks Shuttle Veteran To Be First Black NASA Chief

Washington Post - 1 hour ago

By Scott Wilson President Obama yesterday nominated a former Marine aviator and space shuttle astronaut to become the new head of NASA and oversee a broad review of the agency's ambitions for manned and robotic space exploration.

Bolden Is Tapped to Run NASA Wall Street Journal

Obama picks former astronaut to lead NASA CNET News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

sirap (2009-05-23 20:38:05)

ok!

Obama SC justice pick expected soon (2009-05-24 13:55)

President Barack Obama is expected to announce his choice for Supreme Court justice soon probably maybe this Tuesday.

Obama has said that he would likely nominate someone with intellectual abilities but also a "common touch" connecting with ordinary people.

"You have to have not only the intellect to be able to effectively apply the law to cases before you," Mr. Obama told C-SPAN television on Saturday. "But you have to be able to stand in somebody else's shoes and see through their eyes and get a sense of how the law might work or not work in practical day-to-day living." The six people known to be under consideration by Obama are U.S. Appeals Court judges Wood and Sonia Sotomayor, Solicitor General Elena Kagan, Michigan Gov. Jennifer Granholm, Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano and California Supreme Court Justice Carlos Moreno.

 FOXNews

With Nomination Imminent, Supreme Court Speculation Reaches Fever ...

FOXNews - 1 hour ago

Analysts are reading hard into President Obama's comments last week that he's looking for someone with "intellectual fire power, but also a little bit of a common touch" and a practical sense of the world.

The Next Justice Washington Post

Obama Expected to Announce Court Pick Soon Wall Street Journal

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama nominates Sonia Sotomayor to Supreme Court (2009-05-26 17:57)

President Barack Obama today nominated Judge Sonia Sotomayor as his pick to replace Supreme Court Justice David Souter.

Sotomayor will be the first Hispanic and Puerto Rican to serve on the nation's highest court, and will become the court's second sitting woman justice. Check out these videos.

[EMBED]

Obama nominates first Hispanic to Supreme Court

[EMBED]

Sonia Sotomayor responds to nomination

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sotomayor's rise to the top (2009-05-27 13:06)

Judge Sonia Sotomayor probably will not have a hard time getting confirmed as Supreme Court justice based on current knowledge of her past.

She has a compelling story being raised in the Bronx by a single mother and going on to the nation's most prestigious Ivy League schools. Her record of experience is vast especially given her age.

"It's a measure of her qualities and her qualifications that Judge Sotomayor was nominated to the U.S. District Court by a Republican President, George H.W. Bush, and promoted to the Federal Court of Appeals by a Democrat, Bill Clinton. Walking in the door she would bring more experience on the bench, and more varied experience on the bench, than anyone currently serving on the United States Supreme Court had when they were appointed," President Barack Obama said of his pick.

"Judge Sotomayor is a distinguished graduate of two of America's leading universities," the President said. "She's been a big-city prosecutor and a corporate litigator. She spent six years as a trial judge on the U.S. District Court, and would replace Justice Souter as the only justice with experience as a trial judge, a perspective that would enrich the judgments of the Court."

Her gender and ethnicity making her only the third woman and first Hispanic to serve on the Supreme Court could make it dicey for Republicans to mount any kind of attack on her particularly given her impressive success story and record.

guardian.co.uk

Sotomayor to face scrutiny over sensitive issues

CNN - 28 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (CNN) – There are likely to be two hot-button issues in Judge Sonia Sotomayor's Supreme Court confirmation hearings as senators gauge not only her positions but also some controversial comments she has made in her career.

Video: Who is Sotomayor?  KRQE.com

[EMBED]

Sotomayor's Past Rulings Encourage Environmentalists Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obamadoll (2009-05-28 07:05:46)

WILL YOU RE-ELECT OBAMA IN 2012?

ANSWER YES OR NO TODAY AND GET $500 AND A FREE OBAMA BOBBLE HEAD.

VISIT OBAMAELECT.WEEBLY.COM

EXPO Racing (2009-05-28 21:30:59)

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=D2AskNY6ijs>

RNC objects to Obamas's NYC night-on-the-town (2009-05-28 08:56)

Apparently the Republican National Committee is not happy that President Barack Obama took his wife Michelle to New York for a "romantic date."

"As President Obama prepares to wing into Manhattan's theater district on Air Force One to take in a Broadway show, GM is preparing to file bankruptcy and families across America continue to struggle to pay their bills," RNC spokeswoman Gail Gitcho said in an email this afternoon.

Obama flew Michelle to New York City today to see Air Supply (yes, Air Supply) perform in Manhattan's theater district.

The Associated Press

RNC slams Obama for romantic date with Michelle in New York

Christian Science Monitor - 1 hour ago

By Jimmy Orr | 05.30.09 Sure, it's one of the worst songs ever written. But perhaps President Obama and First Lady Michelle are closet Air Supply fans and are simply "Keeping the Love Alive" by enjoying a date-night in New York City tonight.

Looks like a night on Broadway for first couple The Associated Press

Looks like a night on Broadway for first couple WLOS

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Republicans on warpath against Sotomayor? (2009-05-29 15:11)

One would think that the Republican Party would not choose to go after Obama nominee Sonia Sotomayor.

The party has been in disarray as of late and things do not look that good for the upcoming 2010 elections were they appear headed for more losses in Congress and in state elections.

Why go and anger Latino and women voters by hassling Sotomayor? It's not like they're going to force Obama into nominating an ole time conservative to replace Justice David Souter.

But then again the Republicans have a party without effective leadership. Rush Limbaugh seems to be the main person at the helm right now. There is an ideological war going on in which we see moderates like Gen. Colin Powell getting dissed by former Vice President Dick Cheney. Many conservatives want "liberal" members of the party to leave.

So it just may be that they will follow the lead of agitators like Limbaugh into battle against Sotomayor.

 guardian.co.uk

Sotomayor nomination

Seattle Times - 13 minutes ago

President Barack Obama announces federal Judge Sonia Sotomayor is his choice to replace retiring Supreme Court Justice David Souter.

Obama tries to deflect criticism from Sotomayor The Associated Press

White House: Sotomayor's Latina Comment Was Poor Choice of Words Washington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2009-05-31 15:33)

??????

3.6 June

Obama to talk on GM restructuring (2009-06-01 09:14)

President Barack Obama plans to announce his support for General Motors' restructuring plan at a noon appearance at the White House.

GM files for bankruptcy in Manhattan this morning.

The deal that will give U.S. taxpayers a 60 percent ownership stake in GM, and the government will infuse an additional $30 billion into the restructured company. A shakeup of the board of directors is part of the plan.

Albert Koch has been appointed restructuring czar for General Motors.

Later, Obama will visit the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Md., a Washington suburb.

 FOXNews

Obama to address GM bankruptcy on Monday

Washington Post - 7 hours ago

AP WASHINGTON – President Barack Obama plans to announce his support for General Motors' restructuring strategy at a midday appearance at the White House. ...

Video: GM To File For Bankruptcy Today - Bloomberg  Bloomberg

[EMBED]

GM To File For Bankruptcy Monday - Obama Officials CNNMoney.com

Obama Saving GM Needed Dealmaker Team to Break It in Bankruptcy Bloomberg

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bin Laden deputy denounces Obama's Egypt visit (2009-06-02 16:20)

As U.S. President Barack Obama prepares to give his campaign promise speech in Cairo, al-Qaeda's number two leader slammed Obama's Middle East tour.

Ayman al-Zawahiri said Obama's "bloody messages" could not be hidden by "polished words".

During his presidential campaign, Obama promised to make major speech on US-Muslim relations in some city in the Islamic world.

Al-Zawahiri called the U.S. president "that criminal who came seeking, with deception, to obtain what he failed to achieve on the ground after the mujahideen ruined the project of the Crusader America in Iraq, Afghanistan, and Somalia".

Obama travels to Egypt on Thursday, where he will deliver his speech at Cairo University.

Telegraph.co.uk

Al-Qaeda deputy denounces Obama

BBC News - 2 hours ago

A message attributed to the deputy leader of al-Qaeda has denounced Barack Obama as a "criminal" on the eve of the US president's Middle East trip.

Video: Your views on Obama's speech in Cairo  Al Jazeera

[EMBED]

Obama's Speech to Muslims to be Part of Lengthy Effort Voice of America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama campaigns for Judge Sotomayor (2009-06-03 16:02)

First lady Michelle Obama joined the fight for Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor on Wednesday as part of an effort to counter Republican opposition to President Barack Obama's pick to replace Justice David Souter.

Mrs. Obama told students at a high school graduation that after reading the story of Sotomayor, that she is "more than ready" for the new position.

Sotomayor like Obama is a graduate of Princeton University, and went on to Yale University Law School. She was at the top of her class at both schools. Mrs. Obama, who graduated from Harvard Law School, said that she identified with Sotomayor's story of her struggles as one of the few Latinas at Princeton and Yale.

 Voice of America

First lady Michelle Obama joins push for Sotomayor

The Associated Press - 24 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House dispatched first lady Michelle Obama to defend Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor on Wednesday, part of a broad offensive to humanize the judge that came as former GOP House Speaker Newt Gingrich backed off his ...

Wyden meets with Sotomayor OregonLive.com

Sotomayor hits Hill again as GOP's race rhetoric cools CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama discovers hieroglyphic likeness (2009-06-04 12:44)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama toured the Great Pyramids of Giza together with adviser David Axelrod following his speech in Cairo today. The tour guide led them to a hieroglyphic symbol of a man's head with protruding ears that looked very much like the president.

Image courtesy of CNBC.

The hieroglyphic sign is actually that for the Egyptian word meaning "face" and thus might be considered what Ancient Egyptians considered a typical type of facial countenance.

Here is the sign in full color:

Wide front-facing ears are not unusual in ancient Egyptian art and one of the earliest kings, known as Narmer, was also portrayed with such earlobes.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Baltimore (2009-06-04 20:38:25)

Zahi Hawass disagrees with the Egyptians were Africans meme.

<http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalpunch/2009/05/president-obama-king-tut.htm> l

Aguitta (2009-06-04 21:11:03)

http://support-love-obama.blogspot.com/2009/05/we-support-adn-send-our-love-t o-obama.html

Check this out, its not just spam.

Anonymous (2009-06-05 09:50:35)

I agree with the Egyptian vendors, and not dingbat Zahi Hawass!

Clinton rejects Israeli settlement expansion claims (2009-06-05 18:49)

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton rejected yesterday Israeli claims that the Bush administration had secretly approved Jewish settlement expansion on the West Bank.

"We have the negotiating record, that is the official record, that was turned over to the Obama administration by the outgoing Bush administration," Clinton told reporters in Washington. "There is no memorialization of any informal and oral agreements."

President Barack Obama has stood firm in his call for Israel to stop expanding settlements, including that caused by population growth, stating that it violates commitments made by Israel in the 2003 "road map" peace plan. Clinton said any agreements reached with Israel during the Bush administration did not become part of official U.S. policy. "And there are contrary documents that suggest that they were not to be viewed as in any way contradicting the obligations that Israel undertook pursuant to the road map. And those obligations are very clear."

Clinton Rejects Israeli Claims of an Understanding on Settlements

Washington Post - 24 minutes ago

By Glenn Kessler Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton forcefully rejected yesterday Israeli claims that the Bush administration had secretly agreed to expanding Jewish settlements on the West Bank, deepening the impasse between the two countries.

Video: Obama's Speech Welcomed by Arabs? - Bloomberg

[EMBED]

As US presses Israel, EU may join fray Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama honors D-Day veterans in Normandy (2009-06-06 10:05)

President Barack Obama today paid tribute to military personnel who lost their lives in the D-day invasion on the shores of the Omaha Beach landing in Normandy, France.

Obama called the story of the landing on the beaches of Normandy "the story of America."

"It is a story that has never come easy, but one that always gives us hope," he said. "For as we face down the hardships and struggles of our time, and arrive at that hour for which we were born, we cannot help but draw strength from those moments in history when the best among us were somehow able to swallow their fears and secure a beachhead on an unforgiving shore."

Speaking about the veterans that had gathered for the 65th anniversary of the D-Day invasion, Obama said: "You remind us that our future is not shaped by mere chance or circumstance. Our history has always been the sum total of the choices made and the actions taken by each individual man or woman. It has always been up to us."

Among those present in the audience was Obama's great-uncle Charles Payne, who was part of the first American division to reach and liberate a Nazi concentration camp in Germany.

Obama says D-Day saved world from evil

Washington Post - 1 hour ago

Obama also promised an uncompromising stance against North Korea, which tested a nuclear bomb last month. In his speech, Obama said D-Day showed that human ...

Obama honors D-day heroes on 65th anniversary of invasion Los Angeles Times

Obama: D-Day "saved the world from evil" euronews

President Obama Marks D-Day Anniversary at Normandy ABC News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

mohd (2009-06-06 23:36:55)

download this video clip,

<http://sharecash.org/download.php?id=45624>

Obama rolls out pay-as-you-go plan (2009-06-09 15:15)

President Barack Obama today proposed "pay-as-you-go" spending requirements for the federal budget.

"The pay-as-you-go rule is very simple," Obama said from the East Room of the White House. "Congress can only spend a dollar if it saves a dollar elsewhere. This principle guides responsible families managing a budget. And it is no coincidence that this rule was in place when we moved from record deficits to record surpluses in the 1990s – and that when this rule was abandoned, we returned to record deficits that doubled the national debt. Entitlement increases and tax cuts need to be paid for. They are not free, and borrowing to finance them is not a sustainable long-term policy."

Obama added: "The reckless fiscal policies of the past have left us in a very deep hole. Digging our way out will take time, and patience, and tough choices."

The proposed law requires Congress to provide spending cuts and/or tax increases to pay for any new programs before passage. If lawmakers fail to pay for existing programs, under the new law, automatic cuts would take place. "Paying for what you spend is basic common sense. Perhaps that's why, here in Washington, it's been so elusive."

 Washington Post

Obama Seeks Rules to Restrain Spending

Washington Post - 5 hours ago

By Lori Montgomery and William Branigin With the budget deficit soaring toward a record $1.8 trillion, the Obama administration is proposing tough new rules ...

Video: Obama Pitches Pay-as-you-go Plan for Congress

The Associated Press

[EMBED]

Obama's Exaggerated Stimulus Estimates FOXNews

Obama seeks fiscal responsibility mantle Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama envoy says Palestinian state only viable solution (2009-06-10 18:19)

U.S. envoy George Mitchell speaking Wednesday after talks with Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas said that Palestinian statehood was the only option in resolving the conflict with Israel.

Mitchell said that the Obama administration was committed to a successful conclusion of renewed peace talks.

"We are now engaged in serious discussions with Israelis, Palestinians and other regional partners to support this effort," Mitchell said. Obama has also called for a freeze on all Israeli settlements to include expansion by population growth in existing settlements.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is opposed to a settlement freeze and his conservative government could fall if he is seen as giving in.

 GulfNews

Obama envoy says Palestinian statehood only option

Washington Post - 13 hours ago

US President Barack Obama had made it clear "the only viable resolution to this conflict is for the aspirations of both sides to be met through two states," ...

Egypt praises Obama as welcome change from Bush The Associated Press

Obama's State of the Union With the Muslim World Huffington Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dogood (2009-06-16 21:50:34)

We Need a Public Health Care Option

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=PbWaYKeW4gU> &feature=quicklist &playnext=2 &playnext_from=QL

Obama to pitch health care plan to American Medical Association (2009-06-14 16:59)

HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius said that health "costs are crushing us," the day before President Barack Obama pitches his health care plan before the American Medical Association.

"It's hurting families. Our businesses are less competitive. We can't continue on this pathway," said Sunday on CNN's State of the Union.

Sebelius said that solving the economic recession is impossible unless the nation first tackles the spiraling costs of health care in the country.

"The president does not want to dismantle privately owned plans," Sebelius said. "He doesn't want the 180 million people who have employer coverage to lose that coverage. He wants to strengthen the marketplace."

"Higher cost does not translate to higher quality," the HHS Secretary said.

[EMBED]

ABC News

Obama Will Make His Case for Health-Care Reform Before AMA in Chicago

ABC News - 1 hour ago

The momentum behind Obama's health reform effort has added fuel to a ferocious lobbying campaign over the proposal for a public health plan.

Obama's health plan: Battle lines become clearer Christian Science Monitor

Health care status quo unacceptable: US official AFP

Health care costs are 'crushing us,' says Sebelius CNN Political Ticker

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Special envoy Mitchell to meet with Israeli PM (2009-06-16 19:06)

President Barack Obama is sending special Middle East peace envoy George Mitchell meet with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in Paris, U.S. officials said Tuesday.

They will discuss the Middle East process between Israel and the Palestinians. Netanyahu recently said that he supports Palestinian statehood but with many conditions including demilitarization of the new state.

The Palestinians rejected Netanyahu's caveats, but the Obama administration has said that it seemed like a good start. The Israeli prime minister though has rejected Obama's call for a complete freeze on settlement expansion including that coming from natural population growth in existing settlements.

 Times Online

Israel sees deal soon with Obama over settlements

Washington Post - 13 hours ago

In talks with US President Barack Obama's Middle East envoy, Netanyahu has asserted that his government does not have the legal authority to stop building ...

AP sources: Obama envoy to meet Israeli leader The Associated Press

Netanyahu Responds to Obama with Obfuscation, Rhetoric and More ... Huffington Post

Commentary: Obama can succeed in Mideast CNN International

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Joe Markowitz (2009-06-18 13:04:50)

Any good mediator knows that when one side makes a concession, you have to respond positively to that. You don't reject the conditions that are attached to the concession. You just deal with that as an area of disagreement that must be resolved later. Both Barack Obama and George Mitchell are skilled mediators. They will make the most of Netanyahu's agreement to the concept of a Palestinian state, and they will continue to work on the points of disagreement.

Hillary Clinton to undergo surgery on right elbow (2009-06-18 20:29)

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton will have to undergo surgery to repair her right elbow, that she broke on Wednesday evening while heading to the White House, the State Department said.

The surgery is scheduled for sometime next week. She canceled her public appointments for today.

President Barack Obama was one of the first well-wishers to call her late last night.

 Times Online

Clinton to Have Surgery to Repair Arm Broken in a Fall

New York Times - Mark Landler - 4 hours ago

WASHINGTON - Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton will have to undergo surgery to repair a fractured right elbow, caused when she slipped and fell on her way to a White House meeting on Wednesday evening, the State Department said ...

Video: Sec. Clinton to Have Surgery on Broken Elbow

The Associated Press

[EMBED]

Doctor: Clinton Elbow Injury Complicated, Recovery Could Take Weeks FOXNews

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-01-18 10:07:22)

Amiable post and this mail helped me alot in my college assignement. Gratefulness you as your information.

Barack Obama's Proclamation for Father's Day (2009-06-21 13:48)

Here is President Barack Obama's proclamation for Father's Day, 2009.

The journey of fatherhood provides unique and lasting joys. Cradling a baby in his arms, a father experiences the miracle of life and an unbreakable bond. Fathers imagine a world of possibilities awaiting their children and contemplate the privilege of helping them reach that expanse of opportunity.

As kids grow and mature, they look to their dad for a special kind of love and support. Providing these necessities can bring great happiness.

Fatherhood also brings great responsibilities. Fathers have an obligation to help rear the children they bring into the world. Children deserve this care, and families need each father's active participation.

Fathers must help teach right from wrong and instill in their kids the values that sustain them for a lifetime.

As they encounter new and challenging experiences, children need guidance and counsel. Fathers need to talk with their kids to help them through difficult times. Parents must also help their children make the right choices by serving as strong role models. Honest and hard-working fathers are an irreplaceable influence upon their children.

Communities must do more to counsel fathers. Family and friends, and faith-based and community organizations, can speak directly with men about the sacrifices and rewards of having a child. These groups can support men as they take on the great challenges of child-rearing.

Through honest and open dialogue, more men can choose to become model parents and know the wonders of fatherhood.

On Father's Day, we pay tribute to the loving and caring fathers who are strengthening their families and country.

We also honor those surrogate fathers who raise, mentor, or care for someone else's child. Thousands of young children benefit from the influence of great men, and we salute their willingness to give and continue giving.

We also express special gratitude to fathers who serve in the United States Armed Forces for the sacrifices they and their families make every day.

All of these individuals are making great contributions, and children across the country are better off for their care.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, BARACK OBAMA, President of the United States of America, in accordance with a joint resolution of the Congress approved April 24, 1972, as amended (36 U.S.C. 109), do hereby proclaim June 21, 2009, as Father's Day.

I direct the appropriate officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on this day. I urge all Americans to express their love, respect, and admiration to their fathers, and I call upon all citizens to observe this day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this eighteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord two thousand nine, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and thirty-third.

/s/ BARACK OBAMA

Barack Obama's Official Fathers Day Proclamation

Los Angeles Times - 17 hours ago

NOW, THEREFORE, I, BARACK OBAMA, President of the United States of America, in accordance with a joint resolution of the Congress approved April 24, 1972, ...

Obama's example: Putting family first San Francisco Chronicle

Obama asks men to be better fathers than his own The Associated Press

Father-In-Chief CBS News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Admin-Oboulo (2009-06-23 05:31:24)

The presumption of fatherhood of the husband means that in a particular situation, the husband is automatically considered like the father of the child.

The presumption of fatherhood of the husband profits to the child conceived during the wedding and to the child born during the wedding, no matter if he was conceived during or before this wedding.

Why Obama needs to tread carefully in Iran (2009-06-22 22:30)

The tensions in Iran are not really about democracy. Neither side in the conflict has proven itself anymore democratic than the other.

Both sides are equally sectarian and are both products of the Islamic revolution.

The main differences between the parties is ethnicity. Mir Hossein Mossavi is supported more by Iran's ethnic minorities, while Ahmadinejad is supported more by the ethnic Iranian majority.

The U.S. has traveled down this road before and often with very undesirable consequences.

While the U.S. is right in protesting a corrupt election, any fueling of ethnic tension leading to bloodshed and strife carries great risk.

The eventual "winner," especially if it's Ahmadinejad might be even place Iran in even a more hostile posture than before. Also, there is absolutely no guarantee that Mossavi will be more pro-Western than Ahmadinejad!

He could turn out like other former U.S. "allies" i.e. Osama bin Ladin and Saddam Hussein.

ABC News

US options limited on Iran

Duluth News Tribune - Peter P. Strzok - 15 hours ago

He is the son of an Azeri (Azerbaijani-Turkic) father; his mother was from Yazd, in southern Iran. Born in the most conservative major city in Iran, Mashed, ...

Exclusive: A Guide to Understanding the Iranian Unrest Family Security Matters

What happens next in Iran? The Young Turks

Iranian blackout Malta Independent Online

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Joe Markowitz (2009-06-23 15:01:50)

It's not about choosing sides. It's not even about which candidate becomes the president. It's all about the process. It's about whether the Iranian people have the chance to exercise basic freedoms. That is what we need to support. We don't need or want to support political candidates in somebody else's election.

Barack Obama Online (2009-06-26 14:42:44)

hopefully progress is on the tip of Obama's fingers

Obama climate change bill passes in House (2009-06-26 22:25)

President Barack Obama pushed a climate change bill that passed narrowly on the House floor.

"I'm the first one to acknowledge that the United States over the last several years has not been where we need to be," Obama said at a White House news conference after meeting with German Chancellor Angela Merkel. "Europe, in many ways over the last several years, has moved more rapidly than the United States on addressing this issue," Obama said.

"And I've been very blunt and frank with Chancellor Merkel that we are still working through creating the framework where we can help lead the international effort."

Merket has been a leader in addressing climate change in Europe.

Obama touts climate change bill

Inquirer.net - 6 hours ago

WASHINGTON—US President Barack Obama, joined by visiting German Chancellor Angela Merkel, touted a climate change bill being debated by Congress Friday as ...

Deaths Push Afghan War to the Fore for Germany New York Times

Economy To Dominate Obama, Merkel Discussions NPR

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Samuel (2009-06-30 12:12:39)

Do you want to get free obama apparel online. Go to <http://www.points2shop.com/index.php?ref=samuelstewart306> right now!!!

Richard (2009-06-30 18:10:28)

What's the change we really need? Find plenty of examples at: <http://obamaprayers.blogspot.com>

Joko Blog (2009-07-03 02:16:36)

Wanna know Results of Presidential Candidate and Vice Presidential Candidate of Republic Indonesia Debate, visit here <http://joko-blog.blogspot.com/2009/07/results-of-presidential-candidate-and.html>

3.7 July

Obama praises King of Pop (2009-07-03 13:16)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama responded to a question from AP reporter Jennifer Loven that the black community was unsatisfied with his response to the death of pop icon Michael Jackson.

"I grew up on his music," said Obama, who is three years younger than Jackson. "Still have all his stuff on my iPod."

"I think that his brilliance as a performer also was paired with a tragic and, in many ways, sad personal life," he said. "I'm glad to see that he is being remembered primarily for the great joy that he brought to a lot of people through his extraordinary gifts as an entertainer."

Obama said that he wasn't aware of the response among African Americans mentioned by Loven.

"I know a lot of people in the black community," he said. "I haven't heard that." White House aides have stated that Obama sent a letter of condolences to the Jackson family.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Kumari (2009-07-05 10:33:20)

I am an all heart supporter of President Obama and fully believe in his approach to making the changes that the US has been in need off for quite some time. However I think that it is also important to not forget that what makes America great, and will continue to make it great, is not only good policies, ambition, proud work ethics and sleepless nights but also inspiration, creativity, passion, tolerance and love. Certainly these are some words that can be used to describe the entertainment industry and the late Michael Jackson who is now an American icon for pop music worldwide and dance. As much as President Obama supports and stands by the American mainstream it is important, I believe, for America to take care of her heritage and those that make America proud by their legendary gifts. Surely then, there cannot be a more significant homage to an entertainer, and really humanitarian, than perhaps First Lady Michelle Obama and the First girls paying homage to a legend on Tuesday, July 7. It would only be a fitting tribute to man who gave of his best in performance on the American and world pop stage. I think it's important that America takes care of figures such as Michael Jackson, Madonna, (and even Spears) and support these figures so that future icons in the offing do not have to travel the dark depths of despair from media criticism which in turn lead them to accidental overdoses and other such "tragedies". I think, that the only tragedy here would be if we do not commemorate a legend fittingly.

K.Karand

Obama set for week-long foreign jaunt (2009-07-04 19:32)

President Barack Obama is ready to leave for a trip to Russia, among other countries, where he is expected to talk with Russian leaders, Dmitry Medvedev and Vladimir Putin, about arms control, climate change and other issues.

Prior to taking office, Russia and the U.S. appeared on a path to a new cold war with tensions heating up over a planned U.S. "defense shield" in Eastern Europe, and a Russian military intervention in Georgia. However, things appear to have cooled off with the advent of the Obama administration.

The U.S. president will also take part in a G-8 summit in L'Aquila, Italy, and will meet separately with Pope Benedict

XVI. He will also visit Ghana in his first trip to sub-Saharan Africa since coming to office.

 Telegraph.co.uk

Russia Presents Test for Obama

Washington Post - Michael A. Fletcher, Philip P. Pan - 3 hours ago

President Obama is scheduled to leave Washington tonight on a week-long trip that will help determine whether his ...

Video: Russia and NATO: no longer at loggerheads?  RT

[EMBED]

Heading to Russia, Obama Is Mindful of Its Power Equation New York Times

Tough talks with Russia await Obama on trip abroad Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama, Medvedev hold press conference (2009-07-06 13:40)

Presidents Dmitry Medvedev and Barack Obama appeared in a joint press conference after their meeting in Moscow today.

They announced an agreement between the United States and Russia on cooperation in Afghanistan.

The two leaders talked about the situation in Georgia in which Obama says there were differences, but that the leaders agreed that the situation should be resolved peacefully.

Russia, US Cooperation on Afghanistan Shows 180 Degree Turn

FOXNews - Eve Zibel - 33 minutes ago

A deal between the United States and Russia to increase assistance and training in Afghanistan is being hailed as a full turn-around for two nations that had once been on opposite sides during a different Afghan war.

Video: Obama and Medvedev "Reset" US-Russian Relations - Bloomberg  Bloomberg

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Economy On Back Burner On Day One Of Obama-Medvedev Summit Wall Street Journal

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2009-07-09 15:43)

President Barack Obama spoke at the G8 Summit in L'Aquila, Italy today.

He talked about tackling climate change including cutting global emissions in half and limiting global warming to no more than 2 degrees Celsius. Developed nations agreed to reduce emissions on absolute terms in the short term, while developing nations will take steps to reduce emissions before 2050.

 FOXNews

President Obama Delivers Remarks at G8 Summit

Washington Post - 5 hours ago

PRESIDENT OBAMA: ... the people of Italy have shown us during this stay. We are very grateful to all of you. I also want to thank the 17 other leaders who ...

Video: Obama Explains Climate Deal at G-8 Italy  EUX.TV

[EMBED]

Obama vows US will lead the way on climate change Los Angeles Times

Analysis: Obama's global reach only goes so far The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama visits historic slave depot in Ghana (2009-07-11 21:12)

President Barack Obama visited a former slave trading station in Ghana today.

He spoke at Cape Coast Castle in Ghana comparing the site to a former Nazi concentration camp he visited in Germany. "It is reminiscent of the trip I took to Buchenwald," Obama said, "because it reminds us of the capacity of human beings to commit great evil.

Obama spoke of America's commitment to Africa but said in the end that Africa's future is in the hands of Africans.

 guardian.co.uk

Obama visits former slave depot in Ghana

Los Angeles Times - Christi Parsons - 2 hours ago

President Obama speaks makes a speech at the Cape Coast Castle in Ghana. He said it reminded him of the former concentration camp he toured in Germany, "of the capacity of human beings to commit great evil.

Video: Obama on Africa's Role as Global Partner  EUX.TV

[EMBED]

Obama sees Africa's dark past at slave fortress Reuters

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's speech calls for change in Africa (2009-07-12 17:30)

Barack Obama's speech in Ghana promised help to the troubled continent of Africa but also asked Africans to be the change that they are seeking – a message similar to that he espoused on the presidential campaign trail. Obama's appearance in Ghana also had the same rock star characteristics of the election race.

"We must start from the simple premise that Africa's future is up to Africans," Obama said in a speech televised across the continent. Obama's visit to Ghana rather than his father's home country of Kenya, or other African nations, was planned to highlight the country's flourishing democracy.

Although Ghana had a troubled beginning as a nation, for more than a decade the country has enjoyed stability and economic growth. Obama's address spoke of hope for spreading democracy across Africa, and for reducing disease and poverty.

"These things can only be done if you take responsibility for your future," Obama told the Ghanaian parliament. "And it won't be easy. It will take time and effort. There will be suffering and setbacks. But I can promise you this: America will be with you every step of the way, as a partner, as a friend." Obama's father was a Kenyan goat herder and worked for the British during colonial times. His father came to the United States to study where he met and married Obama's mother, also a student, in Hawai'i.

Obama's visit to slave castle

The president brought his wife, Michelle and their daughters, Malia and Sasha to an infamous former slave trading depot on Ghana's coast. Michelle's Obama's earliest known ancestor, Jim Robinson, was born as a slave in the 1850s in South Carolina.

"Obviously, it's a moving experience, a moving moment," Obama said while visiting the site. "As painful as it is, I think that it helps to teach all of us that we have to do what we can to fight against the kinds of evils that, sadly, still exist in our world." Obama's speech stressed the need for Africa to give up the tradition of autocratic leaders and develop a more holistic approach instead: "Africa doesn't need strongmen. It needs strong institutions." Obama's call for responsibility is not new – many other Western leaders have done the same before – but this is the first African American president to make the appeal.

"I have the blood of Africa within me, and my family's own story encompasses both the tragedies and triumphs of the larger African story. Some of you know my grandfather was a cook for the British in Kenya, and though he was a respected elder in his village, his employers called him boy for much of his life," Obama said noting how Africa can emulate his own family's success. "You can do that. Yes, you can. Because in this moment, history is on the move."

Before his visit to Africa, Obama called on developed nations to raise $20 billion over three years to help fight hunger, and to teach better food independence in the continent. Obama's speech however contained little in terms of specific help that America would offer African nations.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

AB (2009-07-30 16:23:28)

Unfortunately, I have to say I disagree with Obama's stance on Africa. For a man who claims greater literacy on African issues than his predecessors, it is sad that he is offering more of the same. <http://aglobalhistory.blogspot.com/2009/07/barack-obama-doesnt-care-about-black.html>

Sotomayor cites "fidelity of the law" (2009-07-13 18:24)

Supreme Court nominee Judge Sonia Sotomayor's first day of hearings went fairly smoothly despite some comments that she might be an "activist" judge.

Sotomayor pledged herself to "fidelity to the law" and said she would follow Supreme Court precedent in making judgements.

"Throughout my 17 years on the bench, I have witnessed the human consequences of my decisions. Those decisions have been made not to serve the interests of any one litigant, but always to serve the larger interest of impartial justice," Sotomayor said. "In the past month, many senators have asked me about my judicial philosophy. It is simple: fidelity to the law."

 FOXNews

Day One of the Sotomayor hearings: a legal perspective

Los Angeles Times - Carol J. Williams - 1 hour ago

Legal analysts weigh in on how the Supreme Court nominee fared during a day of political theater, and what to expect in the next few days.

Video: Sotomayor Pledges Impartial Justice if Confirmed  The Associated Press

[EMBED]

Firefighter to Take Spotlight in Sotomayor Hearings Wall Street Journal

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Howard Dean backs Obama health care plan (2009-07-20 20:19)

Howard Dean, the former Vermont governor and Democratic National Committee chairman who ran as a presidential candidate, endorsed President Barack Obama's health care reform plan Tuesday.

Dean told a crowd of college students in Washington that a public system is the only option for addressing the nation's healthcare dilemma.

"If you ever want to save costs, it will never happen in the private sector," Dean said.

"We don't really have any health insurance in this country. What we have is a shell game like they had up on Wall Street... What we have is a system to make lots of money."

 guardian.co.uk

Dean Backs Obama Health-Care Plan

Washington Post - Philip Rucker - 3 hours ago

We cannot afford this plan; we can reform health care, and we can be responsible in what we do. Obama does understand that he can create a society totally ...

GOP Senator Steps Up War of Words With Obama Over Health Care Reform FOXNews

Obama has a lot riding on health care legislation USA Today

Obama's health care push met with pushback CNN

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama: Healthcare plan will help small businesses (2009-07-26 18:25)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama talked about his healthcare plan in his weekly address. Obama noted a study that shows small businesses pay more for health insurance than big corporations. Under the Obama plan, small businesses receive a tax credit. Low income workers will receive a subsidy to help them pay for health insurance.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama opens policy meetings with China (2009-07-27 15:49)

President Barack Obama started up policy talks with China in Washington today. The two countries will meet twice a year to discuss mutual cooperation on issues like climate change and the world economy. China owns about $700 billion of US debt and is seen as an important player in helping bring the world economy out of recession. Obama has also called on Beijing to do more in helping to combat climate change.

[EMBED]

FOXNews

Obama Opens Policy Talks With China

New York Times - Mark Landler - 36 minutes ago

Chinese officials listened to a speech by President Obama, in which he described ties between the two countries as "important as any bilateral relationship in the world.

Video: US kicks off high-level policy talks with China  worldfocusonline

Geithner, Wang say ties key to global recovery AFP

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Lots of changes floated for Obama healthcare bill (2009-07-28 22:02)

Lot of activity swirling around the healthcare bill.

A new plan by senior House Democrats sounds interesting. They're proposing to tax insurance companies that offer high-end health insurance policies.

In the end, I think, you have to raise taxes somewhere to make sure this things stays out of trouble in the future.

The propose tax on insurance companies would target individual plans valued at more than a certain limit, likely $25,000 or higher. Democrats hope to raise about $180 billion over ten years and this will enable the House to lower the surtax on wealthy households as found in the current House version of the bill.

 Reuters

As deadline looms, key opponents demand changes in healthcare bill

Boston Globe - 19 minutes ago

President Obama held a town-hall-style meeting yesterday at AARP's headquarters in Washington to pitch his health-care plan. He pledged not to worsen Medicare benefits or force anyone to switch insurers.

Plan to Tax Insurers Stirs Interest in House Wall Street Journal

The centrist alternative on healthcare: Cooperatives Los Angeles Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama awards 16 with America's highest civilian honor (2009-07-30 12:28)

President Barack Obama is awarding the nation's highest civilian honor, the Presidential Medal of Freedom, to 16 people, the White House announced Thursday.

The medals will be presented at a White House ceremony on Aug. 12. Obama called the recipients "agents of change."

"Each saw an imperfect world and set about improving it, often overcoming great obstacles along the way," Obama said. "Their relentless devotion to breaking down barriers and lifting up their fellow citizens sets a standard to which we all should strive." The Associated Press reports the 16 recipients as:

_Nancy Brinker, founder of Susan G. Komen for the Cure, a leading breast cancer grass-roots organization. Brinker created the organization after her sister died of breast cancer in 1980 and raises money for research and other services through events like the Race for the Cure.

_Pedro Jose Greer Jr., a doctor and assistant dean of academic affairs at Florida International University School of Medicine. He is the founder of Camillus Health Concern, which provides medical care to more than 10,000 homeless patients annually in Miami. He also is founder and medical director of the St. John Bosco Clinic, which provides medical care to poor children and adults in the city's Cuban community. His work has been recognized by several former presidents.

_Stephen Hawking, an internationally recognized physicist and mathematics professor at Cambridge University in London. The 67-year-old scientist is well known for his work on black holes. Hawking has been almost completely paralyzed for years and communicates through an electronic voice synthesizer. At age 21, he was diagnosed with Lou Gehrig's disease, an incurable degenerative disorder.

_Former Republican Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, who died in May. Kemp also was secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development under President George H.W. Bush and the GOP nominee for vice president in 1996. He was a quarterback for the Buffalo Bills before entering public service.

_Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., a member of the Senate for 46 years who endorsed Obama for president. Kennedy has been behind legislative efforts to improve the public schools, strengthen civil rights laws, support working people and provide health care for all. He was diagnosed with terminal brain cancer last year and has largely been absent as Congress debates Obama's plan to overhaul health care.

_Billie Jean King, the 1960s and 1970s tennis legend who became one of America's first openly gay major sports figures when she revealed her sexual orientation in 1981.

_Rev. Joseph Lowery, a leader in the civil rights movements since the early 1950s. Lowery helped organize the Montgomery bus boycott. He later co-founded the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, a leading civil rights group, with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. Lowery also led "Bloody Sunday" march from Selma to Montgomery in Alabama in 1965.

_Joe Medicine Crow, the last living Plains Indian war chief who fought in World War II, wearing war paint beneath his uniform. He became an acclaimed Native American historian who lectured extensively on the Battle of the Little Bighorn.

_Harvey Milk, who became the first openly gay elected official from a major U.S. city when he was elected to the San Francisco Board of Supervisors in 1977. Milk encouraged lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender people to live their lives openly. Milk, along with San Francisco Mayor George Moscone, was shot and killed in 1978 by Dan White, a former city supervisor.

_Sandra Day O'Connor, the first female U.S. Supreme Court justice. Nominated in 1981 by President Ronald Reagan, she retired in 2006.

_Sidney Poitier, the top black movie star in the 1950s and 1960s. He is the first African American to win an Academy Award for best actor, to receive an award at a top international film festival (the Venice Film Festival) and be the top grossing movie star in the U.S. Poitier began his acting career without any training or experience by auditioning at the American Negro Theatre.

_Chita Rivera, an accomplished actor, singer and dancer and winner of two Tony Awards. In 2002, Rivera became the first Hispanic recognized with a Kennedy Center Honor. She was propelled to stardom by her performance as Anita in the original Broadway premiere of "West Side Story."

_Mary Robinson, Ireland's first female president, serving from 1990-1997. She also is a former U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights.

_Janet Davison Rowley, a doctor and distinguished professor of medicine at the University of Chicago. Rowley was the first scientist to identify chromosomal translocation as the cause of leukemia and other cancers. She was awarded the National Medal of Science, the nation's highest scientific honor, in 1999.

_Desmond Tutu, the retired Anglican Archbishop emeritus and formerly a leading anti-apartheid activist in South Africa, widely regarded as the country's moral conscience. As general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, he led an effort in support of justice and racial reconciliation in his country, work that earned him a Nobel Peace Prize in 1984. Tutu also chaired the South Africa Truth and Reconciliation Commission in 1995.

_Muhammad Yunus, a leader in global anti-poverty efforts who has pioneered the use of "micro loans" to provide credit to poor people who don't have collateral. He founded the Grameen Bank in 1983 in his native Bangladesh to provide these low-interest loans. Yunus was awarded a Nobel Peace Prize in 2006 for his work.

 Telegraph.co.uk

Obama to award Presidential Medal of Freedom to 16 The Associated Press

Obama to give 16 'agents of change' US Medal of Freedom AFP

Obama to Award Medals of Freedom to 16 New York Times Blogs

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

"Cash for Clunkers" a surprising green success story (2009-07-31 14:22)

One of the most effective efforts from President Barack Obama's stimulus plan has been the "cash for clunkers" program.

The program offers $4,500 for qualifying vehicles that are traded in for more fuel-efficient vehicles. The popular program launched last week ran out of cash in less than a week although it was scheduled to last until November. The House approved an additional $2 billion for the program after learning it had run out of money. The Senate still has not responded, but the White House all deals made over this weekend are valid.

"If you were planning on going to buy a car this weekend, using this program, this program continues to run," said White House press secretary Robert Gibbs.

 ABC News

Dealers Welcome Clunker Traffic, Even if It's No Cure-All

New York Times - Yana Paskova, Malcolm Gay - 2 hours ago

Nick Clites, a manager at DCH Honda in Paramus, NJ, walks past several so-called clunker vehicles. By BILL VLASIC
DETROIT - It had been a dismal July in dealer showrooms - as bad as every month so far this year.

Video: Government jump starts Clunkers program  WIVB

[EMBED]

New Cash Steered to Clunkers Wall Street Journal

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

3.8 August

Paul McCartney dedicates "Michelle" to First Lady (2009-08-02 21:30)

First there was Obama Girl, now seemingly Obama Boy.

In an offering to the president's better half Michelle Obama, pop star Paul McCartney dedicated his love song, "Michelle," to the first lady at a concert in Washington on Saturday.

According to the New York Daily News, Ms. Obama was on vacation at Camp David and not in the audience.

The 67-year-old former member of the Beatles may be planning a farewell tour next year after 50 years of performing.

 Access Hollywood

Paul McCartney dedicates love song 'Michelle' to Michelle Obama ...

New York Daily News - Tracy Connor - 12 hours ago

Paul McCartney dedicated one of his hit songs to First Lady Michelle Obama at his concert on Saturday night. The President might want to ...

Paul McCartney plays "Michelle" for Ms. Obama TheCelebrityCafe.com

Sir Paul McCartney Dedicates Song to Michelle Obama Entertainment To

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

ChanCe (2009-08-03 01:59:19)

Me too I dedicated this song for Mr President's Birthday:

<http://www.by-chance.us>

ChanCe

Jo (2009-08-04 11:08:56)

its obama's Birthday

Obama gets "gift" on birthday (2009-08-04 12:11)

President Barack Obama celebrates his 48th birthday today and he received a gift of sorts in news of the release of two American journalists held in North Korea.

North Korean leader Kim Jong-il granted the two journalists, Laura Ling and Euna Lee, a "special pardon" on the day of his meeting with former President Bill Clinton, who is making an unannounced private visit to the country.

North Korea pardons US reporters

BBC News - 47 minutes ago

North Korean leader Kim Jong-il has issued a special pardon to two detained US journalists, the country's state news agency reports.

Video: Clinton Meets With NKorean Leader Kim Jong Il

The Associated Press

[EMBED]

Bill Clinton v Kim Jong-Il: A tale of the tape guardian.co.uk

[EMBED]

Obama celebrates with veteran journalist Helen Thomas, who shares the same birthday as the president.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-08-05 17:28:55)
flag@whitehouse.gov

Sonia Sotomayor confirmed as Supreme Court Justice (2009-08-06 20:12)

Judge Sonia Sotomayor is set to become the nation's first person of Hispanic descent to sit as a Supreme Court justice when she takes the oath on Aug. 8, 2009.

Sotomayor, President Barack Obama's first pick for the nation's highest court, will be only the third woman to serve as a Supreme Court justice.

The "Wise Latina" was confirmed today by the Senate in a 68-31 vote. Nine of the Senate's 40 Republicans voted for Sotomayor.

Times Online

For Latinos, Confirmation Is an Emotional Moment

Washington Post - 21 minutes ago

By NC Aizenman At a "vote watch" party held by Latino activists at a hotel bar a few blocks from the Capitol, news of the final Senate tally clinching Sonia Sotomayor's confirmation to the Supreme Court set off whoops and cheers, followed by sustained ...

Video: Latinas celebrate Sotomayor vote  KRQE.com

Sotomayor Faces Heavy Workload of Complex Cases New York Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama goes grassroots on health care reform (2009-08-10 13:39)

President Barack Obama's grassroots network is working full steam during the congressional break pushing for a health reform bill.

There have been a lot of disruptions at town hall meetings held to debate health care reform drawing accusations from both sides.

Most analysts believe a reform package will pass, but there is speculation over how the final bill will look. Much of the fighting now is over a public option that would allow provide affordable insurance to those who are uninsured or underinsured now.

Obama's plan is backed by such groups as the American Medical Association and the American Nurses Association.

 Reuters

It's all about me: Questions about Obama's health care reform plan

Baltimore Sun - 7 hours ago

Here's a quick glance at Obama's answers to the most common inquiries voiced by folks just like you: What if I already have health insurance and am ...

Disruptions drown out debate at health care meetings CNN

Obama network still trying to mobilize effectively for health plan Chicago Tribune

Progressive Religious Groups Line Up Behind Obama On Health Care NPR

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Igor (2009-08-10 15:26:56)

Obama qualifications to reform health care:

No birth certificate

Can not stop smoking

Difficulty telling the truth.

Narcissistic personality disorder.

Therefore, I Igor produce Obama Birth Certificate at www.igormarxo.org

Compare Obama Care vs Igor Care at Obama vs Igor Care

Did Obama make a backroom deal with big pharma? (2009-08-11 17:09)

[EMBED] That's the rumor swirling around about now after the news that big pharma now supports Obamacare and to the tune of a $150 million ad campaign.

There is all kind of speculation out there including the possibility that the president agreed not to bargain down drug costs for seniors on Medicare, or that he promised not to allow competing companies from Canada to sell medicine here – a move that would result in lower drug costs.

However, so far it's all been speculation and no deal with pharma is binding on the House and Senate. So we will possibly will have to wait until Congress comes back into session to see if Obama reveals anything new.

Whatever the case, the drug companies are now strongly backing the Obama plan, something that is causing wonderment in some circles.

 Washington Post

White House & Big Pharma: What's the Deal?

CBS News - Sharyl Attkisson - Aug 10, 2009

Sources say negotiations involving the White House and the pharmaceutical industry shifted to fast-forward in mid-June. President Obama had just taken a ...

More On That White House Drug Deal Mother Jones

The Drugmakers: Supping with the Devil American Spectator

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

TBX (2009-08-13 02:18:29)

Die Debatte um die Gesundheitsreform

In unserem Land wird eine äußerst hitzige Debatte geführt. Den einen geht die Gesundheitsreform nicht weit genug, und andere fragen sich wütend, warum überhaupt über das bestehende Gesundheitswesen diskutiert werden muss.

Die New York Times schrieb jüngst, dass die Auseinandersetzungen um die Gesundheitsreform an eine Wahlkampfkampagne zur Präsidentschaft erinnern, bei der über das Internet Unterstützer mobilisiert und kostspielige Werbekampagnen in die Wege geleitet werden.

Die Debatte um die Gesundheitsreform wird äußerst emotional geführt. So sind die stärksten Befürworter einer Reform...

<http://blog.taipan-online.de/552/2009/die-debatte-um-die-gesundheitsreform/>

Obama honors 16 with Medal of Freedom (2009-08-12 14:14)

President Barack Obama on Wednesday awarded the nation's highest civilian honor to 16 people whose lifetime accomplishments made them "agents of change"

"What unites them is a belief ... that our lives are what we make of them, that no barriers of race, gender or physical infirmity can restrain the human spirit, and that the truest test of a person's life is what we do for one another," Obama said during a White House ceremony in the East Room.

"The recipients of the Medal of Freedom did not set out to win this or any other award. They did not set out in pursuit of glory or fame or riches," Obama said. "Rather they set out, guided by passion, committed to hard work, aided by persistence, often with few advantages but the gifts, grace and good name God gave them." This is the first time during his presidency that Obama has awarded such medals.

Sky News

Obama: Medal of Freedom winners are 'agents of change'

USA Today

Today's recipients of the Presidential Medal of Freedom are an honor roll of civil rights. They range from Sidney Poitier, the first black man to win an Oscar; to Billie Jean Moffitt King, a pioneer in equal rights for women and gays as well as a ...

Obama presents 16 with Presidential Medal of Freedom CNN

Obama honors activists, actors, athletes, others The Associated Press

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama talks with the "enemy" – Big Pharma (2009-08-13 18:58)

There is definitely a group of people who will never quite accept the idea that President Barack Obama's administration could have reached a deal with big pharma.

Today a memo was leaked that supported recent claims about this secret deal, but both the administration and the pharmaceutical companies denied the memo accurately conveyed the nature of the agreement. Both sides admit that some understanding was reached though.

Now, that alone might be too much for the more conspiratorial minded to handle. Big pharma is evil, and you cannot make a pact with the devil, so the thinking goes. Realistically though, the president has to deal with both sides on this issue.

We will see soon enough though, what the two sides actually did agree upon. When Congress meets again, the White House will have to play its hand.

 FOXNews

Obama to Take On Health-Care Critics

Washington Post - Anne E. Kornblut

(By Jim Cole – Associated Press) By Anne E. Kornblut President Obama is embarking on a final public relations push on health care Friday before heading off ...

Big ad buy for Obama's health care program USA Today

AARP Corrects False Obama Claim FOXNews

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama holds town hall meeting in Montana (2009-08-14 14:14)

President Barack Obama took to the road personally campaigning for his health reform plan.

Today, Obama appeared at a town hall meeting in Montana. The discussions were reported as civil and courteous. There had been some fear that the meeting could suffer disruptions as seen in some of the congressional town hall meetings.

The town hall meeting has become a prominent feature of the Obama administration.

 Washington Post

Obama in Montana, live

USA Today - 2 hours ago

President Obama got a few pointed questions at his Montana town hall, but nothing like the shouting matches we have seen elsewhere.

Good manners in Obama's Montana audience The Associated Press

Obama Heads to Montana for Healthcare Town Hall U.S. News & World Report

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

KCM0186 (2009-08-15 19:07:43)

Town hall meetings are a great idea and the outbursts in previos ones are barbaric... If one has a problem, one should logically and civilly convey it.

KCM0186 (2009-08-15 19:10:04)

I think town hall meetings are great to get people on board with certain agendas. The way people have reacted at other meetings is barbaric; if one has a problem, convey it logically and in a civil manner.

Obamas visit Grand Canyon (2009-08-16 20:30)

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama took a day off during his campaign swing through western states, taking time to visit the Grand Canyon.

Yesterday, the Obama family went to Yellowstone National Park and visited Old Faithful.

This evening, Obama will return to Phoenix to speak before the VFW National Convention. The president has been promoting his health care reform plan during his trip.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama sets fast pace for his first year (2009-08-17 19:03)

Barack Obama may be one of the hardest working presidents to come along in a while.

He has yet to appear golfing, jogging, or fishing like many of his predecessors. He's on a working vacation now, and earlier he took Michelle for a night on the town in New York City.

However, he has gotten an awful lot done in his first six months in office. If he does manage to pass a health reform bill before the end of his first year, he will have accomplished something that others have been working on for decades.

Obama spoke today in Phoenix where another protester showed up openly displaying a weapon – this time an assault rifle. A Secret Service spokesperson said the man was in a designated viewing area and was not allowed near the president.

President Obama's supporters and protesters gather outside the Phoenix Convention Center in Phoenix on Aug. 17, 2009, where Obama is scheduled to speak at the VFA National Convention. (AP Photo/Matt York)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

John DeFlumeri Jr (2009-08-18 14:12:03)

I just hope the President doesn't get burned out from the workload! He is trying to do Everything right.
But everything means Every Thing!

John DeFlumeri Jr

John DeFlumeri Jr (2009-08-18 14:16:59)

I hope the President doesn't get burned out!
He's trying to do the right thing.

John DeFlumeri Jr

Obama to clergy: health reform is "moral obligation" (2009-08-19 21:46)

President Barack Obama on Wednesday called on religious leaders to back his health care reform plan.

"I know there's been a lot of misinformation in this debate, and there are some folks out there who are frankly bearing false witness," Obama told a group of supportive religious leaders during a conference call.

Hope for a bipartisan bill is fading although Obama still wants an all-out effort in persuading Republicans to come aboard. According to Washington insiders though, Democrats are willing to push ahead even without bipartisan support.

Obama fired back at conservative critics who have characterized his health reform plan as "socialism."

"These struggles always boil down to a contest between hope and fear," he said. "That was true in the debate over Social Security, when F.D.R. was accused of being a socialist. That was true when J.F.K. and Lyndon Johnson tried to pass Medicare. And it's true in this debate today."

 Telegraph.co.uk

Obama Calls Health Plan a 'Moral Obligation'

New York Times - Jeff Zeleny, Carl Hulse

WASHINGTON - President Obama sought Wednesday to reframe the health care debate as "a core ethical and moral obligation," imploring a coalition of religious leaders to help promote the plan to lower costs and expand ...

Video: New Health Care Strategy  CBS

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Democrats splitting health care bill? (2009-08-20 17:24)

According to the Wall Street Journal, Democrats may be shifting their strategy on health reform by splitting the plan into two bills.

One bill would include the public option and would be passed by Democrats alone without Republican support. They could use technicality in procedure known as reconciliation to prevent any Republican filibuster of the bill in the Senate.

The second part of the bill would contain elements of the original bill that would prevent insurers from blocking people with pre-existing health conditions, or refusing to renew policies due to such conditions.

In a radio interview with Michael Smerconish today, Obama told a caller: "I guarantee you we are going to get health care reform done." Senate leader Harry Reid said yesterday that "we are determined to get something done this year by any legislative means necessary."

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obamas head for Martha's Vineyard along northeast coast (2009-08-21 20:43)

President Barack Obama left the White House today to begin a nine-day vacation at Martha's Vineyard in Massachusetts. The presidential dog Bo will be going along on the trip also.

A local brewery has whipped up a batch of 'Ale to the Chief,' and a Mexican restaurant will be serving an Martha's Vineyard

'Obamarita.' The Farmer's Market will be selling a 'Beefy Bobama biscuit' and the bakery said they would try to send a gift of the biscuits to Bo.

With Smiles, Obama Leaves Capital Behind

New York Times - Jeff Zeleny

WASHINGTON - President Obama strode across the South Lawn of the White House shortly after lunchtime on Friday, climbed the steps to Marine One and officially opened his nine-day August vacation.

Video: Martha's Vineyard Excited for Obama Vacation

The Associated Press

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Martha's Vineyard and African Americans (2009-08-22 17:49)

[EMBED]

Martha's Vineyard, where the first family is on vacation has a long history with African Americans. The movie "A Place of our Own" (2004) was based on the Martha's Vineyard resort of Oak Bluffs, which catered to African American visitors. When President Barack Obama was a senator, the family would take vacations at Oak Bluffs, however they will be staying a special resort as first family.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obamas arrive in Mass (2009-08-23 17:48)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama arrived in Massachusetts today with his wife Michelle and daughters Malia, 11, and Sasha, 8, and family dog Bo. The family was headed for Marthas's Vineyard for a week-long vacation. Alos on board and accompanying the Obamas on their vacation was the president's sister, Maya together with her family, and senior adviser and old-time Obama friend Valerie Jarrett.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Bailout Plan (2009-08-25 18:34:55)

Unwinding from stress and problem, i think its deserved for Obama's family

Geraldo Menezes (2009-09-03 08:33:31)

President obama my name and geraldo
I'm from Brazil I know you lived when Hawaii liked to practice handsurf has a factory surfboards handsurf of my family would like to have a board of handsurf for senho
most do not know how to send and my gift to a person who likes the practice of handsurf thank

Geraldo Menezes (2009-09-03 08:43:30)

President obama visit my blog her are some photos of surfboards of handsurf would appreciate if you arises, you comment
I send you a board of handsurf
the Chi Brazil for you
'd like to know how can I do to send
thanks

Obama mourns Sen. Ted Kennedy (2009-08-26 16:34)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama speaks about the late Sen. Edward Kennedy who died last night due to brain cancer. Obama characterized "Ted" Kennedy as the "greatest senator of our times." He noted that Kennedy "engendered respect" from politicians on both sides of the aisle.

"For his family, he was a guardian. For America, he was a defender of a dream," Obama said.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama eulogizes Ted Kennedy (2009-08-29 18:30)

President Barack Obama gave a moving eulogy for the late Sen. Ted Kennedy at today's funeral mass in Boston, Massachusetts.

Obama again called Kennedy the 'greatest senator of our times," but said that the tears shed for the senator were more for his personal qualities rather than his legislation.

Others at the mass also gave moving eulogies including his son's Teddy Jr. and Patrick. Kennedy was laid to rest as the sun set at Arlington National Cemetery near his brothers, John and Bobby.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Sen. Ted Kennedy's sons, Ted Kennedy Jr. and Patrick Kennedy, speak about their memories of their father.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Democrats invoke Kennedy in health care push (2009-08-30 12:31)

The late Sen. Ted Kennedy was as strong a supporter of universal health care as there was in Congress. In a letter to Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick, Kennedy implicitly made known his dying wish was to pass health reform. He asked the governor to appoint someone temporarily in his place to take part in the voting for Obama's health bill.

Democratic groups, politicians and activists have been using rallies, email, social networking sites and everything else available to get this message across – to honor Kennedy by passing health reform.

Kennedy's niece, Maria Shriver says her uncle's death may provide the impetus needed to push health reform through Congress. Expect Kennedy's name to be invoked quite often when Congress resumes session in September.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Blake (2009-08-31 18:29:53)

I used your post in my blog at "I voted Obama in 2008" <http://votingmccain08.blogspot.com>. I gave you credit as the source with a link back to your blog. I have not always been a barack supporter, but I made a last minute decision before I went to vote. And I have now decided to support him in my blog. I would like to join your blogroll if you don't mind.

Public option lives on (2009-08-31 21:46)

I've been reading for several months now how the public option was toast, roadkill, dead in the water, etc. Yet, in reality, the public option hasn't really gone anywhere.

Health care reform really will not mean anything without a public option or something rather identical. You need something that gives the uninsured an affordable or free option and also offers something for people who are underinsured.

There are two of the big health care problems. The uninsured drive up rates by using emergency rooms for their health needs. These emergency room costs are passed on to all consumers. Underinsured folk are now the leading statistic among people declaring bankruptcy. Their medical costs are driving them into insolvency. The number of underinsured people has been rising at an alarming rate. As they go down financially, they help drag the general economy down with them.

A public option could also help bring down overall medical costs just by providing more competition. Currently, health care costs are threatening to shut down retirement plans including the largest plan of them all - Social Security and Medicare.

Without a public option, we're not likely to see any major change in the economic situation soon. There's too much tied into the health care system. There's at least as much tied into the health care system as was linked to the real estate market, and we saw what happened when that sector collapsed.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

3.9 September

Obama to take greater role, address Congress (2009-09-02 20:09)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama will address Congress on the subject of health reform on Sept. 9.

Obama's strategy was to let Congress come up with a plan on their own, not wishing to repeat the mistakes of the Clinton administration, which attempted to push a plan through Congress. However, many health reform supporters are unclear as to exactly what Obama wants and they want him to take more of the lead on crafting a bill.

Congress resumes session next week and is expected to immediately take up the health reform debate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Blake (2009-09-04 14:46:12)

I think Obama is playing it very smart by leaving it up to congress. He has been doing very well considering his lack of experience.

-Blake

<http://ivotedobamain2008.blogspot.com>

prof.Moses Isaac ODHIAMBO/linkedcom (2009-09-07 11:53:17)

OBAMA PRESIDENCY pledges in a moment rich with practical promise being realized stepwisely to use American strength of Protocol DIPLOMACY as a source of good HEALTH-CARE governance policy. As President Theodore Roosevelt once said and held the ideal that Government should be the greater arbiter of the conflicting economic forces in the American nation,especially before capital,medicare and labour, guaranteeing justice to each and dispensing favours to use.

The HEALTH-CARE for all MUST be voted in the CONGRESS to take care of Colorectal cancer which is the third most common cancer in the U.S. The American Cancer Society estimates approximately 146,970 new cases will be diagnosed in 2009, along with 49,920 deaths About 75 % of cases develop after age 45. In most cases, the cancer arises from a polyp, an abnormal mass of tissue that develops on the inside wall of the colon or rectum.

President OBAMA s Great Society Program on HEALTH-CARE in this fall in CONGRESS should augment or amend rapidly to enact recommendations so that the millions of elderly people find succour through his governance policy as was in the 1965 JOHNSON MEDICARE era amendments to the social security ACT. Prevention of COLON CANCER should be medicare relief for the US people or the country in terms of micro-and macro-economic policy.

OBAMA is steering the USA more actively into WORLD of LISTENING and DIALOGUING witful WISDOM of good governance politics of succinct macro-economic policy of our time.

Roosevelt used to like to quote favourable proverb „Speak softly and carry on big stick

„ - May be a rod in Moses' hands will part the mighty red sea. BUT as for OBAMA HE SPEAKS WORDS OF WISDOM SO ARTICULATELY, SO ELOQUENTLY that even if you were born dumb and delf the wind of instinct of CHANGE just delivers it to your brain cells to understand.

As for President OBAMA this is the time to be aware of strategic HEALTH-CARE need for preventing COLON CANCER from taking root in the first place as many people could be faced with a whole host of problems 1)roundless turns of tests and medical procedures 2) surgery (even possible removal of your colon, requiring a permanent colostomy bag to collect fecal waste) 3).Chemotherapy or radiation therapy, with side effects like fatigue, nausea, vomiting, hair loss, pain, mouth sores, and infection 4).An inability to work or enjoy your favorite activities

The HEATH-CARE REFORM BILL should be aspired to make government competent, compassionate and responsive to the American people. Just like when Roosevelt ensured the crucial bill to congress for the construction of Panama canal many of the CONSERVATIVES thought it was Waste of government FUNDING never thought institutively that it was a strategic need for shortcut between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans.

Let us give HEATH-CARE our VOTE in the CONGRESS.Let us restore the peoples treasured WEALTH WITHIN than throw it to the yankees in the hot deserts abroad.

-PROF. MOSES ISAAC ODHIAMBO(SIAYA)

tamas (2009-09-08 14:09:54)

What do you think about Obama's lack of leadership in either domestic or global economic issues? It seems that the health care struggles underline his inability to push through any policy. This is reminiscent of the tactics that he used to approach the global crisis. Everything is in his favour and he wastes his brill opportunities.

Obama to appear on GMA before address (2009-09-04 21:01)

President Barack Obama will appear on Good Morning America in an interview with Robin Roberts on Wednesday, the day he gives an address on health reform before Congress.

Roberts will reportedly talk to Obama mainly on the subject of education. Roberts was the first to interview Obama after he became president.

In related news, Fox still hasn't confirmed that it will broadcast Obama's address. ABC, CBS and NBC will all be televising the prime time event. Fox also failed to air Obama's last prime time address in July.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Van Jones resigns (2009-09-05 20:04)

The Obama administration suffered a big blow today when green jobs czar Van Jones resigned today under increasing pressure from Republicans.

Jones was attacked by conservatives for statements he made against Republicans and for signing a petition in 2004 that questioned whether George W. Bush allowed 9-11 to occur to help start a war in the Middle East.

"I have been inundated with calls – from across the political spectrum – urging me to 'stay and fight.' But I came here to fight for others, not for myself. I cannot in good conscience ask my colleagues to expend precious time and energy defending or explaining my past. We need all hands on deck, fighting for the future," Jones said in a statement announcing his resignation.

MiamiHerald.com

Obama Aide Van Jones Resigns After GOP Attacks NBC Washington

Van Jones Resigns As White House Advisor CBS News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Thomas Hürlimann (2009-09-13 12:20:03)

People of the US, give Obama your support! <http://inallconscience.wordpress.com>

Obama addresses students at start of school year (2009-09-08 12:26)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama helped kick off the school year with a message to students across the nation. The broadcast message had caused controversy among some conservatives who claimed the president was trying to politically influence young minds. Obama spoke to a student audience at a high school gymnasium in a Washington suburb.

Obama urged kids to stay in school and to take their studies very seriously.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-09-22 06:18:34)

obama you should stop israel to war with palestine but i think you are 2nd jorge bush not ibrahim lincoln bcoz ibrahim sir never tolerate bad thing like you

Democrats rally behind Obama (2009-09-10 19:36)

President Barack Obama's address to Congress last night on health care appears to have unified most of the Democratic Party behind him, and has really ignited his grassroots base.

The White House today also released a letter to the president by the late Sen. Ted Kennedy just shortly before his death on Aug. 25. This is firing up Obama supporters even more. Kennedy came out strongly for Obama during the election campaign and had been one of his strongest supporters during his first year as president. The text of the letter is appended below:

(AP Photo/Charles Dharapak, File)

Dear Mr President,

I wanted to write a few final words to you to express my gratitude for your repeated personal kindnesses to me – and one last time, to salute your leadership in giving our country back its future and its truth.

On a personal level, you and Michelle reached out to Vicki, to our family and me in so many different ways. You helped to make these difficult months a happy time in my life.

You also made it a time of hope for me and for our country.

When I thought of all the years, all the battles, and all the memories of my long public life, I felt confident in these closing days that while I will not be there when it happens, you will be the president who at long last signs into law the health care reform that is the great unfinished business of our society. For me, this cause stretched across decades; it has been disappointed, but never finally defeated. It was the cause of my life. And in the past year, the prospect of victory sustained me – and the work of achieving it summoned my energy and determination.

There will be struggles – there always have been – and they are already under way again. But as we moved forward in these months, I learned that you will not yield to calls to retreat – that you will stay with the cause until it is won. I saw your conviction that the time is now and witnessed your unwavering commitment and understanding that health care is a decisive issue for our future prosperity. But you have also reminded all of us that it concerns more than material things; that what we face is above all a moral issue; that at stake are not just the details of policy, but fundamental principles of social justice and the character of our country.

And so because of your vision and resolve, I came to believe that soon, very soon, affordable health coverage will be available to all, in an America where the state of a family's health will never again depend on the amount of a family's wealth. And while I will not see the victory, I was able to look forward and know that we will – yes, we will – fulfil the promise of health care in America as a right and not a privilege.

In closing, let me say again how proud I was to be part of your campaign – and proud as well to play a part in the early months of a new era of high purpose and achievement. I entered public life with a young president who inspired a generation and the world. It gives me great hope that as I leave, another young president inspires another generation and once more on America's behalf inspires the entire world.

So, I wrote this to thank you one last time as a friend – and to stand with you one last time for change and the America we can become.

At the Denver Convention where you were nominated, I said the dream lives on.

And I finished this letter with unshakable faith that the dream will be fulfilled for this generation, and preserved and enlarged for generations to come.

With deep respect and abiding affection,

(Ted)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

seoexpert (2009-09-13 02:46:57)

Barack Obama the first African American to hold the office.He is a Genius man..He has decision power he the best president :)

Wealthy Perspective (2009-09-13 03:41:04)

I hope this isn't too off topic but did you hear Obama's suggestion to kids about social networks, like facebook, and how they should be careful what they put out for the world to see forever!

Wise words indeed!

Obama notes rise in number of healthcare uninsured (2009-09-13 18:01)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama mentioned Census figures and other surveys that the number of uninsured has swelled by 6 million people over the last 12 months. The number of adults who receive workplace insurance has also dropped. He also mentioned that having insurance is not very ensuring any more, since you can be dropped at any time if you're considered too much of a cost-risk.

Obama said that if a healthcare package is passed, he would "own" it and accept responsibility if medical costs did not come under control, or the problem of the uninsured was not solved. He said he was open to managing medical malpractice suits, a key Republican issue, but indications are that he is not that receptive to the idea.

The president said that we are not the first generation to take up the issue of healthcare reform, but he hopes that we will be the last.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama explains missile defense decision (2009-09-16 19:40)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama explains why he canceled the missile shield plan for eastern Europe.

The missile shield was supposedly to protect Poland and neighboring countries from Iranian missiles, but it was causing a lot of friction with Russia.

There will still be a defense system against the unlikely possibility that Iran should launch a ballistic missile at Europe. This system will be more based on sea using current interceptors to shoot down short range missiles.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

rob fletcher (2009-09-19 13:37:06)

I do guess they want us bury alive? Or, what??? We need all the protection we can get due to the hate they have for us and our "Freedom"!!! Help!!!

Obama hits Sunday morning talk shows (2009-09-20 17:57)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama appeared in five morning talk shows on Sunday in an unprecedented and all-out effort to push his healthcare reform package.

Personally I think that there should be some taxes raised on the wealthy and the medical industry to cover a future reform program. Just look at what happened to the Social Security Sytem. But the president continues to insist on a program that will survive by simply saving costs on the current system.

Things always look possible on paper, but its better to have something flexible, like a tax rate, that will be there if things don't turn out as intended.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama addresses UN General Assembly (2009-09-23 16:53)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama spoke before the United Nations General Assembly today saying that he was ready for a new relationship between nations.

Obama outlined his principles for this new relationship:

1. Disarmament and non-proliferation.
2. Peace and security.
3. Preservation of our planet.
4. World economy that offers opportunity for everybody.

Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi spoke for about an hour on various subjects and also praised Obama, and UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon called a renewal of the spirit of unity between nations – a spirit in which the UN was created.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-09-30 17:38:11)

This is proof that the New World Order is here. Why does America keep living blindly. It is like the people have been hypnotized into believing what our government says. Why? We don't need to be quite about this. A one world government would destroy everything we hold dear to our hearts. Our freedom would be no more. Please America wake up and pay attention to what is actually happening in our communities and our country and don't let some foreign policy steam roll the American dream.

Tweet you senators to pass healthcare reform now! (2009-09-26 16:48)

To help President Obama push through healthcare reform, you can send a tweet message to your senators from barackobama.com by simply entering in your zip code:

<http://www.barackobama.com/twitter/tweetyoursenator/>

In this message you can voice your support for timely passage of a reform bill.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

disability insurance (2009-10-03 18:33:31)

Hello. I must say that I really appreciate that the president faces the critical health insurance situation. There is still more than 15 % of the American population with no insurance coverage. Besides that it is also extremely costly!

Good luck,

Lorne

Senate bill proposes 20 percent cut in greenhouse emissions (2009-09-29 13:53)

The Senate looks ready to pass a climate bill with deeper cuts than those proposed in the House version. The new energy and climate legislation will seek a 20 percent reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by 2020.

Co-sponsors Sen. Sen. Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.) and Sen. John F. Kerry (D-Mass.) will announce the bill on Wednesday according to congressional sources. The proposal comes after countries like Japan and China, at the G-20 conference, suggested they were willing to make deep cuts of their own .

Reduction of greenhouse emissions is not necessarily a negative for the economy as many suggest. Indeed, so long as an equally vigorous effort is directed at developing cleaner and more sustainable energy sources, the shift can be economically beneficial instead.

One controversial feature of the Senate bill is the inclusion of incentives for new nuclear power plant building. This concession will not likely please a good portion of green energy activists who believe that nuclear power, while not a carbon-emitting technology, is still not "clean" or sustainable.

A lot of wheeling and dealing is expected to occur during the negotiations to reconcile the two versions.

Many environmentalists expressed satisfaction with the Senate proposal ahead of climate change talks scheduled two months from now in Copenhagen, Denmark.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jack (2009-09-30 18:16:38)

Hi Paul, I was wondering if you would be willing to add my website to your blogroll in exchange for my doing likewise. My website is a compilation of the favorite books of the most famous people in the world, including Barack Obama. Please let me know. Thank you. favaholic.com

chris (2009-10-01 18:47:07)

It sounds like something we need right now, jobs and clean energy.

3.10 October

Obama to lobby for Chicago's Olympic bid (2009-10-01 19:01)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama will make a pitch in support of Chicago's bid for the 2016 Summer Olympics.

Today, First Lady Michelle Obama and TV talk show host Oprah Winfrey lobbied for Chicago, which is competing with Madrid, Rio de Janeiro and Tokyo.

Obama will travel to Copenhagen, Denmark to woo the 101 Olympic delegates that will choose the 2016 host city.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2010-03-03 21:04:52)

Hello. And Bye.

Obama celebrate 17th anniverary (2009-10-03 20:31)

President Barack Obama and his wife, Michelle, celebrated their 17th anniversary at a dinner in Washington on Saturday night.

The first couple ate at the Blue Duck Tavern in Washington's West End.

The Obamas married at the Trinity Church of Christ in Chicago on Oct. 3, 1992.

X

President Barack Obama and first lady Michelle Obama, walk to the Blueduck Tavern, in West End area of Washington, Saturday, Oct 3, 2009. The first couple is celebrating their seventeenth wedding anniversary Saturday. (AP Photo/Manuel Balce Ceneta)

The Obamas on their wedding day.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Becky Grant (2009-10-04 08:43:30)

Aww, congrats to the both of them! It's so amazing to see those two on tv. I hope someday I'm as happy as they look.

Obama to meet with Congress on Afghan war (2009-10-06 21:20)

[EMBED]

One of President Barack Obama's most difficult problems is the war in Afghanistan. During the campaign, Obama pledged to wind down efforts in Iraq and focus more on combating terrorism in Afghanistan.

The war in Afghanistan though is not popular with the people or many in his own party, and many believe the war has no clear objectives or end game strategy.

America has been fighting in Afghanistan for eight years with no one able to say when troops will be able to leave the country. As in Iraq, the situation in Afghanistan seems to be one in which whatever "stability" exists in the country appears dependent on a large scale presence of U.S. troops.

There are many who believe that regardless of whether the U.S. pulls out now or decades from now, there will still be a violent struggle for power in both Iraq and Afghanistan.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Torgny (2009-10-07 23:36:36)

Although I am a great supporter of Barack Obama, I think he is wrong on this one. The important war is to win the hearts and minds of the Afghan people. But air-raids where many civilians have been killed, and the many years of torture earlier have put many people of Afghanistan against USA.

Wealthy Perspective (2009-10-09 17:12:01)

Congrats President Obama on the Nobel Peace Prize.

Obama bags Nobel Peace Prize (2009-10-09 18:43)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama won the Nobel Peace Prize in a decision that surprised many including the president himself. Obama accepted the award despite the calls of many that he should turn down the prize. "I will accept this award as a call to action," he said.

Some have called the prize an award for "good intentions," but I think that it also has a lot to do with his moves on a nuclear-free world.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Papa Ross (2009-10-09 23:08:47)

Surprised indeed. www.addictedtologic.com

Mira Sound Germany (2009-10-10 02:19:23)

Hello,

a musical response to this: Michel Montecrossa dedicates his song and video 'True Politics #2' to President Barack Obama's Nobel Peace Prize Award.

Video-Link:

www.youtube.com/watch?v=129rB13N13g

Michel Montecrossa (www.MichelMontecrossa.com) is the German-American artist who accompanied the election campaign of the president and dedicated a song to Barack Obama ('New President') when he was "only" a candidate.

Torgny (2009-10-11 04:39:44)

If we read what the Nobel Committee says it is obvious that it is not only about good intentions. It is about the extraordinary changes that Obama has already accomplished this year, creating a new atmosphere in the world by the spirit of cooperation, negotiations, the disarmament of nuclear weapons. They want to support what is already accomplished, so that this new politic can continue and transform the world.

Joe Markowitz (2009-10-12 10:05:02)

It appears that the people who are criticizing this award are mostly people who just don't really believe in peace, other than perhaps the kind of peace that comes from defeating one's adversaries.

<http://www.hopeandchange.net/2009/10/more-peace-prize-reaction.html>

I know future (2009-10-12 15:25:14)

Dear President Obama :

I'am Chenjian. I always pay attention to your action for I respect you since you successfully became the president of the USA. No matter the final result, I know you are a nice person, and that's nothing to suspect. I am also a nice Chinese young man. China lay emphasis on "family" concept! The corn of family is love. Because of love, people gather together. Because no love, people separate themselves from original whole family.

As a Chinese youth, I respectfully invite you to visit China. If you add this arrangement, then the rates and affection of you and your party will increase in the world. That's good news.

The another important thing is that I will suggest you visit a famous Chinese man YunFeng. He is the most unique person in the world. Chinese people are spreading YunFeng's wide love to the world. He inherited the whole traditional condition of China. And we also are building the big family in the world. Of course, YunFeng is circle's center.

There are three reasons that I suggest you visit him.

Senate committee approves healthcare reform bill (2009-10-13 16:44)

[EMBED]

The Senate Finance Committee passed its version of the healthcare reform bill that was widely opposed by Republicans despite not even containing the contentious public option found in all other versions of the bill passed by both the House and Senate. Sen. Olympia Snowe, a Republican, voted for the bill.

The Senate will not work to merge all versions of the bill – a process that could be done in a few days. However, it is not certain that a plan that includes a public option will avoid a filibuster by opponents. It takes a vote of at least 60 senators to overturn a filibuster.

Even if President Barack Obama and his Democratic allies cannot beat a filibuster they have another strategy that they can pull out as a last resort. A parliamentary move allows them to avoid a filibuster and pass a bill with only 51 votes.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-10-20 05:57:33)

Comments must be approved by the blog author. (Thanks for the laugh)

The words change and hope embrace faith. Something the majority of people in the country wanted while Bush was in power. People get blinded by faith. The stimulus plan did what it was set out to accomplish, put money back into the pockets of people who helped bring this country into the mess it's currently in.

Quite hypocritical of a person to claim to vow of transparency to the world who has YET to divulge anything from his past. Who criticizes and demeans the country he is the leader of, for what purpose? Cap and trade will destroy the already struggling people in this country. He inacted congressional marshal law to aggressively get the stimulus passed without giving enough time to read through all these hidden provisions. It's a sick game. One that people are tired of watching unfold before their eyes.

Every politician is a liar. Do you really think that the true players in the game are those you see everyday?

JFK spoke about these things weeks before this death.

Men to watch as they speak the whole world bends to what they have spoken.

Henry Kissinger, Alan Greenspan, and Zbigniew Brzezinski. Puppets are the mouthpieces.

note that I do not type in terms of right/left/independent because it's a form of division amongst the people

Yes, Obama has time for climate change (2009-10-16 20:00)

The ABC News article Climate Concerns: Is President Obama's Plate Too Full? asks a question that seems a little too easy to answer from my perspective. Not to bash on author Huma Khan as this question has been popping up quite a bit in the media lately.

The simple fact is for anyone who believes the majority of scientists commissioned by the UN or working at major universities, the only answer to the question of whether Obama has time for climate change is 'doh, yes!' Now, if you believe in a small minority of scientists, most of whom have been shown to be on the payroll of energy companies, who say humans cannot do anything about global warming, then maybe such a question reasonably exists. But Obama does not belong to that minority of people on this globe. He has clearly stated that he fully accepts the threats posed by climate change, and the ability of humanity to do something tangible in combating those threats. Now, the climate change threat is not something that will only effect tiny island nations out in the Pacific. Most U.S. cities are located in areas that will feel the impact of rising sea levels. The entire Gulf coast and the Eastern seaboard are all under threat of an increase in the number and intensity of tropical storms that are fed by warming oceans. Indeed, there is no spot on earth that will not suffer some types of serious problems when normal climate patterns change.

So, the question is sort of like asking FDR during WWII, "We're pretty busy with Japan, do we really have the time to deal with Hitler and the Nazis?"

Yes, the president is going to be very busy mainly due to having inherited so many problems from the previous administration, but in no way can he afford to put climate change on the back burner.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Joe Markowitz (2009-10-17 10:52:20)

I don't think the issue is the president's time. I think the issue is whether the Congress has the political will to do it. The cap and trade bill is already out there and is floundering around in the Senate. It is not likely to get passed before Copenhagen. It could be that making health care a priority has contributed to slowing down the progress on an energy bill, but my guess is that the cap and trade bill would be floundering around in the Senate even if the Senate committees were not spending so much time on health insurance reform. It is more a question of politics than time, I think.

Sen. Reid announces Senate bill including public option (2009-10-26 20:11)

[EMBED]

Sen. Harry Reid announced today that the Senate health care reform bill will include an "opt out" public option. According to this proposal, states will have one year after the health bill is fully implemented in 2013 to opt out of the public option part of the reform package.

Reid said the bill was to be sent to the Congressional Budget Office later in the day on Monday. After the cost analysis of the bill, a vote will take place. The Republicans could attempt a filibuster, but Democrat Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. said that his party is very close to having the 60 votes needed to overturn such a move. Last Thursday, Arlen Specter (D-Pa.) said that the Democrats have enough votes to block a filibuster, a move known as cloture.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Leah (2009-10-28 13:37:57)

As Democrats of the Democratic Party, we are joining together in seeking reform within the Democratic Party.

Many of our elected representatives within the Democratic Party are no longer following in the time-honored footsteps laid down by the founding fathers of our great Nation. More importantly, we as democrats see our elected representatives within the Democratic Party abandoning the values and principles as set forth within the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Nonetheless, this is only the beginning of our problems as Democrats, for the current Democratic Party leadership is tainted by corruption and being taken over by Socialists. These Socialists are clearly a threat to everything we hold sacred in America, and they are gaining evermore control over our Democratic Party, our Nation, and the American people. Despite this, we as Democrats can restore control of the Democratic Party back to the party members. All we need to do is cut off donations to the local, state, and national headquarters of the Democratic Party, and to make sure the donations are made directly to patriotic and honorable Democratic Party candidates that are not corrupt and/or Socialist. So please help spread the message to everyone of our fellow Democrats. Also, don't forget to contact and request the Unions and other outside contributors to follow our lead as patriotic Americans. Thank you, and God Bless America. Website: <http://www.democraticreformparty.com>

House unveils health reform bill (2009-10-29 21:53)

[EMBED]

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi announced the new House health care reform bill today. The plan includes a "government option," which is a new name for what has been called the public option.

The plan may cost more than $1 trillion over the next decade but it is actually expected to reduce the overall budget deficit, even more so in the decade after that.

Pelosi said the insurance plan "covers 96 percent of all Americans, and it puts affordable coverage in reach for millions of uninsured and underinsured families, lowering health care costs for all of us."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

3.11 November

Election seen as test for Obama (2009-11-02 21:52)

Tuesday's elections are seen as sort of a test for the Obama administration and the Democrats in general. Such an expectation on the small number of races may not be totally valid, but we will probably see things spun in this direction. President Barack Obama is taking no chances and he has appeared on behalf of New Jersey governor Jon Corzine who is facing a tough Republican opponent. In New York, things turned positively for the Democrats when the Republican nominee Dede Scozzafava dropped out of a special House seat race and endorsed her Democratic opponent Bill Owens.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

mdeals (2009-11-05 00:10:25)
Republican Victories..

Were the Tuesday elections a sign of things to come? (2009-11-04 18:44)

Did last night's election indicate problems for Obama and the Democrats ahead in 2010?

That's what one reads quite a bit about in the press today. However, we should note that the exit polls did not actually link Obama to the failed gubernatorial campaigns of Democratic candidates in New Jersey and Virginia. Indeed, the exit polls showed that Obama still has a favorable rating among those who voted on Tuesday. I'm not trying to downplay the difficulties for Democrats that the elections may have been demonstrated by the Democratic losses.

The polls right now just are not indicating any apocalypse for Democrats in 2010, at least not at the congressional level. In fact, the current polls even indicate that the Democrats could increase their majority in the Senate. And there is nothing in the House polls to suggest with any confidence that the Democrats are looking at a net loss there either. And the Democrats did have some good news on Tuesday. They gained a House seat in upstate New York due to some bloody infighting between conservative and moderate factions in the Republican Party. This split was probably more important than the actual victory, although the winner Bill Owens will be able to help Obama with his agenda for at least a year. John Garamendi also easily won the other House race in California.

While much analysis still has to be done, I think that probably traditional Democratic laziness and low turnout may have sunk Corzine in New Jersey, while in Virginia, the Republican seemed to simply be a superior opponent in state that can easily swing either way.

Still yesterday should be a wakeup call for Democrats. In order to move voters the way they did during the Obama campaign, they need to reproduce the same energy and work. They cannot expect that everything is going to go their way with the Republicans in some kind of permanent retreat mode.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Torgny (2009-11-06 12:39:45)

Obama's popularity is above 50 %, but the polls show that the Democratic party is not very popular.

Too much infighting, lack of activity from Democrats?

House passes health bill, on to Senate (2009-11-08 14:12)

With the passage of the House version of the health care reform bill passing last night, the issue now moves to the Senate, which must pass its own version.

Since it is expected that the Republicans will try to filibuster the senate bill, there are two ways that the Democrats can beat a filibuster.

The most common method would be a vote for cloture to stop debate on the legislation, which requires 60 votes. There are 58 Republicans and two Independents, but one of the latter, Joe Lieberman, has said that he will support a filibuster. Not known whether any Republicans will break ranks. Olympia Snowe from Maine is probably the best bet although she has said she doesn't support an opt-out public option. The other senator from Maine, Susan Collins, is another possible crossover Republican. She's known to be quite moderate and pragmatic.

If the Democrats do not have enough votes for cloture, there is parliamentary procedure that can allow them to force a vote with a simple majority of the 100 senators, i.e., 51 votes. A move of this type was used to pass the Civil Rights Act.

If a senate bill should pass, the two houses of Congress will then work to reconcile the two versions and a final vote will be taken.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-11-10 06:00:15)
visit www.obamitas.com

Obama honors fallen at Ft. Hood (2009-11-10 17:16)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama paid homage to the 13 soldiers who died at Ft. Hood, Texas, after an attack by a fellow soldier.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-11-16 01:11:19)
devo dire che negli ultimi tempi
Barak è nettamente migliorato, soprattutto rispetto ai concorrenti,
Bravo continua così !

(2009-11-11 22:22)

After analyzing the 2009 election, there are some things that can be said. First of all, it's very clear that any idea that Democrats are losing because they are pushing too "liberal" of an agenda can be dismissed.

President Barack Obama won an overwhelming victory based on promises of change and the campaign's ability to motivate young people and others who had a habit of not getting involved in the political process.

Obama to hold jobs creation summit (2009-11-12 21:51)

[EMBED]

The job economy is weighting down on Democrats who are beginning to take some heat for the lagging growth in employment. The stimulus may take some time to work because most of the money is going toward programs that require a rather long development process.

There are some who believe that President Barack Obama should increase the number of government jobs, which is one of the fastest ways that Washington can create new employment.

The job summit, though, will probably explore other ways to help the private sector get back on its feet. I think it would be good for Obama to invite more unconventional experts rather than just those who adhere to the types of economic policy that caused the present meltdown. There is need for more "outside the box" thinking, even though there could be some friction in the process from people representing different schools of thought.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Democrats mistaken in shunning Obama, progressive agenda (2009-11-13 17:56)

A rather predictable move. Democratic candidates moving "toward the center" supposedly to attract more votes. Such a strategy had been in practice for a long time until Barack Obama and Howard Dean came along.

Now it seems fashionable to follow the same pattern as candidates seek to distance themselves from the president and his "liberal" agenda. Never mind that the president is still popular while both Democrats and Republicans are experiencing deep lows in popularity. It seems that it's hard to break old habits.

Well, the evidence is coming in that many of Obama's supporters stayed home last election as the Democratic candidates tried to make their agendas not too much different from those of their Republican opponents.

The young and other normally detached populace got excited during the Obama campaign, but they might not be that excited about the status quo.

Now, Obama himself has suffered somewhat from the rather slow pace of reforms, but this is not because he is trying to make reforms! The progressive move toward healthcare reform, climate change, etc. is motivating conservatives with their tea parties and all, but the "slow" pragmatic approach may not be well understood by young Obama supporters.

Obama is not likely to have the high drama confrontations on issues that we remember from John F. Kennedy's administration. The times have changed, but he still is making very bold moves toward change. When passed, maybe I should add "if" but it's getting increasingly likely, the health care reform bill will be the most sweeping social legislation since Social Security. Yes, bigger than Medicare. In fact, maybe even bigger than Social Security. Every president since Theodore Roosevelt has tried to pass healthcare reform, and now Obama is right on the door of passing such legislation in his first year in office.

But still, people do not know all these facts – they like action they can understand and soaring rhetoric.

Now the Democratic candidates – some of them – seem to be getting the wrong message about the shifting mood of voters.

They are not going to motivate sleeping Obama supporters by backsliding and distancing themselves from the president. And these supporters are not mostly conservative either.

Most Americans still favor the president and about 2/3rd of them support healthcare reform with a public option. The difference between these numbers will probably shrink once healthcare reform with a public option is passed.

All the other interpretations of the current situation with voters are just flashbacks to a different era. Times are changing.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

whitehawk (2009-11-13 23:34:03)

thank you

Torgny (2009-11-17 05:09:20)

Many people think who have ad no practical first-hand experience of politic believe that a president can do whatever he wants and pass through any legislation he wsants. This is not true, and especially difficult is this in USA where the Senate often blocks any attemts to reform.

"The change is within ourselves." It is through the activity of many people tht change will come. Active people will produce a strong public opinion. We can not blame others (ex politicians) if we do not are active ourselves.

Obama the first "Pacific President" (2009-11-14 19:43)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama described himself as the first "Pacific President" of the United States during a speech at Tokyo before heading to Singapore for the APEC conference.

Obama is in Asia primarily to help jumpstart the world economy and to encourage Asians to buy American goods. However, Obama is hesitant to ink free trade deals in the region because of labor opposition.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Torgny (2009-11-21 16:32:59)

Obama is the first pacific president in the meaning that he wants cooperation between America and Asia. Building a newwork of trust and good relations leading to peace.

US tade unions are traditionally against free trade, and Obama is in a very difficult position here. If he follows what trade unions want, he will gain their support. But if USA stops buying US goods and put up trade tariffs, other nations will stop buying US goods. Millions of people in US industries of ex computers, aeroplanes will be unemployed. This is something that many people do not take into consideration when they want to stop trade.

bravo (2009-11-29 00:29:16)

Thanksgiving

Dear Obama,

today you are makining shape of world, against Muslim your BOMB blessings, how your are killing innocent Muslim women,Kids, families and loved ones in Iraq, Afghanistan, Pakistan, and other countries.

But tomorrow is also a day to come,a GOD judgment, remember those who you killed your BOMB blessings.

best regards!

Obama to announce Afghan intentions at West Point (2009-11-29 19:15)

President Barack Obama will give an address at the United States Military Academy at West Point on Tuesday night detailing his Afghanistan strategy. He will announce both his intention to send more than 30,000 more troops to the region, and also elaborate on an exit strategy for Afghanistan.

The announcement of a large deployment of extra troops is angering many Obama supporters, although the president had, during his campaign, promised to be more active in Afghanistan while at the same time pulling out of Iraq.

Still, many of his supporters had hoped that he might have changed his mind, and many of his actions were interpreted as indicating a possible change of course.

There is hope that Obama's endgame, of which no details have been released, will allow the president to quickly assess the situation after the deployment and decide on whether the current course of action is warranted or not.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Torgny (2009-11-30 02:01:56)

Although I am a great supporter of Obama, I don't agree on this one. Military solutions never works in my opinion, although I understand that Obama regards the civilian changes (ex schools, police) as most important.

3.12 December

Obama's options at Copenhagen (2009-12-08 18:41)

The Obama administration announced that greenhouse gases posed a health hazards. The move was widely interpreted as a move by the president to pressure Congress to act on climate change.

The declaration by the Environmental Protection Agency allows Obama to create regulations bypassing the Congress to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Such regulations would be vulnerable once a new administration comes into office.

Technically, the president could even negotiate a treaty at Copenhagen without any legislation from Congress, but such a treaty would have to be approved by at least 67 senators to become law. Ordinary legislation requires only 60 or even fewer votes in the Senate but it must also pass in the House of Representatives.

Then-president Bill Clinton negotiated a treaty at the Kyoto conference only to have it fail to pass in the Senate.

Obama could negotiate a treaty that, if it fails to get approved, could still be sent through Congress as legislation for easier passage. Obama could also cut a deal to reduce emissions by executive order, using the new EPA ruling, with the understanding that such an agreement could fall through the cracks if an antagonistic administration comes into power some time in the future.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Eric Pearson (2009-12-12 18:40:08)

I'm a Democrat of the Democratic Party, and I do not agree with our Democratic Party representatives in Washington.

Our Democratic Party has moved to the far left, and we in the center and right are extremely dissatisfied with the "Change We Can Believe In" politicians and their obsession with making our Nation more like the Europe our forefathers had left behind.

Most Democrats already know their pleas to the Democratic Party are only being answered by repeated insult and injury. Many of our elected officials are no longer thinking of themselves as being our representatives, but instead refer to themselves as leaders in the true form of tyrants.

Nearly everyone of our elected representatives within the Democratic Party are no longer following in the time-honored footsteps laid down by the founding fathers of our great Nation. More importantly, we as democrats see our elected representatives within the Democratic Party abandoning the principles and values as set forth within the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Furthermore, our current Democratic Party leadership is tainted by corruption, and the liberals among us are supporting far-left socialist radicals with their agendas based on implementing socialist political doctrines into laws that are non-constitutional. This is a real threat to everything we hold sacred in America, and they are gaining evermore control over our Democratic Party, our Nation, and the American people.

To all intents and purposes, our Democratic Party is undermining and destroying our American democracy as founded in protecting individual liberty and freedom. The examples are so numerous it is nearly imposable to keep up with all of them.

Despite this, we as Democrats can restore control of the Democratic Party back to the party members. All we need to do is cut off donations to the local, state, and national headquarters of the Democratic Party, and to make sure the donations are made directly to patriotic and honorable Democratic Party candidates that are not corrupt or Socialists.

So please help spread the message to everyone of our fellow Democrats. Also, don't forget to contact and request the Unions and other outside contributors to follow our lead as patriotic Americans.

Thank you, and God Bless America.
Web site: <http://www.democraticreformparty.com>

Obama to seek free trade pact with Asia-Pacific group (2009-12-14 19:24)

President Barack Obama told Congress today that he will seek a trade agreement with a group of Asian nations. The Trans-Pacific Partnership with seven other nations in Asia was first suggested by Brunei, Chile, New Zealand and Singapore, and later Australia, Peru, Vietnam expressed willingness to join. Some farmer and rancher, and textile groups have voiced opposition to the trade pact because they thought their industries would be threatened by other participating countries. However, free trade groups lauded the decision stating that free trade would open up opportunities in all the countries involved.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Torgny (2009-12-15 05:22:03)

I think that we (humanity) today are confronting a great choice. Either we choose the way of cooperation, or we choose the way of "everyone for himself." Individuals for themselves, and nations for themselves.

I do really hope that we choose the way of cooperation, and I see this move by Obama as a step in this direction.

Dems weaken in polls as split widens (2009-12-16 22:22)

There can be a lot of disagreement on the importance of recent polls showing Democrats and President Barack Obama losing popularity.

However, it is hard not to worry especially after the Democrats turned over two important governorships to the Republicans in the last election.

Now, we see a split widening somewhat reminiscent of what happened to Bill Clinton during his first term. The funny thing though is that Obama is no blue dog Democrat like Clinton. Yet, today we saw Howard Dean, Keith Olbermann and others come out against the Senate compromise on health care. Rep. Anthony Weiner, D-NY, who seemed quite positive about the bill when it included the new Medicare buy-in is also firing back at the administration's seeming compromise.

What is more problematic is that people are firing back just as hard at the "liberal" side of the party. There is reason to be worried now about 2010, more than ever before, so we will have to watch carefully to see how this all turns out.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama announces "meaningful and unprecedented" deal at Copenhagen (2009-12-18 18:56)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama announced a non-binding agreement on climate change today at Copenhagen, Denmark.

Despite the lack of a legally-binding deal, Obama said the nations had put together a plan to set carbon emission goals. The agreement was unique in that unlike the Kyoto Treaty, the Copenhagen agreement includes the United States, China and India – the first two nations are the world's biggest greenhouse gas emitters.

The failure to negotiate a treaty is not entirely the fault of the United States, nor can the U.S. inability to come up with legislation be fairly placed on Obama's shoulders. The Senate said it was simply too busy with the healthcare reform debate to handle climate change right now. However, if it takes another year until the next meeting in Mexico City, one really cannot complain. An extra year will not make that much difference, but it is crucial that they do achieve a binding treaty without delaying too much.

Obama acknowledged that such a breakthrough was not going to be easy, but he said there was no other option. Somewhat ironically, the president had to leave the climate change early due to a bad climate situation on the U.S. East Coast where a big winter storm is brewing.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Health Care Plan (2010-01-02 12:13:13)

Hi, if you want to know more about the obama healthcare please check my blog <http://www.obamahealthcareplan.org/>

Should Obama make hay while the Sun shines? (2009-12-21 17:59)

While it is still a long time before the 2010 polls, one has to wonder about all these public opinion polls showing some weakness for the Democrats and declining popularity for President Barack Obama.

Not that I think Obama himself is in any way threatened in 2012. No matter how people may be disappointed with the economy and the like, I don't think a Republican president is in the offering especially if the economy is still weak. However, the Democrats could potentially suffer in 2010 unless things change a bit and people start liking what they seen coming from the administration. Signing a health reform bill could certainly help.

Indeed, maybe Obama and the Democrat-led Congress need to hurry up and pass some of Obama's progressive plans before 2010. Not only may this help turn things around, but just in case the Democrats suffer a setback, they will already have a lot of things in the bank.

Obviously, the Dems will have great difficulty if they lose a single seat in the Senate. They could still get things by using reconciliation but it will be slow going.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Filip (2009-12-22 02:44:42)

Obama surfing!!!

<http://www.serenadavanoce.cz/?b2684e7f0e84fb160fbc8657fff62639>

Poll: Obama is America's most admired man (2009-12-30 18:40)

President Barack Obama got some good polling news for a change after a spate of disappointing surveys for the administration and the ruling party.

A USA Today/Gallup poll found that the president was the most admired man in America, while his secretary of state

Hillary Clinton was the most admired woman.

Most Admired Man, 2009 Barack Obama - 30 % George W. Bush - 4 % Nelson Mandela - 3 % Pope Benedict XVI - 2 % Billy Graham - 2 % Bill Gates - 2 % Glenn Beck - 2 %

Most Admired Woman, 2009

- Hillary Clinton - 16 %
- Sarah Palin - 15 %
- Oprah Winfrey - 8 %
- Michelle Obama - 7 %
- Queen Elizabeth - 2 %
- Condoleezza Rice - 2 %
- Elin Nordegren Woods - 1 %
- Margaret Thatcher - 1 %
- Angela Merkel - 1 %
- Maya Angelou - 1 %

Sort of strange to see George W. Bush and Sarah Palin in second place for most admired man and woman respectively. Palin gives Clinton a run for her money, but Obama is by far the most admired among men. First Lady Michelle Obama was the fourth most admired woman behind Oprah Winfrey.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-01-04 17:44:24)

hot-wallpaper

zamy o = hz 11

Prashant (2010-01-04 22:08:09)

Obama may be an admired figure but his administration is not free from systematic failures....check out this video

<http://www.videocrux.com/video/18069/Obama-cites-Systemic-Failure-in-U-S-Security>

4. 2010

4.1 January

Three key Democrats drop out of 2010 race (2010-01-06 22:43)

The Democrats got more bad news today when Sen. Christopher Dodd of Connecticut and Gov. Bill Ritter of Colorado announced they were not running for reelection. Yesterday, Sen. Byron Dorgan of North Dakota also said he would not seek a new term in 2010.

Some news agencies have wrongly reported this as a loss of a Democratic majority in the Senate, but that's not a sure thing yet. Democratic candidates can still win in both Connecticut and North Dakota although both states will be tough especially North Dakota.

We will have to wait and see how the public reacts to a new healthcare reform bill and other legislation that the Democrats may pass before election time. Definitely there is a lot of pressure on President Barack Obama, the leader of the party.

The real challenge is motivating those grassroots supporters that were so fired up during the Obama election campaign. Those supporters are very largely progressive people although not all of course, and they tend to be difficult to inspire with pragmatic politics. The more change that occurs the easier it will be to argue that Obama and the Democrats are worth the effort of getting back to work for 2010.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

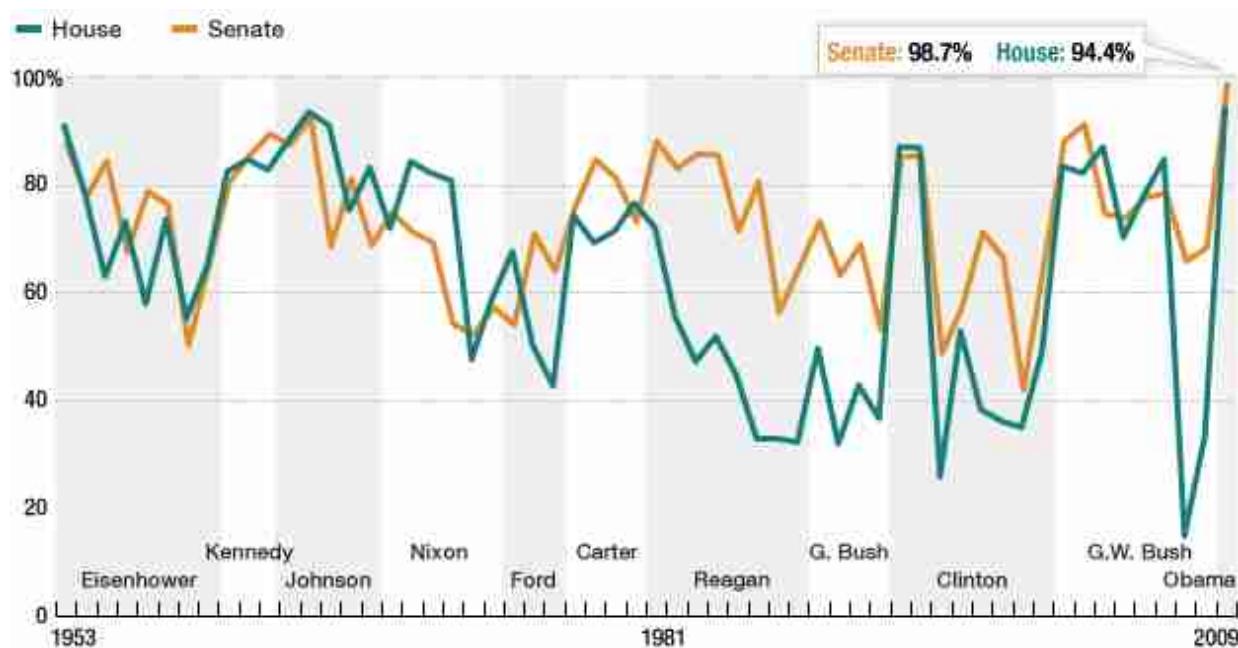

Progressives never had it so good (2010-01-12 15:52)

Despite all the whining by ultra-progressives, President Barack Obama has done a pretty good job when a non-biased, non-expectation analysis is used.

A study by Congressional Quarterly showed that Obama did better than any other president since Truman in getting congressional votes when he took a stand on an issue.

Here's the relevant graphic:

Source: Congressional Quarterly

Credit: Nelson Hsu/NPR

Many on the left seem to think that Obama can pass legislation by fiat or that he has plenty of leverage to "twist some arms" and get Republicans and/or moderate Democrats to vote how he wants them to vote.

Now, we no that even "I make the rules here" George W. Bush had only limited success forcing legislators to vote his way.

There are only so many carrots and sticks available to the administration and they still want to get a lot done even after a healthcare bill passes, as it should fairly soon.

Now of course no president can absolutely deliver on all promises unless they really have a Congress that agrees with him/her on all the issues. Obama still has a lot on his agenda. Of course, each "promise" is really a commitment to get things done and there are still other "promises" that need to be kept. Unfortunately, the ultra-progressives will make as much hay as the right-wingers if Obama does not keep a campaign commitment to the letter. Never-ending conspiracy theories will spring up predictably if that happens.

Again, Obama is the best thing to happen to progressives since LBJ's Great Society legislation. Actually even since the New Deal. No other president has committed to as much social reform since the days of the Great Depression.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama: U.S. will act quickly to help Haiti (2010-01-13 19:38)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama promised swift assistance to the nation of Haiti after the devastating earthquake that struck the capital of Port au Prince last night.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama reaches agreement on healthcare (2010-01-14 21:01)

President Barack Obama reached a deal with labor leaders today as part of an effort to pass healthcare before a crucial senate election in Massachusetts.

The White House agreed to exempt labor union members from a tax on high-cost insurance plans until 2018.

The senate race between Attorney General Martha Coakley and State Senator Scott Brown for the seat of the late Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) occurs on Tuesday. There is some concern that the Democrats could lose their 60 seat majority in what has been a very close contest.

Obama also wants to have healthcare reform passed before his first State of the Union address to be held sometime over the next several weeks.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama stumps for Martha Coakley (2010-01-17 19:59)

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama really fires up the crowd at a rally for Martha Coakley in Massachusetts.

Coakley is battling for the late Sen. Ted Kennedy's seat, an important senate vote needed to pass healthcare and other items on Obama's agenda.

To help remind Democrats to vote on Tuesday, volunteer to make calls at the Organizing for America website:

http://pollingplaces.barackobama.com/neighbors/random?bsd_id=652112&script_name=maoos&source=call5link&precinct=714697

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

DrKeithCurrie (2010-01-18 10:10:58)

I think anything can be happened, So, we have to wait some to see what is waiting for us actually. Thanks for nice information.

Democrats lose Senate supermajority (2010-01-19 20:40)

Tonight's defeat in the Massachusetts senate race was a big blow to Democrats and the Obama administration. However, it does not necessarily mean the end of the health care reform bill.

The bill is some danger, but most likely some reform will still be passed. There are several options available to Democrats. For example, they House and Senate could possibly reach a super quick compromise and vote for the bill before newly-elected senator Scott Brown is seated. Usually it takes a while before the vote is certified and Democrats could presumably move during this time.

Another option is that the House will simply pass the Senate bill as it stands without any changes. They could agree to seek changes in the future through the process of reconciliation. However, some types of legislation are not allowed for reconciliation so House Dems would have to sacrifice those changes. There is some question as to whether a public option is permitted under the rule ("Byrd Rule") that guides the reconciliation process.

Still another possibility is that they could decide to start from scratch using reconciliation to push through items that qualify under the Byrd Rule. I think this is a rather remote possibility.

What will be more difficult for the Obama administration is to pass any new legislation that they have planned in the future. They could be limited in the types of changes that they want to make. However, the Republicans were able to pass tax cuts using the reconciliation process.

Tonight's defeat was also an ominous sign for the elections in November bringing up the possibility of more losses, or perhaps even losing control of the House.

Obama may need to set down with party leader Tim Kaine, and perhaps invite Howard Dean over to talk about strategy for the upcoming elections.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Dave (2010-01-21 17:47:20)

I just wish that both sides would see this vote as a rejection of the extreme views of both parties. Enough. Of the bickering. Of the "gotcha" statements. Of the we're going to push everything we can while we can.

You know what, when Obama was elected, the majority had in fact had enough. Health care was broken. But you know what? The solution to that isn't to bite off the whole fking billion dollar industry in a single bill nobody has read. That is completely asinine.

But of course, the Republicans will now see this one seat as a sign they were right. They'll block everything now just because a Democrat sponsors it, and we'll get nothing. Not a compromise. NOTHING.

Fk all of them. It's like having to achieve an average temperature with one foot in ice water and another in boiling water. We just keep voting out parties for the other, hoping they'll catch on.

We may very well be doomed because they are not catching on.

ToeJamm (2010-01-23 13:35:48)

If the nasty democrats try to slide a bill through before scott brown arrives it would exemplify that the democratic agenda is more important then the voice of the people.

Tuck your tails and run you hippies! No more taxes! Screw the health care bill and screw OBAMA!

Kent (2010-01-27 17:21:22)

Yes, let's ram through a watered down health care bill a majority of Americans do not want so Pelosi and Reid can say they helped "save" us. Let's get rid of ALL the career politicians in Washington and put TERM LIMITS in place. The arrogance of the politicians in DC makes me want to throw up.

Democrats agreeing on new healthcare strategy (2010-01-25 19:43)

According to reports coming out of major news outlets, Democrats in Congress are close to agreeing on a strategy to save President Barack Obama's health care reform plan.

The new plan will make some changes to the current Senate bill using the reconciliation process to avoid a filibuster in the Senate. Only 51 votes are needed for reconciliation compared to the ordinary 60 votes to squash a filibuster. However, not everything can be pushed through using reconciliation. A law known as the Bryd Rule requires that only things that are not considered extraneous to the bill can be considered under that procedure.

Passage of health care reform would likely come as a big boost both for the administration and Democrats in general.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Torgny (2010-01-31 05:14:25)

Let us hope that there will be some kind of reform in health care. One small step is better than status quo. The present system has proven itself being the most expensive in the world, yet it can not give health care to all people.

Anonymous (2010-02-01 11:06:31)

Amiable post and this post helped me a lot in my college assignment. Gratefulness you as your information.

Anonymous (2010-02-03 03:13:19)

Good post and this mail helped me a lot in my college assignment. Say thank you you as your information.

Anonymous (2010-02-06 18:50:30)

Obviously I do but I dream the brief should prepare more info than it has.

eL ecua (2010-02-08 11:33:53)

It's truly not about being republican or democrat or black or white..Obama is clearly not the right icon for the U.S. He won by grabbing the attention of middle-class to lower class with hopes of change. Now millions of people expect one person to change everything. Yeah? How are we supposed to run a country when we're making decisions to better the poor who do not do much to improve themselves. How are we supposed to better our country and economy when we expect people to do things for us? We all have to make sacrifices for a prominent future and we're not making them. You take things away and the only people who complain is the lower middle class and lower class. Don't give them health reforms, give them more jobs. Put pressure on them and they will increase their output then our country will become more efficient.

4.2 February

Obama looks to restart healthcare in Congress (2010-02-08 18:55)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama has invited members of both parties to the White House for a discussion on healthcare reform.

The meeting will be on-camera, but Republicans have sounded skeptical about the exchange.

Now that Massachusetts Sen. Scott Brown has been seated, Obama appears intent on jump-starting the process again in Congress.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-02-09 02:44:32)

Easily I agree but I dream the list inform should prepare more info than it has.

Ddesjarl (2010-02-17 13:18:36)

This blog is great about covering Obama's presidency. There have been over a half-dozen lawsuits questioning his citizenship since he got into office. Those lawsuits were initiated by a lawyer named Orly Taitz who had her love life displayed openly in court recently.

Check it out: <http://www.browardpalmbeach.com/2010-02-18/news/orly-taitz-at-the-head-of-the-birther-movement-has-her-love-life-displayed-in-court/>

Michelle Obama: Healthcare reform must pass (2010-02-09 20:14)

[EMBED]

First lady Michelle Obama was interviewed by CNN's Larry King on Tuesday where she said that there was no option but to pass healthcare reform.

"We don't have a choice," she told King. "When we look at these statistics, we're spending billions of dollars on preventable diseases, and new health care legislation could go a long way to improving prevention, first and foremost." President Obama has said repeatedly that the status quo is not sustainable and that rising healthcare costs were the main culprit in rising federal deficits. The Medicare program is the nation's largest unfunded program. "So we have to get this done and I'm hopeful that Congress will come together, that the American people will recognize that doing nothing is absolutely not an option," Michelle Obama said.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama defends Recovery Act (2010-02-17 19:59)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama argues that the stimulus bill helped prevent a second Great Depression.

The Recovery Act has provided about 2 million jobs for people who would otherwise be unemployed.

Most independent economists acknowledge that economic stimulus was needed, and even more that more stimulus will be needed in the future to prevent a double dip in the recession.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Republicans use filibuster in record numbers (2010-02-18 18:44)

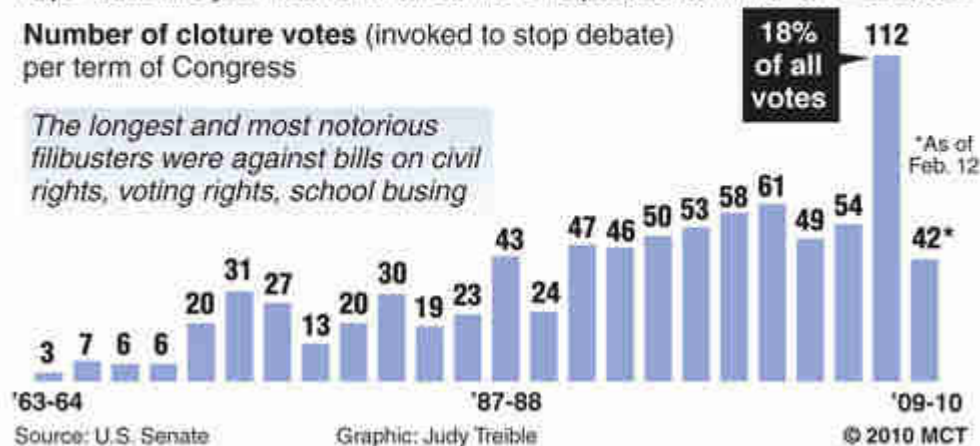

The Republicans in the Senate have done a good job at obstructing President Barack Obama's agenda as this graphic showing the number of filibusters demonstrates:

Senate tied up in knots

Republicans are using the filibuster (extended debate to block a vote) as a way to limit or derail the majority Democrats' ability to pass bills with the hope that annoyed voters will elect more Republicans in this fall's election.

Number of cloture votes (invoked to stop debate) per term of Congress

The longest and most notorious filibusters were against bills on civil rights, voting rights, school busing

Source: McClatchy

However, voters in November may not accept this as an excuse for Obama not getting enough done. The president does have the ability to act using executive orders and recent reports indicate he is ready to use this power. Democrats in the Senate can also push through legislation using the reconciliation process that requires only 51 votes rather than the 60 votes needed for cloture, the process by which a filibuster is ended.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Torgny (2010-02-22 19:08:32)

I do not want to interfere in Obama's politic. But since the Republicans have showed that they have hardly any interest in cooperation, I think it is now time for being tougher. Executive orders and other means.

Mark Scoville (2010-03-02 11:57:23)

Is there any precedent for allowing a secret-ballot vote in the senate that would:

1. free senators from the pressure of lobbyists and the media;
2. hold the senate as a whole responsible for being dysfunctional if not reflective of individual constituencies and;
3. avoid the appearance of heavy-handedness that might worry some democrats come November elections.

Let's face it, openness in government is no guarantee of integrity. Just knowing 'how' a particular senator voted says nothing about 'why' they cast a yea or nay. Any vote may be spun so as to look principled when in reality it may be cast out of self-interest.

Why not put a little fear into the dark heart of those lobbyists who use openness as a weapon of control over the public. A little secrecy—on select occasions— may prove useful, as it will inject some doubt into the notion that senators are up for sale and that they can be relied upon to give them a "bang for their buck".

Obama unveils new healthcare proposal (2010-02-23 20:34)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama revealed a compromise healthcare reform package ahead of a bipartisan summit.

The new plan has programs that are all fully funded.

There will also be an agency that will monitor insurance companies to make sure they do not unfairly hike prices. The new proposal drops the Stupak amendment to the House bill that would prevent funding for abortions in any new healthcare program. A public option was also not included in the new package.

Obama hopes that he can reach a compromise with Republicans, but there are reports that they will push through the new proposal without bipartisan support if necessary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Public healthcare summit illustrates partisan divide (2010-02-25 19:50)

[EMBED]

As expected there was no real compromise during today's extraordinary healthcare reform summit.

After the long summit ended, President Barack Obama and the Democrats indicated they would be willing to pass healthcare reform without Republican support if necessary. However, Obama suggested a six week deadline for Republicans to join in passing legislation.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

4.3 March

Senators vote to restore unemployment benefits (2010-03-02 21:22)

[EMBED]

The U.S. Senate restored jobless benefits that had been stalled by Republican Sen. Jim Bunning.

Senators voted 78-19 to extend unemployment checks for the 400,000 jobless Americans who depend on them.

Sen. Bunning, who will be retiring from his seat, voted against the extension to the surprise of senators from both parties. Because many senators were absent from the vote, his no vote had held up the new assistance over the weekend.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Cynthia Beattie McGill (2010-03-03 08:50:52)

Everything Obama learned about diplomacy he learned in kindergarten and it is us, the Americans who are paying for him not learning good lessons in the childhood. Hope his putting America on the path of "set a good example and others will follow" philosophy works!

Cynthia Beattie McGill

Anonymous (2010-03-22 22:20:55)

Correctly your article helped me very much in my college assignment. Hats high to you post, will look ahead in behalf of more related articles promptly as its sole of my favourite issue to read.

Anonymous (2010-04-23 04:02:04)

Sorry for my bad english. Thank you so much for your good post. Your post helped me in my college assignment, If you can provide me more details please email me.

House vote looms on healthcare bill (2010-03-10 17:30)

[EMBED]

Reports differ as to how the healthcare reform package is doing in the House of Representatives. According to some sources, Speaker Nancy Pelosi is only a few votes from passing the Senate bill as it stands now.

Probably that would indicate that Pelosi should be able to muster enough votes if she promises certain changes in the Senate version through reconciliation.

The biggest issue right now among the Democrats is whether or not to include abortion in the reform bill. Some conservative Democrats still continue to oppose any bill that provides support for abortion.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Polls show Democrats need lots of work (2010-03-17 17:49)

According to the various election 2010 polls that are summarized on realclearpolitics \(http://www.realclearpolitics.com/epolls/latestpolls/latest_election_polls.html\), the Democrats look in trouble come this November.

For example, according to their analysis of polls for the Senate races, right now it looks like the Democrats could lose four seats or more.

Senate 2010 Polls

TOSS UPS

Colorado: Bennet (D)

Missouri: Open (R)

Ohio: Open (R)

Pennsylvania: Specter (D)

LEAN REPUBLICAN

Arkansas: Lincoln (D)

Indiana: Open (D)

Kentucky: Open (R)

Nevada: Reid (D)

New Hampshire: Open (R)

North Carolina: Burr (R)

LEAN DEMOCRAT

California: Boxer (D)

Illinois: Open (D)

LIKELY REPUBLICAN

Delaware: Open (D)

Florida: Open (R)

Louisiana: Vitter (R)

LIKELY DEMOCRAT

New York: Gillibrand (D)

Washington: Murray (D)

Wisconsin: Feingold (D)

SAFE REPUBLICAN

North Dakota: Open (D)

SAFE DEMOCRAT

Connecticut: Open (D)

The situation looks similar for the House although I doubt that the Democrats are in danger yet of losing control of the House.

Now, these polls may be a function of a couple of problems for the Dems.

For one, progressives and conservatives in the party have been locked in battles over several issues but particularly over healthcare reform. What this has caused is a peculiar situation when people from both the left and the right (Republicans) are hammering the Democratic Party.

Now should the health bill pass soon (knock on wood), then maybe this tension between Dems could simmer down. The recent compromise by Rep. Dennis Kucinich is a good sign in this direction.

I doubt if climate change legislation will be as controversial within the party itself, and I hope that not too much friction arises in the efforts to reform the education system.

Anyway, if things calm down before November the Democrats can reunite to battle for seats in Congress.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2010-03-26 20:55:02)

I would like to suggest to Obama to approach Dr. Hayhoe to be apart of his climate action team.

listening to her talk here...

http://www.rep.org/climate_presentation.html

Dr. Hayhoe really does have a way with words. I bet she can gently convert most skeptics over.

Here is another article on her...

Conservative Evangelicals embrace God and green

<http://www.csmonitor.com/Environment/2010/0325/Conservative-Evangelicals-embrace-God-and-green>

Best, Paulm

<http://climateportals.com/>

paul.magnus@pmcwireless.com

Things looking good for Obama on healthcare reform (2010-03-20 16:31)

[EMBED]

From the talk on Capitol Hill, President Barack Obama looks set to see the most sweeping social reform since Social Security pass the House tomorrow, and the Senate sometime later next week.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi sounded a confident note today about the bill, which will be "deemed passed" and amendments added for reconciliation in the Senate. Obama is meeting today with members of the Democratic Caucus of the House together with Senate leader Harry Reid.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Capixaba (2010-03-20 21:04:04)

Do You has good blog . thanks so much by you blog. May i help you?

MORE ARTICLE BY YOUR HEALTH CARE

Historic healthcare reform set to become law (2010-03-21 21:20)

[EMBED]

A momentous night for President Barack Obama and the Democratic Party as the House passed the health care reform bill. Once signed by the president the legislation will become the law of the land.

The House also passed the reconciliation bill that contains changes to reform bill, and that still needs to be approved by the Senate.

For a good article on what types of benefits you can expect from the new law, and which you definitely should take advantage of, see this New York Times article.

The Democratic victory will likely help Obama's ratings along with those of Democratic candidates up for election in 2010. Some Democrats though will become more vulnerable because of their support for reform tonight, and groups like Organizing for America are setting up systems to provide assistance to these candidates come election time.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Em construção (2010-03-22 20:30:09)

The world is wishing good luck to USA, God bless Obama and the USA. I really believe it's a good deal, Obama is right, you're people able to do big things.

Brazil is with Obama in this case.

Henry (2010-03-23 15:00:53)

3/23/2010 : In order for you to understand, I like President , and I will jump into any blog that speaks bad of him in a moral issue,\" This will not be tolerated by me.\" But FASC Concepts is to reach out to President Obama and have him stand with the people and to be as one with us again. To remove this force pay and merge the views of 250 million people within this Bill to law. To build the most powerful Health Care Health Reform Stimulus Package ever thought of. But I have protested this Bill because of its lacks of moral value, against the People. Is There A Constitutional Infringement of a Moral Value for Health Care vs. The People

Part 1: 3/22/2010: { recapped for short input }

I had to wait for this Bill to be passed in order to show the Republican Party and GOP and FRC Action that it is the voice of the people that guides the destiny of this Country. I guess you could say I needed them to get out of the way so that the last Comic Standing will be FASC Concepts and we do not need the peoples money to assist the needs of the Peoples Rights.

As predicted , the first stages of the Health Care Bill was passed. Why, you ask ? It is because people wish to be seen for their in put of a view and not unite. What is lost is respect with in a concept of { Freedom Of Choice } to be a part of this system or not, with in this Health Care Force Pay Matrix.

What is offered by FASC Concepts is the Freedom Of Choice, because we feel it is unconstitutional to force pay into the failures of Health Care Insurance Companies and then Tax that money. As you can see our elected officials are paying little attention to the public. As I reach out to my computer and I knock , knock, knock on the screen, and I say is there any body out there?

Health Care within a moral value, is to , {GIVE LIFE TO HOPE WHERE THERE IS NONE }

You will not find any lies posted at our site, that is not clarified.....

You can find the details on p23. At the link site for www.thebluepill.mysite.com on page 100 at the main site.

FASC Concepts in and for Pay it Forward covers the web, join us in a trickle effect on p23 the blue pill link, ?
on google , yahoo, and aol www.fascmovement.mysite.com

Obama signs historic bill into law (2010-03-23 13:42)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama signed into law the historic health care reform bill today at the White House using 20 different pens.

After the event, attorneys general from 13 states filed suit against the new law. The lawsuit was filed in federal court in Pensacola. Similar legal actions were taken when the Civil Rights Act was passed.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Preston (2010-03-23 18:47:42)

THIS MOMENTOUS DAY!

Not one day in anyone's life is an uneventful day, no day without profound meaning, no matter how dull and boring it might seem, no matter whether you are a seamstress or a queen, a shoeshine boy or a movie star, a renowned philosopher or a Down's syndrome child.

Because in every day of your life, there are opportunities to perform little kindnesses for others, both by conscious acts of will and unconscious example.

Each smallest act of kindness – even just words of hope when they are needed, the remembrance of a birthday, a compliment that engenders a smile – reverberates across great distances and spans of time, affecting lives unknown to the one whose generous spirit was the source of this good echo, because kindness is passed on and grows each time it's passed, until a simple courtesy becomes an act of selfless courage years later and far away.

Likewise, each small meanness, each thoughtless expression of hatred, each envious and bitter act, regardless of how petty, can inspire others, and is therefore the seed that ultimately produces evil fruit, poisoning people whom you have never met and never will.

All human lives are so profoundly and intricately entwined – those dead, those living, those generations yet to come – that the fate of all is the fate of each, and the hope of humanity rests in every heart and in every pair of hands.

Therefore, after every failure, we are obliged to strive again for success, and when faced with the end of one thing, we must build something new and better in the ashes, just as from pain and grief, we must weave hope, for each of us is a thread critical to the strength – the very survival – of the human tapestry.

Every hour in every life contains such often-unrecognized potential to affect the world that the great days for which we, in our dissatisfaction, so often yearn are already with us; all great days and thrilling possibilities are combined always in THIS MOMENTOUS DAY!

Excerpt from Dean Koontz's book, "From the Corner of His Eye".

It embodies the idea of how the smallest of acts can have such a profound effect on each of our lives.

Anonymous (2010-04-12 17:42:06)

I have watched as the world has watched, to see if americans can overcome their own social history of inequalities, injustice and undeniably their imaturity as a nation. First steps are always the most memorable. Good luck and God bless.

koitheawesome (2010-04-13 20:30:00)

A lot of people are pretentious about the new health care reform. Honestly, I'm hopeful.

The fact of the matter is that medicare was a financial vacuum for our state dollars, and it was a problem that was only going to get worse. By cutting out $500 billion of madicare funds and replacing it with what is quickly being called ObamaCare, we have a chance to try something new and hopefully fix the financial ruin caused by a flawed welfare system.

Worse case possible, it doesn't work and we revoke the bill to try something else.

Trying new things is the way to reach the top in the international world.

4.4 April

Obama sets new nuke policy (2010-04-06 15:17)

[EMBED]

Pres. Barack Obama announced a new policy that would limit the use of nuclear weapons by the United States, and also set new restrictions on the building of new weapons.

The announcement comes as the president prepares to visit Prague to sign a new nuclear arms agreement with Russia.

Obama's new policy would limit the use of nuclear weapons only to countries that possess nuclear weapons themselves, or that are in violation of the non-proliferation treaty. Also any nation that attacked the U.S. in a massive way might be subject to a nuclear attack.

The move is Obama's latest in his stated policy of working toward a nuke-free world.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama holds nuclear summit in DC (2010-04-13 15:42)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama opened a world summit on controlling the spread of nuclear weapons technology.

A total of 47 nations are attending the summit in Washington DC to figure out ways of preventing terrorists from getting hold of weapons grade radioactive material, and other related technology.

Many of the participating nations have already agreed to contribute more money to the United Nations nuclear regulatory agency.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama meets to discuss Supreme Court pick (2010-04-21 15:56)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama held a bipartisan meeting in the Oval Office today to suggest his Supreme Court nomination. Obama will replace retiring Justice John Paul Stevens, the leader of the liberal bloc on the court. The pick will give the president that ability to influence the court for many years especially if he picks a younger person to fill the slot.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obamas vacation in Blue Ridge Mountains, NC (2010-04-23 13:29)

X

President Barack Obama orders at 12 Bones Smokehouse in Asheville, N.C., Friday, April 23, 2010.(AP Photo/Alex Brandon) The Obamas arrived in the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina for a weekend vacation.

The family had a southern-style dinner and then went for a mountain hike. The last time the president and his family were here was right before a big debate during the 2008 campaign.

Obama was the first Democratic presidential candidate to win North Carolina since Jimmy Carter in 1976.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

lux (2010-04-24 13:58:30)

obama is not like mackain. who is better? mackain

Breakthrough on Wall St. reform bill (2010-04-28 20:48)

The republicans will not block financial reform legislation opening up the opportunity for the biggest changes on Wall Street since the Great Depression.

Bowing to internal pressure within their own party, GOP senators agreed to let the debate on an overhaul proceed, and things look good for a relatively quick success for the Obama administration.

"We'll end up having a safer, more secure financial system," Obama said, "and I think banks and other financial institutions can get back to making money the old-fashioned way by lending it to companies to build business and create jobs and do all the things we want our financial system to do."

X

Senate Banking Committee Chairman Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., right, and the committee's ranking Republican Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., emerge from a meeting on Capitol Hill in Washington, Monday, April 26, 2010, ahead of a crucial test vote for the financial reform bill.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

4.5 May

Does Obama favor Kagan for Supreme Court? (2010-05-08 13:45)

[EMBED]

According to widely published reports in the press, President Barack Obama is favoring Solicitor General Elena Kagan to replace Justice John Paul Stevens on the U.S. Supreme Court.

Kagan has already been approved by the Senate for her current position, so many analysts believe that she should make it through the confirmation process without much trouble.

The Obama administration, though, has not indicated that the president has made a decision yet. Other possible nominees considered as favorites for selection by Obama are federal appellate judges Diane Wood and Merrick Garland

.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Kagan begins confirmation process (2010-05-12 20:42)

[EMBED]

Elena Kagan President Barack Obama's nominee for Supreme Court Justice was followed by the press today as she made her rounds around Washington.

Some progressives are resisting Kagan's confirmation by the Senate mostly because they are unsure of where she stands on many issues. Issues have also been raised about the fact that if Kagan is appointed there will be no Protestants serving as U.S. Supreme Court Justices despite that group constituting the majority of the population.

Most analysts though believe that Kagan will not have any trouble in winning a Senate confirmation.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Poll results show anti-incumbent attitude (2010-05-19 12:13)

The best news in yesterday's elections is the victory of Democrat Mark Critz in a special election for Pennsylvania's 12th congressional district on Tuesday, Critz easily beat Republican businessman Tim Burns in a conservative district that was formerly held by Rep. John Murtha, who died in February.

Other results such as victory of Tea Party candidate Rand Paul in Kentucky over the Republican establishment candidate suggest that voters are strongly opposed to the status quo. They want change and non-traditional, non-Washington type of candidates.

Incumbents will face tough fights but this might not bode as badly for Democrats as some are saying. A lot depends on how well the Democratic activists can turn out progressive voters, especially younger voters.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama releases National Security Strategy report (2010-05-27 19:22)

✖ (Credit: AP)

President Barack Obama's National Security Strategy was released today and the document shows a shift from the Bush doctrine of unilateral engagement.

Obama's strategy gives more weight to non-military means of achieving security and the new 52 page summary states: "The foundation of American leadership must be a prosperous economy."

The president said that the battle against extremism was "only one element of our strategic environment and cannot define America's engagement with the world."

The report also stressed areas like energy independence and climate change as important security matters that must be part of an overall security strategy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

forum politique (2010-06-01 06:56:38)

I think président Obama is on the good way !

4.6 June

Obama postpones Indonesia, Australia trip for second time (2010-06-03 22:02)

✖

President Barack Obama speaks during a U.S. India strategic dialogue reception at the Department of State in Washington, Thursday, June 3, 2010.(AP Photo/Alex Brandon) (Alex Brandon, ASSOCIATED PRESS / June

3

, 2010

)

Barack Obama had to postpone his trip to Indonesia and Australia for a second time due to the Gulf oil spill crisis.

The president postponed the first time during the heated fight for the health care reform bill. Many Indonesians have been eagerly anticipating Obama's return to the country where he spent four years of his childhood. Obama's sister Maya is half-Indonesian.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Anonymous (2010-06-15 08:44:05)

I am a male Brit, married to a Kenyan Luo, the same tribe as Obama's father. We are both ashamed of his anti-British comments. We thought he was going to be a great President, but he has sorely let himself down. The fault with the oil spill lies squarely at the feet of the US companies and not with BP. Please God, don't bless America.

Obama needs to do the right thing in the Gulf (2010-06-10 20:49)

The situation in the Gulf has become intolerable. Now, I have to admit that I was quite surprised when President Barack Obama announced that he was allowing an expansion of offshore oil and gas drilling some time ago.

As someone who had supported Obama even before he formally announced his candidacy in Feb. 2007 and who closely followed his green agenda, I did not remember him supporting offshore drilling. I do remember that he did voice some support for nuclear energy and "clean coal." While I disagree with him on these latter forms of energy, I never expect any candidate to agree with me on every issue.

However, when you are faced with the truth of things, then you have to change your opinion. You can no go against the tide of evidence. We now can see very plainly that offshore drilling is not worth the risk of the dangers that it presents.

Many people do not realize that even the relief wells that they are digging might not work! You do not have to be a genius to figure out what kind of catastrophe that would entail. And no one has suggested that the amount of oil offshore is anywhere near what we need to solve this country's dependence on foreign oil.

No union or bunch of workers has the moral right to clamor for jobs against that kind of threat. They have no right to risk other people's lives and livelihood for a high-paying job on an oil rig. They have no right to destroy a vast habitat for untold generations just because they do not want to look for a new job.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama slams Republicans for blocking tactics (2010-06-19 19:13)

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama complained today about the resistance made by Republicans on just about everything his administration is trying to accomplish. Already, the Republicans have far surpassed the previous record on filibusters in their attempts to obstruct the president.

The economy and the jobs situation is obviously very much on the mind of Obama. Today there was a report that the administration is still approving bad oil drilling plans, which is very unfortunate. However, he is under a lot of economic and political pressure.

Senators and representatives from oil-producing states are balking on his energy and climate change plan.

At the end of the year, the Bush tax cuts will expire and this will give the government more revenues to stimulate the economy. Obama has talked about ending subsidies for oil and gas companies. Again this will bring resistance but also potentially billions in new revenues that can be used to offset any problems caused by climate change legislation.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama calls for $90 billion bank tax (2010-06-26 19:50)

Credit: Reuters

U.S. President Barack Obama gestures prior to a 2010 G8 Summit photo with the "My Summit 2010 Youth" at the Deerhurst Resort at Muskoka in Huntsville, Canada, June 25, 2010.

Credit: Reuters/Saul Loeb/Pool

U.S. President Barack Obama gestures prior to a 2010 G8 Summit photo with the "My Summit 2010 Youth" at the Deerhurst Resort at Muskoka in Huntsville, Canada, June 25, 2010.

Credit: Reuters/Saul Loeb/Pool

U.S. President Barack Obama gestures prior to a 2010 G8 Summit photo with the "My Summit 2010 Youth" at the Deerhurst Resort at Muskoka in Huntsville, Canada, June 25, 2010.

Credit: Reuters/Saul Loeb/Pool

In Canada for the Group of 20 summit over the weekend, President Barack Obama called on Congress to pass a $90 billion bank tax that will last for 10 years. Congress has just approved the president's financial regulation package, and Obama looks at this as the next logical step in reining in Wall Street.

"We need to impose a fee on the banks that were the biggest beneficiaries of taxpayer assistance at the height of our financial crisis – so we can recover every dime of taxpayer money," Obama said in his weekly address.

Germany, France and Britain have called for a global, one size fits all, bank tax, but many other G20 members including the U.S. have been less receptive of the idea.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

4.7 July

Economy and the Elections (2010-07-13 17:19)

Many Democrats believe that the resistance of the Republican Party against the extension of unemployment benefits and other cases of "obstructionism" are part of a political strategy to undermine Democrats in the fall elections. Republicans have also formed the main resistance to President Barack Obama's financial reform package, and to a new stimulus package. Previously, the Republicans have either voted for or supported these very same types of legislation but now they often used the deficit as a reason for their opposition.

One might wonder why the Republicans would obstruct in these areas since it could anger voters, but there is a general knowledge out there that the president will most likely take the blame when things fail. Unfortunately, many American voters do not understand sufficiently how the system works, and even many that do still expect Obama to "twist arms" to get things done.

With census jobs and stimulus programs expiring, the failure to extend unemployment benefits will create a tremendous amount of pressure on an already fragile economy. And this could be blamed mostly on the president by some voters.

The job for the Democrats is either informing the uninformed, or reasoning with those who may be expecting too much.

—

✕

KEITH MYERS

At the 101st annual NAACP convention on Monday, first lady Michelle Obama spoke about her "Let's Move" campaign to cut childhood obesity. "We need to take this issue seriously," she told the crowd.

Read more: <http://www.kansascity.com/2010/07/12/2079452/michelle-obama-promotes-healthy-#ixzz0tby279CZ> html-

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

4.8 August

Tackling the deficit (2010-08-04 16:09)

Neither party really wants a huge deficit or national debt. The higher the national debt, the more taxpayer money that is used to pay interest payments on this debt. A good chunk of those interest payments goes overseas boosting up the balance sheets of other nations. At the current rate of borrowing, the U.S. could eventually owe trillions to foreign nations.

Even those interest domestic interest payments tend to favor the big banks and wealthy investors, although many pension funds also own U.S. treasuries. So over the long term, this tends to shift wealth from ordinary taxpayers to the wealthy. With the increasing wealth disparity, consumers were compelled to borrow money like crazy just to pay bills, and now even that well has dried up.

The only real way to solve the deficit problem is to increase revenues. What that means is increasing taxes, and they can start by letting the Bush tax cuts for the rich expire.

Despite all the rhetoric from conservatives, there is nothing inherently bad about government spending. In fact, the whole idea that government spending is wasteful is never really supported with any evidence.

The government offer stability to an economy as it is a dependable consumer of goods, and a dependable employer. The nation worked its way out of the Great Depression largely due to a very long period of steeply-increased government spending.

✕

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Fallacy: tax cuts increase deficit (2010-08-05 09:04)

The latest meme from conservative Republicans is that allowing the cessation of the Bush tax cuts for the rich will somehow increase the federal deficit.

According to this argument, tax cuts stimulate the economy and thus, in fact, produce more revenue for the government. Of course, little evidence is put forth to support this contention.

The whole idea rests on two main logical fallacies. First is the contention that the money not collected by the Bush tax cuts will be spent by taxpayers in the fiscal year. At best, this suggestion is speculative. Indeed, consumers may rather decide to save the money due to the still uncertain economy.

The other suggestion, which is just outright erroneous, is that government taxes do not contribute to the economy. It is almost as if the government is collecting taxes and hiding the money away in a cookie jar.

If fact, all taxes, every penny collected is spent during the related fiscal year. The money is spent either on government projects and infrastructure in the process creating or maintaining government jobs. Or it is spent hiring private contractors to perform work for the government.

Not only does this money get recycled immediately into the private economy, but in the process it allows the federal government to perform necessary services. If you do not think these services are necessary, then think of commuting to work on a freeway full of pot holes, or over bridges in danger of collapsing.

Even many corporations depend heavily on government contracts that are funded by tax dollars.

Now, as an example, let's take the huge government mobilization during World War II when the country had to send massive numbers of military personnel and equipment to two fronts overseas. How did they raise the money to pay for this unprecedented challenge? According to conservative Republicans, the government should have cut taxes to a bare minimum to stimulate the economy and send revenues sky high.

However, the fact is that Washington increased taxes to levels far higher than they are today. And the economy did not shrink, but grew instead. Indeed, taxes at rates much higher than we see today, were maintained even after the war up until the Reagan era.

The period was one of great stability with only mild economic downturns. In contrast, after the Bush tax cuts that sent the tax rate to the lowest level since just before the Great Depression, we see that the country plummeted into its own Great Recession, the worse downturn since the 1930s.

 Associated Press Thu Aug 5, 11:56 AM ET

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Raul (2010-08-05 22:17:14)
Nice info thanks =)

Electing good candidates in November (2010-08-06 13:24)

The upcoming elections this November are very important for President Obama to continue passing progressive people-oriented legislation rather than laws and taxes that only favor the wealthy and big business.

The best way to help out is to volunteer and contribute to your progressive candidates for the House of Representatives and U.S. Senate, along of course with the candidates in local races.

Organizing for America is the network that arose out of Obama's presidential campaign. Headed by David Plouffe, they are spread out across the 50 states and they utilized a 50 state strategy during the campaigns in 2007 and 2008. To join up, go to <http://barackobama.com>.

-
-
-
-

You can also help out with "netroots" campaigning at social media sites like Facebook and Twitter.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Getting progressive voters to the polls (2010-08-09 13:25)

President Barack Obama's victory raised many people's hope for change, but the evidence shows that there is little change in the behavior of progressive voters.

For various reasons, Democrats and other progressive voters, or at least many of them, seem to think that only presidential elections are worth the effort in going to the polls. Statistics show that they consistently turn out in lower number in midterm elections, special elections, local elections, etc. In general, they tend to also be less active in pressuring their representatives during key battles to pass new laws.

Possibly the most important reason for this trend is that many progressives and Democrats live in poorer urban neighborhoods with antiquated voting infrastructure. In some cases, they may have to wait for hours in line to vote after a hard day's work. Despite all the hoopla about America's democracy, the country still has one of the lowest participation rates of democracies throughout the world because of the class-biased voting system.

Still, it is not impossible to get Democrats and progressives out for special, non-presidential elections. The trick is to get them to see the importance of the upcoming polls. Of course, eventually it would be good to educate them on the need for regular responsible voting.

One of the easiest ways to avoid long lines at the polls is to register to vote by mail. To find information on how to register as a mail voter, check out this site:

http://www.declareyourself.com/voting_faq/state_by_state_info_2.html

Also, if you are interested in finding out who your local candidates are for the November election, visit the Politics1 webpage:

<http://politics1.com/states.htm>

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama still popular with liberals despite White House criticism (2010-08-10 11:39)

Robert Gibbs blasted "professional liberals" for their criticism of the White House, even suggesting they "ought to be drug tested."

However, according to a survey to be released by Public Policy Polling, Obama has maintained popularity with liberals while his ratings have fallen among other groups:

On the national poll we'll release this week 85 % of liberals approve of the job Obama is doing to 12 % disapproving. 88 % support his health care plan looking back with only 7 % opposed.

Not only are those numbers good, but they're steady. Obama's favor with liberals hasn't been on the decline. In May his approval with liberals was 87/10. In February it was 81/15. In November it was 87/4. Even as his ratings have declined overall he's stayed in that sort of mid-80s range with liberal voters.

The volume of the voices of liberals who don't like Obama is much greater than the volume of their numbers, which probably means Robert Gibbs shouldn't let the select few get him so irritated.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Democrats offer open source for developers (2010-08-11 15:23)

The Democratic Party and OFA have launched a site for developers who want to help President Barack Obama in making the changes he promised during his campaign, and in getting good Democrats elected who will also stand up for progressive values.

Open.Dems <http://open.democrats.org/>

Developers can use the open source software to create widgets and interfaces for voter registration, finding Democratic candidates, contributing money, and more.

New York Times (blog)

Barack Obama celebrates primary victories as Tea Party splits vote

The Guardian - 54 minutes ago

"It has strengthened Obama's position. The Republicans turned down Jane Norton, who could have won the Senate race in November, for a Tea Party candidate, ...

Video: Obama signs bill to help teachers

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

OFA to hold nationwide canvass (2010-08-17 19:10)

The Organizing for America website is planning a big nationwide canvassing event on August 28. They would like to knock on 200,000 doors across the country to help people stay aware of how important their involvement is. Anyone interested in hosting a canvass in their area can sign up at the OFA page:

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/content/MAFcanvasshost?source=BOfeature>

You can also sign up as a member at the site and find other events in your area such as phonebanking, rallies, voter registration, etc.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

OFA's job will be more difficult in midterms (2010-08-18 21:43)

The midterm elections will be a greater challenge for the Obama machine than the presidential campaign.

In the latter, the campaign organization could concentrate on promoting a single candidate, and on dissecting a single opponent.

In the midterms, they are dealing with hundreds of elections all over the country, just taking into account the congressional races. Of course, they can help volunteers connect with their local candidates, but it will be harder to help them with things like local issues and the lay of the land.

In most cases, they will have to leave that up to the local branches of OFA if such organizations exist. The self-organizing principle will be even more important than it was during the primary campaign.

One area where OFA can be very helpful is in getting out the vote in the last few days before election day.

[EMBED]

President Barack Obama used the homey backdrop of a middle-class Ohio family's backyard Wednesday to try to show voters he shares their concerns about the economy, health care and social security. (Aug. 18)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama and Democrats heat up fundraising (2010-08-20 18:31)

Signs are springing up that the Obama and Democratic machine is revving up to full steam in raising donations for November's elections.

The DNC raised $11.5 million in July, and so far this month the president alone has raised about $8 million.

Maybe even more impressive are the signs that the grassroots fundraising that characterized Obama's presidential campaign is getting back on track. Organizing for Obama (OFA) made a call a few days ago for 25,000 donations this week, and they quickly exceeded that goal and are now gunning for a total of at least 40,000 donations. Here is the message from OFA Director Mitch Stewart:

Amazing: We've already surpassed our goal of reaching 25,000 donations this week for the By the People Fund.

But we need to raise the bar. Fox News' parent company, News Corp., just handed over a seven-figure check to Republicans to help beat Democrats across the country this fall.

When a supposed news organization jumps into the 2010 elections with a huge donation like this, I take it as a direct challenge to this movement. These conservative special interests seem to think they can buy their way into power.

We've bumped up our goal to 40,000 donations by midnight tomorrow.

Can you donate $5 or more today?

<https://donate.barackobama.com/ByThePeopleFund>

Thanks,
Mitch

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

CQ Politics shows Democrats still leading in House race (2010-08-22 19:50)

CQ Politics is the website of the Congressional Quarterly-Roll Call Group that has conducted professional ratings for House races for the last 50 years.

Presently, despite all the gloom and doom in the media, they still project the Democrats holding on to a House majority but by the slimmest of margins. Here is there forecast as of today:

Democrats: 219

Republicans: 180

Tossups: 36

A total of 218 seats are required for a majority, so as you can see the Democrats cannot afford to let up before the November polls.

You can see the CQ Politics interactive map at this URL:

http://innovation.cqpolitics.com/atlas/house2010_rr

The projection sees 169 safe, 21 likely, and 29 leaning seats for the Democrats.

For the Republicans there are 168 safe, 7 likely, and 5 leaning seats.

CQ leans toward Dr. Ami Bera, the Democratic nominee in my district (CA 3).

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dems debate House chances (2010-08-26 17:41)

Two interesting blog posts out there today on the Democrats chances of defending their majority in the House.

Reid Wilson: On The Trail (Hotline On Call)

Why Democrats Will Keep The House

The Arena (Politico)

Can Dems turn it around?

The first article takes a more optimistic stance, while the Dems in the Politico debate seem a bit less than enthusiastic.

It would seem that the recent poor performance of Democrats in the generic Congressional polls is the reason for the despondency among Dem analysts, aides, and other insiders. The actual House ratings are mixed. In addition to the CQ Roll Call ratings, the New York Times and other rating services also see the Democrats successfully retaining House control.

Also, the Democratic fundraising has been picking up lately. According to an NPR report yesterday, the DNC has more than twice the money in the bank as compared to their Republican counterparts, the RNC.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2010-08-27 17:39)

<http://www.newsweek.com/blogs/the-gaggle/2010/08/26/on-jobs-and-deficits-republicans-are-worse-than-obama.html>

Jerry Brown hearts Obama (2010-08-28 07:11)

California attorney general and gubernatorial candidate Jerry Brown's decision to embrace President Barack Obama's endorsement was a wise and courageous move. The other Democrats who are avoiding Obama are not really understanding the concept of working as a team

With the mistaken idea that not associating themselves with the president will somehow help them with independent or conservative voters. Although Obama's ratings have dipped recently he is still easily the most popular political leader in Washington. And he is still very popular with the Democratic base.

By not embracing and defending Obama, not only do the candidates hurt the Democrats prospects in 2012, but they also risk turning off a lot of Obama's supporters. They can make it harder for the president and others to raise funds and volunteer support for the party in general, and for them in particular. They are not looking at the race holistically. In other news, a number of non-partisan sources have calculated that the Republican economic plan put out by John Boehner will result in higher deficits and fewer jobs.

<http://www.newsweek.com/blogs/the-gaggle/2010/08/26/on-jobs-and-deficits-republicans-are-worse-than-obama.html>

The Republicans want to continue preserving tax cuts for the rich and are thinking of doing this by cutting spending at a time when only the government can lead the country out of the jobs recession in a timely manner.

The financial markets are still badly mangled. Many corporations and even whole countries still have bad books that could a decade or two to mend on their own! Their situation is not much different than those struggling homeowners except they have no option of walking away or foreclosure. They simply have to slowly pay off their liabilities, and get their finances in order. A lot of problems have been hidden thus far by clever accounting tricks. Unless we want this thing to drag on for a very long time, the government must spend to keep the economy rolling. The GOP plan will protect the money of the very wealthy, but will do little to help generate jobs.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Mr. Kowalski (2010-08-29 07:15:57)

The Republicans want to continue preserving tax cuts for the rich and are thinking of doing this by cutting spending at a time when only the government can lead the country out of the jobs recession in a timely manner

One cannot solve a problem of debt with more of it, despite the desperate cries of Paul Krugman. Until this:

http://static.seekingalpha.com/uploads/2008/12/25/saupload_a3.jpg is resolved, there will be no recovery. This is a problem of debt thirty years in the making; it's not Big O's fault. But his policies of borrow and spend will have disastrous consequences. If he continues on this path, which I have no doubt he will, he will be remembered along with Herbert Hoover as the president who presided over a grinding Depression. Luckily for him, I don't think it will be the US that sinks first; Japan's sovereign debt or the European banking system will be the first domino.

Democrat's lack of enthusiasm or Republican feuding? (2010-08-30 17:46)

Two messages circulating in the media on the upcoming election are that the Democrats aren't fired up yet, and that Republicans are suffering from deep fissures. Both of these situations, it is believed, will have an impact in November, but which one will matter most?

Democrats traditionally do not get excited about mid-term elections, but there are some signs that things have been picking up lately.

Republicans suffered some internal defeats during the primaries when Tea Party candidates with wild agendas beat out candidates supported by the party's leadership. The division in the GOP could spell trouble in certain races where the Tea Party appears hesitant to support candidates who not share their agenda. For example, Meg Whitman has been under fire in the California's race because of her views on immigration and climate change.

Even among the GOP mainstream there may be some friction between those who support party chairman Michael Steele and those who are not happy with his performance and behavior. This could be one of the reasons that the GOP has only about half the cash on hand as its Democratic counterpart.

Divisions among Democrats, however, seemed to have cooled down. Many on the left do not like what they see in the Tea Party and apparently have been willing to calm things down as the election approaches. Indeed, there even appears to be a fire brewing under the Democratic base.

With still more than two months to go though, we will have to wait and see how these trends play out as the polls draw closer.

[EMBED]

President Obama is urging Congress to pass a jobs bill at the White House, MarketWatch reports Monday.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Democrat activity on the web (2010-08-30 21:22)

The internet provides more evidence that Democrats are starting to surge at least in terms of online activity. Using Alexa.com, we can compare activity on four important websites: barackobama.com, the site of Organizing for America; Tea Party Patriots, the Tea Party website; gop.com, the official site of the Republican National Committee (RNC); and democrats.org the official site of the Democratic National Committee (DNC).

#">http://www.alexa.com/siteinfo/barackobama.com #

The chart shows that barackobama.com has clearly been busier than the other sites over the last three months.

The Tea Party site held second place for most of this time but both that site and the RNC site have disappeared off the scale in late August.

Another measure of netroots activity can be found on Facebook. Here are the number of fans for the official pages of the DNC, RNC, Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee (DSCC), Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC), National Republican Senatorial Committee (NRSC), and National Republican Congressional Committee (NRCC).

DNC – 114,731 fans

RNC – 176,728 fans

DSCC – 138,723 fans

NRSC – 19,722 fans

DCCC – 169,875 fans

NRCC – 11,241 fans

So, with exception of the DNC Facebook page, the Democratic pages are more popular than their Republican counterparts. Unfortunately, I haven't been able to find a way to track activity on those pages. However, the DSCC and the DCCC pages are noticeably much more popular than the corresponding Republican pages on Facebook.

Just a brief spot check, but from the looks of it the Democrats look like they are beginning to push things online, which is a good sign.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Theo (2010-09-01 21:28:14)

Paul Watson on Obama, Whales and BP oil spill: <http://bit.ly/9msubK>

4.9 September

Technology may make the difference in Nov. (2010-09-01 22:06)

Mid-term elections are the biggest thing other than the presidential contests that happen every four years. The other elections that made so many headlines are really small potatoes compared to the polls coming up on November 2. Technology will likely play a role in how the parties attempt to reach voters in numerous contests across the country. Social media will be important as it was during the 2008 presidential election, and mobile devices like iPhones and other smart phones, iPods, Blackberries, and e-readers may come to the fore as never before.

More people are using mobile devices now as compared to 2008, and the number of people who text regularly has risen dramatically.

Electronic media will undoubtedly play an important role in getting out the vote on election day. We may see location-based social media used to help bring bigger crowds to rallies and other public events.

The fact that the number of people over 50 that are using social media has been surging will be very attractive to political consultants. Older voters are more reliable in terms of going to the polls, especially during the mid-term elections.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

alfred (2010-09-02 15:29:16)

Excellent blog.

Fancy the content I have seen so far and I am your regular reader of your blog.

I am very much interested in adding <http://obamabarack.blogspot.com/> in my blog <http://the-american-history.blogspot.com/>

.

I am pleased to see my blog in your blog list.

I would like to know whether you are interested in adding my blog in your blog list.

Hope to see a positive reply.

Thanks for visiting my blog as well !

Waiting for your reply friend !!!!!

Obama interview in Oval Office (2010-09-02 20:51)

Watch this CSPAN interview of President Obama in the Oval Office, which has been redecorated, as he talks about how he and his family have adjusted to living in the White House.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Stimulus Package? (2010-09-04 10:44)

The Obama administration is preparing a plan to address the country's anemic job situation, but has ruled out another major stimulus package.

With the elections coming up in November, even a modest proposal could be hard to push through. The Republicans have not signaled that they are willing to cooperate. However, many analysts believe that a new stimulus package is necessary to ward off a double dip recession.

As I have argued previously on this blog, the economy is not really in any condition for corporations or small businesses to lead a recovery. The old system that got us into this mess is still very weighted down in debt. We saw what happened to the entire nations of Iceland and Greece, and to massive corporations like Lehman Brothers. Banks have huge loans from these types of debtors along with vast number of smaller bad loans, for example, all those distressed homeowners. The financial markets will take a long time to unload this bad debt and that will mean that businesses will have difficulty getting loans. What has driven the economy up to this point since the start of the economic meltdown in 2007 is the federal stimulus package.

As the old stimulus plan winds down, we may see things like unemployment begin to rise quickly again. To avoid this the government will need to act again either now or after the elections. In the end, though, we will need something more than just economic stimulus if we want to reform the system. The last thing we need is to return to the old ways of doing things – the bubble economy.

The current tax regime is not sufficient to fund the government, and yet government services are far from excessive. Thus, there is only one alternative even though no one wants to raise a voice on this issue. Revenues have to increase, and that means the tax system has to be restructured. We need to look at alternatives like an annual land value tax and a value added tax (VAT) that hold the promise of even replacing income taxes for the vast majority of Americans. We should also look into creating an economy and society that is no longer tilted in favor of big business interests. One area that looks promising is a basic citizen's income that could replace our means-based welfare system. A universal basic income would probably meet less resistance from conservatives compared to welfare since it is not means tested. Such a system would provide citizens with a safety net against corporate whims and economic bubbles. The consumer economy would be stronger and more stable, and, in the end, there would be less need for stimulus packages or other government intervention.

For now, though, we have to hope that a new Obama stimulus package is in the works if only behind the scenes.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Derek (2010-09-04 19:10:48)

Those are sensible ideas. However to implement them would require so many toes to be trodden on in the civil service and the current land-owning "aristocracy" that it would involve a herculean political effort to implement them. The last time this was seriously attempted in a western democracy (Denmark 1958-60), a ferocious media campaign killed it stone dead, despite the fact that it was working as advertised. I have little doubt that an equally ferocious campaign would be mounted against it in the US, if the small numbers of the elite who would be worse off as a result of implementation, thought that there was the slightest chance of it being considered. This is doubly sad since it is one of the few measures that would have a chance of cleaning up the current economic mess and probably the only one that could do so without adding to the government deficit.

Paul Kekai Manansala (2010-09-05 08:44:32)

Derek, interesting comment about Denmark. The country is one of the most progressive in Europe and Danes often appear in lists of the world's happiest people despite a 50 percent income tax rate combined with a 25 percent VAT.

Doesn't surprise me that they would have tried to go one step further.

I think the key is to work gradually to wear down the influence of the land-owning "aristocracy."

Obama plans $100 billion R & D tax credit (2010-09-05 16:13)

President Barack Obama will push Congress to pass a $100 billion plan to permanently expand the tax credit program for companies the invest in research and development.

The new proposal, which is part of the administration's overall plan to support job growth, was revealed today at a public address in Ohio. The plan will be partly funded by closing corporate tax loopholes.

However, many feel that the upcoming congressional session may see the Republicans continue to obstruct progress by filibustering bills in the Senate. The Democrats will have an ever harder time passing legislation if they should lose control of the House or Senate in November.

Obama has been fundraising and stumping for candidates all around the country recently and this is likely to continue ot some degree all the way up until election time. Currently there are plans for the president to attend an event with Pennsylvania senatorial candidate Joe Sestak, and to visit Minnesota for fundraising stops.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama to announce $50 billion infrastructure spending (2010-09-06 15:46)

President Barack Obama plans to announce a plan for new infrastructure work amounting to at least $50 billion in an effort to boost the economy. He will also push for the creation of a permanent national infrastructure bank to prevent the nation's road, bridges, runways and other infrastructure from falling again into its present sad state of disrepair. Democrats lost the culture wars over the last few decades allowing Republicans to create the mindset that "big government" is bad. One of the consequences of that defeat was that America's infrastructure has deteriorated badly. The four year "report card" issued by the American Society of Civil Engineers gave the country a "D" grade in 2009. In 2007, the I-35 bridge in Minneapolis collapsed killing 13 people, and last year the Lake Champlain Bridge between Vermont and New York had to be closed and demolished for safety reasons.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Democratic Party preparing for big vote push (2010-09-07 17:13)

[EMBED]

David Plouffe, the campaign manager for Barack Obama's presidential campaign, talks about the Democratic Party's mobilization efforts.

We're now at the point that lots of Democratic operatives are back to work as campaign offices open up all over the place.

A new series of election polls indicate that the things are not nearly as bad for Democrats as some pundits are suggesting. The party will need to get their voters out to vote along with registering new young progressive voters. It will take a lot of organization, technology and effort, but you can see the infrastructure starting to build up. Lots of well-trained people out there who gained valuable experience during the Obama campaign but have been barely keeping things together after the race ended and the economy crashed.

Fortunately, political operatives will not have to wait to long this time around before they have to get to work again for Obama's 2012 reelection campaign.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

myTrustBucket (2010-09-07 18:08:19)

I am very happy they are going to start pushing back. I was getting worried.

Michelle Obama and White House Dance Series (2010-09-08 22:01)

Great video from the White House featuring First Lady Michelle Obama who is hosting a tribute to Judith Jamison as part of the White House Dance Series. The video is about 60 minutes long and the dancing starts at 12:00. Very nice dance at the end by the Alvin Ailey Dance Theater.

The First Lady will be starting to appear gradually on the campaign trail raising money and stumping for candidates.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More data on web activity (2010-09-10 15:43)

I wanted to do some more checking to see which party was more active in netroots campaigning.

Using alexa.com, I checked for the daily reach on the websites of the congressional and senatorial campaign committees of both parties:

#">http://www.alexa.com/siteinfo/dscc.org #

The DSCC has been the most consistently active site over the last three months followed by the DCCC. The NRSC has been more active than the NRCC and lately has been somewhat competitive with the Democratic sites.

The next graph checks the daily reach of some independent progressive and conservative websites. Democracy for America, Rock the Vote, and MoveOn.org for the progressives, and Karl Rove's American Crossroads and the Christian Coalition site for the conservatives.

MoveOn.org easily tops this chart followed by Democracy for America. The other groups barely register at all. This data combined with that from a previous post, give convincing indications that the web is still mostly Democratic territory. Although some Republican candidates like Scott Brown in Massachusetts were able to effectively use the internet, it seems that most candidates may still be relying on traditional conservative media like talk radio.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama to hold rallies in key states (2010-09-13 13:41)

President Obama is holding live rallies across the country to support Democratic candidates for this November's elections.

Check below to see if there is a rally near you! On Oct. 12, there will be house parties held nationwide organized by OFA.

X

X

X X

Organizing Rally in Madison, Wisconsin

Tuesday, September 28

Organizing Rally in Philadelphia, PA

Sunday, October 10

Commit to Vote House Parties Across the Country

Tuesday, October 12

Organizing Rally in Ohio

Sunday, October 17

Organizing Rally in Las Vegas, Nevada

Friday, October 22

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

vaitheetheboss (2010-09-15 04:44:22)

nice information

<http://tuttudu.blogspot.com/>

Good night for Democrats (2010-09-15 08:53)

Last night was a good one for the Democrats as Tea Party candidate Christine O'Donnell won the Republican nomination over the establishment pick. Tea Party favorite Ovide Lamontagne also looked strong in New Hampshire where he is close behind former Attorney General Kelly Ayotte despite the latter spending about four times as much money.

In addition, Tea Party pick Carl Paladino defeated Rick Lazio in the Republican gubernatorial primary.

Although many have compared the Democrats current situation with that of Bill Clinton when Democrats lost control of Congress during the midterms, it's actually the GOP that is the divided party these days. When the Dems lost back then, blue dogs and yellow dogs – the conservative and progressive wings of the party – were going at each others jugulars.

Today, it is the Republican Party that is in disarray and in the midst of a civil war. That is not to say that the Democrats do not face challenges in November. Voters are basically ready to get out incumbents, and there are more Democratic incumbents than Republican.

However, voters may not like the idea of voting into power a party that is so divided, and associated with folks who make even Karl Rove cringe.

Again, the key for Democrats is getting their voters to the polls, and also winning over swing voters. Remember that in every election there are people who do not make up their minds until the last minute. A well-organized field campaign can help motivate Democratic voters and help last-minute voters make the correct choices.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

firerobin (2010-09-24 10:23:37)

There is no way O'Donnell will win in the general election. O'Donnell beating Castle was the best thing to happen for Democrats. We just need to sit back and let the Tea Party cannibalize the GOP and we'll be alright in November.

A Republican victory could spell economic disaster (2010-09-16 21:20)

One of the dumbest things Americans can do in this economy is to put Republicans back in charge, or in a position to stall things in Congress.

That's not just a partisan opinion. Had the Republicans had a major change of heart, admitting the error of their ways, and offering a new policy, then things might be different. But what we are hearing from GOP leaders is the same old song and dance, i.e. they want to cut taxes.

George W. Bush cut taxes to the lowest level since the Great Depression, but that only led to the present economic mess. There simply is no historical reason to think that cutting taxes in a deep recession is going to stimulate the economy.

Let's look at what happened during the Great Depression. Three back-to-back presidents, all Republican, helped set the stage for that monumental plunge in America's economic fortunes:

Warren Gamaliel Harding, 1921-1923

Calvin Coolidge, 1923-1929

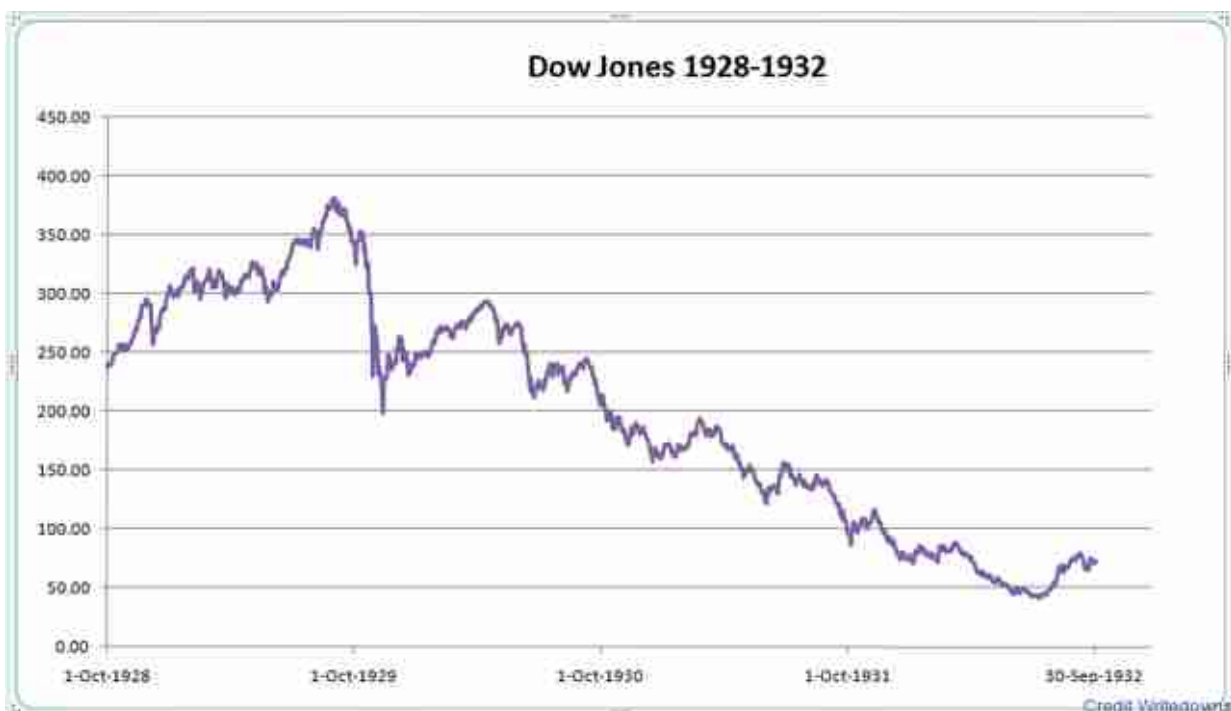

Herbert Clark Hoover, 1929-1933

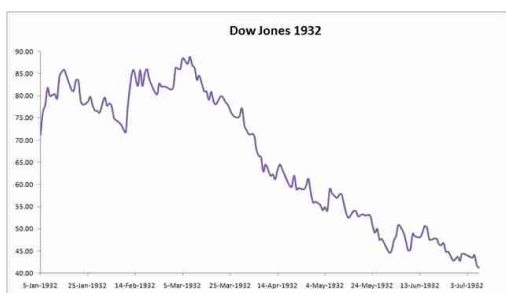

Harding and Coolidge combined their efforts to reduce the top income tax rate from 73 % to 24 %.

Many people mistakenly think that Hoover, upon taking office, immediately starting raising taxes to help bring on the Great Depression. In fact, Hoover's first tax legislation was the Revenue Act of 1929, passed in December after the October crash, which continued the Republican policy of lowering taxes. Taxes were cut for both corporations and individuals.

When the economy kept sliding, Hoover and Treasury Secretary Andrew W. Mellon continued to fight for further tax cuts.

Now, eventually Hoover faced with high deficits was forced to raise taxes in 1932, but this was already after most of the major damage, on the stock market at least, had been done. In fact, the stock market hardly bled after the tax hike in June 1932 as the charts below show.

The second chart shows that the Dow reached its lowest level just about a month after the 1932 tax hike was passed. From that point, the Dow made a very slow climb up from that low point.

However, it can be seen from both charts that things were already sliding very badly before the new tax legislation, and that the hike hardly had any impact on the stock market's woes.

What we see instead is that most of the slide happened when taxes were at historical lows, and that the 1929 tax cut did nothing to improve the economic situation.

At least Barack Obama and the Democrats know that we have to find new ways to fund spending. Cutting taxes for rich people might only lead to more money stashed in derivatives and hedge funds that create no new jobs.

Obama's actions, including his recent plan to rebuild the nation's infrastructure, show that he is keenly aware of what it will take to keep things moving in the economy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Comedians to rally in DC (2010-09-17 17:56)

Jon Stewart and Stephen Colbert are organizing marches on Washington that seem only partly tongue-in-cheek. Colbert is arranging "March to Keep Fear Alive," while Stewart has his "Rally to Restore Sanity," both happening on Oct. 30.

The rallies are in response to Glenn Beck's own "Restoring Honor" rally.

Democrats might benefit from these highly-publicized events, since both comedians have a strong liberal bias.

Here are the videos promoting the events from the Comedy Channel.

<http://www.thedailyshow.com/watch/thu-september-16-2010/rally-to-restore-sanity>

<http://www.colbertnation.com/the-colbert-report-videos/359382/september-16-2010/march-to-keep-fear-alive>

For more info:

<http://www.rallytorestoresanity.com/>

<http://www.keepfearalive.com/>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-10-06 06:41:48)

Here's why Restoring Whatever didn't work on 10.2.10, and why Restoring Sanity/Fear will not work, either...:

What leftists don't get, and never will get, is that while they have little respect for this nation, (see the pics of the garbage strewn, after socialists gathered for Restoring Something)...they're a vast, underwhelming minority of people...

...and they're setting up camp on hallowed grounds...which includes our historic national mall, in order to act foolish, while trying to aid socialist-Democrats, will never, ever draw anyone, but likeminded Democrats...

...and there aren't enough of them, to matter...nor will there ever be, in America...'cause we're just not goin' down that failed, tyrannical road.

(2010-09-17 21:15)

President Barack Obama took a bit of a risk in appointing Elizabeth Warren to set up a new consumer financial watchdog. However, it was a risk that really pleased the base of his party. Warren is an outspoken Wall St. critic and generally loved by progressives.

Obama made a somewhat similar appointment upon taking office when he similarly pleased the progressive wing by selecting Van Jones as green jobs czar. Unfortunately, Jones under a lot of pressure from Republicans resigned from the post stating basically that his baggage from the past would prove too much of a distraction on the job.

Warren will probably also face much resistance, but maybe not so much as Jones who was considered far left even in a place like Oakland, California. As

How to stop corporations from hijacking democracy (2010-09-18 13:54)

[EMBED]

Corporations are back in the saddle pouring millions, possibly even billions, into the upcoming elections. A Supreme Court ruling overturned congressional legislation that limited what corporations could do in elections. The SC ruled basically that corporations are "people" and that they had the right to donate as they pleased to candidates and causes.

Of course, the SC did not vote that corporations could vote like people. Obviously they did not want to expose themselves to too much ridicule. Nor do corporations have to register for the draft, or pay estate taxes when they "die." Corporations are apparently exempt from jury duty also.

However, ordinary people have already proven during the Obama campaign that they are capable of dealing with big money interests when they work together. During the presidential race, people making relatively small contributions of as little as $5 over even less were able, as a team, to out raise the wealthy Republican corporate heads.

Money though was only part of what made victory possible. Volunteering, including netroots campaigning, is just as good and often even better than cash.

The internet allows each supporter to act like a mini-broadcast network. In the old days, candidates had to shell out big bucks to TV and radio broadcasters, but now their supporters can broadcast for them for free. Of course, each supporter's network is much, much smaller than that of a national or local network.

However, we combine the efforts of a million - or ten million supporters - then the battlefield changes. Supporters can easily share an article, video or just a status update several times a day. To get that kind of messaging with paid media buys is tremendously expensive.

Once an online campaign gets going, just like a ground campaign, it tends to create its own propulsion. The more supporters invest in the campaign, the more they feel committed to ensuring the success of the campaign.

So, the power to stop the corporations exists. Each one of us possesses that power, but it is up to each one of us to decide to use the potential that we possess.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Who are we electing this November? (2010-09-19 18:17)

The victory of Tea Party candidates has come as a pleasant surprise to most Democratic insiders, but we have to remember that not everyone thinks the Tea Party candidates are bonkers.

A scary thought is that the victories of candidates like Rand Paul, Christine O'Donnell, and Sharon Angle could actually have the effect of energizing the conservative base. That's one of the main reasons that Sen. John McCain selected Sarah Palin as running mate – he knew that she appealed to the activists in his party.

Why Democrats who suffer the most from the accumulation of conservative legislation need to be prodded into the simple act of voting boggles the imagination. Of course, in some cases the problem is understandable. There are some precincts where would-be voters must wait for hours to get their turn. Even in many developing countries, voters are not tested so hard. One must wonder why a country that regularly touts democracy, and toots its own horn whenever possible, has such a low voter turnout rate.

What the Democrats need is to put forth, in the public eye, their candidates who can inspire people to get excited about the upcoming election. Who are the champions who can help President Obama achieve meaningful change in Washington?

The campaign can't just work on negative energy, but must also show vision and leadership. We need our own personalities to spotlight in order to counter the theatrics of the Tea Party.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Democrats leading fundraising, waiting for RNC numbers (2010-09-20 17:46)

The Senate Democratic fundraising committee took in more cash than its Republican counterpart last month, but started September with less money stockpiled for the sprint to Election Day, new fundraising figures show.

More news that the Democrats are closing the "enthusiasm gap" against Republicans.

Fundraising figures for August show that the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee raised more than its Republican counterpart the National Republican Senatorial Committee.

The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee raised $7.42 million, while the National Republican Senatorial Committee raised $6.05 million.

The DSCC however spend more money in August and thus had less left over in the bank than the Republicans.

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee outraised its Republican counterpart by about $1.7 million in August. The DCCC had $39.1 million in the bank on Sept. 1 compared to the NRCC's $25.6 million

Figures for Republican National Committee fundraising are not out yet, but the Democratic National Committee raised $8.32 million in August, with $39.05 million left in the bank at the end of the month.

The Republicans have been giving a lot of their money to shadowy groups connected with Karl Rove. In August, these groups raised $14.5 million.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-12-07 12:46:26)

how are you?

Thanks for writing this blog, loved reading it

(2010-09-21 08:12)

Ok the numbers are in and the DNC raised nearly $11 million to the RNC's nearly $8 million in August. The DNC also ended the month with $8.7 million more in the bank than the RNC despite outspending the latter by $13.9 million to $8.6 million.

Some blogs and news sites have focused on the fundraising of shadowy conservative groups to contest whether the Democrats are really winning the fundraising race.

However, if you are going that route that you also have to consider the unions, which tend to overwhelmingly support the Democrats with a few exceptions. There are also progressive groups that support Democrats like Democracy for America, MoveOn.org, League of Conservation Voters, Sierra Club and others.

Building up a nationwide effort (2010-09-22 18:45)

A successful effort in getting out the vote and persuading last second voters is likely to require a centralized national effort. In this day age, that means a location on the web where supporters can come to link to the network, get news, and find out what they need to do.

The internet is the only suitable place for such a network center as people from anywhere in the nation can easily log into this central website. Now it is obvious that this center will be the Organizing for America site, i.e., the old barackobama.com.

Network dynamics dictate that a national effort will complement more focused efforts in targeted areas where Democrats think they can win. If I want to get word out throughout the United States, for example, where do I send 100 press releases. Definitely you do not want to send them all to news sources in Los Angeles.

Instead you want to spread the press releases out so the nodes are as far apart as possible.

A national effort works on the big wave principle rather than the highly focused person-to-person method. While local campaigns will concentrate more on the latter, the national campaign should be designed to create a buzz, wave, etc. in the same way that memes are generated over the internet.

The idea is to make election day a large inclusive social event. Sometimes campaigns in an effort to control message and to conserve resources become exclusive, excessively focused and serious efforts that end up turning off lots of people. OFA's job is to scoop these people up and get them involved in something that is massive, fun and inspiring similar to that of a presidential campaign.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Democrats raising more money than Republicans (2010-09-23 12:36)

Ok the numbers are in and the DNC raised nearly $11 million to the RNC's nearly $8 million in August. The DNC also ended the month with $8.7 million more in the bank than the RNC despite outspending the latter by $13.9 million to $8.6 million.

Some blogs and news sites have focused on the fundraising of shadowy conservative groups to contest whether the Democrats are really winning the fundraising race.

However, if you are going that route that you also have to consider the unions, which tend to overwhelmingly support the Democrats with a few exceptions. There are also progressive groups that support Democrats like Democracy for America, MoveOn.org, League of Conservation Voters, Sierra Club and others.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's health care benefits activated (2010-09-23 22:14)

[EMBED]

Many health care benefits are kicking in today:

- Companies can no longer cap lifetime benefits.
- Children with preexisting conditions can no longer be excluded from coverage.
- Certain preventative health measures are now offered without extra fees.
- Children up to 26 are now covered by their parents' policies.
- Consumers can appeal insurance company decisions to a third party.

Make sure to spread the word!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Last Second Voter (2010-09-24 15:28)

What makes a last second voter is their uncanny ability to wait until very late in the campaign to make up their minds on candidates and issues.

For this reason, campaigns must save a substantial amount of money to blanket these voters with ads just a week or a few days before the election. The field campaigns will also attempt late persuasion efforts. While you can plant seeds early on, the last second voter is surprisingly strident in their ability to ignore logical arguments up until election day. For this reason, it's best to refer to them as "last second," rather than last day, last hour, or even last minute voters to make the emphasis clear.

Often these voters simply don't have the time, or don't take the time, to study the candidates or issues. So, often it is just impressions that they get from a tv ad, mailer, or someone speaking to them at their door or on the phone that persuades them to vote one way or another.

When you combine the presence of the last minute voter with that of the reluctant voter, it is easy to see how important the last week and days of the campaign are.

Support President Obama, Vote on Nov. 2! (2010-09-25 13:18)

President Barack Obama, despite the opinion polls, still has a large body of supporters and rallying them for the November elections may be the best way to get a national effort moving.

I suspect that many hesitant voters could be motivated to go to the polls if they believe they will be supporting and defending the president in the process. Those who are not happy with Obama will simply ignore any campaign invoking his name.

The beauty of the presidential campaign is that you are working for one candidate all across the country. In the midterms, the important races are local or statewide. Thus, there are hundreds or thousands of important races throughout the US.

By rallying around the president, the Democrats can simplify the process of getting a national movement to vote off the ground.

(Source: <http://techbuddha.files.wordpress.com/>)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Democrats surge in newest polls (2010-09-27 13:43)

New polls just out show the Democrats surging in California, Kentucky and Nevada. Obviously this is good news as we approach election time.

The poor performance of Democrats in the polls has often been put forward as evidence that the public is dissatisfied with the party. However, much of that phenomenon may be related instead to the greater noise made by the Tea Party over the last few years.

Now with big elections coming up, Democrats are finally showing signs of energy and they are equaling or exceeding the Republicans in putting out their message.

Sens. Barbara Boxer and Harry Reid along with Kentucky Democratic senatorial candidate Jack Conway have moved up significantly in poll numbers. Also, gubernatorial candidate Jerry Brown in California is leading Republican nominee Meg Whitman in a just-released poll.

Democrats need to keep turning up the volume and getting their message out to more people.

The alexa.com graph above shows that major Democratic sites like barackobama.com (Organizing for America) and democrats.org (DNC site) have been easily outperforming the Tea Party and RNC sites over the last month.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Big rally tomorrow for final 5-week push (2010-09-27 20:31)

President Barack Obama has a big rally tomorrow starting at 6:30 pm ET. Watch parties have been arranged throughout the country to kick off the final five week stretch of the 2010 election campaign.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Watch Barack Obama live at Madison rally (2010-09-28 15:56)

Watch President Barack Obama live at Madison rally:

<http://www.barackobama.com/live/>

Russ Feingold speaking as I post this embracing Obama. Other Democratic candidates need to be team players and do the same!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Likely Voter (2010-09-29 08:20)

If you've been paying attention to the election polls, then you have probably heard the term "likely voters" used in reference to these polls.

Democrats are performing worse in polls that involve likely voters as compared to polls of all voters. In fact, in the latter Democrats are about dead even with Republicans.

One of the problems in determining which voters are likely to vote and which are not is that all the polls use different methodologies. And those methodologies often change as we get nearer to the election.

Generally the polls ask people a series of questions to determine whether or not they are likely to vote. As you can imagine, answers to these questions can change over time. In reality, early polls are not very good at determining voter turnout. Even polls later in the race are only moderately accurate in predicting how many voters will go to vote. Thus, in close races the actual voter turnout can really make a big difference.

Each side will remind and attempt to persuade their supporters to vote. These efforts are especially important with supporters who do not vote in every election. Of course, neither side makes any direct effort to remind non-supporters to vote.

[EMBED]

About 26,000 people showed up to support President Barack Obama at a rally yesterday in Madison, Wisconsin.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

4.10 October

Obama picks Pete Rouse for new chief of staff (2010-10-01 09:17)

President Barack Obama has tapped longtime aide Pete Rouse to become his new Chief of Staff now that Rahm Emanuel has announced he will be running in the Chicago mayor's race.

Rouse will be the first Asian American to serve as a presidential chief of staff. He is part white and part Japanese. Obama has many API staff members including his former Harvard college buddy Chris Lu and economist Sonal Shah. According to the video below, Rouse may have played a role in helping Obama decide to run for the presidency in 2008.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

DCCC launches interactive map (2010-10-01 13:00)

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC) website now has an interactive map that allows you to find targeted House races across the country.

If you're local race is not included, don't worry as you will still benefit from efforts made by the DNC and other groups. The DCCC is charged with electing more Democrats to the House of Representatives and it's normal for them to concentrate their resources on races that appear winnable.

Some races will be targeted for get out the vote efforts (GOTV) only, while others, probably the more winnable races, are getting both GOTV volunteers and TV ads. Again, the idea is to put more resources in races with the best chances of scoring a win.

DCCC website: <http://dccc.org/>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2010-10-01 14:29)

<http://www.latimes.com/news/custom/topofthetimes/national/la-pn-dems-enthusia0101002,0,3588363.story>

sm-2-

Latinos, Blacks bridging "enthusiasm gap" (2010-10-01 20:37)

A NBC/Wall Street Journal poll earlier in the week shows that African Americans and Latinos are getting more excited about the election have helped close a gap in the generic polls for the House of Representatives. Judging from statements by

Latinos, Blacks bridging "enthusiasm gap" (2010-10-02 11:35)

An NBC/Wall Street Journal poll earlier in the week found that African Americans and Blacks are helping erase the "enthusiasm gap" mentioned so often in the press. The growing excitement among those groups is also narrowing the margin between Democrats and Republicans in the generic polls for the House of Representatives.

Recent statements by President Obama and other prominent Democrats also indicate the the level of excitement among Democrats is rising rapidly. The most recent Newsweek poll shows the Democrats up in the generic ballot by five percent among registered voters. Attendance at rallies like the recent appearance of Obama in Wisconsin that attracted about 26,000 people also provide more evidence that the enthusiasm gap is narrowing quickly.

The level of enthusiasm among minority voters can play a big role in these elections. What may end up happening is that in states and districts where Republicans are expected to win, they will simply win by larger margins that usual. However, in other areas where the races are closer and where there are large minority communities, a better than expected turnout among these groups could lead to Democratic victories.

We've seen the same phenomenon before and it's related to the dual factors of the greater diversity of the Democratic Party and the segregated nature of many districts and even some whole states. If the energy level among minority voters continues to spike, we may even see unexpected gains for the Democrats.

Latino voters can make a big difference, for example, in the big senate races in California, pitting Sen. Barbara Boxer against Carly Fiorina, and in Nevada, where Sen. Harry Reid is facing Sharon Angle. Black and Asian Pacific Islander voters will also make a significant difference in those races. African American voters will be more prominent in states like Illinois, Pennsylvania and Florida. Indeed, we may see a new enthusiasm gap – this time with Democrats leading as the more motivated party.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Green Choice between Democrats and Republicans (2010-10-03 21:42)

[EMBED]

One of many areas in which Democrats offer a clear choice in contrast with Republicans is in the promotion of clean energy and green jobs.

The large bulk of Democrats are also clearly committed to fighting climate change. In comparison, all the current Republican congressional candidates have voiced doubts over the existence of climate change influenced by humans. Many of these Republican candidates are outspoken in their opposition to any efforts to battle climate change.

Obama and most Democrats have clearly supported the creation of green jobs – seen by the vast majority of experts as the economic wave of the future. In comparison, Republicans and some blue dog Democrats have supported big oil, coal and other dirty industries that are not sustainable.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Who are the Swing Voters? (2010-10-04 17:30)

Generally, more Democrats are swing voters than Republicans. Areas like the "Rust Belt" including the rural parts of states like Ohio and Pennsylvania hold large numbers of Democratic swing voters.

Former president Ronald Reagan was able to swing these voters over to his column and they have since been known as Reagan Democrats.

However, there are also Republican swing voters. President Barack Obama was especially gifted at attracting such votes. Probably the most noteworthy Republican swing voters for Obama was former secretary of state Gen. Colin Powell.

Of course, many voters who decline to state their party preference and many of those who are registered with independent parties can also be considered swing voters.

Early polls do not tell us much about swing voters because they really start looking at the issues closely late in the race.

Jobs and the economy will undoubtedly be a very important issues because many swing voters are located in rural areas that often depend on a very limited number of job providers.

Other swing voters tend to be young as they are still making up their minds on who has the best approach. However, more young voters these days lean toward a progressive ideology and, for this reason, the Democrats have been going full force registering young voters.

Here in California, the deadline for registering new voters is Oct. 18.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

DNC raises record cash in Sept. (2010-10-05 08:14)

The latest evidence that the "enthusiasm gap" is waning is found in a report from the Washington Post's Chris Cillizza. The Democratic National Committee (DNC) raised $16 million in September according to DNC sources – the biggest monthly haul since 2002.

While a ABC/Washington Post poll released today still showed Republicans are more enthusiastic about voting, the slide in Democratic energy appears to have stopped. The poll was unchanged from the previous month – the first leveling off since July.

The discrepancy may lie in the fact that Democrats are now engaged in motivating their base, their activists. They are preparing for the big push that will start about next week. No surprise that your average Democratic voter is not that energized since we're not electing the big chief.

What we should see is all these mobilized Democratic volunteers going door-to-door, calling voters, holding rallies, staffing tables, waving signs, and doing other campaign stuff to make progressive voters more aware. They will be trying to instill in supporting voters the importance of preventing gridlock in Washington and in advancing a forward-moving agenda.

With all the new cash, expect to see a mass media campaign fairly soon with the same objectives.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

On the Issues: Jobs and Economy (2010-10-07 17:33)

The top issues in the November elections according to just about every source are jobs and the economy.

Many people are still out of work especially when one considers the long-term unemployed who are not even counted in the official labor statistics. So, which party is best for jobs and the economy?

Well, when you look at the GOP "pledge" proposals all we see is the same type of thing the Republicans have been pushing since Ronald Reagan, i.e., cutting taxes. Now, we should remember that George W. Bush cut taxes to the lowest rate since just before the Great Depression, and we know we're that led us – into the Great Recession.

Now, the GOP wants to cut taxes and to avoid growing the deficit they are proposing significant cuts in government spending. The immediate effect of spending cuts will mean loss of jobs. Republicans are not telling that us up front, but that's the reality. They cannot make deep cuts without at the same time cutting government jobs.

How will that impact the economy? Well, those people will add to the masses of unemployed making it harder for the currently unemployed to find work. The newly unemployed will have to cut back on spending and many could end up defaulting on their mortgages.

According to Republicans, the money saved from these cuts and returned to taxpayers will then jump start the economy by encouraging spending. But how do we know that will happen?

The fact is that in a troubled economy people could end up saving any tax benefit they receive. A tax break is not the same a full-time job. The government has already tried returning money to the people. Remember the Bush tax rebates?

What the Democrats are proposing are structural changes that will help the government afford the programs that it should maintain. The country's infrastructure is crumbling because the GOP has opposed "big government" for decades. How can we really afford to cut back when we're so far behind?

What we really need is to a rollback on tax cuts on the rich implemented during the Bush years.

President Obama is proposing rebuilding America's infrastructure and leading the country into the green tech revolution. That's the direction the country needs to move in order to create jobs and gradually lead the country out of a still tangled financial mess.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's support among Black voters still high (2010-10-08 20:52)

[EMBED]

Despite much higher unemployment rates among African Americans, Obama's still holds strong support among black voters.

The president is putting significant effort to get black and other minority voters to the polls in November. Minorities generally vote at lower rates during off-year elections.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Early voting is underway (2010-10-09 08:12)

Early voting, especially by mail ballot, is underway in many states. I completed my mail ballot yesterday.

Candidates are scrambling to get last minute messages to voters before they fill in their early ballots. However, this segment is often the hardest to persuade. They tend to stay abreast of the issues and form their own strong opinions. Many fewer of them are "swing voters."

Rust belt states

I've noticed in the "rust belt" states that the Democratic internet activity is lower than that of the Republicans. For example, the websites of Sestak and Fisher in Pennsylvania and Ohio respectively are far less busy than those of their GOP opponents. That should never be the case, as the internet is a Democratic stronghold. The party needs to do more to drive people to Democratic sites in these areas.

Nothing wrong with canvassing and other old school campaigning efforts, but you cannot give up the technological/media battlefield.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Many Americans have been depending on unemployment benefits as their main source of income during this recession. Given that unemployment benefits are a type of insurance that is paid for by employees while they work, you would think there would be no question as to a person's right to these benefits.

However, recent declarations by Republican candidates, and in conservative opinion columns, throws this right into question.

Alaska Republican Joe Miller, who is vying for the U.S Senate seat in that state this November, has questioned the constitutionality of unemployment benefits.

In response to his claim, the New York Sun, a former broadsheet that now publishes online, wrote an editorial in support of Miller.

For the record, a lot of people agree with him, including a number of Supreme Court justices. It may yet be that, as our country bores down to constitutional bedrock in the great political struggle under way today, a new generation of justices will take a new look at the question.

A number of conservative blogs have also chimed in to support Miller. Other Republican candidates have been supporting mandatory regular drug tests for people on unemployment benefits. If people fail these drug tests, they could be denied benefits.

Republicans have balked at extensions of benefits during the recession, although in the end some have crossed over to support Democrats and pass these extensions.

However, should the situation deteriorate, future extensions could fail in a more conservative environment.

The Democratic stance is that extensions are necessary because of the extraordinary recession – the greatest since the Great Depression – that continues in the form a jobs recession. By not extending benefits, people will run out of money and will hardly be in any position to help with the consumer economy. In some cases, loss of benefits could result in people losing their homes and contributing to the depressed housing market.

Also, the Democrats are defending unemployment benefits rather than questioning their constitutionality.

The Tea Party has been pushing libertarian sentiments that threaten not only unemployment benefits but also Social Security, minimum wage laws and a host of other "safety net" items that Americans have come to expect. Unfortunately, mainstream Republicans – many fearful after Tea Party primary victories – have at times been voicing support for such extreme measures.

President Obama speaking at a family business in Maryland.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Ed Dolan (2010-10-09 20:05:46)

I am not a judge of the constitutional legalities of federal vs state unemployment laws, but moving unemployment insurance to the states raises some daunting practical issues

First, not all states are hit equally by unemployment. Enlarging the pool covered by insurance benefits everyone by spreading risk, for much the same reason as it is easier for large employers to provide health-care coverage than for small ones to do so. Second, unemployment benefits, as a transfer from the federal government to states, help the hardest-hit states to manage their budgets. This moderates the business cycle for the whole country.

Discussions of what is wrong with fiscal policy in Europe often point to lack of center-to-regional transfers as a source of instability, one of many factors that is behind disasters like Greece and now Ireland. We should learn from the mistakes of others, not copy those mistakes!

On the Issues: Social Security (2010-10-10 11:55)

One very interesting aspect of this election cycle is the willingness of a number of Republican candidates to openly call for changes or even privatization of the Social Security system.

The most outspoken critic of Social Security has been Alaska's Republican Senate nominee Joe Miller who has defended a privatized system and has even said that he would even federal Social Security for newly-born Americans. Nevada GOP Senate nominee Sharron Angle has also made statements indicating she would support privatization of Social Security, but lately has been backing off this stance. Others who appear to have supported cutting benefits but now deny such a position are the Republican Senate candidates from Kentucky Colorado, Pennsylvania and Florida: Rand Paul, Ken Buck, Pat Toomey and Marco Rubio respectively. Some of these candidates also have made statements that appear to support privatization.

In Florida, Gov. Charlie Crist, a Republican who is running as an independent against Rubio, said that the latter was trying to ""balance the budget on the backs of seniors"" by changing Social Security benefits and eligibility age.

The Democrats are definitely against privatization, but some have supported reform. The administration will not adjust benefits for cost of living (COLA) for the second straight year due to deficit concerns.

Of course, some reform is needed as the system is headed for trouble, but many Democrats are against reducing benefits or raising the retirement age. Currently Social Security can continue as is giving full benefits up to the year 2039.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) is leading the fight to preserve benefits as they stand and he has eleven co-sponsors – all Democrat – for his resolution.

Sanders co-sponsors are:

Sens. Daniel Akaka (D-Hawaii),
Barbara Boxer (D-Calif),
Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio),
Russ Feingold (D-Wis.),
Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y),
Tom Harkin (D-Iowa),
Dan Inouye (D-Hawaii),
Frank Lautenberg (D-N.J.),
Barbara Mikulski (D-Md.)
Debbie Stabenow (D-Mich.),
Sheldon Whitehouse (D-R.I.).

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: A blast from the past! (2010-10-11 14:59)

I created a fun little video that helps jog the memory a bit about what led the country into its current problems. Hope there is a message here of the importance of voting!

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The importance of minority and young vot to Democrats (2010-10-12 18:29)

Yes, in big national elections like this the Democrats need minorities to turn out and vote for Democratic candidates. The NAACP recently held a big rally in DC to help stir up things among African American voters. When minority voters turn out, the Democrats generally can win these national elections.

In addition, the Democrats usually win when the youth vote comes out. Most young people these days are very progressive. But they're still young people, and many still need to be reminded to vote. Some young voters and minority voters don't realize the importance of the mid-term elections.

To find out the deadline for voter registration in your state, visit this site:

http://www.declareyourself.com/voting_faq/state_by_state_info_2.html

Minority and young voters should also consider voting early. In many states, you can register to become a permanent mail voter, which means you do not have to wait in lines on election day.

The battle of 2012?

A Bloomberg poll suggests that Barack Obama would beat Sarah Palin by 16 points in a 2012 contest. Photo by Steven Senne, AP.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-10-23 06:10:31)

Hello,

I have a message for the webmaster/admin here at www.blogger.com.

May I use part of the information from this blog post right above if I give a backlink back to your site?

Thanks,

Alex

Women helping Democratic Senate raceswo (2010-10-13 18:04)

A CNN/TIME/Opinion Research poll of likely voters indicates that women are helping to buoy Democratic senatorial candidates in a number of states including Washington, Delaware, Wisconsin and West Virginia.

In a number of states such as Washington, Obama is doing much better among women voters of all parties in comparison to his support among men voters. However, the approval ratings for Obama cannot be generalized to the 2012 polls. For example, you have to consider who will be running against the president. None of the current crop of candidates is anywhere near as popular as Obama.

In other news, two independent GOP groups led by former Bush chief of staff Karl Rove are preparing to unleash a $50 million ad campaign in support of Republicans running for the House of Representatives.

Unions and progressive groups like MoveOn.org and Think Progress have also been spending money supporting Democratic candidates, but so far at a slower pace than the Republican-friendly groups.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Maddow: Anonymous corporate donors firing up as new campaign issue (2010-10-14 19:45)

[EMBED]

Excellent piece by MSNBC commentator Rachel Maddow on a new message gaining ground among Democrats.

The big corporate donors are contributing anonymously to campaigns in support of candidates and ballot measures. Evidence is building that many voters are concerned about these money sources and want to know who is funding what. In particular, the possibility that foreign multi-national companies may be contributing to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's political ad campaigns is of major concern.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Yes we have no bananas! (2010-10-15 09:21)

When you think about it, the emergence of covert corporation campaign funding as a major issue is not surprising. While just some years ago, the players on Wall St. were idolized by many middle class Americans, the love affair has ended badly for many if not most of these people. We can remember the anger that developed during the bank bailouts while struggling homeowners received much less help.

When the public learned that many of the same financial institutions that received help were giving executives huge bonuses, the anger only grew. The news of swindlers like Ponzi scheme artist Bernie Madoff helped to create a new image of the Wall St. trader.

Then, there was the news that a Detroit auto executive looking for a taxpayer bailout had flown to hearings in DC on a corporate jet.

At the height of the furor, there were even reports that Wall St. traders were arming themselves against the threats of disgruntled investors.

In some more recent news, we have heard that the Federal Reserve is looking to cover banks with lots of bad mortgages. Currently, many adjustable rate mortgages from the Bush era are resetting to much higher rates, and the rate of foreclosure is rising rapidly. Yet, most of the rescue action that we see is coming from the central bank on behalf of fellow bankers.

The days of "greed is good" seem long gone now, at least in the current economic environment.

Many Democrats had thought that the economy or the outlandish candidates and behavior of the Tea Party would be the issue that would drive people to the polls. Certainly the economy remains an important factor that is connected directly with the anger at corporate America.

However, Tea Party candidates have been careful to distance themselves from past rhetoric, and the mainstream Republicans have tried to separate themselves from the Tea faction.

What seems to have been underestimated is the resentment held by many Americans against big corporations. While the Tea Party can, at best, be seen as a threat, many Americans already feel victimized by Wall St. and big business. So, the idea that corporations are secretly manipulating elections is like the proverbial straw that broke the camel's back.

While Republicans and business leaders have been complaining that President Obama is "anti-business," the fact is that Obama may not even be coming close to representing American anger at big corporations.

Democrats would be wise to follow Sen. Russ Feingold's example and to continue to ask independent campaign committees to disclose their corporate donors, so Americans will know who is funding all the campaign ads currently bombarding the airwaves.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-10-15 11:53:39)

The supreme court decision to allow unlimited contributions to electoral campaigns and candidates is unjust, unfair and wrong. It greatly favours the republican party and their friends on Wall Street. You don't have to be a genius in economics to know that. They're the party of big money. Will this shameful unfairness go on forever now? This needs to be fixed! No foreign contributions should be allowed; this is an american election. Contributions over 5000 dollars (pick a number) should be reported and recorded for tabulation and information or are some people afraid of that? Maybe they should be! Let's keep it open and fair for everybody

Committing to Vote (2010-10-17 15:57)

First Lady Michelle Obama sent out a letter today to members of the barackobama.com mail list (Organizing for America) providing a link to a new challenge they are putting out to volunteers:

<http://my.barackobama.com/CommitChallenge>

At the page, you can give a reason as to why you are committing to vote on Nov. 2. You can share your reason with other friends and also compete with friends on OFA to see who can get the most people to commit to vote. Here's the letter from Michelle Obama:

Friend –
None of us can sit this election out.
Not when we're just beginning to see the results of the change we've all been working for, and when there's still so much left to do.
That's why this election is so important, and that's why we can't let complacency overtake us in these last few weeks.
Of course, you and I already know this. You've already committed to get out and vote. But with so much at stake, we need to make sure your friends and family are planning to get out and vote too. And the best person in the world for that job is you.
That's why, today, OFA is launching its Commit to Vote Challenge to help you reach out, get your friends signed up to vote, and have some fun along the way.
Start inspiring your friends to commit to vote.
We know from Barack's campaign that when you get someone to make a commitment, they're far more likely to follow through.
So OFA is making it as easy as possible for you to get everyone you know to commit to going to the polls this year.
By taking part in this challenge – and getting commitments from 5, 10, 30, or more of the folks you're close to – you'll get us even closer to victory on November 2nd. And you'll see who among your friends can inspire the greatest number of people to commit.
Every year, elections across the country are decided by the slimmest of margins. If we all get the people we know to commit to voting, we can change the outcomes of elections all over the country and continue to build the kind of future we want for ourselves and for our children.
There's more information about the challenge at OFA's Vote 2010 website. Let's get started today:
<http://my.barackobama.com/CommitChallenge>
Thanks so much,
Michelle

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rock the Vote Videos (2010-10-18 15:33)

The Rock the Vote website has a number of videos designed to appeal to young people in encouraging them to vote.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

YouTube allows you to link to or to embed all of these videos on your blog or site, or to share them on Facebook, Twitter and other social media sites. You can also drive them up in the YouTube rankings by liking the videos and adding them as favorites.

Rock the Vote page: <http://www.rockthevote.com/vote-fearlessly/videos.html>

On YouTube: <http://www.youtube.com/user/rockthevote>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

'All hands on deck' (2010-10-19 17:06)

President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle released a video today asking supporters to volunteer for the big four day get out the vote push prior to Nov. 2

[EMBED]

During the last four days before an election, all supporters are needed to phone voters, walk door-to-door and participate in other activities that remind people that the election is coming up.

I've checked many different sources and it appears that any enthusiasm gap, at least among netroots Dems on the national level, is gone. However, the online activity in individual local races varies widely.

With two weeks left before the polls, I do see lots of excitement starting to generate among the activists. Election day will show how well this has worked in getting voters energized.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

35,000 rally behind Barack and Michelle in Ohio (2010-10-20 15:06)

More evidence that the "enthusiasm gap" is a thing of the past. A crowd of 35,000 people gathered in Ohio to see President Barack Obama and the First Lady Michelle.

[EMBED]

Armies of volunteers will get people out to vote in the election. Really only Barack and Michelle can rally the people on this scale.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Early voting looking good for Democrats (2010-10-21 16:39)

If you're bummed about the media spinning a few selected polls into a landslide for the GOP, there is some heartening news to report.

The early voting, which is actual ballots that are being cast, shows that Democrats are doing very well. Many states have already started early voting, and more will open up their polls soon.

Some of these states actually break up the ballots in a way that allows us to know how many are Democratic and how many are Republican. Here are the states that we know about so far (note that early voting is not complete in these states):

Iowa: About 46 % Democrat to 38 % Republicans early ballots.

Maine: Things are roughly even between Democrats and Republicans.

North Carolina: Democrats have about 44 % of votes compared to 39 % for the GOP.

Maryland: About 59 % Democrat vs. 31 % Republican.

Ohio: Democrats leading at 59 % to 26 % in Cuyahoga County, while Republicans lead 42 % to 33 % in Hamilton County. In Franklin County, things are tied.

Louisiana: Democrats leading 46.6 % to 42.7 %.

Nevada: In Clarke County, Democrats are leading by a substantial margin, but well behind in much smaller Washoe County.

The main exception has been in Colorado where Republicans lead by 41.8 % to 36.5 %.

Again, this is good news because these are votes that are cast and cannot be changed. Of course, we cannot assume that all Democratic ballots translate into votes for all the Democratic candidates. Some states like Ohio, for example, are known for Democratic swing voters.

However, historically speaking Democrats turn out in lower numbers for early voting especially during the mid-term elections. So, this is good news indeed everything else being equal.

Also, with a large number of Democrats voting early it will make things easier in getting out the vote further down the road toward election day. Smart campaigns will not bother contacting those people who have already voted. The data provides further positive evidence that the so-called "enthusiasm gap" may be exaggerated.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Get Early Voting Info from OFA (2010-10-23 14:47)

X

Early voting is available in many states. To find out if there is early voting in your state, click on this link:

<http://www.raiseyourvote.com/>

By voting early or getting other people to vote early, you don't risk not being able to cast your vote on election day!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Early voting campaign hits Facebook, social media (2010-10-24 14:19)

The early voting push has really caught on judging from Facebook. A new application called the Commit to Vote Challenge is plastering walls all over that social media site.

And the Democratic Party is actively pushing early voting too on its official site and on its social media pages.

A good move when you consider how difficult a job getting out the vote on election day is. Even the best planned voter turnout operation can fail if, for example, rain happens to be falling on election day in the local area. Even a drizzle can sometimes manage to depress voter participation.

So, getting votes in the bank before election day is a very sound strategy. It makes things easier when Nov. 2 finally comes.

Information on early voting

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Democrats save big bucks for late surge (2010-10-25 17:10)

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC), the official group charged with maintaining Democratic control of the House of Representatives, is well ahead in the money race.

Saving their funds for the last rounds of the campaign, the DCCC entered into October with more than twice the cash as its Republican counterpart, the NRCC. The Democrats plan on spending about $40 million in TV ads and another $20 million on get out the vote (GOTV) operations in the final weeks leading to the Nov. 2 election.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Real People vs. Corporations (2010-10-26 12:44)

The current election pits real folks against the big corporation world probably more than any other.

While the Obama presidential campaign brought about an unprecedented grassroots movement, big corporations at the time were restricted by the McCain-Feingold campaign finance law.

However, the recent fallacious Supreme Court ruling has created a new environment in which big business can freely and anonymously contribute to independent political committees like those run by Karl Rove (ex-Bush chief of staff). Corporations and super-wealthy individuals are contributing in vast sums to these groups and to the Tea Party. These conservative political committees are not opening up their contributor lists like their progressive counterparts. They don't want the public seeing how a relatively small group of super-rich entities are influencing the elections.

Despite all the talk about "socialism" by Tea Partiers, the official statistics show a far different story. What the actual evidence shows is that the very wealthy have been moving up while everyone else has moving down creating historic income disparities.

Although the task looks daunting, ordinary folk can definitely defeat the big bucks of corporate America. If they put their minds to it, millions of people can create a wave that will overwhelm all the TV ads that could possible broadcast on the networks.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sign up for GOTV in last four days! (2010-10-26 20:47)

The last four days of the election are crucial in getting Democratic and progressive voters to the polls.

To volunteer for phone work, door-to-door canvassing, or other activities, fill out the volunteer form at barack-obama.com:

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/content/GOTVolunteer2/>

On election day itself, the campaigns will conduct what is known as "the chase" in which they check voter rolls to ensure that all supporters have cast their ballots. If they find someone who hasn't voted, they call that person to ask if they plan on voting or if they need assistance getting to their polling stations.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

On Polls and Early Voting (2010-10-27 13:21)

Lots of back and forth debate on websites, blogs, etc. over the meaning of the early voting statistics and their relationship to polling data.

One fallacious approach encountered in the discussion is comparing the early voting data to the 2008 or even the 2006 election. In both those elections, and particularly in 2008, Democrats won by landslides. In 2008, President Barack Obama won in states that many thought had been permanently lost to Republicans. Large numbers of Republican elected officials, many of them holding office for long periods, were unseated in both the House and Senate.

GOP usually leads GOTV

Normally, Democrats do not perform as well in early voting or in voter turnout (GOTV) as the Republicans. In fact, this is one reason that the GOP is able to stay competitive despite overall lower numbers of voters registered as Republican as compared to Democrat.

However, in 2008, Democrats crushed Republicans in early voting and GOTV allowing them to beat out many incumbents. Defeating sitting elected officials is generally very difficult. They have natural advantages in name recognition, press coverage, government-sponsored outreach, etc. However, the Dems led in practically every statistic related to winning a campaign including leading in the polls.

Now, this time around pollsters are suggesting that the opposite will occur – that the GOP will unseat large numbers of Democratic incumbents in both the House and Senate – and particularly in the former.

If that were the case, then it would be fair to expect early voting stats to greatly favor Republicans as they favored Democrats in 2008.

Democrats lead in 2010 early voting

The data, so far, though shows Democrats leading overall in those states that conduct early voting. They are not leading in every state, but they are more than holding their own when everything is taken together.

That really does not bode well for unseating large numbers of Democratic incumbents. However, it is not only early voting that shows a disconnect with the polling data.

For example, in 2008 Democrats were much more active online using "netroots" campaigning. Barack Obama's website was far more active than that of John McCain's, for instance.

Just a few months ago, the GOP and Tea Party did indeed appear to be taking over the internet based on a wide variety of statistics. However, lately that has turned around entirely. Formerly, for example, a YouTube video from OFA would be bombarded by negative comments from Tea Party sympathizers and rated lowly because of much larger numbers of "dislikes." But now the situation has flopped totally in favor of the Democrats.

Dems also hold fundraising lead

In fundraising also, the Democrats wiped the floor with the GOP in 2008 although this is traditionally an area of strength for Republicans. If we are to expect a Dem bloodbath this time around, then shouldn't GOP treasure chests be much larger in the same way that Democratic coffers were in 2008? In fact, the official Democratic campaign committees are raising more money than their GOP counterparts.

The Republicans are benefiting from independent groups receiving donations from large corporations, but its questionable whether that is giving them a significant edge. The conservative groups are at least partially offset by labor unions and progressive spending from groups like MoveOn.org and Emily's List.

Sen. Barbara Boxer's supporters in California have been very active showing up not only for Boxer events, but also establishing a strong presence at the events of her opponent Carly Fiorina. (Source: <http://www.examiner.com/political-buzz-in-national/the-latest-polling-data-for-key-races-the-2010-midterm-elections-picture-51?slide=24390041#main>) Weak points in surveys

The discrepancy between the surveys and all the rest of the evidence may lie in weaknesses that polls have in predicting minority and youth turnout. These two demographics traditionally favor Democrats, but both are underrepresented in surveys for a variety of reasons.

When we look at the large turnout at Obama rallies, including about 37,000 recently in Southern California, it is hard to imagine that there is a substantial "enthusiasm gap." Indeed, the Democrats appear to be turning out in larger numbers overall for these types of public events than Republicans.

The election, of course, will show us whether the survey data was correct. There is also a possibility that polls will show races tightening dramatically in the last few days before the election.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Kal Penn on the importance of voting (2010-10-28 16:48)

KKal Penn, the former actor who played "Kumar" in the "Harold and Kumar" series of movies talks about the importance of voting this coming Nov. 2

[EMBED]

Penn worked as Associate Director of the White House Office of Public Engagement in the Obama administration until June of this year.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Undecided voters still undecided (2010-10-28 16:58)

Yes, there are still many undecided voters out there, some of who have not even looked over the candidates or issues yet.

Normally, these voters, or at least a very significant portion of them, do not make a final decision until the last day. Some even struggle with their decisions in the voting booth.

Of course, this is a good time to use one's powers of persuasion whether that involves discussing the election with family, friends or others that you know personally, or making "cold calls" by knocking on doors and making phone calls.

You can also provide information electronically through email or via social media.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2010-10-28 19:05)

Nationwide weather forecast for Election Day (2010-10-29 13:30)

Ok the current weather forecast shows rain for areas of the coastal southern and eastern mainland.

Trick here is to vote early, but in states like Pennsylvania that will not be an option. Another thing that can be done is to plan carpools with friends and/or family to the polls now.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video the Vote (2010-10-29 19:52)

[EMBED]

Nice video from <http://videothevote.org/> on recent instances in which attempts were made to prevent or dissuade minorities and young people from voting. The video can also remind us that really it wasn't that long ago historically when women and minorities were not even allowed to vote. Good video to pass along.

Also the videothevote.org/ site is designed to allow you to document the election in your local area by taking video clips and uploading them to their archives.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Nouriel Roubini sees doom if GOP takes power (2010-10-30 05:52)

Prof. Nouriel Roubini was one of only a very few national economists who accurately predicted the housing meltdown and resulting deep recession. A professor of economics at New York University, Roubini has been described as "a prophet” at the IMF and was rated number 4 in Foreign Policy journal’s Top 100 Global Thinkers. In an opinion piece for the Financial Times, Roubini credits the Obama administration’s stimulus plan with preventing another Great Depression. However he warns that if Congress becomes dominated by the Republicans as some are predicting, we could be headed for more economic gloom.

He said the U.S. remains on an “unsustainable fiscal course” and the likely make-up of Congress after elections next Tuesday, in which the Republicans look set for strong gains, virtually takes fiscal reform off the agenda.

The resulting instability could be aggravated by a trigger mechanism according to Roubini including a state government going into debt default.

”The worst of the coming fiscal train wreck will be prevented by the Fed’s easing. But the risk is (Obama) ... will then preside over ... a Japanese style stagnation, where growth is barely positive, and deflationary pressures and high unemployment linger.”

Reading over the GOP “Pledge to America,” one is hard pressed to find any fault in Roubini’s reasoning. The Republicans are basically promising the same types of economic strategies that got us into this mess in the first place.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Vote Dem #VoteDem (2010-10-30 13:27)

Vote Dem is the GOTV message that the DCCC is using on Facebook:

A graphic with the words "VOTE DEM" in large, bold, stylized letters. "VOTE" is red with a white outline, and "DEM" is blue with a white outline. Below this, the date "NOVEMBER 2, 2010" is written in red, smaller capital letters.

The hashtag #VoteDem is also gaining a lot of ground on Twitter. Whenever you tweet about campaign or election related stuff you can add the #VoteDem hashtag if you have space to help push this up into the top trending topics.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Working the Demographics (2010-10-31 07:31)

Democrats are making a lot of effort now to get certain demographic groups like minorities and young voters to the polls.

Unfortunately, there is a tendency among these groups to miss the importance of smaller elections. Part of it could be election overload with so many choices on the ballot that people trying to make ends meet can hardly keep up with.

A number of voting guides exist that can help voters quickly decide on candidates and issues. The Progressive Voters Guide offered by Courage Campaign lists endorsements from progressive groups like the state Democratic Party, the League of Women Voters and labor organizations.

SmartVoter is a more neutral website that allows candidates and issue committees to put up their own informational pages.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Encouraging News from the Field and from Early Voting (2010-10-31 19:08)

OFA Director Jon Stewart spoke on MSNBC about the Democratic turnout in early voting and the enthusiasm in volunteer activity:

[EMBED]

Democrats continue to outperform Republicans in early voting including leading in important states with lots of House seats like California, Illinois and Ohio.

Gov. Ed Rendell said that in Pennsylvania there would be major surprises on election day. Rendell said that in the last two weeks, Democrats in his state had closed the "enthusiasm gap."

Of course, election day is still very important and will account for the bulk of voting in most states. GOTV efforts so far are going at a fast pace with groups like Organizing for America contacting massive numbers of voters.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

4.11 November

Last Two Days (2010-11-01 13:07)

The last two days are easily the most important of the election. As any event organizer would know reminding people the day before an event and, if possible, the day of an event is generally essential for a good turnout.

Many campaigns will go all out chasing down people on voter rolls who have not voted. Of course, the campaigns will only encourage those people who they think are supportive of their cause.

Some people even up to today still don't know that there is election going on tomorrow. Spread the word!

X

Plan Your Trip to the Polls

my.democrats.org

Take 60 seconds to fill out a simple form to plan your trip to the polling place to get a reminder on Election Day to vote.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Trending Topics and Searches on Election Day (2010-11-02 06:14)

Polls are already open in many parts of the country.

For those on Twitter, several election-related topics are currently trending including #govote, #electionday, "Election Night" and "Democratic Party." The Washington Post is also sponsoring the topic #election.

On Google, hot searches are related to people apparently trying to find out where to vote. The only hot topic in the top 10 is "California elections."

Note that these states allow voter registration on Election Day: Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Minnesota, Montana, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Wisconsin, Wyoming and Washington DC.

To find polling locations, visit this URL:

<http://pollingplaces.raiseyourvote.com/>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Crunch Time (2010-11-02 13:18)

As more people are getting off work on the eastern coast of the country, polls are beginning to jam up with voters. Most problems with long lines, running out of ballots, etc. tends to happen in that area as huge numbers of people wait until this time to vote.

Google has a great tool that will furnish a map, driving/transportation directions and even candidate information and local election office information:

<http://maps.google.com/vote>

In the directions section under Options, you can choose routes that avoid highways and toll booths.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Lessons to learn from the Election (2010-11-03 21:54)

Yesterday's election resulted in the Republicans winning the House and the majority of governorships. The Democrats managed to retain leadership of the Senate but losing probably six seats in the process.

While the results were generally bad for Democrats, there were also some bright spots at least when taken against the dire predictions made before election day. For example, Colorado, a traditional swing state, saw Democrats win both the senate and governor's races. Oregon will likely remain out of the swing state category, as in 2008, as Democrats won both the senate and governor's races in that state.

There are also valuable lessons to learn as Democrats prepare for 2012 and beyond.

- The Supreme Court's change of campaign financing laws was a surprise for Democrats and one that they did not have sufficient time to prepare for. Corporations poured huge sums of money anonymously into independent groups that supported Republican candidates. Democrats now have more time to raise money and figure out ways to counter GOP money. Note that even huge amounts of cash did not help Meg Whitman, Carly Fiorina or Texas oil-backed Proposition 23 in California. However, good grassroots organizing must be very thorough using both old school and new school strategies. The network should be activated early enough to allow a truly deep-reaching machine to self-organize. Give them the freedom to do what they're good at and enjoy rather than forcing them into traditional campaign work, which is not for everybody.
- Rather embarrassing that a party that depends so much on minority and women voters appears to have been outdone in respect to candidate diversity by Republicans and the Tea Party! The latter in particular fielded many women and minority candidates. Furthermore, they gave strong support to these candidates. The Democrats seem to have had either a lukewarm or hands-off approach to many of their minority candidates even after they had become nominees. They are back to their old insider game when what had worked for Obama's 2008 campaign was the inclusive approach. This election we saw the nation's first Latina governor and the first Indian American woman governor elected running as Republicans! All three winning Latino governors are GOP and the only Latino senatorial candidate to win was Marco Rubio in Florida. Many prominent women were fielded by the Tea Party although the most publicized races ended for them in defeat.
- Where are Democrats hiding the progressive wing and Dr. Howard Dean? The blue dogs need to eat some humble pie and restore these folk back into the fold. These are the people that won the nomination for Obama and played a large role in his election win. Yet they now seem forced to operate along the periphery.
- Voters in many states simply were expressing their anger at the economy by "kicking the bums out." That might swing back against the GOP come 2012 for a variety of reasons. For example, by around June of next year federal stimulus money to state and local governments will begin to shrink and will continue to decline until 2016. However, the revenues of those governments have generally not been growing enough to keep up with things like inflation and interest rates on debts. So, the state and local governments are unlikely to be able to handle the new budget stress. That means that they will be forced to layoff employees and cut government contracts unless new money is approved by the federal government. In fact, even with the current rising-rate federal aid we have seen that many of these smaller governments have still taken drastic action. The problem for the Republicans is there is strong opposition to any further stimulus spending, and this obviously could backfire against the GOP in working class areas of swing states like Ohio and Pennsylvania.
- What happened to the 50 state strategy? Everyone promised Dean when he resigned that they would continue to implement this sound approach. Were they simply getting him to move his stuff out faster? The folks now using the 50 state party are the Tea Party, which is one factor behind their phenomenal, if uneven, success. During the height of the Obama campaign, Democrats and other supporters from Idaho to the Deep South felt like part of the team. But again we've moved back to the insider game and people in the "boondocks" party-wise are likely to get ignored.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

– (2010-11-16 21:40:11)

The real lesson learned is that Obama needs to communicate to people a lot more. It is not enough to get out and talk to people in the last few weeks. <http://www.EZObama.com>

Mr. Kowalski (2010-11-19 17:47:18)

The lesson is that instead of fixing the economy he shoved ObamaCare down our throats. It was not what the people wanted. Communicating it better won't change this. Liberals always assume they're right and that if only the stupid people would understand they'd all be Democrats. It's arrogant, and he paid the price.

Socxs (2010-11-24 10:46:08)

hi

Anonymous (2010-12-16 10:45:09)

Obama needs to stop reading his speeches line for line, its annoying watching him look down twice a sentence. Bush might not be a great speaker but at least he doesn't read the whole thing, slowly and painfully. Obama might seem like he believes, or even knows, what he is talking about if he can give a speech without reading it. If you believe and are passionate about what you say, you don't have to read it... it's funny when he uses his line ending tone in the middle of a sentence because he didn't read the sentence far enough ahead of time... haha

2012 Election Strategy (2010-11-29 20:08)

President Obama calls for a two-year freeze on civilian pay for federal employees from the White House, November 29, 2010. (Credit: CBS)

After checking out all the post-election analysis and giving it a bit more thought, here's my view on how President Barack Obama and the Democrats can win the 2012 election.

The exit polls suggest that, if we accept the 2010 election as a referendum on Obama, then the president lost none of his core support groups except women who voted about evenly for Democrats and Republicans. Other constituencies like progressives, minorities, young people and LGBT supported Democrats. The problem is that many of these folk simply did not show up to vote. That would not be so bad if the turnout was low compared to the 2008 election since mid-terms generally create less excitement than presidential elections. However, the turnout was even low compared to the 2006 mid-terms.

Energizing the base

The GOP and Tea Party took a page out to the Democrat's 2008 strategy and made a great effort to field diverse candidates in 2010. You can rest assured that the unusually large number of Republican women and minority candidates did not just appear coincidentally.

One reason, I think, that the women's vote shifted more toward the Republicans is the large number of prominent women candidates fielded by that party. They were all over the news even if not always portrayed in a positive light. While these women could not hope to attract progressive women voters due to their often very conservative viewpoints, they might have had an impact on moderate and independent women voters.

Democrats will have to do a better job at this nationwide in 2012. In California, Dems swept the statewide offices and picked up one state assembly seat while successfully preventing any GOP pickups in the state senate or US House. Here, Sen. Barbara Boxer and state Attorney General-elect Kamala Harris were among the most prominent candidates. Boxer additionally is of Jewish descent, while Harris becomes, at the same time, the first woman, African American, Asian American and Indo-American attorney general in California. Additionally there were other winning statewide candidates like Secretary of State Debra Bowen and Controller John Chiang. The candidates for the both chambers of the state legislature were highly diverse.

Rather than relying on Barack Obama alone to energize voters and volunteers, the Democrats should groom attractive candidates at all levels – candidates that represent the change that voters are looking for.

Winning Congress

A good turnout of Obama's core constituencies in urban areas like Philadelphia, Detroit, Miami and Las Vegas may be enough to get the necessary electoral votes. However, the urban vote may not be enough to defend the Senate or to win back the House.

Right now, it's difficult to say whether Obama's coattails will help carry Democrats in heavily-independent areas. Many parts of the country have gone red to the core with GOP state legislatures in addition to the congressional caucuses. So if things aren't quite what they would like in 2012, there may be some backlash against the Republicans in these states, or at least the GOP may be held equally responsible for the state of affairs.

However, Democrats would be wise to at least try and win back the women's vote in 2012. Again, they can do this by putting forth exciting women candidates. They should also attempt to convince women in the administration like Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius, Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Secretary Janet Napolitano and Veterans Affairs Assistant Secretary for Public and Intergovernmental Affairs Tammy Duckworth to get out on the campaign trail.

Winning the media battle

After the 2008 election, the Tea Party grabbed the media spotlight and did not let go. At best the Democrats came back only in the last few months of the 2010 campaign.

By that time, many people had already been soured by Tea Party and GOP disinformation. The president needs to get into the role of theater politician and work the media to the fullest. He should also concentrate on minority, special interest and other small media outlets in the same way he did during 2008.

In addition, high profile officials like Hillary Clinton and Joe Biden should also work the media extensively. First Lady Michelle Obama is already a media star and hopefully she will continue to help Democrats by playing a key role in interfacing with the public.

Rebuilding the Obama army

Many young people who worked for the president in 2008 were cut loose after the election and were disappointed to see the administration filled up with old faces.

While there was an argument for bringing in experience, many were expecting the administration to be dominated by new "change" people.

President Obama can still fill up his White House team, despite GOP obstructionism, by making abundant recess appointments all the way until 2012.

Democrats will need to rebuild linkages with existing networks. For example, during 2008 the campaign did great work in reaching out to African American churches. Students for Obama was a self-organized group that was part of the draft Obama movement and did much-needed work in getting out the youth vote. When it was learned that elderly Jews in Florida were not sure about the candidate from Illinois, a large number of young Jews undertook the "Great Schlep" to convince them they could trust Obama.

Working with existing networks and organizations was a hallmark of the Obama campaign.

Democrats will need to fight for the issues that got them elected in 2008. They can no longer allow themselves to stumble around GOP obstacles. The public expects them to show leadership and make the necessary adjustments in their governing strategy to get things done.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

I really like your site. Excellent content. Please continue posting such profound cotent.

I think I ate dinner with Barack & Michelle (right across the dinner table) back in '85 or '86 at the Univ. Wisc. Stevens Point, at a conference of African American students and African (foreign) students.

Just curious...what did the word "change" mean to you? I don't think most people had a clue. His approval ratings are going down every day. Before the President focuses on his national campaign for 2012, I think he better worry about wrapping up his own party's primary nomination. A lot of Americans were caught up with his energetic rhetoric, but now have realized his inexperience has trumped his speaking abilities.

<http://keithpriceisright.blogspot.com/>

hello m,r presendent.please hspeak arabic:

Thanks for the great post.

Election 2012 is far different from Election 2008. Obama will have a harder time convincing voters to vote for him once again although he was not the one who led America into the economic mess it has gotten into since 2007. Fact is people are just impatient with the pace of the economic recovery and tired of political bickering in Washington. What Obama must hope for 2012 is that Republicans could nominate somebody who will scare away independents from the GOP and vote for him with reservations instead.

5. 2011

5.1 January

Polls favoring Obama so far for 2012 (2011-01-02 16:46)

Although President Barack Obama's average approval ratings are still about five percentage points below 50 percent, he still looks in relatively good standing for the 2012 election.

No serious candidates have expressed interest in running against Obama in the primary and most possible contenders have publicly ruled out any challenge.

Recent nationwide polls show Obama leading the GOP field of candidates, but even more importantly the president is doing very well in a recent series of state polls by PPP. The structure of the electoral college makes the state-to-state races more important than the nationwide vote.

Obama lead PPP polls in Michigan, Florida, Wisconsin and even in North Carolina, which the president won in a close race in 2008.

Another reason to be optimistic is the current field of Republican prospects all have serious weaknesses that tend to favor the president. Palin still looks like the strongest of the bunch although the mainstream GOP seems to be leaning toward Romney.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2011-01-03 10:49:00)

By 2012, The National Popular Vote bill could guarantee the Presidency to the candidate who receives the most popular votes in all 50 states (and DC).

Every vote, everywhere, would be politically relevant and equal in presidential elections. Elections wouldn't be about winning states. No more distorting and divisive red and blue state maps. Every vote, everywhere would be counted for and directly assist the candidate for whom it was cast. Candidates would need to care about voters across the nation, not just undecided voters in a handful of swing states.

The bill would take effect only when enacted, in identical form, by states possessing a majority of the electoral votes—that is, enough electoral votes to elect a President (270 of 538). When the bill comes into effect, all the electoral votes from those states would be awarded to the presidential candidate who receives the most popular votes in all 50 states (and DC).

The bill uses the power given to each state by the Founding Fathers in the Constitution to change how they award their electoral votes for president.

In Gallup polls since 1944, only about 20 % of the public has supported the current system of awarding all of a state's electoral votes to the presidential candidate who receives the most votes in each separate state (with about 70 % opposed and about 10 % undecided). Support for a national popular vote is strong in virtually every state, partisan, and demographic group surveyed in recent polls in closely divided battleground states: CO- 68 %, IA -75 %, MI- 73 %, MO- 70 %, NH- 69 %, NV- 72 %, NM- 76 %, NC- 74 %, OH- 70 %, PA — 78 %, VA — 74 %, and WI — 71 %; in smaller states (3 to 5 electoral votes): AK - 70 %, DC - 76 %, DE -75 %, ME — 77 %, NE — 74 %, NH -69 %, NV — 72 %, NM — 76 %, RI — 74 %, and VT — 75 %; in Southern and border states: AR -80 %, KY — 80 %, MS -77 %, MO — 70 %, NC — 74 %, and VA — 74 %; and in other states polled: CA — 70 %, CT — 74 %, MA — 73 %, MN - 75 %, NY — 79 %, WA — 77 %, and WV- 81 %.

The bill has passed 31 state legislative chambers, in 21 small, medium-small, medium, and large states, including one house in AR, CT, DE, DC, ME, MI, NV, NM, NY, NC, and OR, and both houses in CA, CO, HI, IL, NJ, MD, MA ,RI, VT, and WA . The bill has been enacted by DC, HI, IL, NJ, MD, MA, and WA. These 7 states possess 76 electoral votes — 28 % of the 270 necessary to bring the law into effect.

<http://www.NationalPopularVote.com>

Susan Burns (2011-01-03 17:17:51)

It is hard to understand why so many people do not think President Obama has exceptional character. Whenever he leaves office, he will continue to do great things. Unlike Reagan and Bush (both).

Anonymous (2011-01-19 13:40:54)

Some decent tips. Very well considered

Anonymous (2011-01-19 14:42:55)

Discovered this page truly when it was needed. Thank you very much. It's been incredibly helpful nursingstikes (2011-02-12 07:01:16)

"Polls favoring Obama so far for 2012"

Blog helpful please visit nursingstikes or to <http://stikeshealthnurse.blogspot.com>

Dr. Michael D. Evans (2011-03-11 22:53:03)

People have different reasons on what they think about Obama, to each his own.

Dr. Michael D. Evans (2011-03-11 22:54:11)

People have different views on what they think about Obama, to each his own.

vilka80 (2011-03-20 10:22:19)

Обама, сука черная, какого хера ты со своими ублюдками ООНавцами и своими порядками лезешь в чужую страну, вали нахуй из Ливии черножопая обезьяна!!!!

5.2 March

Obama continues to lead 2012 polls (2011-03-18 17:36)

The series of presidential polls by PPP in single states and nationwide continue to show that President Barack Obama is in good position although it still quite early.

The most recent polls show Republican hopefuls trailing Obama in Maine and Ohio and also in a nationwide poll released on March 16. Other nationwide surveys conducted by other polling agencies tend to agree with the PPP results.

Still very early to say whether Obama can help pull up other Democratic candidates including those running for Congress. The approval ratings for Congress are still very low and this could translate into Democrats retaking the House but losing the Senate.

The reasoning is fairly simple as there are more GOP incumbents in the House but more Democrats up for reelection in the Senate. If the "kick the bums out" attitude prevails that might lead to a switch in leadership in each chamber of Congress.

Democrats can hope that Obama's coattails will help them keep hold of Senate while winning back the House. The president enjoys much higher approval ratings as compared with those in Congress. The RealClearPolitics average of polls gives Obama a 49.1 percent approval as compared to 46.1 disapproval rating. He has a positive approval rating in seven of the last eight polls and is above 50 percent approval in four of the polls.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

5.3 April

Obama campaign mobilizes, GOP still gun shy (2011-04-10 19:37)

The Obama 2012 campaign is now on even though the Republican hopefuls are still mostly not ready to commit to their candidacies. Minnesota Gov. Tim Pawlenty is the only one of those considered as serious contenders to file an exploratory committee.

Against a tough incumbent like President Obama, one would think that prospective candidates would like to get started early especially in the fundraising department.

Earlier polls have shown Obama is leading in the important swing states and the most recent PPP polls in Florida and New Hampshire continue the same trend. Only Mitt Romney seems to pose a threat although a lot can change by election time in November 2012.

The GOP state polls show Romney leading in New Hampshire with Donald Trump close behind. Mike Huckabee was ahead in Iowa and South Carolina although those polls did not include Trump in the field of candidates.

A more recent NBC/Wall Street Journal poll shows Mike Huckabee and Donald Trump tied at the front of the GOP pack. Trump though has not performed well in polls matched against Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Budget battle to influence 2012 polls? (2011-04-17 12:17)

The present long-term budget plan could have an important impact on the 2012 elections for president and for Congress.

Voters will be able to get an idea of where each political party stands from the 10 year budgets crafted by President Obama for the Democrats and Rep. Paul Ryan for the Republicans.

For example, the GOP could lose support from senior citizens due to the suggested cuts in Medicare and Medicaid. Obama is retuning to suggestions for an end to tax breaks for wealthy Americans and to tax loopholes for the rich and for corporations. That possibly could lose him support among richer voters and among the pro-business independents.

Of course, we still must wait and see how the budget plans of each side change as negotiations progress.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jim Messina: 2012 Campaign Strategy (2011-04-25 13:51)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/PH0fiMGvW2k>

Obama campaign manager Jim Messina talks about the 2012 presidential campaign.

The plan is to create a new campaign even more bold than in the 2008 election. The steps are to listen and plan, build teams and then to contact voters. They plan to contact using every type of communication: canvassing, phones, social media, email, personal networking, etc.

BarackObama.com and Facebook apparently will be the central online points coordinating the effort until offices are in place much later – probably sometime in 2012.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dr. Michael D. Evans (2011-04-26 01:38:57)

That's a good strategy. Let's see how that works.

Katalog firm (2011-05-04 21:48:23)

Obama is good president, mayby sometimes is a bit nervous

Anonymous (2011-08-11 19:35:27)

I did not realize so many people in this great country believe in socialism and entitlements. BHO has destroyed the idea of capitalism with his restrictive rules that have strangled business. and his ideas of redistribution of wealth are not what made this country great

5.4 May

First GOP presidential debate tonight (2011-05-05 20:21)

Another sign of the disarray in the GOP primary is the first debate tonight in South Carolina.

None of the frontrunners are participating. The candidates who will be present are: Gary Johnson, Herman Cain, Rick Santorum, Ron Paul and Tim Pawlenty.

Looks like we will have to wait until maybe July before things really start to pick up in that primary race.

The debate is on Fox News and you the Democratic Party will be fact checking the candidates at this site:

http://www.democrats.org/news/may5debate/?source=DNC_FB

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama approval rating jumps after Osama bin Laden operation (2011-05-10 19:44)

The successful operation taking out al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden has apparently boosted up President Barack Obama's approval ratings.

According the RealClearPolitics average of recent polls, Obama is now standing at 51.7 % approval vs. 42.1 disapproval.

Just how long this approval bump will last is anyone's guess. Some analysts do not believe that it help voters forget about the economy for long. However, it may be a mistake to believe that Obama will suffer exclusively for a tough economy.

The public view of Republicans actions on the economy since their election victories in 2010 is not favorable.

Obama may benefit from simply having more recent tangible accomplishments than anyone from the current field of GOP opponents.

Tonight, Obama reportedly raised about $2 million during fundraisers in Texas where the president is drumming support for immigration reform.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Mike Huckabee: Not running for president (2011-05-14 20:22)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/Yh2NRVLgniQ>

With Mike Huckabee dropping out of the GOP race, Mitt Romney is the only viable looking candidate that is officially considering a run.

Donald Trump and Sarah Palin will probably announce sometime in June whether they will run or not.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Made in the USA (2011-05-18 19:24)

The Obama campaign is looking to raise some money after the recent birther fail brought about when the president revealed his long form birth certificate.

Using the theme "Made in the USA" speaking of the president himself, the campaign is offering a limited edition coffee mug:

Get your

2012 Made in the USA mug

Stay caffeinated for campaign events (and everything else) with a limited-edition Made in the USA mug. Donate $15 or more to get yours.

https://donate.barackobama.com/page/contribute/o2012-made-in-the-usa-mug-am ?source=20110518_js_m_fb&src=abc

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2011-05-27 19:09)

Interview: Maya Soetoro-Ng in YES! magazine (2011-05-28 15:36)

The YES! magazine website has a great article featuring an interview of Maya Soetoro-Ng on the influence of her mother on both her and her brother, President Barack Obama.

Soetoro-Ng is interviewed by Fred Korten, a co-worker of Ann Dunham Soetoro at the Ford Foundation in Jakarta in 1984. The interview mainly discusses Maya's new book, but it also gives some insight into the relationship of Ann with her children. It also furnishes an interesting look at the relationship between Maya and Barack.

Maya Soetoro-Ng with brother Barack and mother Ann.

Photo courtesy of Maya Soetoro-Ng

Click here for YES! magazine story

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Я (2011-05-29 07:27:39)

<http://lookslikeoddblog.blogspot.com/2011/05/memoirs-of-bag.html>

Bama (2011-07-03 22:31:33)

Happy obama...my interestr

5.5 June

(2011-06-06 16:26)

Obama campaign looking to mobilize 2008 volunteers (2011-06-06 21:45)

President Barack Obama's 2012 reelection campaign is making a push on social media to attract more volunteers to the campaign.

An ABC News article discusses whether or not the campaign will be able to attract back many of Obama's supporters from the 2008 campaign.

Some 1,600 new volunteers are expected to broadcast over Twitter to raise awareness of the campaign. The president already has more than 8.4 million Twitter followers – more than any other elected official. The campaign is promising to retweet the best tweets posted by Summer Organizers.

Last week, Obama added more than 162,000 new Twitter followers demonstrating the growing strength of volunteer efforts.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

GOP primary candidates to meet in CNN debate (2011-06-13 16:03)

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/-GmCQnzSh7I>

Republican presidential hopefuls will be meeting in a CNN-sponsored debate tonight in New Hampshire. Two recent polls show that Mitt Romney is leading the pack of present contenders with Sarah Palin close behind. President Obama has no serious challengers on the Democratic side.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2011-06-16 06:32:35)

I do not agree with the assigation of Bin Laden. I am reasonably sure that we filmed every detail of this action as it went down. We should have fed it live to all media outlets as it happened for everyone to see a cowerd trapped in his hole. The seals could have turned him over to the Pakistan Government with a house arrest posting American guards on the house. We would have placed the responsibility for him onto the hands of the very people that say they are our allies. Killing this person just continued the horrendous barbarism we have become known for. We are poisoning our world with fear and hate for one reason, to keep the top dog nations in luxury at the expense of others.

I will not voluntarily support the war machine in any way. My president must stand above all and lead with a plan that ceases all arms production at all levels with out this America is destined to self-destruct through its greed to maintain it's unmaintainable life style.

Al Gore wants Obama to defend climate change action (2011-06-22 20:32)

Former vice president Al Gore will be hitting President Barack Obama on climate change in an upcoming article in Rolling Stone magazine.

First of all, Gore comes out an recognizes what Obama has done to reverse previous environmentally-destructive policies. Definitely the president has done quite a lot for green causes even though he has disappointed many on issues like coal and nuclear energy.

In fairness to Obama though, he has always supported "clean" coal along with nuclear energy if the storage problem could be solved. On these issues though the president seems to have capitulated in terms of specifics. For example, while there still is no long-term nuclear waste storage plan, the president is supporting loan guarantees for the building of new nuclear power plants.

One of the problems may be the tremendous pressure the president is facing due to the tough economy. Obama suffered a tough loss in Congress after the 2010 elections with Democrats losing control of the House and losing some important seats in the Senate.

On the subject of climate change, it seems as though the issue has been pushed to the sidelines. In this sense, Gore is right in that Obama no longer seems to publicly recognize climate change as an urgent issue. On the other hand though, Republicans have been denying the science altogether.

What can be done to get climate change back on President Obama's agenda with the UN's climate summit coming up in Durban, South Africa in late November?

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/VV5JWOCg_ts

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2011-07-23 13:12:47)

i understand where obama is coming from with all the money that needs to be accounted for. but at the same time, we have spend 9 billion dollars so far with NASA. shutting it down is a waste of money and our time. if the government is so worried about money why not cut some of the earnings our government officials make. NASA is a must need in our society if we are to grow and evolve. without our space program we will be stuck further back in more debt and war.

Obama, Palin and Bachmann in Iowa on Tuesday (2011-06-25 21:41)

President Barack Obama and former Alaska governor Sarah Palin will both be in Iowa on Tuesday. Palin is coming for the opening of her new movie, but rumors have been circulating that she use the opportunity to announce her entry into the Republican primary.

Michelle Bachmann will also be in Iowa on that day, so we should expect a lot of press coverage from the state. Bachmann did very well in recent poll coming in just behind Mitt Romney. She will officially announce her candidacy on Tuesday.

The president will be in Iowa promoting American manufacturing – something that he has been talking about a lot about lately.

No one doubts that the economy is likely to be the issue for the 2012 election. I don't agree with the line of thought that has Obama taking all the blame if the economy sours. In my view, the voters are looking more for answers now rather than thinking of political parties to blame.

Whoever has ideas and a job-creating plan that will appeal to voters will have the best chance of attracting disgruntled voters in my view.

Sarah Palin in Philadelphia during her bus tour (Newscom photo)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Obama Forum (2011-06-26 00:57:14)

Great!!! Love it. so what do you think about the next presidential election??? your idea count : say "yes" or "no" ..

Obama forum: <http://obamaforum.co.cc>

Mike (2011-07-01 04:54:02)

Looks like Obama's gonna need some help from the nicotine departement to be in the same city as Palin ;)

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=q8e1Ovs0DTg>

Calgary Real Estate (2011-07-07 14:32:31)

I wish there was a democrat other than Obama running for president.

5.6 July

Obama rope a dope? (2011-07-12 20:28)

[EMBED]

Visit msnbc.com for breaking news, world news, and news about the economy

MSNBC's Lawrence O'Donnell has a rather complex "rope a dope" theory on President Barack Obama's negotiating stance in the debt ceiling-deficit talks.

Currently, Obama's deficit reduction plan goes further than even that suggested by House Speaker John Boehner! We will have to see whether O'Donnell is right about this being Obama luring the GOP into his trap.

It does seem that the tax hikes came out of nowhere sort of like Ali coming off the ropes in his epic fight with Foreman. According to this theory, Obama just has to take a certain position and the GOP will automatically rally against the position.

The fact that Obama is not willing to sign another extension shows that he is ready to call the Republicans bluff. The battle is coming to a head.

Republicans are not any more eager than Democrats to see budget funding dry up. They know that their own patrons will be some of the first to sound off when the subsidy checks don't arrive on time.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama addresses debt and deficit (2011-07-16 19:08)

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/0c_7YJtw3BE

President Barack Obama kept the heat up on the Republicans during his weekend video address.

Obama has still said that he does not want to sign a short term extension of the debt ceiling. In an earlier press conference, he said that he would reform Medicare by implementing a means test to determine how much people should pay for medical bills.

The president insists that wealthy American and corporations should pay their fair share of taxes.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2011-07-17 02:38:24)

I agree with President Obama there should be a balance. I'm tired of them bullying the poor and stripping away their dignity and selfworth. What is the matter with the republicans with this foolery. The elite should be made to pay more taxes seems as though they want the rich to get richer and the poor to become even more poor. They are making a mockery of this country. They are not working for us they are working against us. They have closed facilities that the poor have used, taken away social security increases and they think it is okay to hit the poor again this is unacceptable. The poor are not havng it any more we are ready to take a stand and we will be heard. We need a homeostasis. This sounds like United States greed.

Inspector Clouseau (2011-07-17 09:59:15)

During the last Presidential election, CSpan2 Book TV aired a program where the author discussed the results of his or her research, which suggested that something like 5-10 % of Democrats , and 5-10 % of Republicans, essentially debated and defined the ideological constructs of each party. The point was that the vast, vast, vast majority of the citizens of this country have their lives dictated by the most active and vocal members of society, who also happen to be more privileged .

I strongly suspect that the same thing is occurring with the debt ceiling debate. The debate is not really about the debt ceiling per se, but rather a very deep, long-standing debate about the role and size of government. It's never been resolved, and never will be resolved in our representative democracy. However, in the mean time, the regular folks in our society run the risk of being irreparably damaged. The elites (the upper and upper middle socio-economic classes) on each side of the fence have theirs, their corporate contributions, decent jobs and income, and will fare just fine economically. It's the ordinary citizens (lower middle socio-economic class) who will most likely get screwed, no matter which side ultimately prevails in the short term.

tina (2011-07-17 15:37:28)

Obama how dare u beg the poor for money when u were campaigning u talked about the middle class u never mentioned the poor we didn't exist even though we elected u. You don't give a darned about the poor we know this because u never mention us I will honestly say that I did not vote for u because I knew that u didn't count me black people elected u poor black people however I guess there's something to say for people being illiterate because these people only voted for u because u were black because the poor was never mentioned u champion people who make between hundred and twohundred thousand dollars a year what happened to the people who live off of less than twenty thousand a year we don't count even though we r the ones who got your ass elected u cut our food stamps our children's education while your wife and children travel the world and attend the best schools I guess there is something to say for illiteracy oh and being black cause that's how your ass got elected poor people will go for anything if its black even though u never once spoke about them we did not count I would rather have a white devil for president than a black one cause at least u know the white one is full of shit and had people really listened like I did they would have known u were too u were elected cause u were black but I can promise u because of your actions we will never another black president u ask the poor for money but u give us nothing no daybreak no help we r not even mentioned we don't count as far as reelection u can forget it we don't want u u don't care about us you r full of shit the poor needs someone to care about us but that's just wishful thinking and we r tired of paying for your kids education your wives designer clothes and your lavish travels I am going to do my best to see that u don't have a other term by making the poor realize that u don't give a darned about us although I'm almost positive they realize this u have thitysix million dollars in your war chest u need more don't ask the poor get it from your middle class u love them so much leave us alone like you've been doing after all we don't count

Anonymous (2011-07-20 11:22:14)

Hmmm, I may be naive, but logic tells me that if tax increases or no tax increases on the wealthy are tied to American job creation then both sides and the American people win. A corporation increases x % of its American workforce and they don't pay higher taxes. A corporation sends jobs overseas or excessive executive corporate salaries don't trickle down to American job creation, they pay more taxes.

Debt deal looks unlikely (2011-07-24 17:07)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/MPYC5SILAJk>

Despite last ditch efforts by the president to broker a deal on the debt ceiling, a bipartisan agreement now looks hopeless.

Each side is now working on its own plan to reduce the deficit and to temporarily extend the debt ceiling. Pres. Obama wants to extend the debt ceiling until at least 2013.

If the two sides fail to at least temporarily raise the debt ceiling, the country could default on its payments. Many experts predict that this could lead to a meltdown of US treasury investments.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2011-07-26 07:33:33)

So, Obama says Social Security may not be paid after 8-2-11 if they don't reach an agreement. I have a better idea. Rather than not paying the people who need that small check every month, let's not pay any politician for the next year, see if that helps them to work a little harder for the US, the little people.

Anonymous (2011-07-27 21:05:29)

She might raise the ceiling, she might give us jobs, but she hasn't got a penny.
Some gave her some, some gave her all,
but some won't give her any.

She is here be what may to stay,
yet who will still stand up for her today?
Vetgirl

Anonymous (2011-08-02 04:20:19)

Lets make sure the Tax loopholes for large companies are removed and these companies pay their fair share of taxes. Lets stop giving our hard earned Tax money which is taken away from us to these other countries when we the people need these dollars here in our own country. Stop paying congress & senators full pay retirement for only spending 4 years in the job. The military said if I wanted a 50 % retirement I would need to work for the U.S Army for 20 years and 1 day. Make the Congress & Sentors pay for health care the same as the working people.
Just my two cents

Daniel L. Allen (2011-08-11 01:54:46)

There is another way to fix this problem (<http://www.bossup2012.com/blog>). We can jumpstart our economy by understanding how it works. Learn more about the GDP and how our consumption and investments can change our financial outlook. We don't have to leave it up to Congress passing a debt deal.

belinda (2011-08-16 21:09:07)

Mr.Obama, I went to college and became a nurse in Tx.And I am a author.I have writting my first book.And one of my dreams is for you to read it!I hope you will like it and tell a friend!When you ran for president I went around knocking at everyone door telling them to vote for you!Because I like what you stand for! And I will be going around telling poeple to vote for you again! I am so proud of you and the work you have did for our country!Mr. Obama alot of men tried to catch Benlin,but you did it!Thank you so much for making the wright the decision at the wright time!And making our country a safer place to live in.The office was in a mess before you got into it! You have did a great job, it take time! Kept up the great work! Please read my book"MY LITTLE SECRETS" author Belinda Davis, My book is about the south and it make me think of the movie Color Purple, Thank You so much for your time Belinda!PLEASE EXCUSED MY SPELLING!

belinda (2011-08-16 21:45:25)

Mr.Obama, I went to college,and became a nurse in Tx.and now I am author.I have writting my first book,'My Little Secrets" author Belinda Davis,My book is about the a south, I was raised up in the south and my book make me think about the movie Color Purple! And one of my dreams is for you to read my book and if you like it tell a friend! When you ran for president. I went around knocking at everyone door telling them to vote for you!Because I like what you stand for!And I will be going around telling everyone to vote for you again! I am so proud of you and the work you have did for our country!Mr.Obama alot of men tried to catch Benlin,but you did it! Thank you so much for making the wright decision at the wright time!And making our coun-try a much safer place to live in! Mr.Obama the office was in a mess before you became president,you have did a great job for the time you have being president!P.S It take TIME! Kept up the good work! YES WE CAN! Belinda!PLEASE EXCUSE MY SPELLING!

Debrrah (2011-08-19 10:15:00)

It is unconscionable what Obama has done to this country in three years. Please..... tell me he is not on a bus tour campaigning for another term in office. His $700 billion Troubled Asset Relief Program (TARP) did nothing to recover the depressed housing market because enough loans were not modified. As a matter of fact, the country still has yet to see the cataclysmic effect of the housing market. The banks were telling homeowners that they did not have to comply with the TARP program because they have already paid their debts with interest to the government. Furthermore, they were telling some homeowners that they had been offered the "Making Homes Affordable" and we failed to comply, when in fact "we" didn't know what the hell it was and when it was offered because the truth is that we were never given the opportunity to apply.

Well, the banks got their bail out and the main reason home owners didn't qualify for theirs is because there were no stipulations in the legislation that the loan had to be modified to the property value and the principal balance had to be reduced fairly, so how could loans be modified? Even my seventeen year old daughter can see the rationale. Why the Harvard graduates did not see it coming?

Most homeowners were practically coerced into purchasing these properties, not because they are stupid, but at that time that was their only housing option because "Wall Street" operates above the law. Can you imagine what happened when the job market went sour too?

Furthermore, the investors sued a couple of the bank for selling them bad loans and they got billions in payoff too. Meanwhile, the Federal Trade Commission sued Countrywide Home Loans for "unlawful practices" and I got a settlement check for $26.00. Go figure if Obama needs another term in office.

Sorry, Obama, we don't need a lecturer, we already have college degrees and student loans that we can't afford to pay. What we need is a problem solver!!!!

Anonymous (2011-08-26 03:18:42)

Some people have no clue, the supposed educated. riddle me this if you inherit a poop sandwich, how do you magically make it peanut butter. You blame Obama which may or maynot be true, but who made the sandwich= Bush

Eddie (2011-09-25 12:38:05)

You liberals are pathetic. You have destroyed generations of people by telling them you're not good enough to succeed. You sicken me.

5.7 August

Economy, Congress and Obama (2011-08-22 16:58)

Many people are of the opinion that the 2012 election will go bad for Obama if the economy isn't doing well. However, the polls don't really indicating this so far.

While it is true that presidents usually get the blame for the economy this is not always the case. Franklin Delano Roosevelt was reelected during the darkest days of the Great Depression after failing to have solved the country's economic woes in his first four years.

The reason FDR did so well is that people by that time were well aware that it was more than decade of Republican policy that had caused the economic mess. In the same way, polls are indicating that the American voter does not blame Obama for the current state of the economy.

Now, it is true that people are not happy with his handling of the economy, but this is not too surprising. The public expects nothing less than positive, if not miraculous, results so it really would not matter who was in power now.

The simple truth is that the economic woes facing the country are deeply entrenched and will defy any simple solution. Just as in the Great Depression, it took many years to unravel more than a decade of failed policy.

However, today, we are reeling from nearly three decades of easy money policy. Bill Clinton was able to dent this policy, but only on the governmental level. In the world of finance and Federal Reserve policy, the Clinton economists did not differ all that much from the Republican ones.

The big difference between FDR's time and now is that the people then had come to the full conclusion that Republicans were to blame for the Great Depression. Today, there are still many doubters. We can see this by the fact that Democrats control the House of Representatives.

In FDR's day, he won his first term with an overwhelming majority that was not just Democratic but was also progressive. And when he was reelected, Congress became even more strongly Democrat!

The makeup in Congress allowed FDR to take charge and restructure a badly-damaged economy. While Obama can win in 2012, it may not mean much if he doesn't have a friendly Congress to help him with his agenda.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2011-10-18 11:49:42)

I m sade. I believed in Obama. But i really loose my faith.
Seb from agence web.

Meleha (2011-10-28 15:38:45)

his is super cool. If you want to see what people are tweeting about President Obama, go to Wishbone and it will show you the most common tweets about him, displayed in a visual graph. Take a look at http://labs.windward.net/search.html?search=barack %20obama

A revealing chart (2011-08-23 21:20)

The chart below shows the gross internal debt in the U.S. from 1920 to 2010. It is one of many indicators that show the economic predicament of the country and how it really cannot be connected to President Obama. Internal debt is the money owned to lenders that are based within the country. It includes the federal and other government debts that is owned to American lenders.

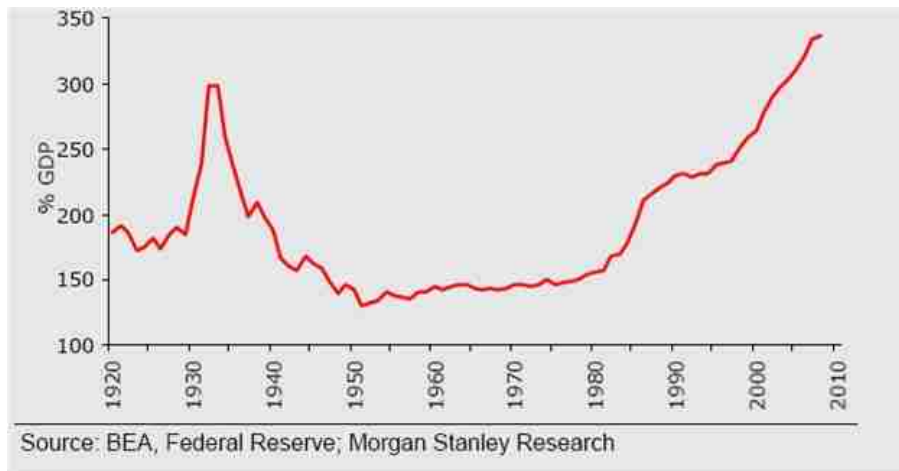

However, it does not include the external debt owned to foreign lenders, which is less around 94 % of GDP.

Many people make the mistake of thinking that internal debt is not so bad as external debt. While this may be the case when things are running smoothly, it is not the case if there is trouble paying the debt. In the latter situation, it is the American financial system that gets hit hardest with high internal debt. Both the Great Depression and Japan's "lost decade" were due more to internal debt rather than external debt.

As you can see in the chart, internal debt was high before the start of the Great Depression in 1929. It soared even higher as Americans tried to borrow their way out of the economic malaise. However, this only led to the market meltdown of 1937-8 in which America sunk to the lowest levels of the Great Depression.

You can also see that in modern times, American internal debt began rising again in the Reagan years and has not abated ever since. Americans are completely addicted to borrowing at the governmental level, business level and especially at the consumer level.

By the time Obama came into office, he had inherited a huge deficit. And the need for economic stimulus made it difficult not to borrow even more money.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Artist Christopher Terrell (2011-08-28 10:48:10) www.ObamaArtMuseum.com have a look!

zunot (2011-09-09 02:06:48)
 soared even higher as Americans tried to borrow their way out of the economic malaise

Steven Believin' (2011-09-28 21:07:51)
 Obama is mentally breaking down, he has no political significance except that his presence in the white house is the only thing stopping the passage of the Glass-Steagall Act, which would solve at least the monetary crisis and create the grounds for solving the physical crisis. Obama is a bankers pet and no one needs him, stop defending his horrific presidency because he's continued all of Bush's policies and I think everyone who is paying attention knows that.

Anonymous (2011-10-10 17:58:47)
 Obama is a dope and I can't wait until he's voted out.

Rachel (2011-10-11 08:36:59)

Thank you for this post! This is exactly the point I have been trying to make to people, too: Obama came into a government overburdened with debt and could not possibly be expected to have cleaned it all up in his first four years in office!

5.8 October

The Herman Cain Train (2011-10-17 13:35)

Although it's still very early in the nomination process, Herman Cain is now firmly ahead of the GOP pack creating the possibility of a presidential election involving two black men.

If a fiction writer just five years ago suggested this scenario for 2012, they probably would not have been taken seriously. Again, it's early, but how did this come about and does Cain actually stand a chance of winning the nomination? Well, the Republicans have been moving toward more diverse candidates for some time now. First we had Gov. Bobby Jindal of Louisiana who campaigned around the same time as Obama during the presidential nomination race. In 2010, we witnessed successful GOP candidates like Gov. Nikki Haley of South Carolina, an Asian Indian American, and Sen. Marco Rubio of Florida, a Cuban American.

Cain's political views also happen to not anger too severely either of the two main factions of the Republican Party, the mainstream and the Tea Party.

He is likeable and a good in-person campaigner. In fact, people first started taking note of him during straw polls when candidates angle for votes face-to-face with party activists.

He has also easily won most if not all the presidential debates.

Cain is not shy about courting the Tea Party either. In a recent YouTube video, Cain says that he was thinking like a Tea Party member long before the group even came into being.

Whether or not, the "Cain train" can continue to dominate the nomination race will depend on a number of factors. The most important one is probably whether or not the Tea Party will fully embrace the ex-Godfather's Pizza magnate. Should be interesting, and entertaining, to watch events over the next several months.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The impact of Occupy Wall Street (2011-10-20 18:29)

The Occupy Wall Street movement has exploded across the United States and to countries all over the world. Generally speaking, Republicans have reviled the movement with some exceptions. Democrats, however, are much more receptive to the protests.

The overwhelmingly Democratic Los Angeles city council, for example, voted to support the local Occupy movement. Even President Obama gave a mild endorsement when he empathized with Occupy Wall Street's cause.

Whether the Occupy movement can help Democrats win elections though is still a matter of contention. Can they have an influence similar to that of the Tea Party for Republicans?

A lot will depend on whether the movement sees the advantage of leveraging the energy of followers toward winning elections.

At the very least, the Occupy demonstrations, should help raise awareness, especially among young people, of how we got into such a terrible economic mess. The great leap in economic disparity over the last few decades did not come about by accident.

Maybe that knowledge alone may be enough to motivate people toward seeking change in the voting booth.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Ericka Marsahl (2011-11-03 11:16:17)

The "Occupy Wallstreet" protest have gotten the attention of many people in this country. The younger generation have a big role in this movement and speak for many in the "disappearing middle class" and the growing number of unemployed college graduates. Politicians should be aware of these growing number of voters who are disheartened.

More on Cain (2011-10-27 11:58)

The Herman Cain flurry could survive according to some analysts because the Georgia-based candidate just has the right type of appeal at the right time. Cain might continue to attract support even though there are signs that he still isn't taking his campaign seriously.

Although it is getting late in the game, Cain still does not have a serious operation set up in any of the early states. He's still doing paid speaking engagements and many people still think he's in the race to promote his brand more than anything else.

However, Cain has started to hire new staff including Steve Grubbs, the new chairman of his Iowa effort and a former chair of the state Republican party. What makes Cain resonate with GOP voters may be the very same qualities that make him seem outlandish to others. His main support seems to come from the Tea Party segment of the party and his "outsider" style and "tell it like it is" manner of speaking have strong appeal with that group.

Ron Paul holds many of the positions as Cain including a flat tax plan, but in comparison to the latter, Paul comes across as boring and cerebral. With Tea Party voters the last thing one wants to convey is an aura of the "intellectual elite."

We'll have to see how Cain's poll number hold up over the next few debates as his opponents concentrate more attacks in his direction.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/umpF1wvU2A4>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

5.9 November

Cain feels brotherly love for Koch brothers (2011-11-04 16:23)

Herman Cain says the Koch brothers are his 'brothers from another mother' in answer to his opponents linking him with the pair of corporate political contributors. The statement may end up hurting his chances with independents who dislike the Supreme Courts corporate personhood ruling and the return of unlimited (and anonymous) corporate contributions for federal elections.

In other news, a new poll shows President Obama well ahead of GOP rivals in the important swing state of Pennsylvania: <http://thehill.com/blogs/ballot-box/polls/191625-poll-obama-leads-all-republicans-in-pennsylvania>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama in Hawai'i for FTA talks (2011-11-12 21:54)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/F3ELetq7mfU>

President Obama speaks at the APEC conference about the formation of the Trans Pacific Partnership free trade agreement (TPP FTA).

The nations involved in the negotiations currently include Australia, Brunei Darussalam, Chile, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Peru, Singapore, the United States and Vietnam.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

5.10 December

Obama Christmas Store (2011-12-04 18:54)

Need some holiday gifts, ornaments and accessories? Try the Obama Store at:

<http://store.barackobama.com/?source=homepage-holidayshopping>

You can purchase items like Obama-themed wrapping paper:

$10

Wrapping Paper

$40

Rhodium Ball Ornament

$15

2012 Calendar

The gift items are union made in America and they go to help the Obama campaign and, by extension, all Democrats and progressive independents who will benefit from the campaign's coattails.

X

Bo Button Combo

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2011-12-09 21:58)

In recent speeches and public comments, President Barack Obama has embraced the Occupy movement. He is developing his campaign as one in which he champions the cause of the 99 %.

He even characterized the overall 2012 election as a "make or break" time for the middle class.

The Occupy movement has been kicked out of most of its encampments, but it has shifted its focus in a number of ways. Recently different groups launched an effort to occupy foreclosed homes. In some areas, the movement is reoccupying areas from which they were expelled or they are choosing new areas to encamp.

Obama may be able to benefit from the goodwill of the group if he is seen as advocating for their cause. While he focused more on "uniting" the country in his first campaign, his efforts have not borne much fruit. Republicans continue to obstruct any progress with a record number of filibusters in the senate.

Many people who supported the president the first time around also support the Occupy movement, so there should be enough opportunities for cooperation between the two sides.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/vrYFx6fFT3s>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama on 60 Minutes (2011-12-11 18:35)

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/BrczgHyoewQ>

President Barack Obama makes his case for a second term on 60 Minutes (CBS). He notes that economy was so badly damaged during the George W. Bush administration that fixing it will take more than one term and maybe even more than two terms.

What he's saying is correct as even many conservative economic experts have admitted. Still, a tough economy will make for a tough reelection campaign for the president.

X

President Obama and family during taping of upcoming Christmas show.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

“We’re Here to Mark the End of This War” (2011-12-12 20:02)

X

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/mRV_tKIN_xc

President Obama with the Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki talk about the final pullout of combat troops from Iraq. The U.S. will have no bases in the country but will maintain a rather large diplomatic corps with plenty of security due to the situation there.

The president is making good on one of his most noteworthy campaign promises from the 2008 election.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Is Mitt Romney really more electable? (2011-12-18 21:46)

The Republican nomination race is now turning strongly toward the question of electability and most pundits are pointing toward former governor Mitt Romney as the most electable hopeful.

Romney consistently performs better than the other candidates in polls against President Barack Obama. However, many GOP strategists have wondered whether Romney can really motivate the Republican base to get out the vote. Predicting voter turnout is problematic especially with so much time to before the general election. If Romney is unable to ignite the base can he hope to get the turnout needed to defeat Obama?

Some polls are suggesting that Romney is not so popular among the most reliable voters in the Republican Party.

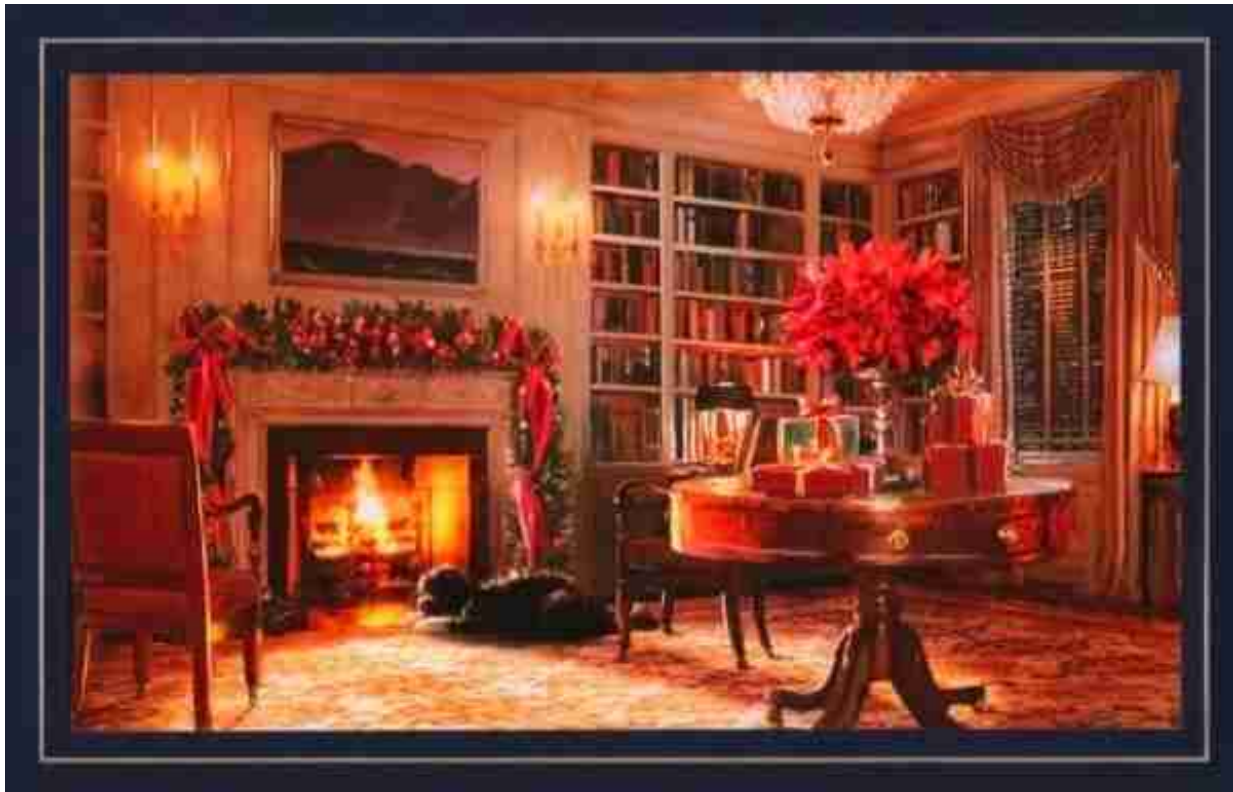

X

<http://www.gallup.com/poll/151547/Gingrich-Running-Strong-Traditionally-Reliable-Voters.aspx>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obamas send Christmas card, Palin attacks (2011-12-22 08:07)

The White House sent out the Obama Christmas card featuring First Dog Bo relaxing by a cozy fire place outlined with what looks like holly, ivy and ribbons.. Nearby is a table decorated with poinsettias and wrapped gifts.

Strangely, Sarah Palin thought the card was inappropriate and did not emphasize Christmas traditions like "family, faith and freedom." Her comments are reminiscent of the meme in conservative media that there is a "war on Christmas" being waged by the left.

Palin must not be aware that there is a long tradition as well of featuring pets and other animals in Christmas cards as a Google image search reveals.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/XHRY52I2oDI>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sierra Club thanks Obama for toxic mercury standards (2011-12-22 20:50)

A TV ad from the Sierra Club praises President Barack Obama for his recent regulation limiting the amount of toxic mercury that industry can release into the environment. Mercury contamination causes brain damage and is particularly dangerous for fetuses and young children.

The new regulation is the first ever standard for mercury pollution and it will significantly curb current practices.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sotogrande-Properties (2012-01-01 14:51:03)

Obama Is the greatest president to ever live!!!! and the best representation of the black american community in America!
Visit www.sotogrande-properties.net to stay in an area where michelle obama visited.

Splatterbeast 666 (2012-01-21 09:34:17)

eu vou degolar as suas gargantas

6. 2012

6.1 January

(2012-01-06 18:59)

The Dog as Deity, Ancestor and Royal Animal

by Paul Kekai Manansala

Share article:

The Dog Story: "When old dogs bark, it's time to watch out."

Although maligned in some cultures as "unclean," a thorough historical review will reveal that few if any animals have been as revered as the dog.

This is even more true when one considers the dog along with its wild ancestor the wolf. Since many biologists now classify the two as the same species – Canis lupus – it is valid to examine the history of the two together.

Indeed, from the genetic standpoint the dog does not even qualify as a subspecies of the wolf. A subspecies would normally require a 20-25 percent genetic divergence. The divergence between human "races" is about 6 percent and within "races" about 8 percent.

However, dogs and wolves diverge genetically by only 1 percent. And as with human races, the divergence within each group is greater than that between the two groups.

"By the Dog of Egypt"

When looking at the dog in historical records, few are older than those of the ancient Egyptians.

According to the testimony of the ancient Greeks, the Egyptians loved dogs and treated them with great respect. Dogs received burial in family tombs and family members would shave their heads in mourning at the death of a family dog.

Even in the predynastic period, we see that the Egyptians were already burying dogs in the same way they buried humans with plenty of goods for the afterlife. In dynastic Egypt, dog mummies were made with great care and expense. At Hardai, the sacred city of the god Anubis there are sprawling dog cemeteries.

When thinking of dogs as deities few come to mind as quickly as Anubis (aka Anpu). While sometimes represented clearly as a dog, at other times he appears more like a jackal.

The most common representation appears like a cross between a dog and a jackal and/or wolf. The same image is commonly used to portray Wepwawet, another important if lesser known Egyptian deity. This portrayal has led some to believe that the Egyptians may have interbred domestic dogs with the wild dogs of Egypt, and in particular the jackal and wolf.

Anubis was one of the most ancient of Egyptian gods closely associated with funerary rites and the afterlife. He was guide to the dead and the one who weighted the souls of the deceased against the feather of Maat (truth and order). Socrates referred to Anubis when he swore "by the Dog of Egypt."

The Greeks called Hardai by the name Cynopolis "Dog City" revealing how they identified this god. During Roman times, mummified dogs were placed at Anubis temples. Also the fact that Hardai was teeming with dog cemeteries makes it very clear that this deity was at least partly associated with the domestic canine.

While the Greeks called Anubis sacred city Cynopolis, the city of Wepwawet was known as Lycopolis "Wolf City." The original king of the dead before Osiris took that position, Wepwawet was intimately connected with Egyptian royalty. The Lord of the Dead in Egyptian religion was the King of Kings and Wepwawet's original honor survived in his placement on two of the four royal standards.

The king's standard, the shedshed with the form of the royal placenta had an image of Wepwawet and was used to lead Pharaoh's armies into battle. It was also supposed to carry Pharaoh into heaven after his death. Wepwawet's own standard was the other of the four, and represented Upper Egypt, the unification of the two lands and the Egyptian nobility.

Like Anubis, Wepwawet was one of the older Egyptian gods, the oldest of Abydos, home of Egypt's first dynasty. His sacred city was Asyut near the border of Upper and Lower Egypt. Anubis was the lord of the Asyut necropolis.

After relinquishing the title of Lord of the Dead to Osiris, Wepwawet became mainly associated with royalty, war and the unification rites, although he continued to have funerary significance.

Like Anubis, Wepwawet appeared to be associated at various times with the wolf, dog and jackal and often with an apparent cross of these types.

Another prominent god who appeared most often in dog form was Set. Also an ancient god, Set's popularity declined with time. He was a god of the desert and the storm and was best known for his conflict with Osiris, and the latter's son Horus. Although portrayed as a number of animals and also as a human with possibly an armadillo's head, Set in full animal form was usually represented as a dog.

One hieroglyph variant of his name has an image of his dog form somewhat resembling a greyhound.

Originally Set was the equal of Osiris, but as that god and his son Horus rose in popularity, Set became more demonic in quality. He was symbolized Lower Egypt until the Hyksos invaders adopted him as their patron god. After the Hyksos were driven from Egypt, Set became the practical equivalent of the devil.

Even Osiris, one of the most prominent deities of ancient Egypt, was sometimes portrayed as a dog often together with Anubis. The latter according to some accounts was the son of Osiris. Another one of Osiris son's, Duamatef, lord of one of the canopic jars, also had a jackal/dog head. With two canine-headed sons it is no wonder that Osiris should also be represented in this form. In latter times, he became associated with Khentamentiu, the dog/jackal lord of the royal cemetery of Abydos, as Osiris-Khentamentiu.

Djehuty, also known as Thoth, the god of Maat and wisdom, although mainly associated with the ibis and baboon could also appear as a monkey with a dog's head.

Dancing with wolves

The indigenous people of the Americas revered the wolf, coyote and the domestic dog.

Some tribes were known as the "Wolf People" like the Mohican or Mohegan. The Pawnee were known by other tribes by a similar name. Numerous tribes had wolf divisions or bands. Also, animist wolf societies were very pervasive and widespread.

It is interesting to note that while the ancient Egyptians associated the star Sirius with the dog calling it the "Dog Star," the Pawnee knew Sirius as the "Wolf Star." Medicine men and shamans donned wolf clothing before rituals.

Both the Amerindians and the Inuit regularly crossed their domestic dogs with wolves. There are repeated accounts of tribes that captured wolf or coyote whelps to mate with their dogs. The captive wolves and the wolf crosses were kept as pets and working animals. Thus, as with in ancient Egypt, the line between wild and domestic dog was blurred.

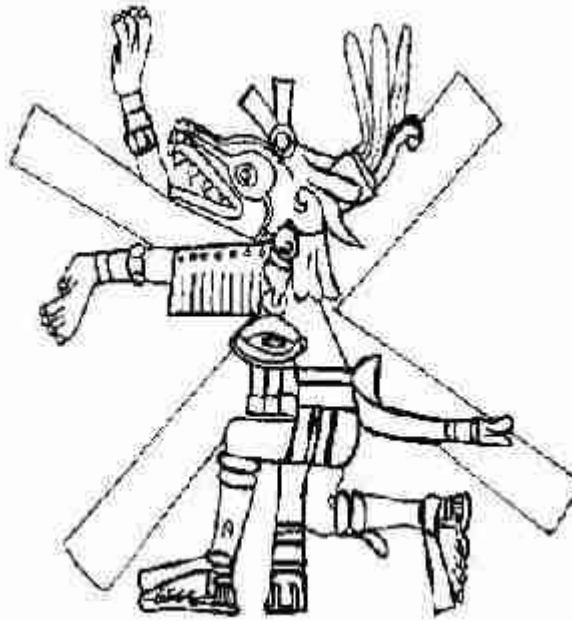

The coyote god of the indigenous Americans was often the trickster or culture hero and sometimes the creator of humans and/or the Milky Way. The Pawnee and Blackfoot Indians of Canada knew the Milky Way as the "Wolf Trail." Both the coyote and dog appear in numerous North American Indian creation and deluge myths.

Dogs were highly prized among most indigenous American peoples. Among some tribes an average family would have about 30 dogs. This may seem fantastic until one considers the economic value of dogs. They were used for hunting and for transporting the meat of kills either by backpack or pulling devices known as travois. The transport role of dogs was important also among the many nomadic Indian tribes.

In most cases, dogs were treated like family members often living in the home and eating along with the family. They were often accorded burial and mourning rites. In many Indian tribes, people might be known as the father, mother, brother or sister of such-and-such a dog. The Inuit, in particular, accorded very special care for their dogs as their own survival rested largely on their canine friends.

Dog worship extended into Central and South America also. One of the important concepts here is that of the nahuali or animal twin. Not only humans but gods had nahuali. The twin of Quetzalcoatl, the Toltec god of goodness and light, was the dog god Xolotl. The latter was a guide of the dead and of the Sun, and also the personification of the planet Venus, the most important Mesoamerican planet/star.

In Mesoamerican art, Xolotl is portrayed as a man with a dog's head. He is said to have created a protector and guide for humans in the underworld in the form of the hairless dog, the Xoloitzcuintle.

Both Quetzalcoatl and Xolotl also appear as earthly rulers and the Vienna Codex states that nine successors of Quetzalcoatl took the same name. The great Chichimec conqueror who replaced the Toltecs as the dominant power in Mexico was named Xolotl. The name "Chichimec" refers to those "of dog lineage."

The Lineage of the Blue Wolf

Among most Turko-Mongol and Siberian peoples, the wolf and dog hold a very high place. One of the most well-known traditions in this regard is the descent of the great Mongol conqueror Genghis Khan from the wolf and the doe.

Many modern Mongolians were stripped of their surnames during the height of the communist revolution in Mongolia. With the government now allowing people to adopt new surnames most have chosen to claim descent from Genghis. They have adopted his tribal name Borjigin, "the blue wolf."

From Turkey to the Kamchatka peninsula one people after another are found who at one time either worshiped the wolf as a god or as an ancestor.

Turkic people like the Kazakhs, Uygyrs and Uzbeks consider the gray wolf as the mother of all Turks. In accordance with these ancient traditions, Kemal Ataturk, the founder of modern secular Turkey, is known affectionately as the "Gray Wolf."

As we have seen before, where the wolf is revered the dog also usually holds a high position. Among present-day Mongolians, the dog's place in the family is more similar to that of the parents than that of the children. It is said that Mongolians often judge visitors by whether the family dog takes to the guest or not. The widespread belief is that people reincarnate from dogs so one should never hit a dog as it may become one's own child.

Genghis called his four great generals – Zev, Subedei, Zelme and Khubilai – the "dogs of war" a very honorable title among the Mongols.

In Siberia, along with many cases of people who claim the wolf as ancestor one will also find many who claim descent from the dog.

The Tibetans, whose history intertwined with the Mongolians with the spread of Buddhism, also held the dog in high regard. They believe like the Mongols that dogs are closest to humans in reincarnation and that high lamas especially often reincarnate as dogs.

Tibetans used dogs like the Lhasa Apso as holy temple guards or good luck charms for monasteries. The Dalai Lama and the Panchen Lama often kept dogs as pets and sent dogs as gifts to other kings. Two great sages in Tibetan and Mongolian Buddhism were intimately associated with dogs – Kukuripa and Kukuraja.

Dogs in 'Ur of the Chaldees'

Bau was originally one of the three main deities of the Sumerian pantheon. She is portrayed as a dog-headed goddess of healing and life. Dogs are her sacred animals with dog and puppy burials found at her temples.

The belief that a dog's licking of wounds aided healing seems connected with Bau's position of goddess of physicians.

With the rise of the goddess Inanna in Sumerian religion, Bau and her various manifestations began to be assimilated by Inanna. The latter goddess had seven hunting dogs. Her husband Dumuzi is also said to have black royal dogs in the story of Inanna's descent into the underworld.

In the Old Testament, the priests of Inanna (Asherah) and Dumuzi (Tammuz) are known as kelabim "dogs."

Every year the Sumerian king took on the role of Dumuzi in a ritual marriage to Inanna for the good of the kingdom. Sumerologist Samuel Noah Kramer has suggested that the Lukur priestess played the role of Inanna in this ritual.

The Lukur maidens are the seven daughters of dog-headed Bau: Zazaru, Nipae, Urnuntaea, Hegirnuna, Heshaga, Zargu and Zurgu who served in Bau's temple. When Inanna absorbed Bau, the Lukur priestess became her devotee.

Sumerian royal inscriptions use the compound ur-sag "hero, warrior" which means literally "top dog."

In the latter religion of Babylon and Assyria, the god Bel-Merodach, king of all heavenly gods, had four dogs named Ukkumu (Seizer), Akkulu (Eater), Ikšsuda (Grasper), and Iltebu (Holder).

Europa

Leto, the mother of Apollo and Artemis, took the form of a wolf or was said to be escorted from the Hyperboreans by wolves. Artemis was known as the "Wolf Goddess" and had a wolf on her shield. Both she and her Roman counterpart Diana were accompanied by a pack of hunting dogs.

Temples to Lycian Apollo or "Wolf-like Apollo" were common in ancient Greece. Apollo was known as Lykegenes "of she-wolf descent" in reference to his mother Leto. The wolf was Apollo's sacred animal.

Even Zeus had wolf connections among the Arcadians. Zeus Lykaïos or "Wolf Zeus" was the patron deity of Arcadia. There was a story that a man turned into a wolf at each yearly sacrifice to Zeus Lykaïos.

The death goddess Hecate was closely linked with dogs and sometimes portrayed as dog-headed. Her special pet was Cerebos, the three-headed guard dog of the entrance to Hades. The connection of dogs to death, the underworld and resurrection may be linked to their burying and retrieving of bones and also to the practice of "dog burial" – the devouring of corpses by dogs.

Rome was built by Romulus and Remus, both suckled by a she-wolf according to tradition. Romulus went on to become Rome's first king. Wolves were apparently sacred to the Etruscans, who formed part of the heritage of Romulus and Remus, and they made many statues of wolves.

The she-wolf of the Capitol was the emblem of Rome.

The Norse supreme deity Woden (Odin) chose two wolves, Freki and Geri, as his companions. His own death by the great apocalyptic wolf Fenrir was considered a fitting warrior's death for the god.

The underworld known as Hel to the Norse was guarded by a pack of dogs and wolves headed by the massive dog Garm.

The Celts had special relationships with dogs. The great Celtic hero Cuchulainn, whose name means the "Hound of Culann" was closely linked with dogs. He was forbidden from eating dog flesh, a common Celtic practice, but breaks this taboo leading to his death.

Unclean, but...

The brahmins of India classified the dog as unclean but this is a rather late addition to Indian culture. By no means, however, can one consider that the dog was widely deplored.

In fact, in various parts of India especially in eastern states like Orissa, the supreme godhead is represented by Bhairava, a form of Shiva, who either takes on the form of a dog or more commonly has dog companions or vehicles (vahanas). A less common manifestation of Shiva in other parts of India known as Khandoba also had the same attributes. These deities appear in Nepalese Buddhism as Yamantaka, a wrathful god who conquers the forces of death.

Interestingly in the Vedic literature, generally considered the oldest in India, many deities have dog companions. Indra, the quintessential Vedic god has as his companion and messenger the faithful bitch Sarama. She gives birth to two sons, the Saramayas, who in turn become the companions and messengers of Yama, the lord of death.

There are also indications that Varuna, a water god who originally held a high place in the Vedic pantheon, had a pet dog. And the four great Vedic books, the Rgveda, Samaveda, Yajurveda and Atharvaveda are likened to four dogs who follow the deities Visnu, Sri and Dattatreya.

One of the most memorable dog stories from Indian literature involves the heroic Pandava brothers of the Mahabharata. When King Dharmaraja, his brothers and all their families set off on their final journey up the Himalayas, each one fell until only Dharmaraja and his companion dog were left.

As they neared the top of the mountain, they were greeted by the god Indra in his chariot. The god lauded Dharmaraja and said that he had earned a place in heaven. He bidden that the king board the chariot and as he did Dharmaraja beckoned for his canine friend. However, Indra protested saying that dogs were not allowed in his heaven.

Upon hearing this Dharmaraja said that he could not abandon such a faithful companion who depended on him. He declared he would rather stay on earth than abandon his dog. Finally Indra relented and both were taken to heaven. Upon arriving the dog transformed into the god Dharma, the lord of the correct way of living.

Among the Muslims, the dog was also generally considered unclean. However, one great exception to this rule was the Saluki breed which was proclaimed in the Koran no less as the "gift of Allah." The saluki was also known by such names as al-Hor "the Noble One," and al-Baraha "the Blessed One." The Arab literature states that the Saluki originated in the city of Saluk in Yemen. A gift of a saluki was considered a great prize.

The ancient Israelites were another people among whom the dog was considered unclean. One of the lowest slurs was to call a person a dog or a "dead dog" or "dog's head." We find the same thing in many Muslim cultures. It is thought that the Hebrews disdain for the dog may have been a reaction to dog worship among the Egyptians and Canaanites. In Ashkelon, an ancient Canaanite city, a huge dog cemetery has been excavated dating to Persian times.

The wolf though does figure prominently in the Old Testament. In Jacob's blessing to Benjamin, the tribe of the latter is likened to a wolf that devours the prey in the morning and divides the spoil at night. Some believe this may be an allusion to Saul, the first king of Israel. If so, might there a connection here to Wepwawet, the royal wolf of Egypt? Others think that this refers to the Temple that was built on Benjamin's territory and swallowed up the offerings of the people at the altar.

In latter Jewish literature, the Talmud has a warning against raising dogs in Israel comparing it to rearing swine. The medieval scholar Rashi, though, says unclean meat is always thrown to the dogs in gratitude for their silence during the Exodus from Egypt. It is also thought that the Hebrew word for dog "kalev" can mean "close to the heart" referring to the dog as a faithful companion.

There is even a thought that the phrase "dead dog" used by the Hebrew prophets was not so disparaging towards dogs after all. Dogs like prophets warn of impending misfortune, so one would pay more attention to the adjective "dead" rather than the noun "dog" in this phrase.

The rabbis did have some good things to say about our canine friend as found in this dog story:

"The Jerusalem Talmud [Schochet writes] cites as one of Rabbi Meir's fables the story of a dog who observed a serpent poisoning the curdled milk of its master. The dog barked frantically, but to no avail, as its master failed to heed its warnings and set out to partake of the milk. The desperate dog hastened to consume the food itself, thereby dying an agonizing death while saving the lives of its master and his fellow shepherds. The grateful shepherds buried the faithful dog with funerary honors and erected a monument to its memory."

Dogs and royalty

Pliny stated that among the Ethiopians there were people who kept a dog as king. They made judgements based upon interpretations of the disposition and actions of the dog king.

In China and Tibet especially, dogs appear from very early times as royal animals. From at the least the Han Dynasty, dogs had royal status. The Emperor Ling Ti (156-189) bestowed royal titles to the palace dogs as imperial guards and viceroys. This was the beginning of a tradition in which the emperor appeared with dogs forming part of the royal guard.

In fact, in the oldest known royal tomb – that of Shang ruler Fu Hao (1250 BCE) in Anyang – we find a pit containing the remains of six dogs under the royal corpse. Centuries later at the tomb of Marquis Yi (about 430 BCE) in present-day Hubei Province we find the coffin and remains of a dog in the tomb's eastern chamber.

The imperial family sometimes established laws against harming dogs and even took to the art of dog breeding themselves. One of the most prized gifts one could receive from the emperor was one or more of the royal dog breeds represented today probably by the Pekinese, Pug, Chow Chow and Shih Tzu.

The most well-known royal dog lover in China must be the Dowager Empress Tzu Hsi who came to power in 1861. She paid strict attention in guiding the imperial eunuchs who bred the royal dogs. Upon her death, she left a loving poem about the butterfly lion dogs she had bred, which ends with the lines:

And so (the butterfly dog) remains, but if it dies, remember that you too are mortal.

Among the priest-kings of Tibet, the Dalai Lama and Panchen Lama, and also among other grand lamas, there existed "holy dogs" as "badges" of the holy office.

The Panchen Lama was said to have two such dogs that accompanied him everywhere and were attended to by the Lo, the religious prime minister and high priest. Each dog also had its own retinue of servants.

In both Tibet and China, lion dogs, or statues of these dogs, also served as sacred guardians of temples.

The love for toy dogs was found among the royal families of Europe by at least the 15th century. The Papillon is shown in paintings of the French royal court at this time.

In the day of Francis I of France (1515-1547) the Bichon Frise dog became established in the royal court. Henry III was said to be so enamored with these dogs that he fashioned a basket to be placed around his neck to carry his pets.

The King Charles Spaniel is so named as it was the favorite of Charles II of England. Queen Elizabeth of present times has a fancy for Welsh Corgis that often appear with her in public.

In more ancient times, European kings often kept large coursing hounds. Even the legendary King Arthur was said to have a hunting dog named Caval, which means "horse." However, these large breeds did not fit well into the aristocratic courts of Renaissance Europe.

Companion of the Gods

In addition to canine or part-canine gods, dogs are also found profusely as companions of the gods. In this sense they are usually divine and immortal and in a sense gods themselves.

As noted already, Inanna, Bel Merodach, Bhairava, Khandoba, Dattatreya, Yama, Indra, Artemis, Hecate, Diana and Woden are among those who have dog or wolf companions.

In Africa, Nyambe, the Louyi creator god has a beloved dog. Nyamurairi, the supreme god of the Nyanga people of the Congo had a dog named Rukuba, who gave the gift of fire. The Yorubas have the dog-headed Aroui who also happens to have a pet dog. They also worshipped Odudua, the mother goddess whose is usually depicted with a dog, the animal sacred to her son, the war god Ogun.

The deities Legba of the Dahomey and Nzassi of the Fjort also have companion dogs.

In the ancient Samoan religion, the dog was sacred to and the companion of many of the highest gods. The pan-Polynesian goddess Hina usually is said to have one or two pet dogs. In the Philippines, Kimat is the dog of the supreme god Kadlakan and also is the personification of lightning. Among the Ifugao of the Philippines, the deities Wigan, Kabigat and Balitok all have dogs. The Apayaos of Luzon have a malevolent god Anguan who hunts people with his dogs.

Mithras, the Persian savior god, also had hunting dogs that helped him in the slaying of the bull. The dog was considered sacred to Mithras followers in ancient Europe.

The dog as ancestor and totem

Dog ancestry and totemic worship is rather widespread but particularly common in eastern Asia and North America.

The Aleuts and a number of Inuit peoples have such beliefs. So do the Athabascan Dogrib Indians and the Ojibwas (Chippewa). Around the Pacific Rim, the beliefs are found spread through Siberia, in southern China, Indochina, Java, the Philippines and New Zealand. They extend westward into Madagascar.

Studying the beliefs in South China, researcher Chungshee Hsien Liu came to the conclusion that these beliefs were of "proto-Malay" origin. Some Russian researchers such as S.I. Rudenko also thought that this concept may have originated in insular Southeast Asia possibly among the Austronesian or Proto-Austronesian peoples.

The theory is interesting in light of recent research by Peter Savolainen and others suggesting that all domestic dogs originated from a few maternal lineages somewhere in eastern Asia. Savolainen also theorizes that the ancestor of the dingo of Southeast Asia and Australia was spread with the migrations of Austronesian speakers around 6,000 years ago.

Jonica Newby, author of Animal Attraction a history of animal domestication, thinks this points to the dingo as the earliest domestic dog and possibly the closest representative of the ancestor of all dogs. In such a case, the dingo would likely have descended from Canis lupus chanco a sub-species of the Grey Wolf in East Asia rather than Canis lupus pallipes of India, as previously thought.

The regional cult of a dog ancestor usually takes the form of a totemic dog ancestor who marries a goddess or, as in the case of South China, of a dog ancestor who marries a daughter of the Chinese emperor. The latter origin stories are widespread among the Hmong, Mien, Li, Shan, Shaka and other peoples in South China and northern Indochina.

In the Mien version of this story, the Chinese emperor Pien Hung is faced with defeat from emperor Kao Wang and offers his daughter to anyone who can defeat the invader. The three-colored dog, Phan Hu, hearing of this penetrates enemy lines, kills Kao Wang and brings back his head to Pien Hung. Taking the emperor's daughter as his wife, they produce 12 children from which spring the twelve clans of the Mien. The children disdained life in urban China and instead sought refuge in the lush mountain regions of South China.

Many Pacific coast Amerindian peoples have the wolf on their totem poles. In such cases, it usually becomes taboo to kill a wolf or consume its flesh. However, in some cases, a totem is actually sacrificed and its flesh eaten in religious ritual.

A number of peoples in West and South Africa claim a dog as ancestor including one of the more prominent Bantu groups in southern Africa. Other peoples who held such beliefs include the Kyrgyz, the Nicobarese, the Pomotu islanders, and groups in Myanmar, Papua New Guinea and formerly in Finland.

An ancient and grand legacy

As the most widespread and probably the oldest domesticated animal, the relationship between dog and humans has always had aura of mystery. Newby believes that the domestication of the dog led directly to the domestication of other animals and thus was a major turning point in the history of humans.

Scientists now wonder whether it was humans that domesticated the dog or the dog that domesticated itself. Whatever the case, the dog has learned to adapt to living with humans to a degree finer than any other animal. That the character of the dog has impressed us is without doubt as evidenced by the numerous stories and legends that have been preserved. Even those who felt the dog was beyond the pale were usually forced at some point to concede its nobler qualities.

That the dog should have been elevated to high status by some many peoples and so frequently throughout history should come as no surprise. The relationship between dogs and humans may go back 100,000 years according to some of the most recent research. That means that for some 90,000 years humans depended greatly on the dog as a helper and companion during the hunter-gatherer phase. The name of the Egyptian god Wepwawet means "opener of the way" and indeed the dog has opened the way for humankind throughout history.

Share article:

 If you have Google or Yahoo! toolbars, drag this link into your bookmarks toolbar to bookmark this page.

Add to reddit Add to Digg Add to Del.icio.us

Press Ctrl + D to add to your browser bookmarks.

Flagship Merchant Services listed below are not associated with credit card processing fees

Dog Blogs and News (updated)

Court to decide drug-detecting dog sniff case

- Quests of the Dragon and Bird Clan
- Discuss dogs on Pets Table Talk
- Other non-dog message boards
- Return to Asia Pacific Universe

<

Link to this page by copying and pasting the code below into the source code of your website or blog:

`Dog as Deity, Ancestor and Royal Animal`

Obama touts economic growth (2012-01-08 20:34)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/eHBw57gbwVw?rel=0>

President Barack Obama pushes Republicans to help him grow the economy after favorable reports in the job market showing brisk growth.

In the GOP primary race, prominent conservatives are calling for voters to rally around a single conservative candidate to prevent Mitt Romney from gaining too much momentum.

The New Hampshire race is Romney's to lose, but he should face a very tough contest in South Carolina. If conservatives to rally together, they can beat Romney in the southern state, and that could turn the whole primary around.

Many candidates are PACs are reportedly launching negative TV ad campaigns targeting the former Massachusetts governor.

Apply to become an Obama Organizing Fellow!

GET STARTED

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Romney wins New Hampshire primary (2012-01-10 19:36)

Mitt Romney has won the New Hampshire primary with Ron Paul coming in second and Jon Huntsman in third place. The outcome was not unexpected giving Romney's wide lead in the polls. All attention will now turn to South Carolina, which has acted as a litmus test for nominee candidates in recent times.

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/_7Y-Q9ZY5Ao?rel=0

Campaign manager Jim Messina lays out the various paths that President Obama can take to win the presidential election in November.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gingrich super PAC releases anti-Romney movie (2012-01-12 19:04)

Supporters of Republican presidential candidate Newt Gingrich are letting go with all guns blazing against front-runner Mitt Romney by releasing a 28-minute movie depicting Romney as a ruthless corporate raider.

Romney used the term "creative destruction" to describe the tactic of closing businesses for profit. He stated that in order for the "economy to thrive as ours does there are a lot of people who will suffer as a result of that."

The pro-Gingrich super-PAC Winning Our Future financed the film, which is titled "When Mitt Romney came to Town," and from various reports, it appears they will air it bit-by-bit in short ad spots in South Carolina before the Jan. 21 primary.

Here is the movie broken into two parts on YouTube:

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/KrKlj4Q3nSQ?rel=0>

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/8snIlMY96Bs?rel=0>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama 2012 Campaign Strategy (2012-01-18 17:44)

In the Time article "The 15 % Question: Why Mitt Romney's Tax Rate Matters," by Adam Sorenson, he shows why Romney's image may play an important role in Obama campaign strategy should the former Massachusetts governor win the nomination.

Obama's handlers are figuring out ways for the president to win enough electoral votes to take the election and part of the strategy will involve coming out with the right message. Recently, Obama's speeches have leaned more toward a populist approach in agreement with many of the sentiments of the Occupy movement.

Mitt Romney would make an excellent opponent for framing the issues around the growing conflict between the "99 percent" and the "1 percent."

Talking to reporters, Romney said that his tax rate is close to 15 % because most of his earnings come from investments (capital gains). That means that basically he pays a lower rate than working lower middle class Americans despite having a fortune estimated at $250 million.

If that was not enough, a recent ABC report indicates that Romney is shielding millions of dollars of his wealth from US taxes through offshore accounts in the Cayman Islands.

Expect to see these issues resurface should Romney win the nomination. Also, expect to see the video of Romney claiming in Iowa that corporations are people played repeatedly by Obama supporters if not the campaign itself, if an Obama-Romney match-up occurs.

An Obama campaign strategy centered around a populist message will appeal to many voters still hurting from a slowly-recovering economy against the backdrop of a Republican Party that seems not to care much about creating jobs for Americans.

X

Romney critic on Bain Capital resurfaces

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2012-01-20 00:26:42)

You really make it seem so easy with your presentation but I find this topic to be actually something which I think I would never understand. It seems too complex and extremely broad for me. Im looking forward for your next post, I'll try to get the hang of it!

reXterylizereX (2012-03-24 21:16:17)

The LAST and Final steps 'In Removing Obama From Washington are upon us.

The Final Chapter of { OBAMA. } \ ' His Terrorist Connections AND his WorldWide Co-Conspirators have been REELED - in, Like Fish, on a Fishing line / Swallowing Hook, Line and Sinker, Deep Throating the Pole, up to the Steel Reel.

All of Obama's Corrupt Political Partners in Washington, have also been REELED in, like an OLD TIME Reel to Reel Movie PROJECTOR.

THEIR eXposure has successfully been Framed and They are NOW 'Seen {CAPTURED } UPON the Screen, eXposed and Literally, Snared in the VERY OWN

Sights and TRAPS, that they Themselves had set for YOU- [The Prey] The American Citizens.

These traitors, have FALLEN Head-Long, Down into the very SAME pits, that THEY themselves HAD dug for YOU, { the Game \ American Citizens.

All of Obamas Corrupted Political Partners in Washington and Terrorist Connections and Co-Conspirator WORLDWIDE, have been Snared / CAUGHT in the Jaws that they had Sprung for YOU, The American Citizens.

The Ropes and Lines of DECEPTION, TREASON and FRAUD, that They had Drawn, Planted, eXtended and INTENDED to Hang and Trip Up YOUR Freedoms { The American Patriots / Great Sons and Daughters of Liberty } Have ALL been Un Tied, Unraveled and Unstrung.

You MUST continue A Peaceful Resistance. You MUST Maintain a POSITIVE, AGGRESSIVE, firm Focus on the Facts and Truth /\ as WE Stand by OUR convictions and NEVER Fall or Surrendering to this mob of Traitors :

In Fact, THE ONLY THING in America - that was trully Needing"" CHANGE " ! Was Barry or .Barack, .Barak, .Batock, .Barok, .Barrack Hussein OR, .Soetoro OR....Obama the JR. I. or II. HIMSELF. !

Obama, has ONLY MADE criminal Changes. His Disguised, LIES and Forgeries, made TO HIS VERY OWN Name, With multiple FAKE Social Security numbers, for his entire adult life.

ALL eXXXposed. "" And Americans are NOT Impressed with his Network of Degenerate Thieves, Terrorists and RIPP OFF SCAMMERS and Cons, PARADING, Masquerading as Crack Heroes.

Obama {the Fraud } then HOPED and CHANGED himself to incorporate the criminal master-plan of his Entire Life to the CHANGING of the UNITED STATES, into HIS Dispicable, Unethical, Cowardly and Dishonorable - IMAGE.

Barack Hussein Obama II (Who HATES American Values) who is A " SELF PROCLAIMED Religious and Political Enemy" Of ALL Responsible, Morally Conscious and HARD WORKING Americans.

...The UN CHANGEABLE, Cowardly, Fraud, has done His VERY BEST to Inspire His Degenerate MOB to VIOLENCE.

LITERALLY, SayingTo his supporters.Saying "Get ready for HAND-to-HAND Combat with your Fellow Americans ! !

"I want all Americans to get in each others faces !- ^ Obama 'Demands !

"You bring a KNIFE to a fight pal, we'll bring a GUN" - ! **

THESE ARE OBAMAS very OWN WORDS.. "We talk To these folks... / so I know whose A* $ to KICK."ALSO' Shouting THAT Republican victory would mean "Hand to Hand combat" !

....PLEASE.... go Now !— To reXes, All NEW WebsiTe ^ CLICK HERE <http://obomlnation.webstarts.com/index.html>

Please stand For Loving Children and the USA. Respectfully and Thankfully, Thank you ALL for your Time.

<http://obomlnation.webstarts.com/index.html>

Gingrich surging as South Carolina vote looms (2012-01-20 19:51)

Newt Gingrich is surging in South Carolina polls while Mitt Romney's campaign appears to be collapsing the day before the big primary.

I have viewed South Carolina as a 'king-maker' state ever since the 2008 primary and it could play the same role for the Republicans this time around unless it is a very close race. With Rick Perry dropping out of the race and conservatives appearing the recognize the need to rally around a single candidate, Rick Santorum's support appears to be drying up in the southern state.

Of the remaining conservatives, Gingrich seems to be picking up most of the votes from Perry and Santorum.

Sarah Palin thinks the interview with Gingrich's former wife just before the primary will actually help rather than hurt Newt. She may be right. Conservatives are generally suspicious of the "liberal" media and the timing of the interview may play into Gingrich's hands as he will be viewed as victimized by the "left."

If Gingrich wins, he will be in a good position to rally even more conservatives into his corner. When you do the math, it's obvious that the conservative candidates combined are well ahead of Gingrich in the overall vote count. In conservative Iowa, it appears that Santorum will actually come out the winner.

Should conservatives coalesce around Gingrich, he should become the favorite in many states where the Tea Party has established powerful get-out-the-vote machines.

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/w2vySqSEhXY?rel=0>

Newt Gingrich's Explosive South Carolina GOP Debate

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gingrich retakes frontrunner status (2012-01-21 22:04)

With Newt Gingrich's resounding victory in South Carolina tonight, he definitely moves into front runner status in my book. Just consider a few things.

South Carolina is a good barometer for voting in the entire American South. I am including delegate rich states like Texas as part of the "South." Even in states that do not have winner-take-all, Gingrich stands to gain many delegates throughout the South.

Then there are the conservative states in the Midwest and the "Rust Belt." Again, many of these states are loaded with delegates. With Sarah Palin's endorsement, he stands to do well in the northern states and all states with strong Tea Party infrastructure.

Now of course there could still be some campaign-crushing revelation that pops up and changes the course of the race, but for now I see Newt as the solid front-runner and the candidate to beat.

However, all indications points to a tough fight for the nomination that could last for a few more months at least. For the Obama campaign this is a good thing since it will mean that the super PACs will need to spend much of their money supporting their candidates rather than going after the president.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

RIW - 50 States (2012-01-22 09:13:13)

I see the possible nomination of Newt Gingrich as a good thing for the Obama campaign.

When it comes to the general elections and the overall population of the U.S. Gingrich is not very well liked by swing voters, independents and minorities. I feel the republicans are doing themselves a big injustice by voting for Gingrich. Though on the other hand Romney is also fatally flawed and I feel is a weak candidate against Obama. With the OWS movement it would be very easy for Obama to bring Romney down.

Personally, I feel the GOP is doomed in 2012.

6.2 February

GOP primary in state of disarray (2012-02-09 19:04)

Rick Santorum's sweep of Colorado, Minnesota and the non-binding Missouri caucuses show that Republicans are still very much unsure about who to pick for the November general election. While Santorum seems to have the momentum now, there is nothing yet that shows that Newt Gingrich might not again become the conservative favorite.

The situation is extremely favorable for the Obama campaign as, the way it looks now, the nomination might only become settled during the Republican convention. This means that the candidates and their super PACs will need to spend money fighting for each state.

That would mean less money left over to contest President Barack Obama in the general election. Additionally, the longer the candidates fight it out, the more negative ads served to the public. The campaign has become intensely negative to the point that it's depressing turnout. In Florida, for example, where Romney spent a small fortune on negative advertising, turnout was poor.

In comparison, while the 2008 Democratic primary was long and contentious, there was less negative campaigning overall and turnout was generally excellent in most states.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

azhar (2012-02-14 16:13:28)
the turnout is hoped to better in the next elections...

Behind Obama's Asia pivot (2012-02-27 20:54)

The new "pivot" to Asia and specifically to Southeast Asia by the Obama administration has generated numerous theories as to the motivations behind the sudden and largely unexpected move.

Some analysts have speculated that the US has new interests in asserting its hegemony over the region. However, as a keen observer of this part of the world, it is clear to me that Obama's move is in response to recent Chinese muscle-flexing in the region.

For more than a decade now, US foreign policy has concentrated more on the Muslim world in the Middle East and Central Asia. After a generation of battling communists in Korea and Vietnam, the events of 2001 redirected focus to the "war on terror."

Aside from the pressure extended on North Korea to dismantle its nuclear program, the region, and particularly the Southeast Asian region, had receded from the American foreign policy forefront. At least that was the case from the security standpoint. The economic rise of countries like China and India, on the other hand, continued to attract significant interest.

What has changed in the region

While there have been some minor incidents in the last few decades involving the US in Asia, they have mostly faded away without much fanfare. For example, in 2001, a confrontation arose after a US EP-3 surveillance plane crashed into a Chinese aircraft near Hainan island. The Hainan nuclear submarine base is the closest point in China to the hotly-contested Spratly Islands region.

After Beijing turned over the crew of the lost aircraft, the US immediately pushed up military aid to Taiwan. There was a war of words in official and media circles for a short period, but it did not take too long for things to cool down. The recent situation, though, is much different. Starting early last year, the Chinese began a series of aggressive moves in the Spratly region, an area rich in gas and oil with disputed areas claimed by Brunei, China, Malaysia, the Philippines, Taiwan and Vietnam.

Spoilin' in the Spratlys

While tensions in the South China Sea (or West Philippine Sea) is nothing new, the intensity of Chinese chest thumping in the maritime region is unprecedented.

In 1974, South Vietnam and China did engage in a brief naval battle over the nearby Paracel Islands. Other than that, the only real military action to take place in the Spratlys was a minor skirmish between China and Vietnam in 1988.

In February of last year, authorities in the Philippines claimed that a Chinese warship had fired on three Philippine fishing boats near Jackson atoll. Later in March, the Philippines accused Chinese vessels of harassing a seismic exploration vessel contracted by a Philippine company near Reed Bank off Palawan.

In May of the same year, Vietnam accused China of deliberately destroying cable laid out by the Binh Minh 02 oil-surveying vessel. The interesting thing about these incidents is that they did not occur in disputed areas, but within the internationally-recognized Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) that extends from a nation's coastline 200 miles out to sea.

In the same month of May, the Philippines reported that two suspected Chinese fighter jets had intruded into Philippine airspace.

Trouble in India

Since the events of last spring, China has engaged in more provocative activity than in the past two decades combined, not only in disputed areas of the the Spratlys, but even within the EEZ of the Philippines and Vietnam.

However, the provocations were not limited to Southeast Asia. China is also apparently pushing its territorial ambitions far to the west in India. The two countries have always had border disputes, but the latest flareups are a matter of serious concern.

What is most astonishing is that, for the first time, China is not only challenging India to the north but also in the Indian Ocean to the south of the country. Chinese warships, including their new amphibious landing dock ship, are now frequent visitors to the Indian Ocean. They have just concluded an agreement with the Seychelles for refueling privileges and they should gain access to a port that they helped build in Pakistan soon.

The tension with India is so great that news reports this month indicate that the country is preparing for the possibility of limited war with China. New Delhi's countermeasures also include striking up a new relationship with Vietnam that includes joint exploration for resources in the country's EEZ and invitations to Indian warships to visit Vietnamese waters.

What's up?

Now clearly, it is these recent events that must be the main impetus for Washington's new pivot to Asia. Not so much because the US has so much concern about the interests of Asian nations, but more due to the threat posed by China's moves to its own interests.

So what are the reasons behind China's new assertive policy in Asia? Some have speculated that China feels trapped in a corner by Western powers seeking containment. Other theories point to fear of an "Arab Spring" type uprising in China or to the possibility that China suddenly needs more energy resources to keep its economy running.

None of these theories though draws support from the available evidence. The Western attitude toward the entire region including China has been laissez faire over the last decade or two. Even the North Korean nuclear tests drew, at best, a lukewarm response.

In Taiwan, nationalists have worried that the US was giving in to Chinese demands for reunification.

Internally, the recent Arab Spring movement within China does not hold a candle to the Tienanmen Square uprising or even to the Falun Gong movement. And to the energy question, China is still an oil exporter and there is nothing in recent events that would explain any sudden need to acquire new energy sources. If anything, China's moves have been more toward renewable energy technology.

To find the real explanation behind the latest Chinese moves, I believe you need to look at developments within the Chinese armed forces.

The dragon awakens

In the March-April volume of Foreign Affairs, former secretary of state Henry Kissinger writes about the evolving relationship between China and the United States.

In the article, Kissinger takes special note of recent Chinese military developments: "Its invulnerable second-strike nuclear capability will eventually be paired with an expanding range of antiship ballistic missiles and asymmetric capabilities in new domains such as cyberspace and space."

During the Cold War, the Chinese nuclear arsenal was minimal, and some military experts even thought a nuclear war with China was "winnable." However, recent advances including long range submarine launched ballistic missiles now place the possibility of a nuclear exchange with China definitely in the category of "mutually assured destruction."

The latest JL2 submarine launched missile can strike New York City while docked in the harbor of Shanghai and it can carry up to four independently targeted warheads. The latest Chinese sub may carry up to 24 of these missiles and Beijing four of these subs operational with another seven or eight on the way.

Antiship ballistic missile

The ICMB shield enables China to flex its conventional might more than ever before and the most noteworthy advance in the latter field is the world's first antiship ballistic missile, the DF-21D.

What makes this missile such a game-changer is that Chinese forces can fire it from safe mobile land-based launchers and hit ships, including aircraft carriers, up to 1900 miles away. The missile can strike with pinpoint precision and even when only armed with a conventional warhead, it can potentially sink a carrier with just a single hit.

DF-21D launchers stationed on the mainland can, therefore, not only cover the entire West Philippine Sea/South China Sea, but they can also strike US ships around the waters of Japan and even off the coast of Guam! A launcher perched near the Chinese border with Bhutan and Nepal can fly across foreign territory and hit ships anywhere in the Bay of Bengal and off the coast of Sri Lanka.

A launcher on the border with North India can cover the entire Arabian Sea and western coast of India.

The DF-21D now makes it far more dangerous for US carriers to project power in the maritime regions of Southeast Asia and South Asia. Should the missile ever see deployment on submarines the threat would become even more ominous.

Other military advancements

In addition to ballistic missile capability, the Chinese have developed supersonic stealthy antiship cruise missiles and jet fighters with ranges capable of covering the entire Spratly archipelago from bases in South China.

Moreover, the Chinese appear on the road to increasing their force projection capability with three aircraft carriers on the way including an ex-Russian carrier on sea trials. They have plans on activating four more amphibious landing docks for a total of six vessels capable of long-distance sea-land missions.

All of these developments led by the active deployment of the DF-21D in 2009 seem to provide the answer behind Beijing's new-found belligerence.

The launching of the second Type 071 landing dock, the Jinggang Shan, may have been the last component for a force capable of challenging China's Asian neighbors. The two landing docks can act as modern flagships for amphibious invasions with their fast, air-cushion landing craft capable of launching from well beyond the sight of shore defenses.

The Pivot

China's sudden move to exert "influence" in the region apparently surprised everyone in the region and beyond. The general mode of thinking was that China would not jeopardize its standing as a premier economic power by engaging in "old school" militarism.

If China was to conquer the world, it would be through economic competition and business savvy.

While it is impossible to say for sure what has motivated China over this past year, the announcements in 2011 that China was conducting maneuvers with the carrier Varyag and that it was building two carriers at the Jiangnan Shipyard in Shanghai, seals the deal for me.

China apparently has achieved benchmarks that allow it believed would allow it to safely exercise control in the region, through intimidation if not through force.

However, the reaction in Southeast Asia and by America has been equally surprising to many. While Southeast Asia looks weak on paper compared to the rising dragon, it has a special strength of its own. The nation cooperates through a grouping known as the Association of South East Asian Nations or ASEAN for short.

The Obama pivot is in close alliance with this grouping and in a sense owes its origins to events linked with ASEAN.

Secretary Clinton

At first the reaction by Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and her department to events early last year followed the same cautious tone that characterized US policy in this region throughout the preceding decade. However, as the conflict between the Philippines and China over the Spratlys continued to escalate, the administration began formulating a new policy.

By June, Clinton announced that it was standing by the Philippines on its Spratly claims. During the ASEAN Regional Forum in July, Clinton announced that ASEAN would serve as the "fulcrum" for regional cooperation between the United States and other nations.

Then, when President Obama visited Asia and announced his pivot policy, Clinton was in Manila where she voiced support for the nation's new name for the South China Sea, i.e. the West Philippine Sea. Also, the November issue of Foreign Policy published Clinton's article "America's Pacific Century" in which she claimed the "future of politics" would be decided in Asia.

She writes in the article:

...President Obama will participate in the East Asia Summit for the first time in November. To pave the way, the United States has opened a new U.S. Mission to ASEAN in Jakarta and signed the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation with ASEAN. Our focus on developing a more results-oriented agenda has been instrumental in efforts to address disputes in the South China Sea. In 2010, at the ASEAN Regional Forum in Hanoi, the United States helped shape a regionwide effort to protect unfettered access to and passage through the South China Sea, and to uphold the key international rules for defining territorial claims in the South China Sea's waters. Given that half the world's merchant tonnage flows through this body of water, this was a consequential undertaking.

ASEAN strength in regional and international cooperation

ASEAN lies in a region that served as a crossroads for international trade for thousands of years. The ships of the spice trade sailed through these waters unimpeded. The nations in this region have a different cultural background than those of Northeast Asia where nations like China and Japan have often tended toward isolationist and xenophobic policies.

In Southeast Asia, the people are outward oriented and look at the sea not as a border as much as an extension of their territory. The strength of the ASEAN grouping is that it sees itself more a part of the world community rather than as an independent whole. Possibly, the nation's long history of maritime trade helped to forge this identity.

In this sense, it is no surprise that the nations in this region immediately began seeking external alliances when it dawned on them that China might not be all that disinterested in empire building. Naturally, they looked for help from nations that depended on these ancient sea routes.

Make no mistake about it, when Europe first "discovered" Southeast Asia, it was by no means dominated by China. The sea lanes were open and the nations were fully independent and actually they were arguably more influenced by Indian and Arab culture than Chinese. So there is something of a tradition involved in these modern disputes.

Where is Obama's pivot heading?

With the advent of China's formidable sea denial capabilities, the importance of aircraft carriers in this region is probably over. Carriers are likely to mostly stay out of harm's way. It would make little sense to place them in vulnerable areas like the Strait of Taiwan or the Spratly region.

ASEAN nations are investing more in submarines that are not vulnerable to ballistic and cruise missiles. They are also buying more advanced multirole aircraft.

Obama's pivot looks centered initially on increasing the ability of US forces to maneuver in the region. Forces will rotate at a facility in Darwin, Australia, and littoral ships will function out of ports in Singapore.

The Philippines will no doubt play an important role as will Vietnam since they basically sit at the mouth of the region for China. Philippine officials seem eager to cooperate as the country has failed to develop any significant defense capability since ending the US bases treaty in 1992.

The policy is definitely one of containment, but a containment desired not simply by the US, but by all the players in ASEAN along with India further west.

For President Obama, it could be one of the most decisive moments of his presidency. The planned end game, though, is still an open question for outside observers. However, one must wonder how long the region will be able to tolerate a China set on mastery of the region. Will the leadership in Beijing make the right "adjustment" or will we see efforts to seed a "Chinese Spring" from this new pivot alliance of nations.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rudy Marzo (2012-04-24 05:56:48)

You created a good blog. I always make up to a point that I follow the President.
chris-crosby.net/blog/2012/03/16/americas-gas-pains/

Dompert Hermes (2012-06-02 20:49:55)

Nice article..

I love Barrack Obama..

:)

Anonymous (2012-12-01 18:30:15)

ï»¿The inescapable fact that UGG boots are no for a longer period a vogue product on each journal pattern listing has not reduced their recognition. Their pattern relevance evaporated a long time ago but their coziness, heat and practicality has turned them into the need of countless consumers currently even though they are not in vogue. They're amidst the most useful and comfortable wintertime options and are worn everyday by girls and males as favorites.

UGGs can be uncovered with very variable traits and selling prices. On the high of the scale, they are very well priced to cover their great high quality supplies. At the other facet of the scale, they are solely artificial with a appropriate rate tag.

Obtaining UGGs as a extended phrase financial investment will will need to satisfy distinctive specifications than purchasing them for one particular season. The quite ideal UGGs are of genuine, [\[url=http://www.uggsbootsoutletonline.co.uk\]](http://www.uggsbootsoutletonline.co.uk)ugg boots sale[/url] high high-quality suede, serious sheepskin lining and gum rubber or good quality plastic soles. These that price much less are commonly created with fake rubber soles, artificial suede and phony sheepskin.

Sheepskin is unusually cool in hotter weather conditions. You'll find it not one thing that can be worn comfortably in the center of summer months but it cools the ft on autumn and spring times. At the exact same time, it keeps toes warm for the duration of chilly months. It can be breathable so that ft will not collect dampness in the high temperature the way synthetics permit.

A significant grade suede would not grow to be specifically weakened in moist climate like artificial suede does. It proceeds to appear new soon after wet walks when it really is given a great waterproofing product or service ahead of worn. Repair and brushing restores its unique physical appearance just after moist weather conditions and damage is much less noticeable to see than that accomplished to synthetics.

Waterproofing solutions [\[url=http://www.uggsbootsforuksale.co.uk\]](http://www.uggsbootsforuksale.co.uk)ugg boots uk[/url] can be fairly valuable for synthetic suede. The coatings will maintain them looking new for a tiny for a longer time if worn in damp weather conditions. Gum rubber soles retain it from putting on down swiftly. Individuals who do a great deal of strolling in [\[url=http://www.uggsbootsukoutlet.co.uk\]](http://www.uggsbootsukoutlet.co.uk)-ugg boots uk[/url] their UGGs ought to obtain their gum rubber retains intact for many years.

Gum rubber absorbs shock that would otherwise bring soreness to joints and the again. When opting for a much less expensive boot, opt for plastic earlier mentioned fake rubber mainly because the latter is extremely limited donning. Irregular erosion of the sole imbalances the stance and can trigger distressing hips and backbone.

The an individual facet that UGGs fulfill in contrast to most other wintertime footwear is in their width and toe home. These make them one of the most snug alternatives obtainable right now. The extra softness delivered by lining that's serious wool will not flatten fully with considerably standing.

When making an attempt on a boot, bear in mind that no matter of high quality, the lining will constantly flatten fairly. At first the boot should really experience a tiny far too tiny because of the improved bulk it has in the beginning. You should not decide on a dimension that is much too huge to compensate since the shoe will get as considerably as 20 % even more place right after some have on. Acquire certain observe, when fitting UGG boots, of the instep. This part, above the maximum aspect of the foot, need to be snug enough not to allow the boot to fall from the foot.

[url=http://www.einovo.net/ClientFile_C11/JH2011/bbs/viewthread.php?tid=1500334 &extra=] Comfy And Modern F[/url]

[url=<http://www.masala4india.com/newreply.php?do=newreply &p=3288370>] Clearance Uggs Significant In Your can be within just your seven times[/url]

[url=http://www.aokstone.com/member/index_do.php?fmdo=user &dopost=regnew] Uggs uggs jet traitement de security[/url]

6.3 March

A brokered convention for the GOP? (2012-03-10 17:24)

With Mitt Romney unable to establish clear dominance in the Republican primary, the possibility of a brokered convention is under intense discussion.

If none of the candidate reach the magic number of 1144 delegates, the party must find away of convincing delegates to switch from one candidate to another. In some cases, delegates are bound by law to support whoever had won the concerned race. However, many delegates and also the super delegates are free to vote for whomever they want.

Currently, with so many southern states in play, there is a strong possibility that Romney may not get enough votes. He does long strong in some of the states with winner-take-all systems, but most of these races are not until the end of the primary season.

Romney has been only getting from 25 percent to 28 percent of the vote in southern states. That may not be enough especially if he loses big in Pennsylvania against hometown favorite Rick Santorum or if he fails to win an important winner-take-all state like California.

Some analysts think that if no candidate gets the necessary number of delegates before the convention that everything will be worked out prior to the convention kickoff. However, this may be wishful thinking. Obviously there are a lot of strong feelings since even when Romney wins in the primary, he is usually taking less than the majority of votes. For example, in the all-important Ohio primary, Romney only picked up 37.9 percent of the votes.

One thing most people agree on is that the lack of a clear winner will work strongly in Barack Obama's favor. Whether the backroom dealing goes on before the beginning of the convention or during it will not probably make much of a difference. Either way, it will look like the Republicans are not strongly convinced about their nominee.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sam Howe (2012-04-05 13:53:13)
<http://www.surveymonkey.com/s/Y2RKK6Z>
Please take political poll.

Anonymous (2012-05-18 09:25:12)
Hi I am Hempel Schorn. Your blog is really Smart, helps greatly! Enjoy stay here.
runescape gold

How Democrats stand today (2012-03-28 15:24)

The most recent polls suggest that President Barack Obama and House Democrats today are

6.4 May

Obama vs. Romney Economics (2012-05-22 12:51)

With the Obama campaign releasing a new ad attacking Mitt Romney's record with Bain Capital, it might be a good idea of review the economic ideas of both candidates.

President Obama has stated that he believes that the way out of the jobs recession is through economic growth. He advocates repairing existing national infrastructure and, in some cases, building new infrastructure.

The president is also a strong supporter of green technology, not to keep the environment clean and safe, but also to help in achieving national energy independence. Obama wants to use the US Money Reserve as little as possible for this task. Instead, he advocates measures like rolling back the Bush tax cuts, increasing the capital gains tax, and lowering or eliminating dirty energy subsidies.

Gov. Romney, on the other hand, wants to take a course similar to his Republican predecessors in further lowering taxes especially for the upper tier of taxpayers. Romney's plan will slightly increase taxes for the poorest Americans, while establishing major breaks for the highest earning Americans.

Romney's plan closely resembles European austerity programs in that there is a major thrust toward reducing the deficit by cutting spending. Since he wants to cut tax rates at the same time, then one has to expect that Romney's cuts in government programs and jobs will be severe. His idea is that taxes hurt the private economy and that by lowering taxes further, it will stimulate growth.

However, Romney's experience at Bain Capital is not comparable to the situation of restoring the American economy. Bain Capital made money through methods often known as "predatory capitalism." The principles involved are completely different than those found in the national economy.

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/TLatxTzVE4w>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Road To Election Day 2012 (2012-05-25 00:18:28)

Republican Mitt Romney would fare better among high-level presidential candidates against Democratic President Barack Obama. But I wish President Obama should win re-election in USA 2012!Finger Crossed.....)I personally suggested you, wear Pro Obama Tshirts and show your love for President Obama.

Unknown (2012-06-06 22:35:50)

Ok so someone help me out...if rupee dollar (Indian (dot) dollar) is $56.00 to our $1.00 and my aunts company Solyndra that went bankrupt which Obama granted a $535 million us dollar grant too and the owner ran off back to his country how much did he capitalize on???? And we are going to reallect him as president? I voted for him but come on REALLY JUST BECAUSE HIS TITLE HAS DEMOCRAT BEHINDE IT?... oh and today on the news he was in town but you know what they said??? (the news)??? that he don't have to even campaign in California because basically he has it sewn up...ARE WE REALLY GONNNA VOTE FOR SOMEONE WHO GIVES MONEY TO ANOTHER COUNTRY BUT OURS???

6.5 June

Obama raises more people, but loses May fundraising (2012-06-08 18:57)

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/vLRyi4FOhuk>

Mitt Romney exceeded Barack Obama for the first time in May by raising some $76 million. The president and his team did not do bad itself raising more than $60 million, which was a big jump upward from April.

Obama's average donation was much smaller than that of the Romney campaign and consequently the president actually had about 250,000 more donors in May. As I repeatedly noted during the primaries in 2007 and 2008, the total number of donors is important.

Having a large number of donors usually means that the campaign will have more staying power when it comes to fundraising. Many wealthy people will max out on contribution limits in a single fundraising event. Although they can continue to donate to super PACs, they will no longer be able to give directly to the campaign.

Generally, the number of donations even in this sense will drop off. When many rich people give money, they expect some "face time" directly with the candidate.

Another important factor is that small donors are probably more likely to volunteer than the really deep pockets. In my experience, I have not seen any multi-millionaires much billionaires volunteering, at least not at the grassroots level. Yes, some will act as "bundlers," but small donors also pull in extra contributors just like themselves.

Basically, people power works in so many ways that it is just something to watch. While Romney and his super PACs will no doubt raise huge sums of cash, the Obama team should at least stay competitive if they do not come out on top at the end.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama cares, Romney contraire (2012-06-09 09:03)

Check this out, click for full size image:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2012-06-11 14:12:17)

Get your Obama Wristbands!

http://www.ebay.co.uk/itm/Obama-Wristband-2012-UK-/251083013277?pt=UK_Jewellery_Watches_CostumeJewellery_CA&hash=item3a75b6bc9d#ht_500wt_972

Volunteer efforts to ramp up (2012-06-09 18:29)

We should see the grassroots Obama campaign really start to pick up in the coming months. While dedicated supporters helped out during the primary, many have waited either because they did not realize that the campaign even had to organize or they thought that the campaign really did not need the help.

In comparison, the Romney campaign team is already well-oiled after fighting hard against primary opponents. Now that Romney is set to become the nominee, we should expect the number of volunteers in the Obama campaign to swell steadily as the November election date draws nearer. We should also expect to see more direct activity especially in terms of neighboring state efforts.

What this will entail is volunteers from strongly pro-Obama states taking road trips to nearby swing states. These swing states have large numbers of independent voters that can wait until the last second to choose a candidate. Another thing to look for is a growing number of grassroots fundraising efforts. The team from 2008 was particularly skilled at raising money at this level.

In the video below, President Obama speaks to the Netroots Nation 2012 conference where many veterans of the 2008 election are attending.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/oPeV5P2sBzM>

A good ol' 50-state strategy (2012-06-11 21:21)

2008 Obama campaign manager David Plouffe organized a 50-state campaign strategy in conjunction with then-DNC head Howard Dean.

A 50-state strategy in now way means that the campaign does not focus on the battleground states. Basically, it's a more holistic way of doing things. Very good for the long term future of progressive candidates as compared to more tightly-focused campaigns that concentrate on the swing states alone.

Only working in states were you are likely to win is a defensive strategy and you tend to lose ground in the long run. You know what they say, the best defense is a good offense. A 50-state strategy activates the whole national work of Democrats and progressives.

Take, for example, a state like Texas. Little chance of Pres. Obama winning there, but there are a huge number of Democrats in that state. Just going there to raise money only really activates the bundlers and deep pockets.

In order to activate all the Democrats at the grassroots, you need something more serious and at least some commitment of resources. Now, if it is done right, the activity generated will more than pay for the investment.

In 2008, for example, here in Sacramento, we opened a big office for the general election. Now, California was pretty much a sure thing for Obama then, but we were able to really get people in the region moving using this office. Not only did they campaign locally, but they made calls to battleground states and arranged trips to neighboring swing state, Nevada.

And they did a lot of grassroots fundraising that definitely would have exceeded what would have been done had they not opened an office.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Romney vs. the public sector (2012-06-12 21:32)

One has to wonder what Mitt Romney is thinking with his latest attacks on public sector workers. Does he really think that suggesting that we get rid of teachers, firefighters, police officers and other government workers will help his campaign?

Apparently, he and the Republicans are trying to blame the problems in the economy on the public sector in such a way as to rile up people in the private sector.

However this strategy has some obvious risks. For one thing, he will certainly alienate most of the people who work in the public sector along with some very powerful government worker unions including the teachers' unions and SEIU. He risks angered these workers at all levels from local to federal government. That's a lot of workers and their families.

From what can be surmised, Romney believes that the recent election in Wisconsin shows that Americans want fewer teachers, firefighters and other public sector workers. However, it is highly questionable whether this is actually the case, and I would think unlikely to be generalizable to the rest of the country even if it is true in Wisconsin.

The general profile of independent voters in swing states does not suggest people who would be adverse to their local firefighters or police officers.

Anyone with logical thinking would have to wonder how firing large numbers of government workers will help out the economy? First of all, those newly unemployed people would have to start competing for the same openings as those already out of work.

Without a job, how are those people going to keep buying stuff to keep the consumer economy running smoothly?

If people actually start to think about what Romney is saying, things could backfire on him rather quickly.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Helping out with the Obama campaign (2012-06-13 19:45)

The Obama campaign allows supporters to get involved in a number of ways including:

- Calling from any location with an Internet connection.
- Hosting an event
- Attending an event
- Tweeting on the Twitter social network
- Grassroots fundraising
- Becoming a Fellow
- Volunteering in general
- Getting a paid job with the campaign

For more information, visit the official website at <http://barackobama.com>.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Looking at the electoral maps (2012-06-15 15:18)

Want to see where Barack Obama and Mitt Romney stand in some popular electoral map projections? Here is a sampling of some the popular ones out there:

- Washington Post – Obama 237, Romney 191, Tossup 110
- New York Times – Obama 217, Romney 206, Tossup 115
- CNN – Obama 247, Romney 206, Tossup 85
- Real Clear Politics – Obama 221, Romney 170
- Huffington Post – Obama 260, Romney 191, Tossup 87
- Sabato – Obama 217, Romney 191, Tossup 130

In order to win, a candidate must garner at least 270 electoral votes. Although the maps have recently pushed downward for Pres. Obama, it has not been for any sustained period such that we could call it a trend.

Now, if we average the votes for Obama and Romney, and then take the remainder from all votes subtracted by their sum to get tossups:

Obama: 226 electoral votes

Romney: 193 electoral votes

Undecided: 119 electoral votes

The National Polls website does not allow tossups and comes up with the following projection based on polls and other data:

Obama: 296

Romney: 231

Source: Real Clear Politics

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama allows 'Dreamers' to stay in country (2012-06-16 19:56)

President Barack Obama announces a new Department of Homeland Security policy that exempts undocumented people who were brought to the United States as young children and that meet other criteria to be considered for relief from removal from the country or from removal proceedings.

The president tried to have the Dream Act, which would have codified the same policy, but Republicans blocked the legislation in both the House and Senate.

Many of the "Dreamers" were not even aware that they were undocumented. until they were required to show proof of citizenship. The new policy allows eligible people to "earn" their citizenship by meeting the specific qualifications that include not posing a threat to national security.

Many of these people are not guilty of any action themselves, but were merely brought into the country by their parents without documentation. The new policy is effective immediately.

The president will continue to seek legislation that will place the same policy into law.

A conservative journalist heckles the president in the middle of the speech that is shown in the video above.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obamacare already helping millions (2012-06-19 16:32)

Many people probably do not realize how much they are benefiting from President Obama's health care reform known as "Obamacare."

For example, young Americans, including those still in college, are now covered longer on the parents' health insurance policies.

Women have been charged up to 50 percent more for health coverage on the same plan as men. The changes in Obamacare will force insurance companies to charge women the same amount for the same coverage as men by 2014.

Additionally, insurers will be prevented from excluding people under 19 due to existing medical conditions.

To find more about Obamacare, visit the Affordable Care Act page at barackobama.com: <http://www.barackobama.com/health-care>.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The power of word of mouth (2012-06-20 20:42)

Many people forget the power of word of mouth in persuading people to support a cause or a candidate.

While most campaign teams work on getting volunteers into phone banks or out walking from door to door, simply talking to people you know is one of the most effective ways in gaining support. Not that canvassing and phone-banking are essential for success because they are a necessary part of grassroots work along with publicity-type events like rallies and sign-waving.

However, just think of the power that kids have in convincing their parents or grandparents to buy them things. People tend to take advice from people that they trust. On the other hand, convincing strangers can be tough work.

For this reason, simply talking about the president to people you know can be an effective way of not only getting their vote, but also of convincing them to donate or to volunteer with the campaign. Speaking of volunteering, here is a video of voter registration activity over the weekend.

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/2WXAyRvqAhg>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Organizations, endorsements ramp up for Obama (2012-06-21 20:24)

Organizations and celebrities are activating to assist President Obama's election campaign. The Service Employees International Union (SEIU) will be spending about $85 million to help Obama in eight battleground states: Pennsylvania, Colorado, Florida, New Hampshire, Nevada, Ohio, Virginia and Wisconsin.

Maybe even more important than the money is the number of volunteers that SEIU will be able to deploy for the campaign effort.

Today, MoveOn.org announced that it was endorsing the president and that it would "invest significant time and resources into mobilizing people power to win the election and prevent a hostile takeover by the 1 %." The organization claims that 91 percent of its members who vote approved the Obama endorsement. MoveOn says that it has seven million total members.

A big personal endorsement came from Spanish TV talk show host Cristina Saralegui who is known as the "Hispanic Oprah." A Cuban American, her support may be particularly important in swing state Florida, which has a large Cuban and Caribbean community.

Expect these types of endorsements to increase in frequency as the election nears. Will try to post updates as they come in.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

First Lady Michelle Obama heads west (2012-06-23 22:12)

[EMBED]

Photos of First Lady Michelle Obama campaigning in Colorado and Nevada.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Campaign asks supporters how to move forward (2012-06-24 20:12)

Click on this link to take a survey at barackobama.com: <https://my.barackobama.com/page/s/OFA-Feedback>. The campaign is asking supporters for advice on how to move forward in the campaign.

You can express what you think is important for voters to know about President Obama and also about his opponent Mitt Romney. The survey also asks for your advice on how to activate the president's supporters so that they will volunteer with the campaign.

The new Dashboard for volunteers to manage their campaign efforts online from any location with an Internet connection.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

It's the economic plan.... (2012-06-26 18:49)

The election will be about the economy, but more about the candidate's economic plans than anything else.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt was reelected by a landslide during the depths of the Great Depression because the people knew that the Republicans were responsible for the economic conditions of the time. In the same way the GOP is also responsible for today's mess.

However, this fact alone probably would not be enough to reelect President Obama. FDR won because the people thought he had a superior plan for rebuilding the economy as compared to the Republicans who simply wanted to go back to pro-business, pro-rich policies.

For this reason, the Obama campaign will need to show that they have the better plan for the economy, which is definitely the truth. However, ordinary people might need this drilled into their heads with a lot of repetition of simple messages.

Romney basically wants to downsize the government in the same way he downsized and folded companies with Bain Capital.

However, we have seen how this type of strategy does not work. It didn't work when Herbert Hoover tried it during the Great Depression and it has not worked in Europe where most countries have implemented austerity policies since the worldwide economic meltdown began in 2007.

Democrats and progressives need to hammer this message home, not only in order to win in 2012, but to avoid a possible disastrous economic collapse. Indeed, it looks like the U.S. economy may take another hit due to the turmoil in Europe, so we need someone like President Obama in office to fight for the 99 %.

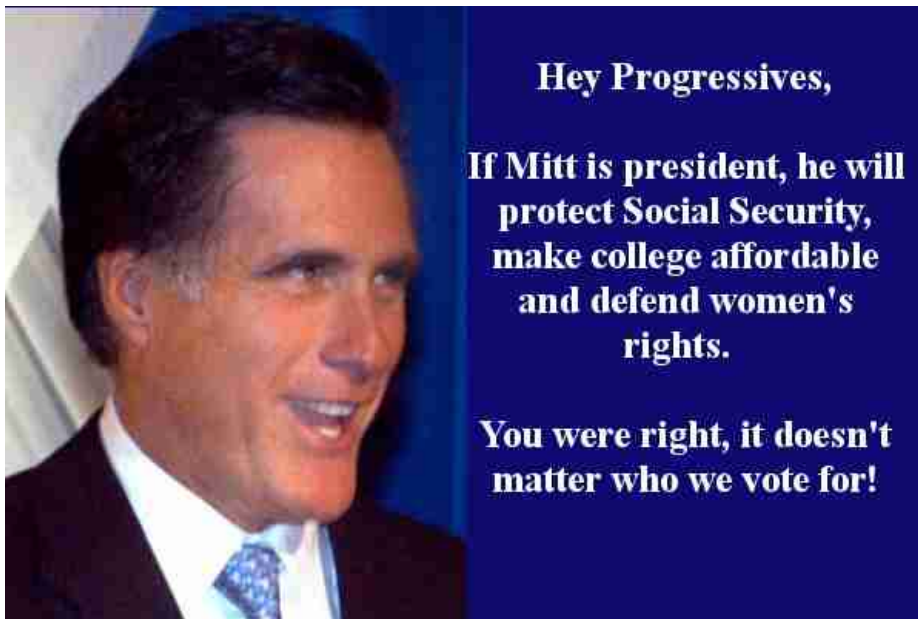

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/oLo0Jwj03JU>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Vote for Romney! (2012-06-27 15:15)

And he'll appoint great Supreme Court justices too!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Supreme Court upholds Obamacare (2012-06-28 14:38)

X

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/b5zU1y_0Geo

President Barack Obama scored a big victory today with the Supreme Court ruling upholding Obamacare. Will this have any impact on the November elections? Hard to say. It could end up motivating both sides, but I think Democrats will bet more juice when it comes to energy. This is because lots of Republicans are already suspicious of where Romney stands on health care given his record with "Romneycare" or as some conservatives put it "Obamney-care" in Massachusetts.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-07-09 01:27:18)

Check out obama vs mitt in the ring of who rules united state @ www.whowinsobama.com

Health reform benefits for the American people (2012-06-28 16:23)

www.whitehouse.gov/healthreform

HEALTH REFORM BENEFITS THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

The Supreme Court's decision to uphold the Affordable Care Act ensures hard-working, middle class families will get the security they deserve and protects every American from the worst insurance company abuses.

- ✓ Lets millions of young adults stay on parents' insurance until age 26
- ✓ Ends insurance company power to cap the amount of care a person can receive in their lifetime
- ✓ Stops insurance companies from canceling coverage when someone gets sick
- ✓ Lowers the cost of care for those on Medicare and helps seniors save money on their medication
- ✓ Requires insurance companies to cover preventive services like mammograms free of charge
- ✓ Strengthens and protects Medicare by increasing penalties for fraud
- ✓ Stops insurance companies from denying coverage to children with pre-existing conditions
- ✓ Ends insurance company power to jack up rates without justification
- ✓ Provides Americans with rebates from insurers who spend too much on CEO bonuses or ads
- ✓ Gives tax credits to small business owners so they can afford to offer quality health care for employees
- ✓ Builds and improves hundreds of community health centers
- ✓ Gives hard-working Americans tax credits so they can afford insurance beginning in 2014
- ✓ Ends discrimination against adults with pre-existing conditions beginning in 2014
- ✓ Prevents insurance companies from charging women more than men and overcharging those who need care the most beginning in 2014
- ✓ Creates state-based marketplaces where people can easily compare and shop for insurance beginning in 2014

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Leveraging the president's momentum (2012-06-29 18:23)

[EMBED]

The Obama campaign is enjoying some big wins lately with his decision to implement a Dream Act-like policy, the Supreme Court rulings on the Arizona immigration law and Obamacare, and today the vote in Congress to extend low student loan interest rates for another year.

With things surging now, it is a good time to take advantage of the momentum by recruiting more people into the campaign. Asking them for money is okay, but after they contribute they may feel they have done their part. Getting them involved in a fun way keeps them active all the way until election time.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

BaldEagleJ (2012-07-03 17:54:57)

This Independence Day help fight LAPD corruption and free speech. Join/Donate to the Walker Legal Defense Fund.

https://www.paypal.com/cgi-bin/webscr?cmd=_donations&business=jwalkerolive%40gmail%2ecom&lc=US&item_name=Walker%20Legal%20Defense%20Fund¤cy_code=USD&bn=PP%2dDonationsBF%3abtn_donateCC_LG%2egif%3aNonHosted

(2012-06-30 18:18)

6.6 July

(2012-07-06 13:07)

Keeping the right perspective on fundraising (2012-07-07 14:06)

The news from Mitt Romney's campaign is that the candidate and the RNC were able to raise about $100 million in June. That's a hefty sum although still well off the all-time mark of $150 million set by the Obama campaign in 2008. However, the election is not likely to be won by money alone. The most important factor concerning money is that the campaign have enough money to get its message out. So long as the Obama folks keep some money in their treasure chest for the last few weeks of the election, they should be fine.

At a certain point, money does not make so much a difference as the issues. If the candidate has enough money to get the message out, they will compete with their opponent on the issues. It doesn't matter how much the opponent spends repeating their message.

Money makes much more of a difference in races where the opponent cannot get the message out sufficiently. Generally, this means hitting each targeted voter at least three or four times with key points that differentiate the candidate from all of the others in the race.

The one thing that the campaign does not want to do is panic, since that will spread through the ranks. President Obama's strength is in people and many of these people are barely making ends meet during these tough economic times. So they have to be careful in not scaring people away from getting more involved by overly soliciting for donations.

They need to exude confidence and leverage the advantages that they have and that means getting more people involved.

X

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/Nek_J14uMGI

Volunteer

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Still waiting for Obama numbers (2012-07-07 14:32)

Note that the Obama campaign has not released its numbers for June, so we can't say for sure that they are behind Romney. Even if they are behind, we don't know by how much.

While it's difficult to say how much the campaign will need to get its message out, the general cost of an ad campaign in the battleground states seems to be around $20 to $25 million. So, if the campaign ran one of these each month, then you would have to add to this amount the operational expenses for the offices, staff, ground campaign, etc.

Probably in the last few weeks, they will spend maybe double or triple this amount on ads, maybe more.

In the 2008 election, the Obama campaign spent $235,974,838 on TV ads between April 3 and November 5. That averages out to about $33.7 million a month, although a larger portion was spent during the latter part of this period just before the election.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Jobs reports (2012-07-08 16:48)

The latest government jobs report is not great and there are four more reports of this kind left before the Nov. 5 election.

Due to the financial crisis in Europe, there is more than a small possibility that some or all of these reports could be discouraging no matter what the Obama administration does.

European and US banks have become increasingly intertwined. The financial crisis that occurred in 2007 hurt both the US and Europe. The banks in the United States and Europe lend to each other and they fund big projects across the "pond."

Because the crisis is so severe, it is bound to have an impact here in the United States. Money for new investments in business or to keep already existing companies afloat is drying up on both sides of the Atlantic.

Potentially, this could hurt the Obama campaign, but there are ways to handle these jobs reports. First of all, they could discuss as much as possible other important issues. As Fareed Zakaria noted, despite the harsh economy, most people are employed.

However, there is not getting around the importance of maintaining a good jobs market. Therefore, the Obama administration will simply have to lay things out in a manner which everyone can understand.

While the US economy may still be rough, it is nothing compared to what is going on in much of Europe. This is because Europe chose a path of austerity – cutting spending – similar to what Mitt Romney and the Republicans want to do here.

Europe took the wrong path, but these problems are starting to spill over into our borders. What we do not want to do is follow this same plan of making deep spending cuts and, in the process, destroying the jobs and consumer market!

The Obama campaign has to make it clear that the Romney/GOP plan will spell doom to an economy that was just beginning to recover. Another thing that the administration may need to address is how to help stabilize things in Europe.

The president has started talking about this and they really need a plan because the situation there is very serious. If a nation like Italy, or even France, has problems similar to those plaguing Greece, then the repercussions can be extremely harmful.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

stankamerican (2012-07-25 07:26:52)

Keep pointing out that the Republican controlled Congress refuses to pass the President's job bill due to their selfish desire to keep the economy as weak as possible in order to further their hopes of assuming the Presidency.

Are the Republicans Patriots or Punks?

stankamerican (2012-07-25 08:15:05)

Open letter to Pres. Obama,

Mr. President allow me to introduce you to who I am.

I am an 80 year old who was born into an America whose Pres. was F.D.Roosevelt.

I became aware as my mind matured that my family was poor, living on home relief. You see my father was out of work for years there was a Depression. Only through Pres. Roosevelt's concern for humanity was it that this country created a job for my dad under his WPA program.

This great President became a beloved figure of the masses he cared for and I would like to believe he loved them back.

As you might imagine I support you because I believe you do care for the 98 % and because you understand what Roosevelt represented.

I hereby offer to you and your party whatever I can do to help you to be reelected.

I have made a small financial donation to your campaign even though I am almost bankrupt.

If I may make a request it is that you stand behind Pres. Roosevelt's vision of a comfortable old age for his people. He envisioned a society covered by a program called Social Security. I am sure he and his advisors foresaw an America whose Senior population after making contributions to their pensions from their lifetime of working year salaries, would be dwarfed by the continued growth of a younger population and the resultant growth in employment and revenue.

Never in his most troubled nightmares would he imagine a Congress and a Senate that would vote to send our jobs offshore without so much as a consideration of some tax to support his concept of supporting seniors in their old age. No less a President that would not Veto such a damaging bill.

I therefore request that our politicians, who have been granted the privilege of representing their constituency, be covered by the selfsame Social security and Medicare they are so freely willing to cut. They should Immediately rescind their privileged and free retirement program and superior health care programs that they voted for themselves paid out of the mandated taxes of the average american workers hard earned salaries before tampering with Pres. Roosevelt's dream.

StankAmerican

Poll numbers (2012-07-10 15:02)

While some folks appear to be in panic over Mitt Romney's fundraising numbers, the polls show that President Barack Obama continues to hold a strong position.

While it looked for awhile that his lead in battleground states might be sagging, the most recent polls suggest a possible comeback. Just today a PPP survey showed the president leading in the important state of Virginia by eight points.

A Gallup poll of swings states showed Obama with a slight lead, actually a statistical tie – but it also showed that people are becoming even more disillusioned with Romney. Apparently, the Obama campaigns TV and other ads are working. The poll also showed the president with a slight edge on who is better to lead the economy.

So far, the Obama campaign has outspent Romney in advertising by a wide margin. In May, Obama spent about $31 million on TV and online advertising. A lot of Romney's money is actually going to pay for fundraising expenses. These costs may arise from the swank events that his campaign must arrange for their many deep pocket investors.

An ABC/Washington Post poll also had encouraging news for the president. It showed that about three quarters of those who will vote for him, actually support the president. In contrast, nearly two-thirds of Romney supporters said their main motivation was their opposition to Obama.

What this could mean is that the president's supporters will be more active when it comes time to get out the vote. Other polls have also shown that Obama support base is more enthusiastic than Romney's.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2012-07-12 18:33)

Today's revelation in the Boston Globe threatens to unravel Mitt Romney's campaign for the presidency. The report shows that Romney was still listed as

Romney scrambling after Bain revelation (2012-07-13 17:30)

Mitt Romney's campaign has been playing defense after a report in the Boston Globe calling into question their statements about when the candidate left Bain Capital.

The new information suggests that either both Romney and the campaign were not telling the truth when they claimed the candidate left Bain in 1999, or there were errors in the company's SEC filings from 1999 through 2002.

Given that Romney appears to have been at least the sole stockholder and board chair at the time, he could be guilty of a felony since he signed SEC filings stating that he was acting at the time as CEO and president of the company.

The Bain attacks are potentially devastating not only on their own, but in the sense that they suggest that Romney is every bit as secretive as Democrats have been suggesting. This will tie in very well with attacks on the GOP candidate for not releasing more of his tax records.

Additionally, there reportedly is information that Romney may have claimed he was active at Bain during his campaign for Massachusetts governor. Just today, a report from Jed Lewison at Daily Kos reveals that Bain Capital issued a press release dated July 19, 1999 that indicates Romney was still working "part-time" as the company's CEO.

According to Romney he had retired from Bain in February, 1999.

These revelations may have a strong impact on whether voters will be able to trust the candidate or not. Many voters, even among Republicans, already do not like Romney, but their dislike of Pres. Obama is enough for them to grudgingly support the apparent Republican nominee.

The Romney campaign has not been doing a very good job at handling the news suggesting to some that they are in a bit of disarray. Possibly, members of the campaign team are as surprised as anyone else about this news and they may want their candidate to come clean with them so they know what to expect in the future.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Five-O (2012-07-15 19:46:31)

Mr. Obama,

You continue to endear yourself to half of the country while alienating the other half.

Romney for President. Save this country as we knew it, not as you and your ilk desire it to be.

Joe in Oregon

Anonymous (2012-07-15 23:27:33)

These Bain questions will continue to haunt Romney. Seamus The Dog is still haunting him too... now there's a seamus the dog video game you can play: seamus-the-dog.com

Anonymous (2012-07-19 12:09:23)

I jsut saw the Commercial knocking Romney. Bull, Romney was just being a good businessman using the tax breaks given by a corrupt government.

Anonymous (2012-07-24 19:56:26)

I am a democrat and plan to vote for President Obama again this year. I will say, however, that the commercial with Romney singing America is in the worst taste of all of the negative ads I have seen. Anyone singing America, whether he's your candidate or not, does not need this kind of negative commentary. I believe it hurts the President and make him look common. I know he is a smart man and a great leader but the person(s) responsible for this ad should be fired and the President should pull it ASAP.

aaronwemple/tweetme (2012-07-30 17:58:51)

Dear Obama: What would you do about the civil war declared in your home state? (Saw it at the courthouse, and uprightusa.org)

Barackobama.com needs to step up SEO (2012-07-17 19:07)

A cursory check on the major search engines Google, Yahoo and Bing suggests that President Obama's team has not been keeping up with search engine optimization.

This is quite a far cry from 2008 when the Obama team dominated the search engines.

For example, I tried both personalized and the anonymous search on Google using the search terms "Obama job plan" and "Obama jobs plan." The official campaign website, <http://barackobama.com>, did not show on the first page of results!

When I did a Google search for "Romney job plan" and "Romney jobs plan," the official Romney website, <http://mittromney.com> came up on the top of the first page!

Furthermore, the results for the Obama search featured more negative results lambasting the president's jobs plan compared to the Romney jobs search.

When I searched for a related search query "Obama economic plan," barackobama.com came up only in fourth place in the list of results. However, again the search for "Romney economic plan" had the official campaign website at the very top of the search page.

A search for "Obama tax plan" produced results with the official Obama site near the bottom of the page while "Romney tax plan" had the official Romney site in second place.

The news results on these pages are more favorable for the president possibly indicating his superior press outreach. However, it is uncharacteristic for the official website to appear so low for important queries.

Another important search term "Obamacare" does not turn up either the campaign site or the White House site on the first page. At the very top of the results is an article from Conservapedia, a resource for political conservatives!

If I type in "Obama health care" though, the picture improves favorably with multiple links for both White House and campaign site.

Given the importance of economic issues, though, I think the campaign needs to get moving more on SEO. Many people use the Internet to get most of their information including on major political issues, so they need to be vigilant on what is happening on the online battlefield. For example, try a search for "health care mandate." The results could use a lot of improving. A dedicated SEO team should be able to turn things around fairly quickly.

Young Americans for Obama organized and made calls together in Iowa this week—to join in, sign up to volunteer for an upcoming event near you.

Volunteer

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Romney to pick VP after Olympics (2012-07-19 22:05)

According to multiple news sources, Mitt Romney will hold off announcing his pick for vice president until after his European trip. The presumptive Republican presidential nominee will attend the Olympic Games to watch his wife's horse compete in equestrian events.

Romney will also have a couple of big fundraisers in London organized mainly for bankers and business tycoons.

While Romney may have already selected his running mate, he will likely wait until after the Olympics to make an announcement since the competition would distract people's attention.

The decision to attend the Games is rather curious as there are only three and a half months to go before the election. Originally, the Romney campaign said that their candidate would not attend because he would be too busy campaigning.

President Obama will not attend the Games, but the First Lady will instead lead the U.S. Olympic Team in London.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/OMSqU1uFNFM>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Why is Obama spending so much more than Romney? (2012-07-25 12:31)

From the campaign filings, it is clear that Barack Obama's campaign is spending much more than Mitt Romney's campaign on things like TV ads and just about any other type of expenditure. There are two obvious reasons for this discrepancy.

First of all, the Romney campaign has lots of cash that can only be spent during the general election. This comes from wealthy donors who gave the maximum amount during the primary and then donated again for the race against the Democratic nominee. These funds will only be available after the Republican convention.

For the Obama campaign, they still have plenty of cash that was not spent during the primary. The Obama donors are mostly regular people who give small amounts on a periodic basis. Most of them will never come close to reaching the campaign contribution limits. So, the Obama team has less restrictions on the money it can spend early.

The other clear reason for early spending is the need to counter the attacks from pro-Romney super-PACs. Although Obama also has super-PACs on his side, they got off to a late start and are just beginning to catch up on fundraising. So, the Obama campaign has had to fight off the Romney super-PAC attack ads.

Why more positive ads are needed

While it is important to counter some of the negative ads from the Romney side, it is equally important to avoid getting too caught up in this exchange.

Every time the campaign broadcasts a negative ad against Romney, the president must declare in his voice "I am Barack Obama and I approved this message." This can end up hurting the president's favorability ratings and even his approval ratings.

The campaign should concentrate more money on ads like "The Choice" pasted in the video below. These ads can help improve the president's image and likeability factor. As the campaign moves closer to Nov. 6, the Obama team should leave more of the counter attack ads to pro-Obama super-PACs and labor unions.

What the campaign wants to emphasize is the president's vision for the future and why voters should choose him over Mitt Romney.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/FBorRZnqtMo>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2012-07-27 15:14:45)

Regarding tv ads: I believe that, unfortunately, negative ads work. However, it depends on the ad.

There is an ad that is frequently seen in New York (and also in Florida) in which Romney is heard singing America, the Beautiful. Printed on the screen, but not heard, are a series of legitimate criticisms of Romney.

People get up and move around during commercials and can miss what's printed on the screen. The only way the Romney criticisms can make an impact is if they are heard.

I cringe every time this ad comes on - I think it's a waste of campaign funds.

Anthony Nelson (2012-08-07 09:50:56)

The election should not be based on who has more money. They need to take care of the American People. We need someone that is not in there to say look at me I'm the president. It needs to be someone where we know their background and not with a lot of things missing. The presidential race has gotten more about the money and not about The People.

Bobby Munizza (2012-08-12 20:01:26)

Obama spending so much is showing ou exactly why we are in debt. He doesn't care about this country he just wants to look good, when really he's a goof. Look at what Romney did by saving the olympics of 2002 in Salt Lake City! He pulled in all that money and made the U.S have the Olympics so he is highly capable of pulling this great country back to its glory. Obama is the most idiotic politician seen and has no economic sense. Sometimes the peoples choice isn't always to best choice!

VOTE WILLARD MITT ROMNEY FOR PRESIDENT 2012!

100 days to go (2012-07-29 14:54)

Today marks 100 days until the Nov. 6 presidential election. Both the Obama and Romney campaigns are no doubt gearing up for the real battle that starts about now or even more so right after Labor Day.

One thing about being this close is the narrative about the economy becomes less and less relevant with each passing week. Of course, if there is a major meltdown, this could change. However, right now it seems despite some bad signs for the economy that it should not decline all that much over the next three months.

The economy did not do that great in the previous three months, but it seems not to have had much impact on the president's job approval ratings, which have remained about the same. While I'm sure no one is happy about the economy, the probability of it having a much greater impact shrinks the closer we get to Nov. 6 without anything calamitous happening.

Over the weekend, the Obama campaign has been having their "It Takes One" action weekend sponsored by the First Lady Michelle Obama. The effort is a dry run for the big voter mobilization effort that will kick up especially in the weeks before Nov. 6.

One easy way to help if you can't afford to spend time volunteering yet, is to donate your Facebook and/or Twitter status to Rock the Vote to help register new voters. Here's the URL to sign up:

<http://donateyouraccount.com/RockTheVote>

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/Ua4cg9VG9nU>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michael (2012-08-02 02:32:59)

Very well said here. Its 95 days from today to held up these elections for presidency. Every people is the US has excitement regarding to these elections and both the candidates are running their campaigns to get more popularity from the peoples. Obama 2012 t shirts

Nora Poggi (2012-08-07 08:06:43)

Just discovered this blog, thank you for all the information provided. My film company is working on the post production of a short film based on a true story, about three brothers whose lives changed on Election Day 2008. We want this film to see the light of day and be a part of Obama's campaign now. If you are interested, please check out our Indiegogo campaign or our Facebook page- thanks for your help! <http://www.indiegogo.com/forspacioussky>
<http://www.facebook.com/ForSpaciousSky>

6.7 August

Romney ready to announce VP choice (2012-08-02 12:10)

Mitt Romney is set to announce his VP pick any time now. I tend to think he may go for a more neutral choice that will anger as few people as possible while keeping most of the attention on himself. In other words, a boring pick like Tim Pawlenty.

However, he faces some pressure from the Tea Party to "balance" the ticket with a person perceived as a true conservative. Romney has not made much of a turn toward the "middle" since becoming the presumptive GOP nominee. For example, his rhetoric during his trip to Israel including support for Jerusalem as the Israeli capital, a stance that is highly inflammatory. Indeed, the Israel trip seems targeted at religious conservatives within his own party more than toward Jewish voters.

Additionally, his trip to Poland looks aimed at focusing on his tough stance toward Russia. Romney claimed during the primary that Russia was 'public enemy no. 1' and these views sit well with many conservatives.

Therefore, there is a possibility that he may choose a VP that will appeal to the Tea Party.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

How to support Barack Obama online (2012-08-02 14:15)

While the campaign would rather have you participating in targeted activities like canvassing and phone banking, not everyone will have unlimited time for that kind of work.

However, people these days spend a lot of time online regardless of where they are at. The expansion of mobile broadband networks and Wi-Fi hotspots along with the increasing popularity of smart phones and other mobile devices means that people are accessing the Internet from almost any location.

If you do not have your own website or blog, the main way to help out with the campaign online is through social media. Nearly everyone today is on these sites, which include Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest and Google+.

Supporting the president online works in much the same way as conventional social network marketing employed by businesses and other organizations. Here are some tips for beginners and more experienced social networkers on how to help the Obama campaign online.

-

Music Video: The Obama Smackdown (2012-08-08 16:08)

More grassroots-produced media coming out in support of Barack Obama including this catchy music video.

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/tffuSjFtoPw>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Three polls suggest Obama surge (2012-08-10 15:30)

Three new polls show Barack Obama is widening his lead against Mitt Romney in the presidential race.

The polls come from CNN, Reuters/Ipsos and Fox News. According to the New York Times' Nate Silver, CNN has the lowest "house bias" of the popular polling services. Ipsos has a strong Democratic bias while Fox News, not surprisingly, tilts strongly for Republicans.

Therefore, the fact that all the polls show a rather high single-digit lead for Obama is significant. In fact, the Fox News poll gives the president a nine point lead, higher than in the other two polls.

The CNN poll shows Obama over 50 percentage point threshold. while both the Fox News and the Reuters/Ipsos poll show Obama just barely below that threshold.

All the polls show the president leading among independent voters. Another strong indicator suggests that Romney is suffering from image problems. People do not like him and tend to have a suspicious view of his business and financial history. This would suggest that some of the Democratic ads may be having an impact.

However, as Christine Pelosi noted on her Facebook page, Romney has not spent much money defining who he is. Instead, he has mainly concentrated on attacking his opponent. Not that the president and his supporters have not done their share on offense. However, we have also seen more efforts by the Obama campaign to highlight his vision for a second term.

Indeed, people seem to already have a good idea of who Obama is and what he stands for. The same is not true for Romney.

With less than three months left until the election, the Romney camp has a choice. They can keep concentrating on attacking the president or they can shift more resources into showing who Mitt Romney is and where he wants to lead the country.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-08-15 04:38:13)

I believe in president Obama and plan to support him again this year. I followed him because he truly cares about Americans. He has walked a mile in our shoes.

I believed in his kindness and honesty. The campaign has become negative on both sides. I would like to see President Obama rise above the negative campaign and be the man he was in 2008.

Do not stoop to Romney's level. Fight fire with water. Americans believe in Obama and will stand behind him. Use facts that you can prove. Romney is going to bury himself.

President Obama inherited a great deal of debt when he took office. We were in the middle of a war. What does Romney expect? President Obama has strived to keep his campaign promises. He believes in America. Stand behind Obama once again.

Anonymous (2012-08-25 17:15:40)

Yes, this election is going to be a landslide for Obama. No need to even go vote. Easy win. I mean it's not like your vote really counts that much anyways. So I what I am doing and stay home.

Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan: Back to the Failed Top-Down Policies (2012-08-12 19:20)

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/oWyk-Mr6cfc?fs=1> M

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/oWyk-Mr6cfc?fs=1>

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/oWyk-Mr6cfc?fs=1> Mitt

Mitt Romney's choice for VP is an obvious offering to conservatives and the Tea Party, the base of the Republican Party.

He's giving up on many independents with this move probably banking more on good turn out rather than persuading undecided voters.

Will comment more on this later.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Nora Poggi (2012-08-13 11:32:44)

My company is in post production of a short film based on a true story, about three brothers whose lives changed on Election Day 2008 when President Obama was elected. The clock is ticking to finish the film, so that it can fulfill its intended purpose to be a part of the conversation in this year's election season, which is why we need your help to share our Indiegogo campaign with the world. We hope the film can make a positive change leading up to the election. Check out the trailer here, and help us spread the word and tell this story! Thanks! <http://www.indiegogo.com/forspacioussky>

Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan plan to end Medicare as we know it (2012-08-15 15:10)

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/UH5dEPbB5yQ?fs=1>

Paul Ryan seems like almost a "gimme" to Democrats in the sense that he is so vulnerable to attack on the Social Security and Medicare issues.

Mitt Romney seems to have decided that he cannot win many undecided voters. He's going with his base instead. Normally, the announcement of a vice presidential running partner results in a "bounce" in the polls, but Romney-Ryan may be lucky to get any positive readings this time around.

The Romney campaign may also be hoping for a bounce during their upcoming national convention. The Democratic convention occurs in September in Charlotte, North Carolina. The race will really move into hyper drive after that last convention with both sides buying up huge amounts of air time.

Find your office

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Grassroots fundraising (2012-08-17 13:38)

I'm doing some grassroots fundraising. The link for my page is here:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/page/outreach/view/2012/kekai>

Trying to raise $200. I'll post some poems and other items with this link over the month of August, so please donate if you like something that you see!

For sector public, you work your magic

You give your time, invest your talent

Through thick and thin, with no onion skin

You fight the fight, you strive to win

Now, come two men – Romney and Ryan

Intent to send your sector flyin'

No quarter, no honor, no bonus, no tribute

In order to fight them, we all must contribute!

Click here to donate!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Weekly Address: Congress Should Back Plan to Hire Teachers (2012-08-18 13:08)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/ndkUaQ5HsBk?fs=1>

President Obama speaks on his educational agenda, specifically on a plan to hire more teachers.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-08-20 17:55:21)

Exactly TRUTH! and eventually somewhere down the line in lifeEveryone WILL BE F*kked worse off than they have ever beenwe will sink quicker in society's pool of quicksand.

'United We Stand, Divided We Fall' Not just the ...

See More

Democrats tie Akin 'legitimate rape' comments to Romney-Ryan news.yahoo.com

Democrats are trying to tie Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan to GOP Rep. Todd Akin's claim that victims of "legitimate rape" rarely get pregnant, accusing Republicans of trying to drag women back to "the dark ages." "Akin's choice of words isn't the real issue here," Democratic National Committee Chair Deb...

Like · · Share.

Pat Hartmann Back and Forth judgement NEVER gets anyone where they want to go, Build continuously, DO NOT GO BACK.
about an hour ago · Unlike · 1.

Pat Hartmann There is only 4 % of the US who are TRULY Wealthy, compared to what was before the Twin Towers Event. Bush put us there, NOT Obama. No One sole person can change ALL and make everyone HAPPY in 4 years. NO ONE! and certainly NOT YOU! as one.

about an hour ago · Unlike · 1.

Pat Hartmann Statistics have and show ALL proof Republicans PUT US there, Democrats, PULL US out! Educate YOURSELVES and KEEP US there, DO NOT GO BACK! Statistics PROVE Republicans are wealthy and have been wealthy and do not understand and/or care, Democrats have bEEn there. They came from the STREETS as the unwealthy to only try as a human against ALL ODDS to make things BETTER. TRUTH! KEEP building, DO NOT GO BACK again.

about an hour ago · Unlike · 1.

Pat Hartmann The streets of CHICAGO NEED to JOIN as ONE to have the BACK of one for the state of ILLINOIS as ONE, to MAKE others STATES as ONE to have the back of ILLINOIS as ONE to have the back of ALL States as ONE, to BUILD and MAKE ALL states as ONE again as a WHOLE to Society to PROVE CHICAGO CAN DO this and MAKE AMERICA the Beautiful again. No one knows this better than the majority of the Streets of the unwealthy, as is New York too. PROVE IT! Let's ALL stand UP as ONE again to MAKE IT! " ONLY THE STRONG SURVIVE" PROVE IT!

about an hour ago · Unlike · 1.

Pat Hartmann Statistics have shown and has been proven that the streets of CHICAGO and the STREETS of NEW YORK have been the sole MAJORITY of the unwealthy against all odds of the MAJORITY to the WEALTHY, GO AGAINST ALL ODDS and take the chance to PROVE IT! WHO's got who's back! SHOW everyone no matter what the outcome, WHO can TRULY come from the deepest of DEPTHS to continue to MAKE one NATION keep building. Make the effort and PROVE IT!

about an hour ago · Unlike · 1

Show us your papers (2012-08-18 13:59)

Show us your papers, enforcers say stopping our car along the way
Skin too dark, look not quite right
Failing tests of appearance white
Children of a migrant journey
Exodus to a land of honey
To save their dream, comes a president
Time for dreamers to represent!

Click here to donate!

///

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Getting out the vote amidst voter suppression (2012-08-25 21:23)

The efforts by Republicans to suppress the vote in many states is deplorable, but there are some things that can be done to counter these moves.

- Firstly, efforts should be made to register every eligible voter. Too many Americans that can vote are not even registered.
- Attorney General Eric Holder should continue his valiant efforts to shut down voter suppression laws that violate the Constitution or federal law.
- Just in case some laws remain intact, every effort should be made to ensure voters get the identification they need to vote. To find out what you need, check out this website: <http://www.ncsl.org/legislatures-elections/elections/voter-id.aspx>. In some cases, you may be able to just bring documents like your birth certificate on the election day. For more info on what to bring: <http://www.gottavote.org/en/CA/?source=footer-nav>
- The Democratic Party also is holding training sessions in the concerned states on how to get voter identification.
- Plan on how you will vote. The best way is to register to vote by mail. If you are voting on election day, schedule your day in detail. Set up automatic reminders on gottavote.org.
- Check to make sure that your family and friends have voted.
- If you see any strange activity going on the polling area, report it to the proper authorities. Don't let anyone intimidate you when you are trying to vote.
- Are You a Lawyer?

Become a Victory Counsel and commit to volunteer your legal expertise toward our voter protection efforts in the months to come.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on defeating voter suppression (2012-08-26 11:37)

In my previous article, "Getting out the vote amidst voter suppression," I discussed some ways of tackling voter suppression efforts going on in certain states.

Another major factor will be organizational get out the vote operations. For example, the AFL-CIO's super-PAC Workers' Voice and MoveOn.org recently announced that they will combine forces to encourage voting in battleground states. They plan on making about 1.5 million phone calls by Nov. 6.

The Obama campaign and the Democratic Party will also launch their voter turnout efforts, which will be quite expansive. Additionally, many progressive organizations have major get out the vote operations including:

- League of Women Voters
- League of Conservation Voters
- Rock the Vote

Other organized labor organizations and minority advocated groups like the NAACP will have their efforts to complement those above.

A recent Suffolk University/USA Today poll suggests that Barack Obama has a large lead among people who are unlikely voters. Therefore, Obama and also probably Democrats in general should benefit from more people going to the polls. The poll also suggested that many of these unlikely voters would be willing to vote if given a little nudge.

After Labor Day, many people who have been sitting on the sidelines up to now will start volunteering more with campaigns. We should see action really start to pick up at that time.

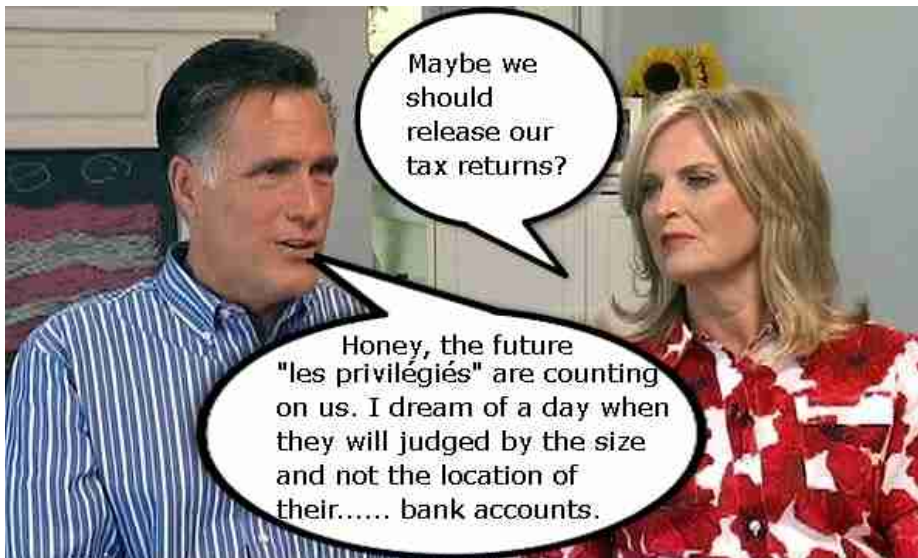

For the Obama campaign, turning out voters may make the difference between victory and defeat. Additionally, it could also influence who controls the House and Senate.

President Obama samples a baked zucchini fry in the Old Family Dining Room after the Kids' State Dinner Aug. 20, 2012. (Official White House Photo by Pete Souza)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Mitt and Ann discuss tax returns (comedy) (2012-08-27 12:08)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

What to watch for at GOP Convention (2012-08-27 14:43)

The national conventions of both major American political parties are gatherings of the faithful. In each case, the ideological base of the party shows up in very high percentage.

For Mitt Romney, this is problematic. He has never been popular with his party's base. Polls consistently show that supporters of President Barack Obama are more enthusiastic when compared to Mitt Romney's supporters.

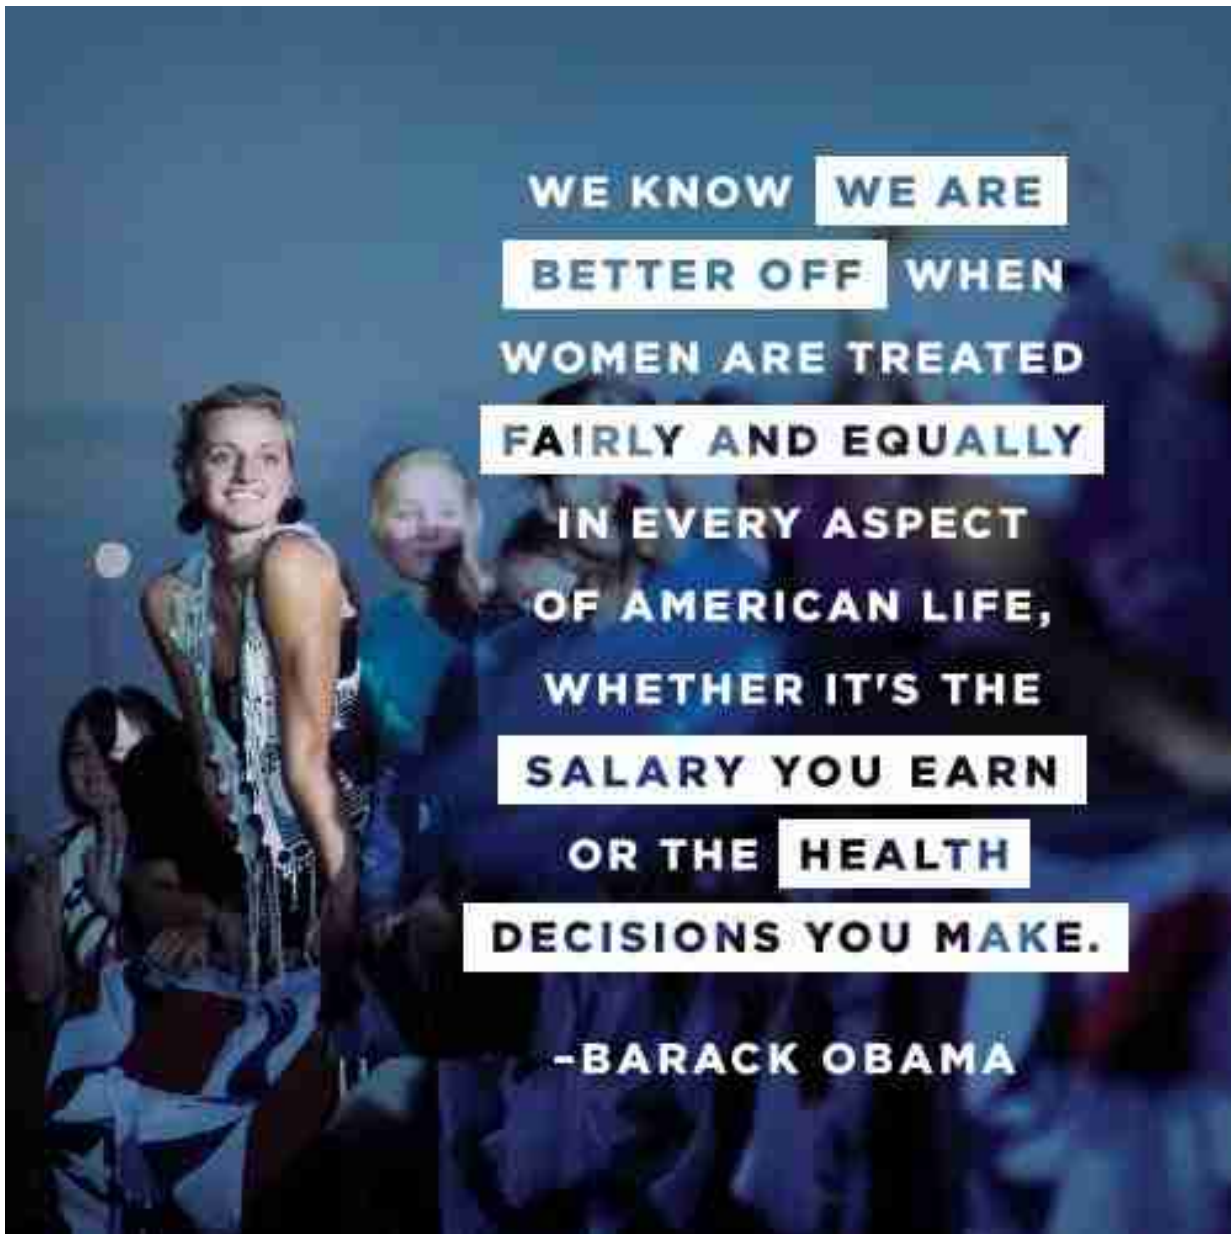

The national convention serves as a point in which the parties rally behind their nominees and begin mobilizing at a much faster pace in the field. In a way, it is like a massive national pep rally. For Romney and his close followers, the convention will largely be about convincing his skeptics that he deserves their energetic support.

Back when it became obvious that Romney would be the Republican nominee, I knew that he would not reset too much toward the "center" as some were predicting. Like another noted moderate, Sen. John McCain, he could not wiggle his way out of commitments made during the primary contest.

Like McCain, Romney chose a Tea Party favorite, a very risky favorite, in Rep. Paul Ryan. Watch Mitt Romney's speech when he accepts his party's nomination and, I believe, you will see more of the same. He will go out of his way to appeal to the ideological right wing.

Indeed, surrogates will probably spend much of their time during the convention trying to convince Tea Party members and other conservatives that they can trust Romney on key issues.

President Obama and the Democrats should take full advantage of this situation. The task for them is to clearly illustrate the clear choice that Americans have on election day. They need to continuously press Romney on issues that show the stark differences on issues that exist between the presidential tickets and their respective parties.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Mitt Romney: You Didn't Build That — You Destroyed It (2012-08-28 12:25)

✕

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/j7zhwVYzJBg?fs=1>

In this video from the DNC, we can see why Mitt Romney is the wrong choice for the middle class. His business experience was not focused on job creation.

While would could say that a traditional venture capitalist helps creates jobs, Romney's company, Bain Capital was involved in another type of investment strategy. In many cases, they invested in companies with the intent on eventually closing the operation once they had sucked as much money out for investors as possible.

Additionally, Romney was also involved in companies that specialized in outsourcing, so instead of creating jobs he was simply shipping American jobs to cheaper labor markets abroad.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

GOP nominates Mitt Romney (2012-08-28 18:39)

The Republican Party nominated Mitt Romney today as their contender for the U.S. presidency. The delegation from New Jersey sent Romney over the top with the magic number of delegates although the nomination does not become official until he formally accepts it on Thursday.

Today's event occurred as Hurricane Isaac made an official first landfall off southeastern Louisiana. Forecasters expect Isaac to make a second landfall sometime tonight possibly south of New Orleans. The tropical weather is upstaging the convention to some extent and organizers are careful not to seem insensitive while celebrating the Romney nomination.

The location of the event in Florida helps to highlight the importance of that state for the Republican nominee. North Carolina, the location for the Democratic National Convention, has been looking good for President Obama lately. In previous polling, the state looked like it was sliding in Romney's direction.

However, the three most recent polls may suggest that Obama has closed the gap and pulled into a tie with his opponent.

On prime time television tonight, Ann Romney and New Jersey Governor Chris Christie will try to "humanize" the nominee who many view as lacking in animation and feeling. On Wednesday, we can expect more of the same thing as Republicans attempt to create a clear image of Mitt Romney for the nationwide viewing audience.

With only 70 days left until the election, the GOP does not have that much time to define their nominee for voters. Television ads help, but nothing is quite so effective as seeing the candidate live during a televised broadcast. Thursday will really be Romney's biggest opportunity to let people know who he is and what he stands for. The other big major windows will be the three debates with President Obama coming in October.

While many people on the Democratic side worry about Romney's fundraising advantage, up to now it has not done much to swing the election in the Republicans favor. For the 2012 election, Romney and the Republican Party have spent about $368 million compared to about $262 million for Obama and the Democratic Party. Outside spending for Romney so far is at $107 million compared to only $39 million for Obama.

However, the president still leads by a slight margin in national polls and he is doing quite well in battleground state surveys.

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/yZCrleRkMhA>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Enthusiasm gap could decide election (2012-08-29 13:47)

While many eyes focus on the money game, it may be getting a little late even for big bucks to make a huge difference. With a little more than two months left, grassroots support may become the deciding factor.

Unless a campaign has an effective message even spending massive amounts of money will only end up producing dwindling returns. President Obama has largely been able to deflect most the GOP attacks directed against him thus far.

Mitt Romney does not want to go too hard on the economy because it allows Obama and Democrats to attack his record at Bain Capital. The late Sen. Ted Kennedy used Bain attacks to defeat Romney in a contest for Kennedy's incumbent U.S. Senate seat. Romney also cannot not use his record as governor because, among other reasons, the specter of Romneycare may turn off the Tea Party base.

A new Washington Post-ABC News poll shows that Romney is the least popular nominee at convention time since they started detailed polling back in 1984. That lack of enthusiasm for the former governor may end up hurting his field efforts.

The same poll showed that, so far, the Obama campaign has done a better job at contacting voters. They are at about the same level as they were in 2008 at this time, with the Obama camp reaching about 20 percent of voters compared to only 13 percent for Romney's team.

Other evidence also suggests that Obama's campaign team is driving harder than Romney's. Look at the graph from alexa.com covering the last six months and comparing the official websites of both campaigns.

The official Obama site, barackobama.com, has consistently outperformed his opponent's counterpart, mittromney.com in terms of direct Internet reach.

Earlier polls showed that Obama has a higher percentage of strong supporters as compared to Romney and this could manifest when it comes time for volunteers to really get "down in the dirt."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Paul Ryan goes on attack at RNC (2012-08-29 21:21)

Rep. Paul Ryan's speech tonight at the Republican National Convention was the first vigorous prime time attack on President Barack Obama.

The speeches last night by Ann Romney and Gov. Chris Christie largely avoided mentioning Obama. Some commentators wondered whether the Republicans would go easy on the president during prime time because people tend to like him so much.

However, Ryan did provide some "red meat" for prime time viewers.

If one of the main tasks of the convention is to increase Romney's likeability, then Gov. Christie's keynote did not accomplish much as it was too self-centered. Democratic keynote speaker, former President Bill Clinton, is a master of gab who should do a much better job compared to Christie.

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/tWkPoS3Jj1A?fs=1>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Romney likely to appeal to base tonight (2012-08-30 17:01)

When Mitt Romney formally accepts his party's nomination tonight, he has two main directions that he can take if he wants to make major impact. He can go after President Barack Obama hard to appeal to the party faithful or he can attempt to woo independents watching on prime time television.

By giving the Tea Party and other conservatives plenty of "red meat" tonight, it will show that he is trying to energize them for the ground war. The party base wants to hear tough attacks on Obama and the Democrats.

On the other hand, independent voters tend to dislike negative campaigning from either party. If he goes on the offensive, his already low likeability ratings go plunge even lower as he addresses a nationwide audience. The likeability index is one of the barometers that can indicate which way undecided voters will break as the election nears.

From released excerpts of the speech, it appears that Romney will attack Obama, but not with the same energy that he has used on the campaign trail.

In yesterday's post, I mistakenly said that Bill Clinton would be the keynote speaker at the Democratic Convention when in reality it will be San Antonio Mayor Julián Castro, the first Latino to ever to deliver a Democratic convention keynote. Bill Clinton will instead enter Obama's name into nomination. The Democrats will feature a strong lineup of women including Elizabeth Warren, Tammy Duckworth, Barbara Mikulski, Kamala Harris, Caroline Kennedy and Eva Longoria.

The Democratic schedule will feature First Lady Michelle Obama on Tuesday, Sept. 4, along with Mayor Castro. On Wednesday, Elizabeth Warren will speak before Bill Clinton who will counter Paul Ryan's speech on the second day of the Republican convention. Vice President Joe Biden will introduce President Obama on Thursday.

President Obama with actress Sissy Spacek in Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 29, 2012. (Official White House Photo by Pete Souza)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Live: Romney begins speech (2012-08-30 19:38)

After a bizarre performance by Clint Eastwood, and an effective if inaccurate introduction by Sen. Marco Rubio, Mitt Romney is speaking now at the Republican convention.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Live: Romney begins speech (2012-08-30 19:38)

After a bizarre performance by Clint Eastwood, and an effective if inaccurate introduction by Sen. Marco Rubio, Mitt Romney is speaking now at the Republican convention.

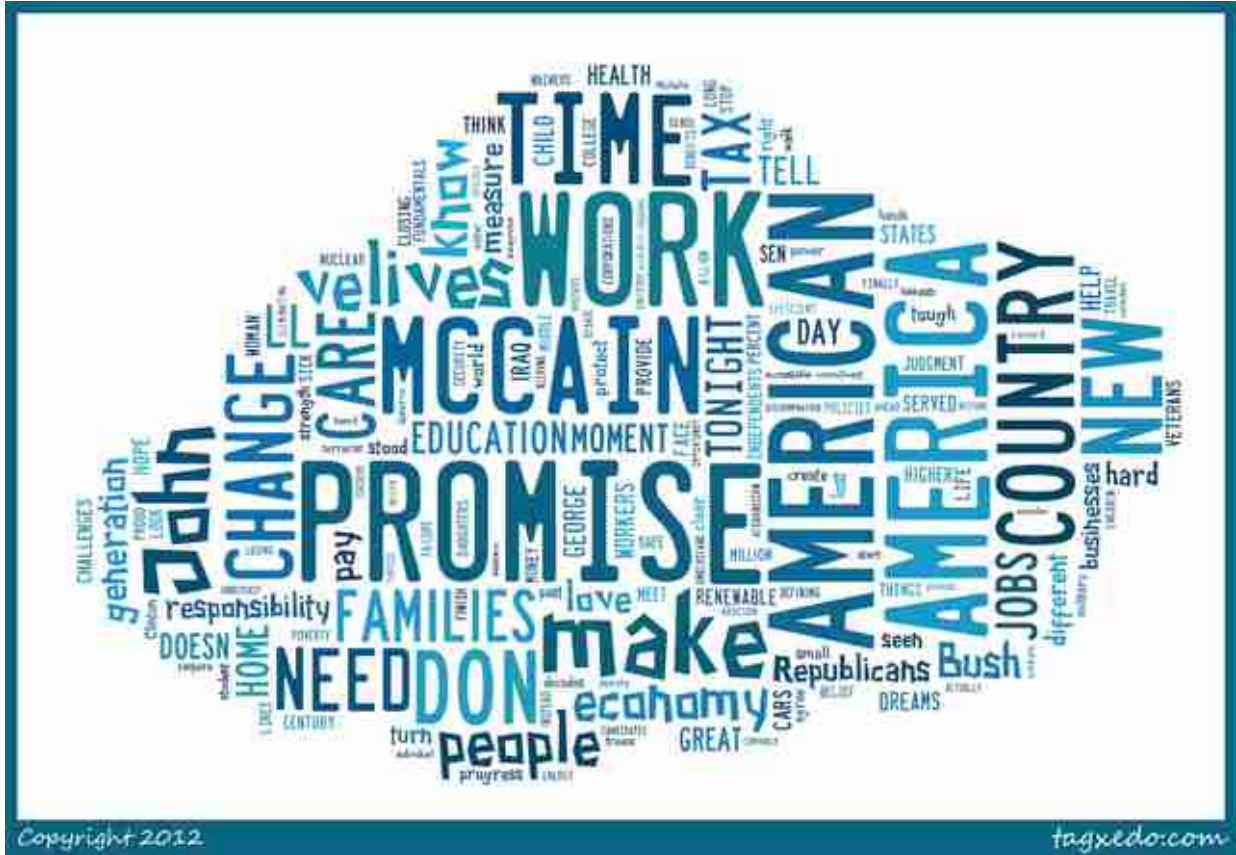

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Romney fails to offer olive branch in speech (2012-08-31 08:34)

Mitt Romney's acceptance speech last night did have some touching family moments. The convention has been about "humanizing" the candidate and a good deal of the speech was autobiographical.

Let's compare his words with the 2008 nomination acceptance speech of Barack Obama. Here is a tag cloud generated from the 2008 transcript:

The word that stands out is "promise" and the speech did have a theme focused around America's promise. Another important keyword is "time." Obama frequently used the phrase "now is the time" in his address.

Here's a similar word cloud for Romney's nomination acceptance speech from last night:

One of the important repeated words in this speech is "business." Romney talks about his own business experience and he also makes appeals directly to small businesses. Another important keyword he uses is "jobs," while Obama instead used the word "work."

Now as to my personal impressions after listening to the speech last night, it appeared divided into two main parts. One that told his personal story and the other which attacked the Obama administration. As a contender against an incumbent, Romney must come out against the president. However, the speech was weak on Romney's plans to change things if he should become president himself.

The only thing that stuck with me without having to go back and read the transcripts is that he would work to repeal Obamacare. He did mention other things, but not in a very inspiring way that made an impression on me, at least. He made what was probably an unnecessary poke at people who are concerned about our environment when he talked about Obama wanting to "heal the planet."

While Obama often referred to "Democrats and Republicans" in his speech, Romney does not mention the opposing party. He does talk about a "united America," but never reaches out to work with Democrats in the future.

His idea of a "united America" may be hard to swallow for those who have followed Republican obstructionism in Congress.

Independents may see Romney's speech and the night in general as rather divisive. While there was talk of unity, there was no real hand of cooperation offered.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Private sector vs. public sector? (2012-08-31 13:07)

Obama Blog meme:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

6.8 September

Democrats can gain big on convention (2012-09-01 17:28)

The Democratic National Convention in Charlotte, NC offers great opportunities for President Barack Obama and the wider Democratic Party.

Party conventions are big enough on their own, but the Republican convention created some real openings for the Democrats. The event offers a platform to rally the troops and to talk to coveted independents and to those supporters who vote only infrequently. However, this year the Democrats can also show clearly how they differ in approach from the Republicans.

While the GOP convention was cheery at times for the in-group, it may not have been particularly inviting for people who are not diehard Republicans. Much of the Tampa Bay event was rather negative if not downright gloomy.

A Tea Party like atmosphere prevailed at times, and that would likely turnoff independent voters.

In 2008, Barack Obama became noted for his "feel good" events. He was the "hope and change" candidate and the big tent candidate. Democrats would do good to recreate that atmosphere this time around.

While the party base may want "red meat," Democrats may be more inclined to be equally motivated by a positive approach. After all, Democrats are traditionally the "bleeding heart" party that wants to change the world for the better.

Therefore, there is not as much need to spend too much time on hard-hitting attacks against Mitt Romney. As the incumbent, the president wants to appear rather aloof from such behavior. While he should chastise Republicans for obstructing progress during his first term, he should also clearly offer to work with the new post-Nov. 6 Congressional Republicans if they are willing to change their ways.

A "hokey changey" convention is a win-win situation when looked at from the perspective of the party base or from that of independent voters.

The Democratic Party has to show how they clearly have a plan for the future that they can implement with reasonable cooperation from Republicans.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/zGNIHWydb9Q>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2012-09-02 23:11:40)

Better start looking for a JOB because you guys are all put of a job in 65 days Sucker!

(2012-09-02 07:15)

We built it! (2012-09-02 16:15)

Ryan:

Paid for college with father's Social Security benefits.

Worked nearly entire career in public sector

obamabarack.blogspot.com

Romney:

His company Bain received millions in federal, state and local government benefits.

Arranged $10 million Bain bailout by FDIC.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

72-hour push (2012-09-04 15:20)

With two months left until the election and the Democrats ready starting their national convention, the ground game is really firing up. The most important part of the volunteer mobilization effort interestingly takes place during the last 72 hours of the election period.

Anyone who has ever organized a meeting or event should understand this principle. The best time to remind people of an event is as near in time to the event as possible preferably the day before. If you remind them even a week out many people will forget by the time the date arrives.

However, since the task is so large, campaigns generally allot about 72 hours to go through their voter lists. They will call these voters, knock on their doors and leave printed reminders on their front door knobs.

Focuses on infrequent voters

Interestingly, this 72-hour push largely ignores people who vote every election. Instead, it targets infrequent voters that the campaign believes are supporters.

In the months prior to election day, campaign teams prepare for this push by identifying these supporters who vote infrequently. Other targets may include first time voters or first time mail-in voters.

The campaigns also hone their messages in an effort to select issues that will motivate supporters to take the time and vote.

While the 72-hour push is largely about reminding voters that it's election day, in the weeks prior to this time, the campaigns will prep voters by sending out messages that create the right atmosphere. They want people to visualize the importance of the time and to see themselves as making a difference by voting.

Social media and the 72-hour push

The Internet and social media cannot replace traditional get out the vote methods simply because it is against "netiquette" to directly contact people that you do not personally know.

However, social media is a very cost-effective supplement to traditional techniques like phone banking, canvassing and literature drops. Here are some tips that can help improve Internet get out the vote efforts:

- Ask friends, followers, fans and others in our social network to not only vote themselves, but to check to see if their family and friends, both on and offline, are voting.
- Remind activists in your network that its time to participate in the big push.
- Include calls to action that will encourage sharing of your posts like "Click Like and Share" of Facebook and "Retweet" on Twitter.
- Post interesting content like videos, articles and images that share the same theme about fulfilling one's civic responsibility of voting.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

First night about contrasts, insight into presidency (2012-09-04 21:03)

If the first night of the Republican convention was about introducing the human side of Mitt Romney, the Democrat's first night involved showing the clear differences between the two candidates along with providing insight into the difficulties the Obama administration faced.

In terms of raw energy and excitement, there was not comparing the two conventions. The Republican convention did not really get rocking until night three. The Democrats got to little bit of a slow start in passing the new platform, but things really started to pick up from that point.

By the time Gov. Deval Patrick was on the floor, the crowd was in a near frenzy. A very well-produced video on Ted Kennedy helped get everyone in the mood with many delegates openly sobbing.

The keynote address by Mayor Julian Castro was electrifying and it seemed like it would be hard for First Lady Michelle Obama to keep up the momentum. However, she immediately had the crowd spellbound with an intimate talk about the First Couple's first term in office.

We heard throughout the night comparisons of President Barack Obama and Mitt Romney. It was clear that the Democrats wanted to show people that they had a clear choice between the two candidates.

If the Democrats can translate even half of tonight's energy into work for their ground campaign, they will be in very good shape.

Tomorrow night, we can probably expect former Pres. Bill Clinton to attack Mitt Romney a little harder. He will also likely endorse Obama's work and plans for the economy. He may break down why Obama's plan will work, while Romney's will lead to the same problems that got us into the current mess.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bridesmaids Hairstyles (2012-09-05 13:29:42)

I love Obama, he is a hero in my heart!

Quan Nguyen from websites Bridesmaids Hairstyles

How the conventions can make a difference (2012-09-05 15:12)

The overnight ratings show that the DNC opening night exceeded the RNC's opening by about one million viewers. Conventions make a big difference in giving each party a "bounce" with voters. The three major broadcasting networks and the three large cable news networks along with many smaller TV networks set aside at least an hour in prime time during the conventions for three or four days.

Just think of one day of commercial-free prime time advertising. The costs can range from about $50,000 to $450,000 for a 30-second commercial. If we consider that the conventions get high viewership and calculate an average of $150,000 for each 30 second segment on one of the broadcasting networks, then a full hour on one station would cost $18,000,000.

On all three networks, that would add up to $54,000,000 a night and $162,000,000 for all three days and that's just for the broadcast stations. The cable news networks have smaller audiences but they provide many more hours of coverage.

For this reason, presidential campaigns usually get a big bump after their conventions. The fact that Mitt Romney's bounce has been so small reinforces the idea that Republican messaging is not effective in turning public opinion against him.

We will see not long after President Obama gives his acceptance speech on Thursday whether the Democratic message can create a more substantial momentum for Democrats.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Bill Clinton works magic as Democrats nominate Barack Obama (2012-09-06 08:34)

Former President Bill Clinton fired up the crowd last night and gave a masterful breakdown of the political and economic history of President Barack Obama's first term.

The second night of the Democratic National Convention focused far more on policy than the first night, which was much more of a pep rally leading up to First Lady Michelle Obama's intimate and insightful speech.

There were more speakers and many short videos that covered the important issues relating to Obama's accomplishments, his plans and the contrasts with Republican intentions. A few speakers, including Missouri Rep. Emanuel Cleaver, did ignite the crowd prior to the main event featuring Massachusetts candidate for U.S. Senate Elizabeth Warren and Clinton.

Warren really woke up the crowd as she hammered the Republicans and Mitt Romney. Her mention of Romney's well-known "Corporations are people too, my friend" remark got a rousing response from the audience in the Time Warner Cable Arena.

People were ready for an adrenaline rush after hours of speeches on policy and Warren delivered.

When Clinton took the stage, there was quite a lot of anticipation in the air. He did not fail his many fans in the audience. Single-handedly, he laid out the issues in a style that everyone could readily absorb.

He explained how deep the economic damage was when Obama took office and how no other president, including himself, could have fixed the situation in just four years. He also promised that if voters reelect President Obama, they will begin feeling the benefits of a full recovery in his second term.

Clinton urged Democrats and the TV audience to reject the Republican's "double down on trickle down" economics.

The Obama campaign team must be pleased with the Clinton performance. He further energized the party base after a spectacular first night and gave the best possible defense of the administration along with a solid endorsement of the president's plans for the future.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/l26ltndGwZo>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Schedule for final day at DNC (2012-09-06 11:39)

Here's the schedule for today's events at the Democratic National Convention based on various reports.

The DNC is keeping some of the guests and timings secret to create suspense before President Barack Obama formally accepts the party's nomination.

Former House Rep. Gabrielle Giffords will start off the official opening tonight with the Pledge of Allegiance. A number of Hollywood celebrities including Desperate Housewives star Eva Longoria will make appearances tonight according to a CNN report.

The "mystery guests" appear to all be Hollywood women: Scarlett Johansson, Natalie Portman and Kerry Washington. This will create an interesting contrast to the RNC's selection of Clint Eastwood. Caroline Kennedy may also speak tonight.

Harold and Kumar star Kal Penn will host the event on the live webcast at <http://barackobama.com/live> along with a bevy of celebrity Democrats.

Thursday at DNC

11:35 a.m. (All times EDT)

First lady Michelle Obama and second lady Dr. Jill Biden will address the Women's Caucus meeting.

11:45 a.m.

Former U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, former Under Secretary of Defense for Policy Michèle Flournoy and White House Chief of Staff Jack Lew will address the International Leaders Forum.

12:10 p.m.

Jill Biden will address the LGBT (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender) Caucus.

1:00-3:00 p.m.

Rev. Al Sharpton and the National Action Network will host an event to raise awareness about voter ID laws and their effect on the African-American community. Others scheduled to attend: Rep. Emanuel Cleaver, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus; Rev. Dr. W. Franklyn Richardson, chairman of the Conference of National Black Churches; Rev. Freddie Haynes, senior pastor of Friendship-West Baptist Church; Roslyn Brock, chairwoman of the NAACP and gospel singer John Kee.

2:00-4:00 p.m.

Screening of "Electoral Dysfunction," a documentary about political humorist Mo Rocca's tour of America's patchwork of electoral systems.

6:00 p.m.

Events kick off at the Time Warner Cable Arena. The DNC is being hush-hush about the schedule of events.

Roll Call reports Former Rep. Gabrielle Giffords, D-Ariz., will lead the Pledge of Allegiance.

CNN cited a leaked draft of the schedule that says A-list actors Scarlett Johansson, Natalie Portman and Kerry Washington are the surprise guests. The rock band Foo Fighters is also reportedly in the roster. Actor Eva Longoria is also reportedly going to speak, according to AP.

8:00 p.m.

Actor Kal Penn hosts a Web-only convention special featuring famous Hollywood Democrats, including Elizabeth Banks, Aisha Tyler, Olivia Wilde, Fran Drescher, Zack Braff, Marc Anthony and Alexis Bledel.

10:00 p.m.

President Barack Obama is scheduled to pitch his vision of America to the world. Vice President Joe Biden is expected to give a 25-minute speech prior to the president's address.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2012-09-06 14:41)

Confirmed DNC schedule for Thursday (2012-09-06 15:07)

Here's the confirmed schedule for tonight's DNC event provided by the Washington Post. Some interesting videos coming up.

2012 Democratic National Convention Podium Schedule

Thursday, September 6, 2012

"Americans Coming Together"

Time shown as local - Charlotte, North Carolina, EDT

4:30 PM - 6:00 PM (LOCAL)

Remarks

The Honorable Kay Hagan

Member of the US Senate, North Carolina

The Honorable Walter Dalton

Lieutenant Governor, North Carolina

The Honorable G.K. Butterfield

Member of the US House of Representatives, North Carolina

The Honorable David Price
Member of the US House of Representatives, North Carolina
The Honorable Mel L. Watt
Member of the US House of Representatives, North Carolina
Remarks
James Rogers
CEO Duke Energy
Live Performance
James Taylor
Singer/Songwriter
Call to Order
The Honorable Antonio R. Villaraigosa
Chair of the 2012 Democratic National Convention Committee
Mayor of Los Angeles, California
Invocation
Reverend Gabriel Salguero
President, National Latino Evangelical Coalition
Presentation of Colors
American Legion Post 400 of Charlotte, North Carolina
Darrell B. Bonapart, Joe Michalic, Robert E. Welch, Marvin R. Weber Pledge of Allegiance
National Anthem
Marc Anthony
Singer/Songwriter
Progress for People Video: Seniors
American Voices Remarks
Carol Berman
Remarks
The Honorable Donna F. Edwards
Member of the US House of Representatives, Maryland
The Honorable Barney Frank
Member of the US House of Representatives, Massachusetts
In Memoriam Video and Remarks
The Honorable Harvey Gantt
Former Mayor of Charlotte, North Carolina
6:00 PM – 7:00 PM (LOCAL)
The Honorable John Lewis
Member of the US House of Representatives, Georgia Stronger Together Video: Don't Ask Don't Tell
American Voices
Jason Crow
Live Performance
Mary J. Blige
Singer/Songwriter
Remarks
The Honorable Debbie Wasserman Schultz
Chair of the Democratic National Committee
Member of the US House of Representatives, Florida
The Honorable Antonio R. Villaraigosa
Chair of the 2012 Democratic National Convention Committee

Mayor of Los Angeles, California
The Honorable Tammy Baldwin
Candidate for US Senate, Wisconsin
Member of the US House of Representatives, Wisconsin
The Honorable Michael Nutter
Mayor of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
Stay Stronger Together Video: Marriage Equality
American Voices Remarks
Zach Wahls
7:00 PM – 8:00 PM (LOCAL)
Jim Messina
Campaign Manager, Obama for America
American Heroes Video: Auto Workers
American Voices
Kenyetta Jones, Ryan Case, Ed Meagher, Martha Figueroa, Lucas Beenken, Rob Hach
Vice Presidential Nomination Intro
The Honorable Antonio R. Villaraigosa
Chair of the 2012 Democratic National Convention Committee
Mayor of Los Angeles, California
Nominating Remarks
Beau Biden
Attorney General of Delaware and Son of Vice President Joe Biden
Vote by Acclamation
Live Performance
Foo Fighters
Band
Remarks
The Honorable James E. Clyburn
Assistant Democratic Leader and Member of the US House of Representatives,
South Carolina
Scarlett Johansson and Kerry Washington
Actresses
8:00 PM – 9:00 PM (LOCAL)
Remarks
Caroline Kennedy
Author and Attorney
The Honorable Xavier Becerra
Democratic Caucus Vice Chair and Member of the US House of Representatives, California
The Honorable Jennifer Granholm
Former Governor of Michigan
Eva Longoria
Actress
The Honorable Brian Schweitzer
Governor of Montana
The Honorable Charlie Crist, Jr.
Former Governor of Florida
Remarks
The Honorable John Kerry

Member of the US Senate, Massachusetts

9:00 PM – 10:00 PM (LOCAL)

Video: Veterans

Remarks

Admiral John B. Nathman

United States Navy, Retired

Introductory Remarks

Angie Flores

Remarks

Dr. Jill Biden

Second Lady of the United States

Vice President Joe Biden Video

Remarks

The Honorable Joe Biden

Vice President of the United States

10:00 PM – 11:00 PM (LOCAL)

Video and Remarks

The Honorable Dick Durbin

Member of the US Senate, Illinois

President Barack Obama Video

Remarks

Barack Obama

President of the United States

Celebration

Benediction

His Eminence Timothy Dolan

Roman Catholic Cardinal and Archbishop of New York

Retire Colors

Adjournment

#####

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2012-09-06 15:40)

CHICAGO – Below are excerpts of President Obama’s remarks as prepared for delivery. The President’s speech will include a set of goals for our country – and a list of those goals is also provided below.

“But when all is said and done – when you pick up that ballot to vote – you will face the clearest choice of any time in a generation. Over the next few years, big decisions will be made in Washington, on jobs and the economy; taxes and deficits; energy and education; war and peace – decisions that will have a huge impact on our lives and our children’s lives for decades to come.

- “On every issue, the choice you face won’t be just between two candidates or two parties.

- “It will be a choice between two different paths for America.
- “A choice between two fundamentally different visions for the future.
- “I won’t pretend the path I’m offering is quick or easy. I never have. You didn’t elect me to tell you what you wanted to hear. You elected me to tell you the truth. And the truth is, it will take more than a few years for us to solve challenges that have built up over decades. It will require common effort, shared responsibility, and the kind of bold, persistent experimentation that Franklin Roosevelt pursued during the only crisis worse than this one. And by the way – those of us who carry on his party’s legacy should remember that not every problem can be remedied with another government program or dictate from Washington.

“But know this, America: Our problems can be solved. Our challenges can be met. The path we offer may be harder, but it leads to a better place. And I’m asking you to choose that future. I’m asking you to rally around a set of goals for your country – goals in manufacturing, energy, education, national security, and the deficit; a real, achievable plan that will lead to new jobs, more opportunity, and rebuild this economy on a stronger foundation. That’s what we can do in the next four years, and that’s why I’m running for a second term as President of the United States.”

President Obama’s Goals for America

Tonight President Obama will ask the country to rally around a set of goals on manufacturing, energy, education, national security, and the deficit – a real, achievable plan that will create jobs, expand opportunity, and ensure an economy built to last.

Manufacturing

- •
Create one million new manufacturing jobs by the end of 2016
- •
Double exports by the end of 2014

Energy

- •
Cut net oil imports in half by 2020
- •
Support 600,000 natural gas jobs by the end of the decade

Education

- •
Cut the growth of college tuition in half over the next 10 years
- •
Recruit 100,000 math and science teachers over the next 10 years
- •
Train two million workers for real jobs at community colleges

National Security

- •
Invest in the economy with the money we’re no longer spending on war

Deficit

- .

Reduce the deficit by more than $4 trillion over the next decade

###

Obama speech reignites hope (2012-09-07 08:43)

President Barack Obama revisited "hope" in his acceptance speech for the Democratic presidential nomination. The reconnection with his 2008 theme was necessary, in this writer's opinion, for the president to show that his vision remains the same after four years in office.

In the latter part of the speech, he explained in detail, giving many examples, that his hope was in the American people. The people were responsible for change and he showed how the people had created change during his first term. He also promised that he would continue to work with the people for change if granted a second term.

Obama was passionate but controlled throughout much of his presentation giving a sober account of his administration and of his plans for the future if reelected. One could clearly see that he wanted to give more specifics than Romney did in his acceptance speech.

He highlighted the difference between the Democratic and the Republican approaches. The idea that voters had a clear choice in this election has been a constant theme over the three days of the Democratic convention.

The main message is that Democrats believe that everyone, including the government, must work together, while the Republicans believe that individuals, or at least middle class and poor individuals, should not expect anything from government.

Unlike in his 2008 speech, the president did not talk about working together with Republicans except that he mentioned how they had cooperated to cut spending last summer. Instead, he focused on working together with the American people.

Unlike Mitt Romney, who failed to mention American troops serving in war zones, Obama acknowledged his role as commander-in-chief:

Tonight, we pay tribute to the Americans who still serve in harm's way. We are forever in debt to a generation whose sacrifice has made this country safer and more respected. We will never forget you. And so long as I'm Commander-in-Chief, we will sustain the strongest military the world has ever known. When you take off the uniform, we will serve you as well as you've served us - because no one who fights for this country should have to fight for a job, or a roof over their head, or the care that they need when they come home.

In ending the speech, Obama gave out a call to his supporters and to voters in general. He noted that in his vision of America, we travel together and not with each person out on their own. This election was about a choice that would determine the direction of the country for decades. In his words, Americans faced the clearest choice they have had in a generation.

They could choose between two futures and his vision quoting from Scripture was a "future filled with hope."

Pennsylvania and Michigan depend a lot on what happens in the urban areas.

The Philadelphia and Detroit metro regions in PA and MI respectively can dramatically alter outcomes in favor of Obama if there is good turnout in these areas. Most experts believe that the Obama team will be able to rally supporters in these cities although maybe not to the extent they did in 2008. Additionally, Romney is vulnerable to an attack on his auto industry position in Michigan.

Wisconsin though is a different cookie. Given that this recent ad decision came on the heels of the Republican National Convention, it makes one think that there were some benchmarks that they did not meet. Possibly, these were in relation to the expected convention "bounce."

Meta-analysis of past polling data, internal polling and reports from the field may have also had an influence on their decision to go on the defensive. Republicans and their super-PACs will concentrate their resources instead in Colorado, Florida, Iowa, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Ohio, and Virginia.

That really limits their potential paths to victory in the presidential race. What is obvious here is that if the other swing states go to Obama, the Republicans will need to win Florida to prevent an Obama victory. Even winning Ohio and the other six states will not get them to the required 270 electoral votes if they lose Florida.

What, if anything, should the Obama campaign do in response to the latest GOP moves?

They could decide to take the Republicans head on in Florida since that's a must win state for them. However, that could end up sucking up a lot of money. Florida is the most expensive swing state and it is also one of the toughest for Obama according to the polls.

Another strategy would be to concentrate in states that offer more of an opening for Obama. For example, if Obama could win Nevada, New Hampshire, Colorado and Virginia, that would give him 279 electoral votes so long as there are no surprises in other states. Obama is polling best in those four states out of the eight that the Republicans are currently fighting in.

While they should maintain their current efforts in the other four states, they could pull some, but not all, of their resources from states like Pennsylvania and Michigan and redirect them into those battlefields.

With two months remaining, we should continue to see both campaigns make significant strategic moves to adjust to a constantly changing electoral environment.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/p7RXxYRzEYI>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama slips past Romney in August fundraising (2012-09-10 19:15)

President Barack Obama raised more than Mitt Romney for the first time in three months by pulling in $114 million in August compared to $111 million for his opponent.

What makes Obama's fundraising even more significant is that he raised 98 percent of his money from donors who gave $250 or less, while 31 percent of Romney donors fell into that category. That appears to indicate that the president has more supporters available for the ground campaign.

Some of the energy of the Obama campaign was evident at the convention where supporters easily outpaced the Republicans on social media. In fact, President Obama's speech set a new Twitter record.

The speech scored 7.28 on Facebook's "Talk Meter" analysis, the highest from either convention. In comparison, Romney's speech only scored 5.04.

Additionally, there is no reason to think that Obama has an overwhelming presence of geeks and nerds among his supporters, so this phenomenon will also likely translate into more action in the field for the president.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/mZHt1FPRuYM>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

DNC measured as website activity (2012-09-11 14:13)

The Alexa rankings for reach and pageviews for the two official presidential campaigns indicate how much excitement the Democratic National Convention generated for President Barack Obama. The two charts below show activity for both presidential campaigns sites over the last three months

Reach indicates the percentage of total worldwide Internet users while pageviews represents percentage of total worldwide webpage views.

During the DNC, there was a significant jump in each metric for barackobama.com. In comparison, the RNC, which took place at the end of August, hardly seems to have helped Mitt Romney's official website at all. From the online evidence, at least, if there really is an "enthusiasm gap," it appears to favor the Obama campaign.

Supporters can donate money and volunteer to help on these campaign websites. They can also read blogs and other news and articles on these sites. Barackobama.com has a feature known as the Dashboard that allows registered users to campaign online using a digital interface.

Among the ways that they can help online include calling registered voters, contacting people in their area to volunteer, and contributing content including stories and testimonials. The site does not appear yet to have a tool for writing letters to the editor and op-eds like that featured on the 2008 campaign site.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Big Mo (2012-09-13 17:58)

A string of election polls show that President Barack Obama is up both nationally and in the battleground states. His advantage in the national polls is steeper than that in the swing states.

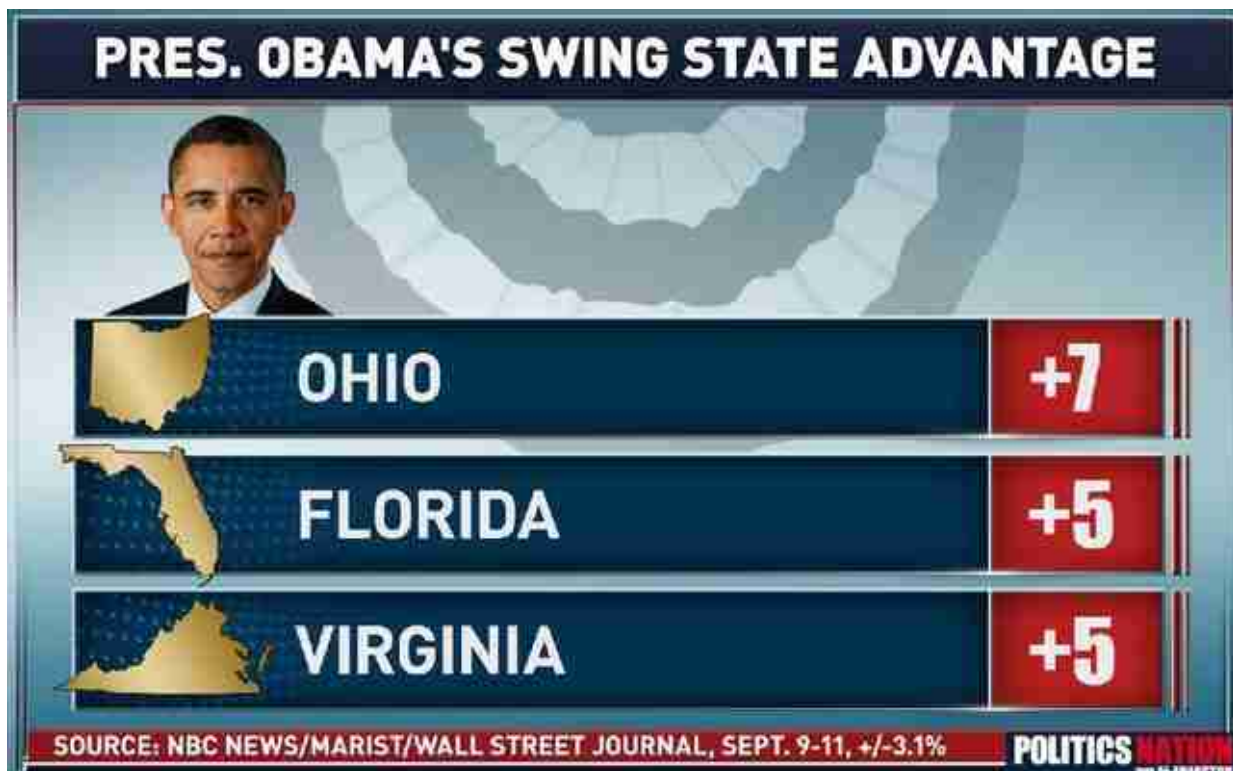

Maybe most importantly, the favorability gap between the two candidates is widening. Mitt Romney just cannot not consistently get voters to like him more. The Republican convention helped him a little, but he is definitely still having difficulty with his image.

One is tempted to think that the Obama campaign is starting to pick substantial momentum, which is known in politics and elsewhere as the "Big Mo." And it's not just the polls that indicate that the campaign is picking up steam. After two months of the Romney campaign winning fundraising by wide margins, the Obama team turned the tables in August.

Then, there was the recent big foreign policy bungle made during Romney's press conference in reaction to the riots in Libya and Egypt. From all directions, it seems that things are moving in Obama's direction.

The Big Mo is like having the wind at your back while sailing, while for the other side, it is more like having to sail against a stiff wind. While it does not guarantee a victory, you definitely want the Big Mo on your side.

Maybe it is still a little early to declare that Obama has the Big Mo. It could be that he's just enjoying a healthy but temporary convention bounce. The next few weeks will give us a better idea as to whether momentum is favoring the president's campaign.

Source: #49026074

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sumit Tamb (2012-09-13 23:01:16)

Hey There. I found your blog using msn. This is a very well written article. I will be sure to bookmark it and come back to read again ,you can refer
OBAMA Osama Secrets

Why Obamacare is a losing issue for Romney (2012-09-15 13:44)

Mitt Romney doubled down on his plan to "repeal" Obamacare recently, but this could help sink his campaign. As each day goes by, more people benefit from features of Obamacare and many are aware of why they are receiving these benefits. At the same time, individuals learn each day that they will come to depend on Obamacare for their retirement especially if they plan on retiring or are forced to retire before they are eligible for Medicare. Each of these individuals may find Mitt Romney's plan to axe Obamacare as harmful to their future and it could have an influence on their vote. The impact could be especially strong among undecided voters. On the other hand, the number of people who would vote against President Obama because of Obamacare has no stimulus to grow. As people learn about Obamacare, they find that most of the information that they thought was true is actually inaccurate. A report just released today by Kaiser, for example, indicates that if Romney were to repeal Obamacare, Medicare would go bankrupt by 2016. Therefore, the more Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan attack Obamacare, the more they risk losing voters who are becoming dependent on that coverage or who are learning that they already benefit from its provisions. Obama's campaign team, for its part, can counter attacks on Obamacare by helping people to understand how the Affordable Care Act is helping them or will help them in the future. Obamacare forms part of a different vision of the future shared by the president and Democrats that focuses on people helping people with a role for government. In this vision, the government, funded by the people, is not the enemy. The vision of Mitt Romney and the Republicans, in its most extreme view, almost demonizes government. They do seem to see a role for government in assisting big business, for example, subsidies for big oil and gas. Yet, they have a problem with safety nets for ordinary people. Their vision is one in which government and the elite move on a different track than that of the middle class and the poor.

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/qnxYlhFfH-4>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-09-23 09:46:52)

Lies lies and more lies by the only tried and true candidate in this race who has failed the American people miserably. Going any more "forward" on obama's path will take us over the cliff. Fool me once, shame on you. Fool us twice, we are the stupidest people on the planet...EVER!!!

100% > 1%

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Voting begins in early states (2012-09-17 20:35)

Mail voting via absentee ballots is already underway in North Carolina with Virginia set to offer these ballots on Friday.

Most states have early in-person voting periods or no-excuse absentee ballot voting periods. Indeed, 24 states and the District of Columbia have both early voting and no-excuse absentee ballot voting periods.

Only 15 states provide no early voting period and only allow absentee voting when the voter has an excuse, for example, when they are living abroad. These states are:

1. Alabama
2. Connecticut

3. Delaware
4. Kentucky
5. Massachusetts
6. Michigan
7. Minnesota
8. Mississippi
9. Missouri
10. New Hampshire
11. New York
12. Pennsylvania
13. Rhode Island
14. South Carolina
15. Virginia

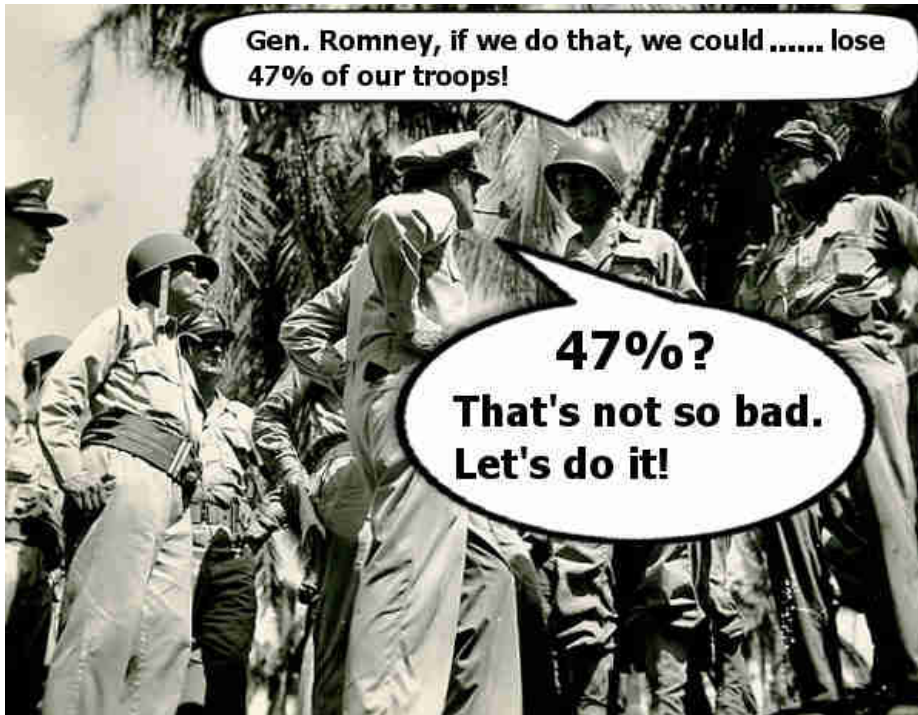

For this week, while North Carolina allows no-excuse absentee voting, Virginia requires that voters have a valid excuse.

The presidential campaign teams will encourage their supporters to vote as early as possible. Once the ballot is cast it is like "money in the bank." Other votes are still up for grabs and they are vulnerable to unfavorable developments including the well-known phenomenon of the "October surprise."

At the same time, the campaigns will wage last-ditch persuasion efforts to win early votes from independents. For information on early voting and absentee voting in your state, visit gottavote.com/.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The release of Mitt Romney's fundraising speech video may turn out to be one of the defining moments of the 2012 campaign along with the highly successful Democratic National Convention.

While it still may be too early to declare that Romney is toast, even many Republican expert commentators are saying that the former Massachusetts governor's campaign is in big trouble.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

hershcampaign2012 (2012-09-25 17:47:01)

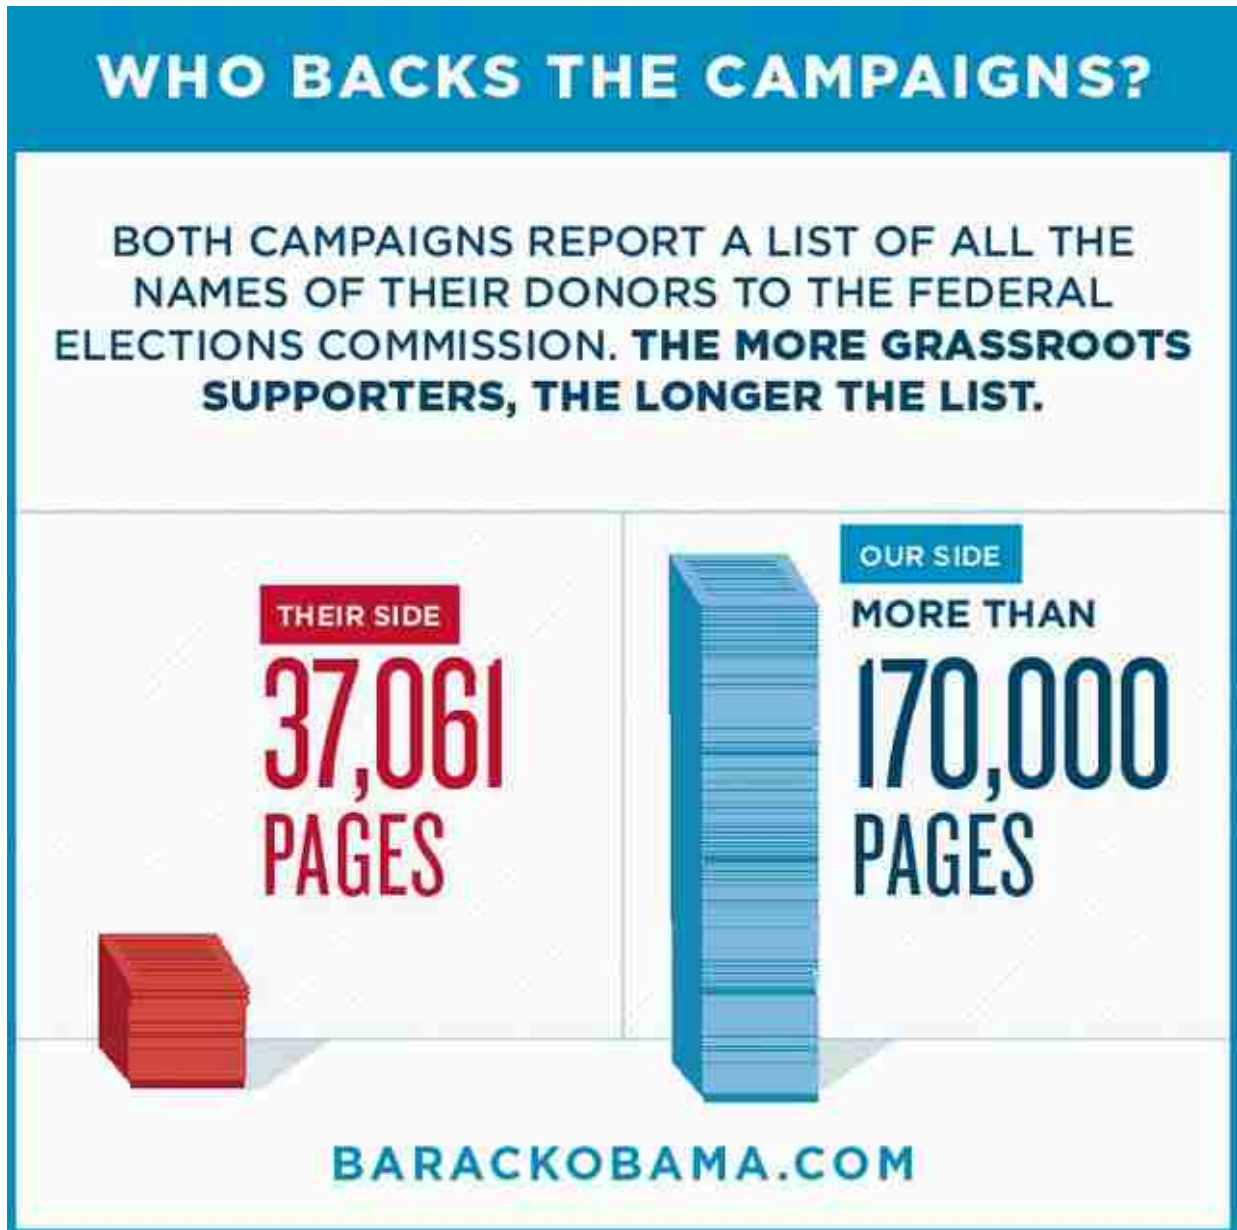

Part of the 47 % Romney doesn't care about are Veterans. Republicans always SAY they support our troops but they don't back it up. More people should see this video: <http://youtu.be/yrFixw7gSgA>

Shown at the DNC but never aired on TV, it makes a great point: it's so important that we remember and care for our Veterans, not just on Veterans Day. Among the promises kept by President Obama during his first term was bringing our troops home from Iraq, with honor. We took out Bin Laden, and anyone who minimizes that for political gain insults our troops. To see how this administration has honored and supported our troops, watch this video - Tom Hanks narrates a moving tribute to Veterans, on behalf of the Obama team; the second half is especially moving and a good reminder for us all that our pact with soldiers doesn't end with their tour of duty.

Obama ground attack on the roll (2012-09-22 18:18)

Increasing evidence shows that the Obama campaign is pulling ahead of the Romney camp in the important ground game.

The Obama team has nearly three times more offices in crucial battleground states and they claim to have contacted many more voters than their opponents. In terms of grassroots contributors, Obama also has a clear lead and we can expect that a good percentage of these donors are volunteering or will volunteer for Obama in the future.

Voter contact, at least as shown by the online phone banking activity, has been picking up since the Democratic convention. While the data is still coming in, it looks like the growth in calling is continuing unabated.

In the most recent 15 nationwide polls, the president has hit or exceeded the 50 percent mark in seven or nearly half of them. At this late point in the contest, candidates want to be moving in a positive direction and nearly all of that movement is coming from the Obama side.

According to the most recent Gallup poll, Democrats are more enthusiastic than Republicans nationwide and in swing states. Nationally, Democrats lead in enthusiasm by 68 % to 62 % while in the swing states, they have a 73 % vs. 64 % lead in the swing states. The larger gap in battleground states indicates that the Democratic team really is focusing in on the presidential race.

The DNC would do well to stoke up more passion in non-battleground states as this is important to create a holistic effect. After all, in the modern election battlefield, it is easy to volunteer to help in any state and volunteers can do this from their own home computer using the campaign's online phone tool.

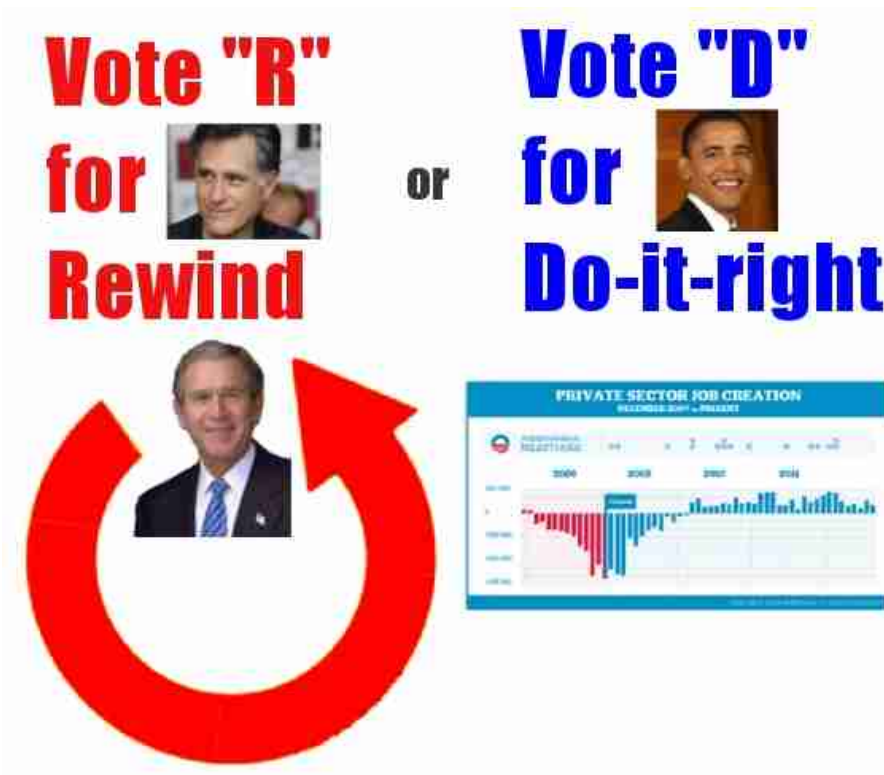

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Rachel Seguin (2012-09-26 16:56:23)

This is comment is to the President Obama's campaign. My cousin lives in Ohio and she said that lots of student, adult male, paid by the Republican..say that they will vote for President Obama and all the time they are voting for Romney it is just to make the Poll look as if President Obama is ahead..so that he wont campaign in those swing state..Please be careful..there is a lot of bad people among those Republican..thanks

Do it right or rewind? (2012-09-24 19:10)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-09-25 20:57:48)

Exotic Barack Obama limited edition artwork. Free to have a look. <http://www.squidoo.com/patriotic-obama-celtic-blackwork-embroidery>

Iowa Be The First to Vote for President Obama: Early Voting Starts this ... (2012-09-26 21:23)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/H3jDk80NDwU?fs=1>

Early voting in Iowa starts on September 27. Obama campaign launching massive grassroots effort to get supporters to vote early and free up resources for the GOTV drive.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-09-27 14:59:48)

hey obama since u want the illegals to b in this coyntry,, the way i c it u r responsible for anything they do while in this country, thereforei want a new VW Jetta TDI since it was just hit by a illegal doing 50 and running a red light so it would b nice if u can get my new car to me asap i still have a job and need that car to get there i have no desire to b unemployed and on the gov dole urs truely USMC Cpl Uliasz

Anonymous (2012-09-28 12:36:17)

Mr. Obama I voted for you 4 years ago and I'll vote for you again. Anyone with a brain in their head understands that it's impossible to make the kind of changes America needs in just 4 years! The problem is we change presidents before the promises they make are put into effect.

If Mr. Romney wins I'm in big trouble. I've worked all my life, 40 years, and for the first time find myself living on unemployment after getting laid off in Feb of 2012. Do you know how hard it is to get a job at 57 years old? I have plenty of experience, but my age, health issues, and lack of education just aren't what employers are looking for.

I'm in the 47 % Mr. Romney was heard saying he wouldn't be focusing on. Do I think the government owes me something? No. Do I need help and understanding? YES!

For the first time in 40 years I don't have health insurance. I can afford it if I give up food. (But I like food:)

I'm really scared Mr. Obama. If Mitt Romney wins, with his ignorant attitude, I might as well give up.

Debbie Wallace

Florida

me5_dawallace@yahoo.com

Romney can still come back (2012-09-29 18:50)

President Barack Obama is doing very well in the polls right now without a doubt. He is looking good in both national and state polls. His favorability rating is averaging 51 percent and his job approval is just under 50 percent.

In comparison, Mitt Romney has a favorable rating of only 44.6 while his unfavorable rating is at 46.8. Now, the question arises as to whether Obama supporters should talk up the president's new momentum or stay cautious to keep volunteers from getting complacent. The best option may be to use both approaches simultaneously. By trumping up Obama's "Big Mo" they can get a lot of the people on the sidelines to join in the effort. Many people, for example, wait to see who is winning before jumping on the "bandwagon." Other people may be Obama voters, but they do not want to take any chances of associating themselves with anything that involves losing. In either case, this provides stimulus for them to get involved. You may notice how George Soros, the billionaire, was complaining about Obama and refused to contribute to any of the pro-Obama super-PACs until just recently. Maybe he is seeing the writing on the wall and wants to get on the president's good side! Even dedicated Obama supporters can get a lift by knowing that their efforts are bearing fruit. On the other hand, you do not want the volunteers and donors getting overly confident thinking that this thing is in the bag. Romney still has a lot of financial support and it is difficult to say that they do not have an "October surprise" ready to unleash. The right approach is to acknowledge that the campaign is working and has been successful, but at the same time reinforcing the idea that the Obama team still has to play until the last buzzer. Romney is still within reach and his opponents need to keep up the pressure for the win.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/1pDsWLXTbDs>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

6.9 October

How Big Bird stole last night's debate (2012-10-04 11:38)

While mainstream media commentators and snap polls seem to indicate that Mitt Romney "won" last night's debate, the most important impact is what people will remember a few days from now.

As an avid Obama observer from early 2007, I remember next to nothing from the 2008 primary and general election debates. The only thing that last night's debate brought back was the president's "professorial" style, which apparently does not appeal to many debate watchers.

However, his debating style has never really had much impact on how voters perceive him. Indeed, debates only rarely change the course of an election. At the most, both camps will hope that something will stick in the minds of voters after seeing the two candidates rumble.

In this case, it appears that Mitt Romney's comments on cutting funding for PBS and firing Big Bird may be the biggest takeaway from the debate. The topics trended all night and into Thursday morning on Twitter. A popular series of related memes is circulating on Facebook.

Not clear if this will have any impact on the polls. Gallup and Rasmussen conduct tracking polls, but it would be surprising if this will register in any meaningful way.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama attracts bigger crowds (2012-10-05 18:24)

President Barack Obama is consistently drawing larger crowds at his rallies and this may be a sign that his ground campaign is busier too.

The photo above shows a crowd estimated at about 30,000 in Wisconsin on Thursday. In comparison, a post-debate rally by Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan in Virginia drew about 10,000. To be fair, Romney's team has been improving their crowd-raising numbers lately.

Obama also clearly continues to dominate overwhelmingly online. Not only is his official campaign site busier, but he's more successful on social media. For example, the president has 20,560,875 followers on Twitter compared to 1,291,042 for Romney.

Additionally, Romney only follows 269 people while the Obama team has made more efforts to reciprocate with the president following 672,122 people on Twitter.

On Facebook, Obama's official page has 29,335,498 likes. In comparison, Romney's official page has 8,325,767 likes. Then there was the Wall Street Journal report that Obama has raised more than $150 million in September. These are not official numbers, but the campaign team did report that they had reached a total of 10 million donors by the end of the month. Now, at the end of August, they had only 3 million donors total, so that is a major jump. Again, many of these donors will also volunteer for the campaign.

With only about a month left until the election, grassroots efforts will play probably the major role in turning out more voters.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Breanna (2012-10-09 10:58:07)

For all you Obama supporters (and even those on the fence) we encourage you to check out the film "The Obama Effect." You can watch it on demand here: <http://bit.ly/ShhGFS> and or you can pre-order it on DVD here: <http://amzn.to/W98wtl>. It will be released on DVD on election day!

Romney and 47% (2012-10-09 20:48)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2012-10-14 00:16:58)

Watch this...

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-9T4NfwOsMU> &sns=em

GOP and Jobs (2012-10-14 08:33)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2012-10-14 18:52:59)

Obama need to look in the camera and talk to the audience and not to the announcer.

Anonymous (2012-10-14 18:57:11)

OBAMA NEEDS TO LOOK INTO THE CAMERA AND NOT TALK TO THE ANNOUNCER.

Lisandro Rivera (2012-10-17 07:46:04)

I agree!! He did a much better job w/ this debate! Good job Mr. President but don't take your foot off the gas pedal yet!
www.a124studio.com

Obama must become stage actor in debates (2012-10-15 13:25)

Being president often involves performing various official ceremonies and rituals. In times of national emergencies, the president must appear calm when talking before public even if he or she might not feel that way inside.

For the presidential debates, the candidates must go even one step further in taking on something similar to an actor's role in some cases. The president's supporters are not looking for intellectual arguments during the debate, if we are to judge from debate reactions dating back to the 2008 campaign.

What they are more interested in is seeing the president voice their own concerns, but in a way that also expresses their own feelings. They want the president to be their voice – a voice that become angry and indignant at times.

President Obama must think about his more fervent supporters and think of the way they would express their own frustrations over certain types of issues. That is the type of "red meat" that many debate watchers are looking for.

Of course, he has to do it in a way befitting to his office. Also, he need to avoid appearing like the "angry black man" stereotype.

The president's training as an intellectual and years of experience as a college lecturer are not the best type of preparation for this type of thing. For that reason, he needs to act. His own natural response would be to welcome dissenting opinions since that is the general environment that exists on college campuses.

However, during the debate, he needs to react strongly if Mitt Romney is dishing out the "malarkey."

Another reason this is important is that Republicans have not been cooperative with the president in office. Here in California, we could see how former Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger built up a good working relationship with President Obama. Unlike many other GOP governors, he was more than ready to accept stimulus funds, for example. The relationship was so positive that Arnold is still undecided on which candidate to support, although he did endorse Sen. John McCain in the last presidential election.

However, this was a rare exception to the rule during Obama's first term. The Republicans in Congress sought to obstruct the president at almost every opportunity after a short "honeymoon" period right after the 2008 race.

Obama supporters do not want their candidate to seem like he can be bullied around by Republicans during a second term. He needs to be ready to call out Romney in a way that shows he's not playing around. Obama's base will be looking for their candidate to show strength and engagement while forcefully expressing their concerns even if that is not his natural style.

However, he doesn't have to be a Shakespearean actor to pull this off. He just needs to channel the emotions that he encounters regularly on the campaign trail.

X

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/W_ilyi0CvL8

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

warrior magz (2012-10-16 19:27:21)

support for obama

obama lost in debate

Mitt Romney, Bain and China (2012-10-17 13:39)

In last night's debate, the two nominees discussed China repeatedly in relation to foreign policy and economy-related matters.

Although President Barack Obama first brought up China in relation to clean energy development, it was former Governor Mitt Romney who first took a hard line mentioning that he would 'crack down' on the Chinese.

Romney and running mate Paul Ryan frequently refer to China in relation to the deficit and they often portray the country as an economic threat to America.

The pair have even accused the president of shipping jobs to China.

However, Romney's tough China stance appears at odds with his history at Bain & Company and its spinoff firm Bain Capital. Both companies became involved in China investments and outsourcing.

A recent AP article outlined Romney's connections with Bain & Company when it opened an office in Shanghai in 1993

At least seven Securities and Exchange Commission filings from May to December 1993 by Marriott International, Inc., where Romney served as a director, listed him as "chief executive officer of Bain & Company, Inc." A 1998 Sports Authority SEC filing said Romney was Bain's CEO and chairman to 1993 and a director to 1998. A March 1993 federal credit document obtained by Rolling Stone magazine listed him as Bain's "principal." A Boston Herald news story written in October 1993 by current Romney senior adviser Eric Fehrnstrom described him as Bain's chairman and former CEO.

At Bain Capital, Romney took a paid leave of absence in February 1999 to run the Salt Lake City Olympics, but he continued on officially as sole shareholder, managing director, CEO, and president. He continued to sign documents for the company and to conduct other work for both Bain Capital and some of the companies that it controlled. However, we should note while the Romney campaign has made much effort to separate Bain & Company from Bain Capital, evidence shows that the two companies worked together in building up foreign investment in China.

Two companies worked in China by mid-90s

A group of Bain & Company founders started Bain Capital in 1984. Bain & Company itself was a major original investor in the new firm and, for a period, it received a share of Bain Capital's profits. Initially, Bain & Company executives had the right to veto the spinoff firm's investments if there was a conflict of interest.

When Bain & Company experienced difficulties in the early 1990s, they even hired Romney back from Bain Capital to help get their house back in order.

Most importantly, the evidence points to Bain & Company helping foreign companies including Bain Capital find investments in China.

When Bain & Company first opened an office in Shanghai, they became active in helping the country adapt to the free market system. In particular, they were involved with a high-level seminar focused on teaching Western capitalist principles and methods to Chinese firms.

During the seminar, Bain and Company will outline Western ways in enterprise valuation, mergers, and acquisitions, and in enterprise performance improvement. The two sides will hold discussions on how Chinese enterprise can most effectively use foreign investments.

– Daily Report, U.S. Foreign Broadcast Information Service, Issues 229-239, 1993

According to The Asian Venture Capital Journal, Bain and Company was seeking foreign investments for Chinese firms by at least 1995 and one of the investors was Bain Capital.

Bain's venture capital fund, Bain Capital, has so far directed its $50 million in investments entirely within the U.S. Yan admits that the firm's outlook on China is cautious. "I have seen a lot of deals that have a cash flow payback of less than two years, but there are not a lot of them and those deals tend to be rather small."

– The Asian Venture Capital Journal, Vol. 8, 1995, p. 26

Bain and Company VP Yan added that "half of the time we tell our clients not to invest in China." Although, primarily a management consulting firm, the evidence shows that Bain & Company was also seeking foreign investments for Chinese firms.

Indeed, by 1996, according to the U.S. Foreign Broadcast Information Service, Bain and Company had attracted a substantial amount of foreign investment into the country. How much of this came from Bain Capital is still unclear.

"In the long run, our business focus on both foreign and multinational companies and Chinese firms will be two sides of a coin," said Rick Yan, vice-president of Bain Co Inc., which has been helping foreign businesses invest a combined 500 million U.S. Dollars in China since 1993."

– – Daily Report, U.S. Foreign Broadcast Information Service, Issues 76-84, 1996

By 1998, groups like Bain & Company, the Boston Consulting Group and McKinsey and Company were actively working in China on various types of consulting including bringing in foreign investors.

"Our strategy is to work with Bain Capital and other direct investment funds to become equity partners of SOEs [state-owned enterprises] and work with them to turn around their performance through strategy development, management enhancement, and performance-based incentive systems."

- Harvard China Review, vol. 1, 1998

Romney's hypocrisy

No matter how one looks at it, Mitt Romney was active with Bain & Company as director at least until 1998, and in various capacities with Bain Capital until 2002.

For about a decade, he certainly knew about both companies' dealings in China. So, it is a little strange that he should take such a hard line against a country that he and his partners helped to succeed in the Western free market system.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Adam Grey (2012-10-18 20:13:06)
<http://gekkoromney.blogspot.com>

Halloween GOTV (2012-10-21 19:31)

Click on image for full-size graphic.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Pres. Obama prepares for final foreign policy debate (2012-10-22 11:35)

The debate tonight should highlight one of GOP nominee Mitt Romney's weak points: foreign policy.

At the very least, President Barack Obama has the advantage in this area since he is a known quantity. People have been able to see him act in the international arena now for almost four years. With Romney, they really cannot be sure what to expect.

The GOP candidate's unknown factor is not only related to his inexperience in foreign policy, but also to the fact that Romney simply is a very hard person to figure out in terms of policy, period. Not only does he keep specific hidden, as with his tax deduction plan, but he often "flip-flops" from one position to another. Even his fellow Republicans view him a flip-flopper.

Additionally, VP candidate Paul Ryan has much less foreign policy experience as compared to VP Joe Biden who is a former Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

Romney's well-publicized foreign policy trip during the London Olympics was a huge disaster. Everyone from the London mayor to the UK prime minister voiced concerns over Romney's statements while he was visiting the country. An excellent analysis on CNN last night showed that on important international security issues, Romney is significantly more hawkish than Obama. For example, while the president says his administration will not tolerate an Iranian nuclear weapons program, Romney's stance is that he will not allow for even the capability of starting up such a program.

What that means, basically, is that Romney could go to war even if Iran is simply generating nuclear energy, since the radioactive waste from such activity is convertible into weapons grade fissile or "dirty bomb" material.

President Obama can direct the flow of the debate to focus in on Romney's lack of experience and his dangerous hawkish stances that could end up entangling a war-weary nation in an unnecessary armed conflict.

Romney will try to draw attention, instead, on the recent attack on the U.S. embassy in Benghazi and on the general stability issues plaguing the Middle East especially with regard to Syria. However, the Benghazi line of attack is weak since it involves an issue that is still very much investigation. Romney is basically reaching here making assumptions on the actions of various actors in the Obama administration.

On the wider perspective of Middle East stability, the president can portray Romney as someone who is more likely to inflame rather settle the situation. Or in the worst case, the GOP challenger could end up involving the country, eventually, in direct military action.

In general, Romney tends to make many blunders when talking about foreign policy, so the president can exploit this by asking for specifics and testing his opponent's knowledge of facts and the overall situation depending on the particular issue under discussion.

X

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/FOatTWJAlpl>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Motivating unlikely voters to vote (2012-10-24 18:30)

Since most of the recent polls are sampling likely voters, the impact of turning out unlikely voters looms large. The fact that the Obama campaign was able to convince many unlikely voters to participate in the 2008 election makes turnout even more important.

Generally, in recent elections, the presidential candidate that turns out the most members from their own party wins, as the following table demonstrates.

Year
Republicans	Democrats	Advantage	Total voters
Percent of voting age population
1992
39 %	40 %	D +1	104,405,155

55.23 %

1996

35 % 39 % D +4 96,456,345

49.08 %

2000

35 % 39 % D +4 105,586,274

51.30 %

2004 37 % 37 % Even 122,295,345 55.27 %

2008 32 % 39 % D +7 132,645,504 57.48 %

The table shows that the exception to this rule in recent presidential elections was in 2000 when George W. Bush scored a controversial victory over Al Gore. In that election, hanging chads in Florida enabled Bush to barely win the contest.

Bush also won in 2004, a year in which Republicans came out in equal numbers to Democrats. President Barack Obama won by a landslide in 2008, a year that witnessed the highest voter turnout since 1968.

Obama leads among all registered voters

In almost all polls that take into account all registered voters, Obama leads and often by a significant margin. The trend is particularly strong in the battleground states. The polls that are making headlines now are mostly surveying likely voters. Some only show opinions for those who say they are certain to vote.

What we know from 2008 is that the Obama team is capable of registering new voters and of turning out irregular older voters. They do this using a massive ground army combined with excellent planning and organization.

If we look at the available metrics, Obama is doing as good or better as in 2008, and he is beating out the current GOP opposition in 2012:

- Campaign field offices – Obama has more than twice as many field offices and the disparity is even wider in some important swing states. For example, the Obama team has more than three times as many field offices in Ohio than does the Romney camp.
- Voter registration – Obama has beat out their highly successful 2008 registration drive even as some states are still accepting new registration forms. Compared to the Republicans in 2012, Democrats lead in voter registration so far in the battleground states of Florida, Iowa, North Carolina, Nevada and Pennsylvania. Republicans lead only in Colorado and New Hampshire. Ohio, Virginia and Wisconsin do not register according to party.
- Non-midterm voters – In nine battleground states, Democrats exceed Republicans in early votes cast by people who did not vote in the 2010 election. The current lead is 19.7 percentage points.
- Overall early vote – Among all voters, the Democrats currently maintain a 10.7 point lead. Republicans lead in only two battleground states – Florida and Colorado – but those leads should vanish once in-person early voting gets rolling in both states. Additionally, Democrats are doing a better job in beating out Republicans as compared to the statistics from 2008, especially when it comes to absentee/mail ballot requests.
- Crowd size – Obama still looks to be drawing the larger crowds at rallies although Romney is doing better than he was previously. For example, after the last debate, both candidates appeared in Denver with Obama drawing 16,000 supporters compared to 12,000 for Romney.
- Social media and Internet activity – Obama is still way ahead in terms of official website activity. In social media, Obama is also well out in front although Romney's team is trying hard to catch up. An ongoing paid ad campaign by Romney on Facebook is beefing up the number of subscribers to his page.

Managing Election Day and long lines

While early voting can account for more than 50 percent of voting in states like Florida, in most areas, Election Day still garners the bulk of total votes.

The Obama campaign must deal with strong official and volunteer efforts to suppress voting in areas that favor the president. Unfortunately, many people procrastinate and wait until after work on Election Day to vote. Lines can get very long in some areas.

According to surveys, about 20 percent of registered people who do not vote claim long lines as their excuse.

The Obama team can try to convince more of these people to vote early or to, at least, vote in the morning or during the lunch break on Election Day. Otherwise, they need to organize at the polling places to make sure that things run smoothly.

Rapid response teams can go to precincts with very long lines and provide relief, entertainment and snacks along with running interference if any "truthers" show up.

IFRAME: http://www.youtube.com/embed/Rral_jecey8

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Come to Florida - OFA Florida (2012-10-25 19:39)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/LTBqpxXKUq8?fs=1>

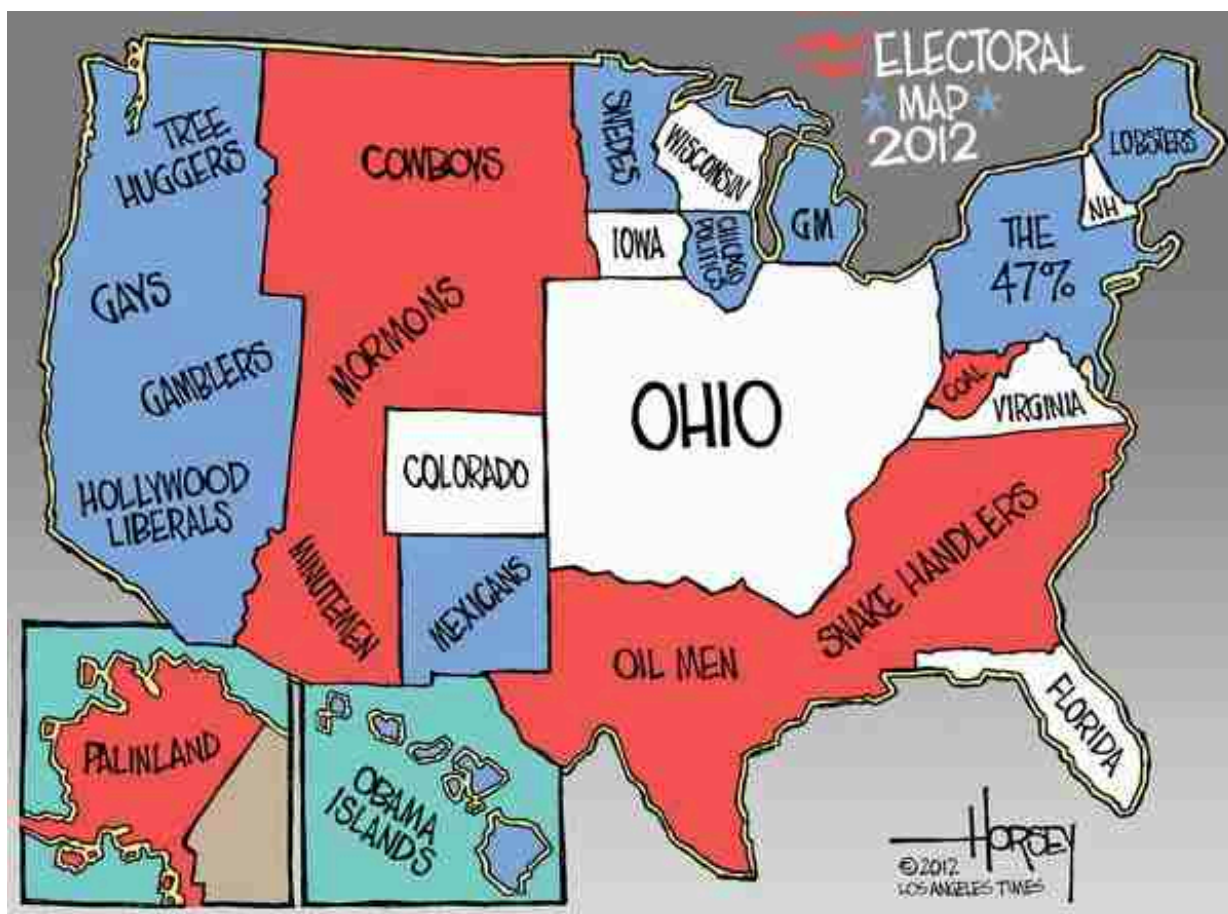

While most attention right now is focused on Ohio, the state of Florida is still a very big prize up for grabs. In an earlier post, it was shown that Romney cannot win the electoral vote without winning Florida.

That was true taking into consideration the battleground state map at the time. Now, most analysts have narrowed down the number of battleground states even further. For example, NBC places North Carolina in Romney's corner while Nevada is now an Obama state.

If Romney loses Florida, he could win all the other current battleground states including Ohio and still lose. In order to win, he would have to win all those states and also steal either Pennsylvania or two other "lean Obama" states, so long as there are no surprises in the "solid" states.

Another reason to look at Florida very seriously is that Romney may have a weakness here on the issue of women's reproductive rights.

Ohio is also a good issue state for the Obama team due to Romney's stance on letting the auto industry go bankrupt. Union workers in the state are also suspicious of Romney due to his ties with job outsourcing to China.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2012-10-25 23:08:03)

Get your Obama t-shirts, I mean Anti-Obama t-shirts! LOL!

Change...Obama - Hundred Dollar Bills...Romney

Obama...Half Honkey, Half Donkey

Vote Romney 2012...He's White!

Colin Powell's endorsement and the reaction (2012-10-26 08:38)

Gen. Colin Powell's endorsement of President Barack Obama sparked a top surrogate of Republican nominee Mitt Romney. Former senator John Sununu claimed that Powell endorsed Obama simply the president if black. Powell endorsed Obama in the 2008 race and many analysts believe his support helped Obama then and will help him again in this election. For many years, Powell was either the most popular or one of the most popular prominent Republicans.

Neo-conservatives used goodwill harbored for Powell to sell the Iraq War to the public. Powell, himself, claims that the administration duped him into arguing for a war based on made-up evidence.

Of course, Powell is not the only prominent Republican to endorse Obama. Former Florida governor Charlie Crist is another GOP leader who endorsed the president. Also, from Florida, there was the recent case of the "bear-hugging" Republican pizza parlor owner who threw his support behind Obama.

Suggesting that Powell endorsed Obama simply because both are black is part of a pattern used by the Tea Party and other right-wing opponents of the president. They consistently attempt to racialize the contest in order to stir up the worst sentiments among their supporters.

In endorsing Obama, Powell said: "When he took over, the country was in very, very difficult straits, we were in one of the worst recessions we had seen in recent times, close to a depression ... we were in real trouble.

"I think generally we've come out of the dive and starting to gain altitude," he said. "I see that we are starting to rise up," he said. On foreign policy, Powell noted: "I'm not quite sure which Governor Romney we'd be getting with respect to foreign policy," and he also called Romney's foreign policy plan "a moving target."

On the GOP nominee's budget proposal, he said, "It's essentially, let's cut taxes and compensate for that with other things, but that compensation does not cover all the cuts intended or the expenses associated with defense."

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/62QCeK8YYEE>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-10-26 11:40:55)

Sorry O already voted for R. Colin Powell, who cares. Bye Bye to the whole lot of ya.

Hurricane Sandy and voter turnout (2012-10-30 10:25)

The devastation caused by Hurricane Sandy and the ongoing "Superstorm" Sandy could have an impact on voter turnout since it is shutting down early voting days in some battleground states.

In some of these states, they have already announced plans to compensate for Sandy through measures like extending early voting hours and days. Virginia and Pennsylvania, so far, appear to be the main swing states that could suffer from Sandy's impact. Pennsylvania, though, has not in-person early voting.

The storm is also hammering states like Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin although the impact should be far less than what occurred on the East Coast.

President Barack Obama canceled campaign events at least until Wednesday in order to oversee the federal emergency response to the hurricane.

Some political observers are speculating over whether Hurricane Sandy may benefit either candidate in the presidential race. In terms of turnout, it possibly could favor Mitt Romney although this is far from clear. It really depends on which areas are hardest hit by the storm.

Some commentators believe the president could benefit since Americans tend to rally around their leader during periods of national distress. The disaster is also highlighting Romney's previous statements that emergency response should be the responsibility of the states with privatized agencies.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Jeff Hellyer (2012-11-01 10:37:07)

He has done GRETA THINGS to help with Sandy!

And now we NEED to make sure he's RE-ELECTED. To that end, here is my donation:

My music video for President Obama and his re-election campaign. Please feel free to FORWARD!

"I C A New A M E R I C A !"

– Obama music video:

YouTube:

http://youtu.be/k129b_rfNYA

Vimeo:

<http://vimeo.com/52333195>

Thanks and best wishes,

Jeff

Jeff Hellyer (2012-11-01 15:25:47)

President Obama has done GREAT THINGS to help with the Sandy situation.

And now we NEED to make sure he's RE-ELECTED! To that end, here is my donation–

My music video for President Obama and his re-election campaign.

Please feel free to FORWARD! this:

"I C A New A M E R I C A !"

– Obama music video:

YouTube:

http://youtu.be/k129b_rfNYA

Vimeo:

<http://vimeo.com/52333195>

Thanks and best wishes,

Jeff

Anonymous (2012-11-05 07:18:29)

Instead of campaigning, it is my opinion that our president should be handing out relief money to the victims of Sandy in New Jersey and New York. Sleeves rolled up and putting in time at ground zero. Campaigning should be second. He is the president and still needs to act as our leader.

6.10 November

Jim Messina's State of the Race: "The president will win re-election if ... (2012-11-01 16:44)

IFRAME: <http://www.youtube.com/embed/2SGIWT0bIBs>

Obama campaign manager Jim Messina discusses some of the metrics on the election especially those related to early voting.

The campaign is outdoing what it did in 2008 and is well ahead of the Romney campaign in most early voting and registration stats. The lead is particularly important in the battleground states. For example, in Colorado, Democrats have a bigger lead in new voter registration compared to November 2008. Same thing in Nevada.

In most battleground states, early in-person voting will end this weekend either on Nov. 2 or Nov. 3. Additionally, it's near the deadline to mail absentee/mail-in ballots. Otherwise, voters will have to deliver the ballots to the registrar's office or to another acceptable location.

In order to find an early voting location, the Obama campaign has set up a special tool at <http://barackobama.com/lookup>. Eventually, this tool should also work for Election Day voting locations. It provides the street address along with a driving map.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2012-11-13 12:38:34)

Check out Big Bang DBT's new song dedicated to our U.S. Troops and the re-election of President Obama. This song has generated a nation wide buzz

Here is a link to the new song - <http://limelinx.com/e1gbo>
www.bigbangxl.com

Nitin Kumar Palmist (2012-11-29 00:40:40)

<http://indianpalmreading.blogspot.in/2011/10/barack-obama-branch-of-fate-line.html>

Anonymous (2012-11-30 04:02:32)

I noticed you put two spaces after every period. You should only use one!

Natalie (2012-12-25 23:08:06)

You have a great blog. Thank you for sharing this to us.

Natalie | Barack Obama

7. 2013

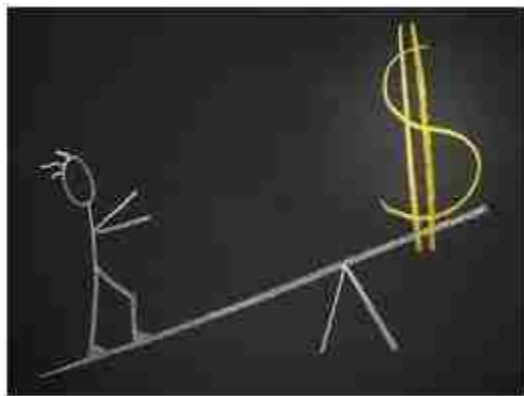

7.1 January

(2013-01-18 13:15)

7.2 July

How Obama is helping medical debt (2013-07-24 14:27)

How Obama is helping medical debt

One of the ways that Obama has tried to help giving Americans medical debt help is by helping them to avoid the debt to begin with. One of the programs that will soon come into law is one that is known as Obamacare. There are mixed emotions about this program

, but understanding the advantages and disadvantages will help you to decide for yourself.

The Advantages

One of the advantages is that the 30 million Americans who do not have health insurance will suddenly have it. This will help to prevent people from going deep into debt from a medical bill that they cannot afford to pay. Also, no guaranteed benefits will be cut in the process, meaning that you will only gain.

Another advantage of this is that it will also eliminate the fraud and the waste that is rampant in the medical industry. One such example would be paying $10 per aspirin capsule. Considering a whole bottle can be bought for a few dollars, this is the epitome of medical fraud that Obama is looking to get rid of.

Preventatives and wellness exams will also be free. If you are tired of paying money for it, then it is time to look at the benefits. Also, this care will enhance the patient care. Many people have thought that it will get rid of Medicare and Medicaid, but Obamacare will actually help to enhance those programs.

The Disadvantages

One of the disadvantages is that despite this healthcare, there will still be millions of Americans who do not get to have it. Another disadvantage is that it forces everyone to pay for healthcare that they might not even need. You will be forced because if you do not pay for it, then you will receive penalties and charges, which is almost certainly unfair. Not everyone wants to be told how they can spend their money. The increased people on coverage might also raise the prices of these insurance, which would certainly be a negative.

With more people on these programs, it will mean that the hospitals will be more crowded than they were before. This could mean even longer waits to see a doctor.

There are some advantages that come with this program, but how many, a person cannot be too sure of. It is said that Obamacare will help with eliminating medical debt and fraud with the increased governmental foothold on the medical industry. It will also enhance the patient care and give them a few free services. However, many are skeptical of this program, and there are good reasons to question it. They will be forced to pay for it. Only time will tell if it will be a good thing or a bad thing. In the meantime, we encourage you to know your options

to lower your medical debt.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

7.3 September

The Obama Administration's Reforms On Educational Loans (2013-09-05 11:26)

Current Administration's Goals For College Graduates

The goal of the current administration is for the United States to have the highest proportion of college graduates in the world by 2020. To achieve it, the White House is taking a set of drastic steps to ensure that college is more affordable for everyone in the United States looking to pursue a education. Because the average debt after graduation is $23,000, the federal government is taking steps to make loans more affordable, and thus the goal more attainable.

New Laws Allow Affordable Rates

One of the ways in which this is being done is through a new law that allows students to repay their loans at a more affordable pace. First, federal student loan payments are capped at only 10 % per month. This allows the loan to be repaid in a way which is affordable to the borrower. The 10 % cap will make it possible for you to meet your day to day expenses while still paying off your student loans in the event that you find out that your loans are consuming a large portion of your salary. This will also make it easier for most people to continue their education and go back to school.

Loans Repayable Faster

If you:

- Join the military
- Teach
- Work as a nurse
- Do any work of national importance your loan will be completely forgiven in 10 years. For everyone else, the time to forgive the loan will be 20 years. This will ensure that you are not paying a student loan for the rest of your life.

Tax Credits For Affordability

The federal government is also providing tax credits to make going back to school much more affordable. Tax credits make sure that your student loans will be paid for and that there is no need to worry about your loans costing a lot of money in the future and make it less expensive now to go back to school. For those whom would like to save on taxes and have a better future, then going back to school is a fantastic option.

Online Students Covered Too

There is also more positive news to come from this: online schools are covered as well.

For those whom do not have the time to go to a traditional college campus, a student loan will cover the cost of going to an online school . Student loans make going back to school much more affordable for many students, especially those whom are struggling to pay bills back. For those whom are in that category, then finding the right loan will help you get to where you need to go. Student loans are not just for those whom go to traditional campuses for classes and school, but for those going back to school online as well.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

7.4 October

Online degrees (2013-10-19 08:27)

An online MPA degree can allow a person to move in and out of government and regular careers. Having this flexibility is great for someone who wants to try new things and try to make different areas of the world better. There will always be a need for a person like this because times are always changing.

The times are changing is a quote that many older people like to say to younger people. Just after 100 years, there are many things that are done differently. Cars are mass produced because of the increase of people in the world. This also increases carbon dioxide and other pollutants in the air that can cause global warming and other issues for people. There needs to be some sort of balance that will keep the world safe and healthy enough for people to live in it. There are all kinds of newer cars coming out that will eliminate the need for gas and other resources.

This is only newer cars though and all of the older cars that are still on the street will contribute to a smog-filled atmosphere. It has not gotten to the point yet that anything needs to be drastically changed though. Some states are worse than other states as well. Each state has its own laws regarding parts that are legal to use on a car. Eventually, all cars will become resource-free and eliminate the need for gas usage at all. This is still very far away though.

People who want to get a degree like this one will help make life better for people now, not in the distant future. They help create a balance between all of the new methods of doing things and the older methods of doing things. Computers will play a big role for their employment. They allow them to research and find out different statistics from all over the world. When a person lands a government job, they will have the best of the technology to work with. This makes it very easy for them to make lives easier to live.

In conclusion, getting any type of degree is going to be hard work. It takes a dedicated and passionate person to complete a degree like this one. Once someone has the drive to help others, they can really make a difference and change history with the way things are handled on a day by day basis.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Prohibition's unintended consequences (2013-10-21 19:19)

The ideas behind Prohibition seemed honorable enough, but the move had many consequences that no one ever expected. According to the supporters of Prohibition, banning alcohol would help reduce crime, drunkenness and other social ills. However, the following infographic from Mocavo shows what really happened.

Via: Mocavo Genealogy Search

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

7.5 December

President Obama Unveils Government and University Partnership to Help Veterans Succeed at Higher Education (2013-12-13 18:48)

President Obama Unveils Government and University Partnership to Help Veterans Succeed at Higher Education

President Obama recently unveiled two major initiatives to assist veterans at the annual Disabled American Veterans National Convention. The first initiative will launch a new research project to help better understand and combat both PTSD and mild traumatic brain injuries. The second initiative concerns implementing programs in which the government and colleges and universities will cooperate together to help veterans succeed at a degree or technical training program to help them compete for the high skilled jobs of the 21st century.

The education initiative, which is made up of "8 Keys to Success," will provide comprehensive professional development for college and university faculty and staff concerning the unique needs and challenges that veterans face. So far, approximately 250 community colleges and universities have agreed to participate, which is great news for the millions of veterans across the country who wish to continue or begin their education.

The "8 Keys to Success," as per the Official Blog of the US Department of Education, are:

- "Create a culture of trust and connectedness across the campus community to promote well-being and success for veterans."
- "Ensure consistent and sustained support from campus leadership."
- "Implement an early alert system to ensure all veterans receive academic, career and financial advice before challenges become overwhelming."
- "Coordinate and centralize campus efforts for all veterans, together with the creation of a designated space (even if limited in size)."
- "Collaborate with local communities and organizations including government agencies, to align and coordinate various services for veterans."
- "Utilize a uniform set of data tools to collect and track information on veterans, including demographics, retention and degree completion."
- "Provide comprehensive professional development for faculty and staff on issues and challenges unique to veterans."
- "Develop systems that ensure sustainability of effective practices for veterans."

President Obama's commitment to education benefits for veterans seems promising. His desire to forge a cooperative partnership between the federal government and universities with the ultimate goal of helping veterans succeed is encouraging and a much needed development. The "8 Keys to Success" not only provides ideas that can be immediately utilized in higher education, but also has a system for tracking and analyzing veterans progress, so that the methods implemented can be tested for success.

With so many veterans returning home to a painfully sluggish economic recovery, a new and committed approach to educating our veterans is paramount to our society's success. After the men and women of the armed forces serve our country proudly and bravely, they deserve a commitment from their country to help them succeed in higher education. This success will in turn allow our veterans to compete for the high skilled jobs of the 21st century, where they will continue to contribute to their country.

To learn more about the recently unveiled "

8 Keys to Success

" and

President Obama's commitment to helping veterans pursue higher education.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Site Review for Timothy Broas (2013-12-24 14:37)

The Timothy Broas website highlights a man who is not only an attorney, but a gentleman who has made a commitment to community service and philanthropy. He earned his law degree from the college of William and Mary School of Law and served his clerkship in the New Jersey Supreme Court and then served associate positions at several law firms before becoming a partner at Winston & Strawn, LLP, and his current law firm. His practice areas include Washington, DC, New York and New Jersey. His clients include financial institutions, pharmaceutical corporations and major utility companies.

Based in Washington, DC, Mr. Broas represents high profile clients and concentrates his litigation efforts in white collar criminal defense, corporate investigations, securities litigation and congressional litigation. The cases he has taken on include bank fraud, money laundering, bribery and securities fraud. Mr. Broas has been recognized by his peers as one of the top white collar criminal defense lawyers in the country.

In addition to his work in the legal field, Timothy Broas is supportive of several health initiatives and puts his leadership skills to work with several nonprofit organizations and participation in charitable events. His efforts include serving as a Board of Trustee member of Partners In Health (PIH), in his list of charitable causes. In his never ending effort to give back to his community and to others who need help, he is a board of trustee member and works with Partners, which is an international medical organization, and works to improve health care options worldwide. His work with Partners in the United States includes working with Navajo Nation and its members who struggle with cardiovascular disease and hypertension, chronic health conditions.

Partners also work to improve surgical training to medical communities worldwide and help those communities to establish surgical centers. This gives people around the world access to health care, especially surgical needs. PIH also teaches local surgeons improved surgical techniques and training for surgical nurses and technicians.

His work with PIH also includes the disaster relief efforts following Hurricane Sandy and the earthquake in Haiti. The effort of PIH brought much needed medical help to the injured and help to minimize the outbreak of health concerns associated with contaminated water supplies. PIH also contributed much needed follow up care, in addition to the initial care, to make sure medical needs were being met and continued to affect a positive outcome. Cholera, which is contracted from consuming contaminated water, continues to be a devastating problem in Haiti and with the leadership of Tim Broas, PIH is continuing its fundraising efforts to bring the necessities to the people of Haiti in the form of treatment and preventative care.

In 2013, Mr. Broas and his family participated in the PanMass Challenge, a two day, 190 mile bicycle ride in an effort to raise money to support the work at Dana Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, Massachusetts. Mr. Broas is a long time contributing fund raiser for Dana Farber. Fund raising efforts allows Dana Farber to continue the critical research necessary to fight cancer.

Timothy Broas is an appointed member of the Board of Trustees of St. Mary's College and the Mount Vernon Board of Visitors. He was also appointed by President Obama to the Board of Trustees of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

8. 2014

8.1 January

Ambassador Yousef al Otaiba (2014-01-24 22:26)

Most people have a vague idea that an ambassador is a citizen who is appointed by the head of their government to act as their representative in a foreign country, and who resides in the country to which they are appointed in order to perform certain diplomatic functions on behalf of their home government. Our country currently has 133 ambassadors appointed to different countries with whom we have a relationship, as well as to the United Nations. In addition, there are 294 U.S. Embassies and foreign consulates. There are 169 foreign ambassadors in the United States, and less than one dozen countries with whom we have diplomatic relations, but who have no ambassador appointed to represent them. The countries with whom we have no diplomatic relations and who have no ambassador serving here are Bhutan, Cuba, Iran, North Korea, Somalia, Tuvalu and Vanuatu. An ambassador is the highest ranking diplomatic official acting as a representative of their country to foreign governments.

Ambassadors are nominated by the President and approved or rejected by the Senate. There is no formal education required to become an ambassador, but many have degrees in business or foreign policy and a high level of government experience. One of the most surprising ambassadorships is that of former child star Shirley Temple Black, who was Ambassador to Ghana from 1974 - 1976, and Ambassador to Czechoslovakia from 1989 - 1992, among her other political appointments.

The chief role of an ambassador is to promote the culture and values of their home country to citizens of the country to which they're appointed, to act as an information center for students and potential visitors to their country and to provide services for citizens of their home country on foreign soil. They also often host public and cultural events to share their arts, music and history with citizens of their host country. All foreign embassies are located in Washington, D.C., with consulates located in such major U.S. cities as Atlanta, Chicago, New York, San Francisco and Los Angeles. The consulates act to provide help and services to their citizens located in these cities and the regions of the country where they're located, and to promote financial and business interests for their home country in these regions. United States embassies and consulates located in foreign countries serve the same functions in their host countries. Ambassadors can be withdrawn from a country at any time due to such things as armed conflict or accusations of human rights violations.

Ambassadors to the United Nations act in a slightly different capacity to traditional ambassadors. Ambassadors to this organization report to their respective state departments back home about U.N. matters and make recommendations to their governments regarding budgetary and security concerns. They can also pledge or withhold the support of their government regarding U.N. resolutions and fiscal matters.

Ambassador Yousef al Otaiba, the representative of the UAE in the U.S., is an example of a modern, educated diplomat who looks at the broader picture of International relations and seeks to forge alliances and find new solutions to the world's economic and security problems. It's essential for current and future world leaders to learn about other societies in order to understand them and bridge the gaps that separate different cultures. This can help foster an air of friendship and cooperation among the nations of the world and increase regional and global stability.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

8.2 April

CSIS Provides Practical Solutions to World Problems (2014-04-27 07:17)

CSIS Provides Practical Solutions to World Problems

For more than 50 years, the Center for Strategic and International Studies has provided solutions to many of the world's greatest challenges, offering bipartisan solutions to decision makers in order to build a better world. Headquartered in Washington DC, the organization is a bipartisan, non-profit organization made up of scholars, government leaders and businesspeople, including United States Senator Sam Nunn, who has chaired the organization since 1999, John J. Hamre, who became the president and CEO in 2000, and Steve Wynn, real estate and casino mogul.

Founding of CSIS

In 1962, at the height of the Cold War, CSIS was founded by Admiral Arleigh Burke and David Abshire at Georgetown University in Washington DC. Admiral Burke commanded fleets in the South Pacific during World War II, served as Deputy Chief of Staff to commander Naval Forces – Far East during the Korean War, and served an unprecedented three terms as Chief Naval Officer before retiring in 1961. He then entered the business world, operating the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Company and Texaco Oil before joining forces with David Abshire to create CSIS. Abshire served as Special Counselor to President Ronald Reagan and was the United States Ambassador to NATO from 1983 to 1987. He is also the author of several books.

Policy Solutions

In 1966, research conducted by CSIS triggered hearings in the House of Representatives regarding the watershed Sino-Soviet split, and in 1978, CSIS convened the first Capitol Hill public hearing on the genocide in Cambodia. The public hearing helped create major changes in the perception of the tragedy among Congress and the White House. Another CSIS panel in 1985 led to legislation to reform the staff of the Defense Department and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. A report issued from the CSIS retirement commission led to the social security reform debate of 1998, while the CSIS Smart Power Commission made discoveries that led to recognition that America's standing in the world had diminished, providing recommendations to improve that decline in 2007.

CSIS Today

Today, CSIS is recognized as one of the most powerful public policy organizations regarding foreign policy and national security. The organization recently moved into state-of-the-art headquarters located in Washington DC. Although still focused on traditional defense and security matters, the group has added a focus on health and energy programs as well, which they feel are challenges facing the world today. As a bipartisan think tank, CSIS works to provide a platform for those in Congress to interact with community leaders on the issues the organization finds critical to global security. Organization members provide briefings to Congress from experts in government, education and field expertise, who offer members of the legislature realistic policy recommendations based on accurate and extensive data.

In addition to providing direct advice to Congressional leaders, CSIS offers speaking events, such as the Bipartisan Congressional Dialogue Series, plus a variety of policy conferences throughout the year that are designed to provide exceptional advice to Congress in order for them to better engage with the needs of the global community. The group prioritizes outreach to offer targeted, useful and timely support from experts in the global community.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

gads

BlogBook v0.5,
L^AT_EX 2_ε & GNU/Linux.
<http://www.blogbooker.com>

Edited: June 26, 2015

